The rest can be quickly told. McMillan and Borup had started for the Greenland coast to deposit caches for me. Before I arrived a flying Eskimo courier from me overtook them with instructions that the caches were no longer needed and that they were to concentrate their energies on tidal observations, etc., at Cape Morris K. Jesup and north from there.

The Roosevelt's Cruise.

These instructions were carried out, and after their return in the latter part of May McMillan made some further tidal observations at other points. The supplies remaining at the various caches were brought in, and on July 18 the Roosevelt left her winter quarters and was driven out into the channel pack of Cape Union.

She fought her way south in the center of the channel and passed Cape Sabine on Aug. 8, or thirty-nine days earlier than in 1908 and thirty-two days earlier than the British expedition in 1876.

We picked up Whitney and his party and the stores at Etah. We killed seventy odd walrus for my Eskimos, whom I landed at their homes. We met the Jeanie off Saunders island and took over her coal and cleared from Cape York on Aug. 26, one month earlier than in 1906.

On Sept. 5 we arrived at Indian Harbor, whence the message, "Stars and stripes nailed to north pole," was sent vibrating southward through the crisp Labrador air.

Praise for His Men.

As to the personnel, I have again been particularly fortunate. Captain Bartlett is just Bartlett—tireless, sleepless, enthusiastic.

Dr. Goodsell, the surgeon of the expedition, not only looked after its health and his own specialty of microscopes, but took his full share of the field work of the expedition as well and was always ready for any work.

Professor Marvin and McMillan have secured a mass of scientific data, and their services were invaluable in every way.

Borup not only made the record as to the distance traveled during the journey, but to his assistance and his expert knowledge of photography is due what I believe to be the unequaled series of photographs taken by the expedition.

Hansen in the field and Percy as steward were invaluable in their respective lines. Chief Engineer Wardwell, also of the last expedition, aided by his assistant, Scott, kept the machinery up to a high state of efficiency.

Mr. Gushue, the mate, who was in charge of the Roosevelt during the absence of Captain Bartlett and myself, and Bos'n Murphy, who was put in charge of the station at Etah for the relief of Cook, were both trustworthy and reliable men, and I count myself fortunate in having had them in my service.

The members of the crew and the firemen were a distinct improvement over those of the last expedition. Every one of them was willing and anxious to be of service in every possible way.

As for my faithful Eskimos, I have left them with ample supplies of dark, rich walrus meat and blubber for their winter, with currants, sugar biscuits, guns, rifles, ammunition, knives, hatchets, traps, etc., and for the splendid four who stood beside me at the pole a boat and tent each to requite them for their energy and the hardship and toil they underwent to help their friend Peary to the north pole.

But all of this—the dearly bought years of experience, the magnificent strength of the Roosevelt, the splendid energy and enthusiasm of my party the loyal faithfulness of my Eskimos—could have gone for naught but for the faithful necessaries of war furnished so loyally by the members and friends of the Peary Arctic club. And it is no detraction from the living to say that to no single individual has the fine result been more signally due than to my friend the late Morris K. Jesup, the first president of the club.

Their assistance has enabled me to tell the last of the great earth stories, the story the world has been waiting to hear for 300 years—the story of the discovery of the north pole.

The Little Tin Cottages.

The sky was blue, and the lake was blue, and there were four blue birds against the silver gray of the birches.

"It's like a chain of sapphires," Peggy said as she and her mother followed the narrow path among the trees.

"Yes," murmured her mother faintly.

Peggy looked back at her.

"Mother," she protested, "you are tired out," and she took the heavy bag that her mother had carried, and, thus weighted with two, she plodded on until she came to an intersection of the path.

"I'm not sure which way to turn to go to our cottage," she said. "Doesn't

"THIS IS THE WAY WATER OUGHT TO BE HANDLED."

it sound too good to be true to say 'our cottage,' mother?"

"Yes, it does, and the rent is so cheap," Mrs. Linton said.

"We couldn't have come if it hadn't been cheap," Peggy remarked philosophically.

"No, we couldn't," her mother agreed, and again they plodded on.

Presently a man appeared among the trees. He wore blue overalls, and he was wheeling a barrow.

"Oh, can you tell us where Miss Brownlee's cottages are?" Peggy called eagerly.

"The tin cottages?" the man inquired.

"The what?" Peggy gasped.

The man grinned. "The tin cottages. Those are the ones Miss Brownlee rents. You go on till you come to a path toward the lake, and you'll find them."

"Mother," Peggy demanded when he had gone on, "what do you suppose he meant?"

"I'm sure I don't know, and I don't care," said Mrs. Linton pensively.

"Poor little mother," Peggy worried, "you're tired out."

Again they wandered on, and at last they saw before them a row of diminutive houses like in[illegible] bathtubs. They were painted [illegible] and they were very compact [illegible]eat, but to Peggy, who had dreamed of a picturesque rustic bungalow, [illegible]ere nightmares.

"Oh," she [illegible] dismay, "they are hideous, mother!"

And after [illegible]lance Mrs. Linton sat down on t[illegible]ss and laid her umbrella beside [illegible]"It's the last straw," she said deje[illegible]

"Oh, dear!" [illegible]d Peggy. And her mother echoed [illegible]plaint.

But presently [illegible]ey saw a woman beckoning to them from the porch of a large rustic cottage at the end of a row of tin caricatures.

"That must be Miss Brownlee," Peggy said. "I am going to tell her that I think she should have told us that the cottages were made of tin."

But as they came up to the porch the beaming face of the rather massive lady disarmed criticism.

"I thought you would be here about this time," she said. "I want you to have lunch with me."

"Oh," Peggy demurred, "we don't like to trouble you."

"I'm dead lonesome," Miss Brownlee hastened to explain, "and I like company. That's why I built the cottages."

"Aren't they a little odd?" Peggy asked.

"I think they are beautiful," Miss Brownlee declared radiantly. "After the big fair they were for sale—they had been models, you know—and I bought them cheap, and they are nice and comfortable inside. I have rented the one next to you to a young man, an artist. He comes tomorrow."

"Has he seen them?" Peggy quavered, not daring to look at her mother.

"No, but I told him how nice they were."

"Oh," Peggy murmured, and went on eating hot biscuits.

A half hour later she said to Miss Brownlee, "I have never tasted such a perfectly delicious lunch."

Miss Brownlee laughed. "Well, I am a right good cook," she said. "I always wanted to have an opportunity to learn things, but after mother died I was too old to take up painting or music, so I just went on cooking. After all, I don't know but it's just as worth while to be a good cook as a bad artist."

"Indeed it is!" said Peggy heartily. "I paint some myself. But I wish I could make cake like this."

"Oh, do you paint?" cried Miss Brownlee. "Some time I am going to get you to make a picture of the cottage."

In the morning Peggy set her easel up on the bluff, but the magic of the lake eluded her, and when she came in she had nothing to show but a sketch of Sally.

She gave it to Miss Brownlee.

"Well, well," said that delighted lady, "it's just like Sally. I'm going to have it framed. By the way," she added, "it's time for that young man to come. And there he is now." And she hurried to the door.

He was a handsome young fellow, with a gray cap on the back of his head.

"I wanted to ask about my cottage. Where is it?"

"There," said Miss Brownlee, pointing to the one next to Peggy's.

"That? Oh, by George!" the young man ejaculated, and Peggy laughed to herself.

"It's the one I told you about in my letter," Miss Brownlee went on.

"Yes," he murmured feebly, "you told me."

"This young lady and her mother have the one next to it." And Miss Brownlee stepped back and showed Peggy behind her—Peggy, whose blue eyes danced wickedly.

The young man looked at her, taking in with appreciation the grace of the slender girlish figure.

"I think I shall like—the cottage," he said slowly, and when they had talked for a few minutes Peggy went back to her mother.

"He is very nice," she remarked, "and his name is Meredith." And with that she took her portfolio and started for the bluff.

"Look here," said some one over her shoulder two hours later, "you ought not to try that sort of thing."

It was Mr. Meredith. "Why not?" asked Peggy.

"I saw your sketch of Sally," he told her. "You do it better than water things. Your lake and sky aren't right."

Peggy flushed. "Oh," she said, "I don't want to paint pussy cats! I want to paint the silver water and the silver trees and a silver spirit of the woods."

"Silver tommyrot!" said the young man. "You ought to do things like the studies your mother showed me just now."

"Pot boilers!" Peggy murmured.

"This is the way water ought to be handled," and he opened his portfolio and handed her a sketch.

"Oh!" Peggy said as she looked at it, and when she had handed it back to him there was real humility in her tone.

"I have never seen anything so wonderful."

"It is no more wonderful than yours," he told her, "but I have studied longer—abroad and all that."

"Oh, have you?" said the eager Peggy, and they sat there and talked until the shadows fell.

That night Meredith said to Miss Brownlee, "I think it is beautiful here," and Peggy, watching the moonlight through the small square window of her room, smiled in the darkness as she thought how deliciously Mr. Meredith said "By George!" when he looked at her best work.

The next morning she took his advice and sketched the six curly tailed pigs, Sally over a saucer of milk and Miss Brownlee among her pots and pans.

"That's the best thing you have done yet," Meredith told her as he examined the sketch of Miss Brownlee. "The light of the fire and the sunlight through the window give a chance for values."

"I wish I knew as much as you do about such things," Peggy sighed.

"We will work together for awhile," he said, "and I will teach you all I know."

But he taught her other things than art as their easels stood side by side on the bluff, and the white gulls dipped to the sapphire lake, and the wind ruffled the curls on Peggy's forehead. And one morning as Peggy finished a sketch of silver birches with a bit of lake beyond he looked over her shoulder.

"You are getting on wonderfully," he said, "but you ought to have a year abroad."

"But I can't," Peggy told him.

"You can if you will marry me," was his unexpected proposition.

And "Oh!" said rosy Peggy.

"And to think," said the radiant Miss Brownlee when they told her, "that I should have a romance right here in my tin cottages."

"Dear cottages!" murmured Peggy.

And as the lovers went down the path the moonlight touched the little gray houses with magic light and made of each of them a castle of dreams.

THE SPRING BLIND.

"To tell you the truth, old fellow, I never understood why with your capacity for domestic enjoyment you remained an old bachelor. Early disappointment in love?"

"I vowed to marry her or not at all, and she"—

Just at that moment the spring roller blind of a house that faced directly on the sidewalk flew up with a sudden "br-r-r" and a snap. Both the men looked around, and both were just in time to catch sight of a remarkably pretty girl's face with a pout of vexation on it.

"Who is that girl?" Guthrie asked.

"I'm afraid I don't know her, old fellow," said Bean.

"You haven't any idea who lives in that house, have you?"

"No, I haven't. Oh, by the way, I think I do know! Unless I'm mistaken, that's old Calthorpe's place. He's a fellow commuter of mine, and that's about the full extent of our acquaintance. But she isn't the young lady of your secret, is she?"

"That's just it," said Jeff, with a puzzled expression. "She can't be, and yet that face for the moment looked"—

"Like her? Was her name Calthorpe?"

"No. Her name was Sargent."

"How long ago was it?"

"Seven years."

"It isn't a long story," Guthrie presently continued. "She taught school there in that faraway little village among the hills and the mines. I was interested in her from the first and tried to win my way into some sort of acquaintance with her. But she seemed disinclined to anything like society."

"You didn't stay there more than a year altogether, did you?" Bean asked.

"Much less than a year. I never exchanged more than six words with her in all the time we were both in that village."

"Is this girl very much like Miss Sargent?"

"So much like that it wouldn't be remarkable even if they were twin sisters."

Guthrie's visits to the home of his married friend were all much alike in one very pleasant feature—he always romped with two out of three children, while the youngest, the baby, looked on and crowed and jerked itself about enviously.

"Now, what is it?" Mrs. Bean asked, turning to her husband when Allie and little Jeff had both been finally silenced under the bedclothes.

"Oh, it isn't my affair," said the husband.

"We—I—wanted to ask if you knew a Miss Calthorpe here, living in that new red brick house at the end of the common," said Guthrie.

Mrs. Bean shook her head. "No Miss Calthorpe lives there," she said. "Mr. Calthorpe lives there."

"Oh," said Bean, "was that old woman Calthorpe's sister?"

"She isn't really old, dear. She's younger than Mr. Calthorpe. There's one daughter, I believe."

But that night Mrs. Bean said to her husband: "Leave me alone for two days, and I will know all about your window blind young lady. Then make Jeff Guthrie come here and stay overnight."

The next visit of Jeff Guthrie was planned for a Saturday evening, with arrangements for a stay over Sunday.

After church this subtle woman insisted on lingering about the porch until a gray haired lady came out, and with her her daughter, the girl who had pouted at the window blind.

"Mrs. Perry, let me introduce our particular friend, Mr. Guthrie, and this is Miss Perry."

Nothing could have been more properly conventional than this introduction, and that was why Guthrie was so angry with himself for turning red and becoming confused. Mrs. Bean had, unknown to Guthrie, expressly invited these two ladies to dinner beforehand.

"Tell me, have you any relative—had you, I should say—of the name of Sargent?"

The girl's face changed in a moment. She was pale and bit her lip.

"Oh, Mr. Guthrie," she said, "you must ask mother that! I don't know about it. I was only a little girl of ten when poor Margaret left us and married that"—

She checked herself, then after an embarrassing pause went on, lowering her voice to a whisper and glancing round at her mother, "Did you know her—him?"

"I once knew a Miss Sargent very slightly."

"Where?"

"In Pennsylvania, at Brinkville."

"Oh, yes! He treated her so badly, after all, she had to go somewhere and be a teacher. Mother would have forgiven everything, but Margaret was too proud to come back to us. She went and called herself miss, I suppose. We only heard that she had died in Pennsylvania—nothing more. I was sent to school in Germany soon afterward."

"I understand," said Guthrie, "your mother has had a great deal of trouble."

"That is why she looks so old at fifty. Tell me, please, am I so much like poor Sister Margaret?"

"So much that I thought I was looking at her for the moment when you appeared at the window."

Jeff Guthrie ceased to be the old bachelor friend of the Bean family, and it was all owing to the escape of that roller blind from a girl's fingers. The marriage of her youngest daughter at least was not against Mrs. Perry's wishes; neither was it an unhappy one, and Mrs. Bean prided herself upon having brought it about.—Pittsburg Post.

SWANTON.

The Methodists of the Mt. Zion church, near Swanton, had an all-day service Sunday, September 19th. Rev. Mr. Wolf, the presiding elder from Keyser, was in attendance with several local preachers. In the morning there was a largely attended children's meeting addressed by several speakers. In the afternoon there was a sermon by Mr. Wolf, with administration of the communion. About four hundred or more people were present and most bountiful dinners were generously served by the Messrs. Sharpless and others, feeding the multitude, with many full baskets left.

The recently extremely ill, Mr. McKenzie and young Mankis, are much better, but both are still seriously prostrated.

The Rev. Mr. Brumbaugh, of the M. E. church, has positively decided to leave the Swanton charge at the expiration of his present term, much to the regret of very many warm friends.

A bright young M. D., about to locate in Swanton, has concluded that a fairer opening is in sight—the idea! Any sane professional man straying so far from the true path as to believe any prospect could be fairer than Swanton! deluded man!

New Method Gas Ranges

Will Reduce Your Gas Bills 25 Per Cent

Will NOT RUST or BURN OUT.
Will BAKE THE SAME on All Parts of the Oven Bottom.
Will BROIL or TOAST Evenly Without Burning
WILL NOT HAVE ANY EXPLOSIONS.
If you will read the following you will learn why.

Are You Looking for a Gas Range and Want to Buy "The Best?"

WHICH IS?

YOU see gas ranges and gas ranges, all claimed to be "The Best," making you in doubt which is? If you could examine all the gas ranges that are made, you would find that there is very little difference in their construction as far as the burners, manner of lighting them and construction of the Oven are concerned. (These are the things in a range that decide how much gas you will burn and how well your cooking and baking will be done,) and if you could see a range made ten years ago you would find that its construction was practically the same as those shown you today with one exception.

THE NEW METHOD

When considering buying a Gas Range the first point you will think of, is the cost of the gas it will consume, for which reason, if you were shown two ranges, although in appearance the first pleased you more than the second, you would not hesitate to purchase the latter, if you were satisfied that with it you could do your cooking and consume one-fourth less gas than with the former.

If you buy a New Method Range or Hot Plate, your gas bill will be from 20 per cent. to 30 per cent. less each month than it would be if you were using any Gas Range or Hot Plate having cast iron burners.

The reason why the NEW METHOD patented steel burners have from 20 per cent. to 30 per cent. higher efficiency than any cast iron burner, is that they are made of Polished Key Steel which, together with their funnel-shaped jet holes does away with all the friction that there is in the rough cast burners with their thick jet holes. This allows a much larger quantity of air to be drawn in through the mixers and properly mixed with the gas without the popping back, at the same time producing a much more intense heat without any odor. The more oxygen burned the less gas.

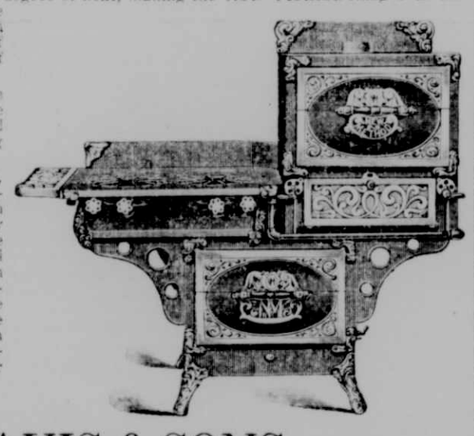
These burners are light in weight, consequently can be easily lifted out washed and cleaned.

THE SECOND POINT

That you will consider, is how the range will bake. The construction of a New Method Oven is entirely different from the construction in any other Gas Range.

The reason why the New Method construction makes an oven that will bake on the top, bottom and on all sides the same, with a comparatively small consumption of gas, is on account of the Steel Oven Burners being placed at each side (and which can be lighted direct without any possibility of an explosion) below the flame plates that carry the flames toward an opening in the centre where the heat passes upward against the oven bottom, thence through each side flue to within three inches of the top, thence downward leaving the oven three inches from the bottom so that whatever is being baked is subjected to uniform heat on all sides. This is not the case in any other gas range, all of which have iron pipe burners located in the centre and against the oven bottom which, being in direct contact with the flame, is heated much hotter than any other part of the oven and will soon burn out steel and warps and cracks cast iron oven bottoms.



Also the oven burners placed in this way being always in direct contact with the flame from the other will, in a few years, cause them to warp and have to be renewed. We are able to line the oven top, back and sides with thick asbestos, which retains the heat without any fear of the oven rusting from the inside, on account of the oven plates being all enameled on the inside.

THE THIRD POINT

How will it toast and broil? On account of the location of the burners, the top above the broiler pan will be covered with a solid sheet of even flame that will broil or toast the entire surface the same, which cannot be done with pipe burners located in the center.

THE FOURTH POINT

The durability of the range. Many people are afraid to buy a steel gas range, knowing that the average life of other Gas Ranges made of this material is from five to eight years on account of the body rusting through. This objection we have entirely overcome by enameling the steel plates both inside and out under a high degree of heat, making the New Method Ranges as durable as if they were made from cast iron and without any of the disadvantages of the latter.

THE FIFTH POINT

Ease in taking care of and keeping clean.

The front, supply pipes and mixers are underneath the top, where they do not catch the grease and dirt. All the castingare smooth so that with the enamel finish of the steel the entire range can be wiped off with soap and water without any corners or carving to dig out.

VOLUME 33. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1909. NUMBER 31

ARE EXTREMELY BITTER AGAINST INSURGENTS

Local Democrats Criticise Revolters—Burden of Attack Aimed at G. S. Hamill.

The following telegram under an Oakland date line appeared in the Baltimore American of Tuesday:

The "regular" Democrats will open their campaign here early in October, when their candidate for comptroller will deliver an address. One of their nominees for county commissioner, W. T. Stanton, of Grantsville, has declined to accept nomination. He published a statement to this effect in one of the local papers this week. It has not been definitely decided who will be named to fill this vacancy. The names of several candidates are being considered.

The Democratic "insurgent" movement here, under the name of the People's party, culminated Thursday by nominating a county ticket under the leadership of G. S. Hamill, the Baltimore and Ohio attorney. The primaries were held under the old system, the one in vogue prior to the legalized primary law, and were only held in seven of the fourteen districts and were controlled by insurgent Democrats and Prohibitionists with one or two exceptions. The ticket is made up of five Democrats, three Republicans and one Prohibitionist.

Seven of the nine candidates on this ticket reside in the five election districts on the B. & O. Railroad, the remaining nine districts having but two places on the ticket. There is much dissatisfaction here among the "insurgents" over the personnel of the ticket. Several strong candidates, who were aspirants for nominations, were turned down. Now they and their friends declare they will not support the ticket, but will support the regular nominees of their respective parties.

John O. Thayer, one of the Democratic nominees on the "insurgent" ticket, has been canvassing the county since the adjournment of their convention Thursday soliciting signers to a petition, in order to have the ticket placed on the official ballot. It is rumored that he has secured something more than one hundred names up to this time.

Many of the more prominent "insurgents" who attended the first meeting did not take kindly to the B. & O. attorney calling the meeting to order, making the principal speech, naming Capt. J. W. Cochran (a B. & O. Railroad conductor, formerly of Cumberland, but now of Mountain Lake Park, and who has never voted in this county), as chairman. Among the other speakers was a B. & O. engineer from Deer Park.

The regular Democrats are bitter against G. S. Hamill since he signed the call for the "insurgents'" courthouse meeting on the same evening after his return from Cumberland, where he called to see Judge Boyd. They also accuse him of preparing the call. They claim that he has been the absolute boss of their party for more than 20 years, as well as a candidate for office oftener than any other man now living in the county. For the last 18 or 20 years he has been a candidate of his party for the office of state's attorney whenever that office was to be filled, with but one exception, and that was when Edward Mitchell was the candidate.

The regulars also state that the insurgent Democrats are opposing the Straus amendment. Some say they propose trading their votes against the amendment for Republican votes for Boyd. The already bitter feeling against the insurgents for wrecking their party under the leadership of Hamill, when they believe there was a chance of electing some local candidates, has been intensified by the insurgent attitude on the amendment, and in the way of retaliation may result in a heavy cut by the regulars on Judge Boyd.

Sloan has behind him the united support of the Republican members of the bar association of this county. Attempted outside interference by communications to the local newspapers has made Mr. Sloan many friends.

REPLY TO A SLANDEROUS COMMUNICATION

Which Appeared in the Two Democratic Organs of Garrett County.

To the Voters of Garrett County:

As a member of the party of Lincoln, Grant and McKinley, who is attached to its principles and interested in its destiny in the State of Maryland, I would like, in a brief way, to call attention of my fellow Republicans of Garrett county to the methods and tactics which are being used in the judgeship contest by the Democratic party.

In the year 1893 the Republicans of Garrett, Allegany and Washington counties nominated a candidate for the chief judgeship of the Fourth Judicial Circuit, carrying with it membership on the bench of the Court of Appeals. Immediately upon his nomination and throughout the entire campaign which followed, this nominee of the Republican party was denounced, slandered and villified by the united Democratic press of Maryland, which said that Maryland was and always had been a Democratic State, and that it was presumption and impudence for the Republican party to attempt to elect one of its political faith to the bench of the Court of Appeals. The Democrats attacked the public and private character of the Republican nominee for the bench in 1893. They even sought to use his religious beliefs as a weapon against him, and, by the combined power and influence of the Democratic newspapers and organization of the State and the unlimited use of corporation money they succeeded in defeating our Republican nominee for the bench by a small margin.

The Democratic party is now attempting to repeat its campaign tactics of 1893. For the bench, the Republican party of Garrett, Allegany and Washington counties has nominated a man, who, in all things that go to make a judge, is the undoubted peer of any Democratic lawyer in the Fourth Judicial Circuit, be he on or off the bench. But the Democratic party, following the methods by which it defeated a Republican nominee for the bench in 1893, now seeks by anonymous letters to the newspapers to have the people believe otherwise I hope it will be understood by the intelligent Republicans of this circuit that if the members of our party purpose to be guided by the anonymous slanders of the Democracy, directed against our nominee for the bench, then, even in these three great counties, Garrett, Allegany and Washington, the mighty fortress and citadel of Republicanism in Maryland and the stronghold in which the ark of the covenant of the Republican faith is lodged, it will be a vain and useless thing hereafter for our party to make nominations for the highest judicial office in the State, and we may as well resign ourselves to the inevitable fact that the Court of Appeals will remain, as it has been for the past fifty years, forever Democratic.

A typical example of the slanders circulated by the Democracy in order to injure the Republican party and its nominee for the bench appeared in the Garrett Journal and Mountain Democrat of the 16th inst., in an unsigned letter which made the following ridiculous charge, to-wit:

"The dav Mr. Sloan was nominated a young member of our bar congratulated him upon his nomination. Mr. Sload said to him: 'I want your vote, too; I'm in this business to win, and I'm going to win, and I'll remember all thosewho vote against me.'"

The above story is so utterly, maliciously and obviously false on its face as to need no denial. No man who knows the upright, honorable and dignified nominee of the Republican party for the bench would believe him capable of such a thing. The writer of this lie did well to hide himself in darkness. That the duly elected delegates of the intelligent Republicans of Garrett, Allegany and Washington counties, in convention assembled, would nominate for the bench a man who would be guilty of the above utterance is an idea that no sane person will entertain for a moment, and is a falsehood that could emanate, as it does, only from a Democratic source. It is simply a specimen of the underhanded and despicable work by which the Democratic party hopes to elect its nominee for the bench in the face of overwhelming Republican majorities.

In his speech of acceptance, Judge Boyd, Democratic nominee, said: "I trust that nothing will be done in my behalf which is not entirely consistent with a due regard for the high office in question. Fair and unprejudiced criticism of my opponent or myself is legitimate, but abuse and unjust statements, ESPECIALLY IF UNTRUE, made against a candidate for judge are not only wholly inexcusable, but can receive the sanction of no right-minded person."

If Judge Boyd was sincere and in earnest and meant what he said when he wrote the above words, then, in all honor, justice and fairness, the Republicans of the Fourth Judicial Circuit call upon him to publicly repudiate, deny and stamp with the seal of his disapproval the above infamous falsehood which puts in the mouth of the Republican nominee words which he never thought, much less uttered. The Democratic nominee for judge must either repudiate this story or prove it true or make public the name of its author, or else stand convicted of willingness to allow falsehoods to be publicly circulated in his interest. If he follows any other course and by his silence approves, ratifies and adopts as his own this anonymous villification of the Republican nominee for the bench, then the voters of Garrett, Allegany and Washington counties can but believe with regret that Judge Boyd's plea in his letter of acceptance, uttered in behalf of justice, truth and fair play, was meant only to reserve protection to himself and deny it to his opponent. And the people will not permit the Democratic party to elect its nominee by such methods.

ALLEGANY REPUBLICAN.

BLOOMINGTON.

A telegram received by friends and relatives in town on Wednesday morning announced the death of Mr. William Klipstein, a prominent business man of St. Louis, Mo. Mr. Klipstein was born and reared in this community and for years prior to taking up his residence in the above named city was agent for the C. & P. R. R. at Piedmont. About twenty years ago he resigned his position with the railroad company, moved to St. Louis and purchased a half interest in an established wholesale and retail hide and leather business owned and conducted by his brother-in-law, Mr. Norman Brown. Later he purchased the remaining Brown interest and became the sole owner and manager of the prosperous business house located at 723 North First street. He is survived by a widow and three children.

Little Sadie Paugh, the five-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Paugh, of Walnut Bottom, died early Tuesday morning from a malignant attack of diphtheria. Two other cases have broken out in the same neighborhood in the family of Mr. James Nelson.

Mr. James Rowe was hurriedly called to Blaine by telegram on last Wednesday afternoon on account of the reported fatal injuries sustained by his half-brother, Mr. Jesse Hartley, while at work in the Hamill mine, near that place. Mr. Hartley was working at the breast of the coal when a rock weighing about 200 pounds fell from the roof, striking him across the loins and crushing him to the pavement. The result of his injuries cannot be foretold for a few days, but strong hopes are entertained by his physicians for his ultimate recovery. One year ago his brother, Mr. Charles Hartley, was caught in the same mine in a similar manner, but under a much heavier fall of rock, and survived his injuries only a few hours.

Mr. Harry Coffman and Miss Bessie Brendlin, lovers during their school days, faithful and true through the few short intervening years, immensely popular with the younger set and well liked and respected by the older ones of this community, eloped to Cumberland Wednesday, where they were married. The happy couple returned to Blaine the same afternoon, where they will make their future home. The groom is a telegraph operator for the W. M. R. R., at Harrison.

Mr. Matthew Watson, boss driver at the Buxton mine, narrowly escaped being killed last Friday evening. He was riding a mule from the mine to the company's stables and while crossing the county bridge which spans the incline plane and the ravine near the mouth of the mine, the mule broke through the rotten and insecure floor of the bridge. The end of a loose board flew up, striking Mr. Watson on the right side with such force that he was knocked from the mule and narrowly escaped being thrown over the bridge and killed. As it was, he sustained a very painful and ugly dislocation of the right elbow and numerous bruises about his body. The accident was due to the condition of the bridge which is known far and wide to the traveling public as being unsafe. Mr. Watson will enter a suit for damages against the supervisor of roads as soon as he is able to get around.

PEOPLE'S PARTY PLACED TICKET IN THE FIELD

Composed of Three Former Republicans, One Prohibitionist and Five Democrats.

The much heralded People's Party convention was held in the court house last Thursday afternoon when a ticket was placed in the field to be voted for at the election in November next.

Primaries for the selection of delegates to this gathering were held in but seven of the districts of the county on the Saturday preceding, but in order to make as great showing as possible people were persuaded to attend the convention from six additional districts, making thirteen of the fourteen districts represented in the convention, district No. 5 being the only one not represented.

The delegates were largely composed of Democrats who have been without the pale of the party organization for some months past, a few Republicans, who desired to be nominated by the convention of their party when it was held in Oakland some weeks ago, and half a dozen Prohibitionists who are members of that party from principle.

The convention was called to order by Mr. Harvey N. Cuppett, of Loch Lynn Heights, who is a pronounced Prohibitionist and who was a candidate on his party's ticket two years ago for the House of Delegates. William Spiker, of Deer Park, and W. F. King, of Oakland, Democrats, were secretaries. Mr. G. S. Hamill, of Oakland, addressed the meeting, and as he is reputed to be the sponsor for the so-called independent ticket, he is in great measure responsible for its personnel, as follows:

For State Senate, George L. Michaels, whose name was submitted to the Republican convention for nomination for the House of Delegates, and who received but three votes in that body.

For House of Delegates, Harvey N. Cuppett, Prohibitionist, and William T. Stanton, ex-Democrat.

Sheriff, John O. Thayer.

County Commissioners, Thomas H. Layman and Herman Steiding, both former Republicans. Mr. Layman served as County Commissioner for eight years and immediately after his term of office expired he became a candidate for the nomination for Sheriff and has been turned down every time by his own district. It is said that he did not attend the Republican primaries this year, but expected his name to be presented as a candidate for Sheriff in the Republican convention.

Treasurer, William Spiker.

Clerk to County Commissioners, W. F. King.

County Surveyor, A. C. Mason.

The convention was not as harmonious as it was hoped for and many who expected to be named as candidates returned to their homes pretty sore.

Gone to Conference.

Tuesday morning Rev. J. B. Workman, pastor of St. Paul's M. E. church in Oakland for the past five years, left here for Mannington, where he will attend the sixty-third annual conference of his church until next Monday, when the sessions will close. The first day's session was held yesterday when Rev. Workman was re-elected secretay for the ensuing year. Rev. Luther B. Wilson, formerly of Baltimore, is the presiding Bishop. At the Sunday evening services held in St. Paul's church, Mr. Workman announced that he expected to ask the conference for a change of appointment.

As pastor of the church Mr. Workman has received into membership a total of one hundred and sixty-five. The present membership of the church is three hundred and twenty-four. He has preached over seven hundred sermons in Oakland; has made more than three thousand pastoral visits. His work in Oakland has been highly appreciated and he is esteemed by all who know him. There has been and is yet perfect harmony between the pastor and his congregation and the severance of the tie which has been drawn closer as Mr. Workman's services have become more and more appreciated will be a matter of sincere regret. We trust that should he be removed as pastor from Oakland that his lines may fall in pleasant places. Mr. Workman was accompanied to Mannington by Rev. J. O. Bolton, of the Mountain Lake Park charge. Rev. R. B. Ward, who also closes his six years' tenure of office as superintendent of the Oakland District, went to Mannington on train No. 55 Tuesday afternoon. Under the church law Dr. Ward cannot be reappointed for another term as superintendent and as in the case of Mr. Workman his removal from Oakland will be deeply regretted.

CHOSEN THIRD MEMBER.

Mr. C. A. Deffinbaugh Appointed to Fill Vacancy on Committee.

Mr. Charles A. Deffinbaugh, editor of the Mountain Democrat and also president of the Garrett County School Board, was appointed on the 25th inst. by Mr. Murray Vandiver, chairman of the Democratic State Committee, as the third member of the local committee in place of Mr. G. Semmes Hamill, whose resignation as a member of the committee was forwarded to Mr. Vandiver several weeks ago, and which was accepted by the state chairman upon its receipt.

The appointment of Mr. Deffinbaugh by Chairman Vandiver is in recognition of the regularity of that gentleman as a party man and fixes the organization in this county for the next two years in such manner as to be wholly satisfactory to the regulars and unsatisfactory, distasteful and nauseating to the bolters, or the Hamill wing of the Democracy.

WHITE ROCK SAND CO.'S PLANT

Will Pass To New Owners Tomorrow Morning, Having Been Sold by Mr. Hammond.

Mr. C. F. Hammond, owner of the White Rock Sand Company's plant at a point on the B. & O. eight miles west of Oakland, has sold his holdings to a company of West Virginia and Pennsylvania capitalists, at the head of which is Mr. Fay Hartley, of Fairmont, and Mr. John F. Brown, of Clarion, Pa. The new owners paid in the neighborhood of $65,000 for the plant and will assume control of it tomorrow morning with Mr. Brown in charge as superintendent.

Mr. Hammond stated this morning that he will continue to reside in Oakland.

Married.

MANOWN—MCCLAIN—A wedding took place at the residence of Mr. E. D. Kepner, in Oakland, Tuesday morning, the groom being Mr. Edward C. Manown, son of Dr. J. H. Manown, of Kingwood, well known in Oakland, and the bride being Miss Winona McClain, daughter of Mr. William McClain, of Kingwood. The ceremony was performed by Rev. John M. Davis, of Oakland, in the presence of Mr. Kepner's family and Mrs. Frank E. Peterson, of Tunnelton, aunt of the bride, who accompanied the party to Oakland.

HINEBUGH—BARTLETT—A wedding occurred last February at Cumberland which has just been made known, the principals being Mr. Arthur Hinebaugh and Miss Gracia Bartlett, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. E. H. Bartlett, of Oakland. The announcement of the wedding was made Tuesday morning by the family of the bride. We wish them a long and prosperous life.

SANDERS—WAMSLEY—At the Lutheran parsonage in Oakland, by Rev. E. Manges, on the 23rd inst., Mr. Clarence Albert Sanders, of Gortner, and Miss Gladys Wamsley, of Preston county, West Va.

CHAPMAN—PITMAN—At the Lutheran parsonage on the 25th inst., John Chapman and Miss Jeannette Pitman, both of Philippi, West Va. The couple are both school teachers in their native county, their respective schools being located four miles apart and both boarded at the same place midway between.

BITTINGER.

There are many evidences in the realm of nature indicating the approach of winter, and the thrifty farmer is busy storing away food for man and beast during the long winter days.

Mrs. Brenninger, of Sunnyside, who spent last week with her daughter, Mrs. J. T. Lohr, at this place, returned to her home last Saturday.

Amos H. Reckner, of North Glade, was calling on friends and relatives in this community last Saturday.

We are glad to report a slight improvement in Rev. J. B. Shoup's health during the past week

Miss Fanny Wiley, of Waterloo, Iowa, is spending a few weeks with her parents at this place.

Master Paul Davis returned last week from a ten days' visit with his mother, at her home near Markleysburg, Pa.

Messrs. Clarence and Frank Brenneman, who have been employed at Oakland for the past two months, are home again.

George Stark was in Oakland early last week consulting Dr. Muncaster, the eye specialist.

Mrs. S. O. Wiley, of Elk Lick, Pa., is spending this week with relatives in this settlement.

WHY MR. PERKINS IS AGAINST AMENDMENT

Member of Democratic Anti-Amendment Association Gives His Views of Measure.

Mr. W. H. Perkins, who is a leading member of the Democratic Association Opposed to the Disfranchisement Amendment, Monday announced his reasons for opposing the Straus anti-suffrage measure. He states that the fact alone that such a measure would place the power in the hands of the heirs of the ring is enough reason for opposition to the amendment without any further argument.

When asked for his views Mr. Perkins said:

"I am opposed to the proposed amendment by which thousands and thousands of the supporters of the Republican party will be disfranchised. There is so much sophistry in the arguments advanced by its managers and promoters that it is not worth while for me to attempt to state answers that are very obvious to them all, for the stock arguments in favor of the amendment seem to me to be entirely wide of the mark. There is a small aquatic animal that endeavors to conceal its movements and effect its flight by muddying the waters in its vicinity. This much overworked simile serves to illustrate the tactics of our friends the disfranchisers. They state with a certain amount of irrelevant veracity many historical platitudes that do not bear upon the case, and then ask the voters because of those irrelevant platitudes to adopt a piece of legislation which amounts to nothing more than a plan to cut down the number of votes that could be cast against the men or measures of the Democratic ring politicians. They say:

" 'There are a great many rotten, one-party Republican states and these states are very prosperous and wealthy. The black republic of Hayti is fast relapsing into barbarism. The South just after a terrible war and in the throes of reconstruction was far less prosperous than it is at present when our friends Sambo and Pompey are no longer allowed to vote. Finally, Washington, where not even the white trash is allowed to vote, is a large and beautiful city, etc., etc.'

"These and many other similar things that one reads and hears about are all more or less true, but, like the flowers that bloom in the spring, they have nothing to do with the case.

"Neither is it material to the issue to decide upon a plan for an ideal republic. All, I presume, will concede that a community with the suffrage all in the hands of political students and philosophers, where no one could vote, or be bribed to vote, except the wise, the just and the good; where the state would be ruled by the highly cultured and the clean of heart, would be a very decent and respectable place. No doubt graft and peculation would there be quite unknown. There would be no angry disputes for months and months as to just which public official stole the city's money, nor as to how much, if any, help the sheriff's office gave to the traverser.

"I think the voters of Maryland will, and I believe they should, decide this question of franchise restriction only by the needs and conditions in Maryland, and according to our own experience.

"For we have been a one-party state already. We have seen and know well the self arrogance of our party managers and leaders. We have seen numbers of the party's best men driven from the party councils. We have seen the managers of the Democratic party in this naturally Democratic state owe their victories at the polls to murders, riot, fraud and intimidation. We have seen them pass and defend laws that have made the exercise of the franchise a farce. And now the proposition they submit is to pass a law, under cover of which (if found constitutional) the strangle hold of the same managers can again be fastened on the state and party organization. Without passing upon the questions affecting an ideal franchise restricted on fair and broad lines to those who have at stake sufficient to make them careful, with sufficient education to make them intelligent, and whose records show them to be worthy citizens; without regard to any other consideration, it seems to me that the mere fact that the proposed measure would again put the whole political power into the hands of the natural or political heirs and associates of the old ring Democracy is reason enough for refusing to authorize it."

DISFRANCHISING AMENDMENT.

Violates Constitution of United States and May Take Suffrage from You.

It is the duty of every good citizen to obey the law of the land himself and also do what he can to make others obey it. The Constitution of the United States is undoubtedly the supreme law of the land, for the Constitution of Maryland declares that all the people of this state shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or law of this state to the contrary notwithstanding. No person can hold any office or practice law or become naturalized as an American citizen without an oath to support that Constitution. And all other citizens, though they may not take this oath, are both legally and morally under the same obligation to support it.

The Fifteenth Amendment declares that the right of citizens to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude, and yet this is precisely what the proposed disfranchising amendment to the Maryland Constitution attempts to do. How any one can vote for the adoption of such an amendment without violating his obligation to support the Constitution of the United States it is hard to see. Many of us may doubt the wisdom of the Fifteenth Amendment, but if one is at liberty to disregard any law simply because he does not approve of it, we may as well not have any law at all.

That the purpose of the proposed amendment is to abridge the right of negro citizens to vote simply because they are negroes is too plain for argument, although it is quite apparent that the devices which have been necessarily resorted to in seeking to accomplish this nullification of the Fifteenth Amendment by an attempted evasion of the letter of its prohibition against disfranchising on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude will undoubtedly have at the same time the effect of disfranchising a greater or less number of white men.

Every white man, native or naturalized, may be called upon to prove that he or his ancestor had the right to vote before 1869 or was naturalized before 1969. This proof would often be hard to give, especially if the registrars wanted to keep the applicant off the registration books. Those who cannot give the proof lose the right to vote unless they pass the impossible so-called educational test, which is skillfully framed for the purpose of excluding everybody attempting to pass it, or unless they pay taxes on $500 worth of property standing in their own or their wives' names.

The educational test, which requires every person seeking to register under it to make application in the presence of the officers of registration in his own handwriting with pen and ink without any aid, suggestion or memorandum whatsoever, and without any question or direction addressed to him by any of the officers of registration, correctly stating seventeen separate and distinct irrelevant and disconnected facts, making the right to vote under it conditional upon the exercise of a feat of memory which not one man in a thousand could perform.

Every voter should give due consideration to its effects before voting upon the question of ratifying the proposed disfranchising amendment, with the consequent possible loss of his own or his children's votes as one of the results therefrom.

NAMES THAT ARE PERPETUATED

Big Towns Along the Western Maryland Railroad.

"Our town got its name from Mr. Thomas Davis," said Mr. C. L. McDowell, of Thomas, W. Va., in Baltimore, speaking to a reporter at the Hotel Stafford. "There was a town named Davis in West Virginia before Thomas was laid out. In fact, the Davis name is pretty well perpetuated in the names of railroad stations on the West Virginia Branch of the Western Maryland railroad, which was a creation of the Davis brothers, and the Coal and Coke road, which extends from Elkins to Charleston. It was built largely by Mr. Henry G. Davis, the former senator and Democratic candidate for vice president in 1904. The latest name bestowed by him is Gassaway, his middle name, which is one of the most important towns on the Coal and Coke road. Then, there is an Elkins, which bears the name of his son-in-law, Senator Elkins. Mr. Davis' private car, the Graceland, bears the same name as his summer home at Elkins. The names of some of the greatest statesmen of modern times are recorded in the name of the villages and stations on the West Virginia Central. These men were associated with the Davis brothers in building the road. Some of these names are Blaine, Windom, Gorman, Kerens, Bayard and Barnum. Mr. Douglas H. Thomas, one of the leading bankers of Baltimore, has a station named Douglas in his honor. It would appear that he had a double honor conferred upon him, as there is also a Thomas, but the latter was given for Mr. Thomas Davis. There is also a Hambleton, named for the late John H. Hambleton, of Baltimore, Augustus Schell, of New York, and President Harrison were also similarly honored.

THE CALL OF THE LAND.

In professional life it is well known that but the few grow rich and the many barely earn a living, even in the prosperous United States. In Great Britian it is said statistics show that but 15 per cent of professional men have living incomes. In industrial pursuits the eras of prosperity and those of depression succeed each other so rapidly that it is most difficult for the owner or operative to save enough from the years of activity to sustain and carry through the years of dullness or enforced idleness. Statisticians a score of years ago placed the final failures in mercantile affairs at 95 per cent of those who engaged in traffic, and while the percentage of recent years has no doubt been reduced very much below those figures, yet it is well known that two fail where one succeeds in merchandising.

It is in the tilling of the earth that lies the safest and most certain return to man for his labor. The advance in agricultural development during the past thirty years, in combination with advanced prices for products, vastly greater and better transportation facilities for reaching markets and the creation of new markets and constant growth in demand in every part of the world, has tremendously increased the possibilities, probabilities and certainties of amassing fortunes through agriculture.

Every county in every state in the entire Union needs tillers of the land, and every city, village and hamlet would have greater comfort and larger volume of prosperity if millions of farmers were added to our population.

No class of all the classes of workers in our nation has made the profits and saved such a large percentage of its earnings during the last twelve years as has the farmer class.

This year, while the banner year for those who till the land, is but one of a long series in which profits have come to them from their work.

The prosperity that has attended farming has been confined to no section of the Union.

It has been abiding in the East, the North, the South and the West, and from each and all of those regions today come invitations to millions of other men to join with those who are already enjoying the rewards of their foresight and labor.

The opportunities to secure independence, comfort and profit upon the lands of the United States were never so numerous nor so available as they are today.

The very best possible results to our government and our people would be obtained through a great increase in the number of those who derive their income through the productions of the soil.

RAYNER RESORTS TO VILLIFICATION.

The attempts of the Evening Times to explain away and apologize for the deadly insults heaped on the Republican party in Maryland by Democratic campaign orators are useless and unavailing. Wriggle, crawl and whine as it may, the Times cannot get away from the facts. It speaks of Reconstruction. Good or bad, Maryland never had Reconstruction, because, and perhaps the Times can tell us why, it never passed an "ordinance of Secession" and left the Union. For 30 years after the great Civil War the Democratic party was in absolute and unquestioned control in the State of Maryland, and throughout that period, content in security of power, it found no fault with the suffrage. In the end its name became a byword for all that was politically corrupt, and, in the good year 1895 the legions of Republicanism and Independent Democracy swept down from the mountains of Garrett and Allegany and under the peerless leadership of the lamented Lloyd Lowndes redeemed the State of Maryland from 30 years of Democratic misrule. Every Republican remembers with pride and gratitude the eminent public services of the illustrious dead. It is known of all men that the brief administration of Governor Lowndes, covering only four years of Republican rule, was one of unprecedented excellence and marked the high tide of progress and achievement in the governmental annals of the State.

But even the administration of Governor Lowndes does not escape the villifications of the Democratic acid-thrower turned loose on the hustings to rouse to frenzy the hordes of faithful in Baltimore City. In a speech delivered at the Lyric in that city on Thursday last, Isidor Raynor, Democratic United States Senator, described the admirable administration of the first and last Republican governor of Maryland in the following language, given verbatim below. Mr. Rayner said:

"The Republican platform congratulates the party upon the record that it made while in power in this State. It would have been well to have omitted all reference to this event. It is true that during the legislative sessions of the Republican party in 1896 and 1898 the Reform League whipped through that body several measures of benefit to the people; but taking both these sessions, with the Republicans in control, I assert that they were the most disgraceful that ever dishonored the political annals of Maryland. Surely no Democrat in this community, if he recalls them, would be willing to give the Republican party an opportunity to duplicate them. Public and private bills and measures were marketed to the highest bidder. Reports of committees were delayed to await the payment of the consideration they were sold for. The corridors of the state house were turned into an auction block, and the halls of the general assembly into a sutler's camp; and everywhere upon the avenues and highways of legislation the lobby reigned supreme and there was an unbroken carnival of riot and corruption."

We do not purpose to waste time in comment upon the above language of the Democratic senior senator of the United States from the State of Maryland except to say that when he uttered it he lied and he knew it. The short and ugly word is the only proper word for the long and ugly slanders of Mr. Rayner. And we ask the Republicans of Allegany county to rebuke Mr. Isidor Rayner by giving overwhelming majorities for the Republican ticket and every nominee on it, from State Comptroller down to County Surveyor.—Cumberland News.

Boom Your Own Town.

In a recent speech Governor Hughes referred to the constant inquiry of reception committees and prominent citizens of how he liked their town, and he said it had made a deep impression on him, says a New Jersey newspaper. It showed him that the people had civic pride and enthusiasm, and his remark is worthy of consideration.

Good citizens always have a good word to say for their home town. They know its good points, and if there are other peculiarities, they do not present them.

The grumbler who knows all the bad features of a town and mentions them at every opportunity is not only a poor citizen, but he is one who does nothing to build up the town in which he lives. It is good enough to provide a home for him and perhaps a place of business, or an occupation, but that is forgotten in the general flow of complaint.

Every resident can do something for the betterment of his town. If he can not improve property for lack of means or ownership, he can at least keep his own home neat and clean. He can have a clean yard, a grass plot or something to add to the appearance of the place, and, above all, he can say a good word for the place at every opportunity.

The grumbler should take a trip out west and hear the boomers there talk about their towns. It may be only a string of shacks and shanties, the most pretentious being one-story high with clapboard front, but the enthusiastic citizen will tell you how long it is since the first settler located and how the place is growing. He will point out the places which have acquired local fame and notoriety, will tell you of the prospects of the things they are going to have, and the room for expansion, which is bounded by the horizon. It isn't New York, he will say, but come back in ten years and he will show you a town that won't be hurt by comparison with any city on the footstool.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city of several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

QUERIES ANSWERED.

Important Subjects For Subordinate Granges.

About Open Meetings—The Lecturer's Province—Best Time For Children's Exercises — Membership Contests. Grange Lecture Courses.

Question—What should be our policy in regard to open meetings?

Answer—Make them just as rare as the conditions will warrant, and in some granges there is no need of ever having one except on such necessary occasions as Grand Army night, children's night, etc., and even then attendance of outsiders should be confined to those especially associated with the evening in question. Undoubtedly too many open meetings are held. The privileges of the grange are too often given free to those who ought to be members, and by so much does the Order lose instead of gain by the practice.

Question—To what extent is the lecturer "in charge of the meeting" while the literary program is in progress?

Answer—It is a mistaken idea in many granges that during the lecture hour the master is to give over all authority over the meeting to the hands of the lecturer, the oft repeated declaration of the master, "I now place the meeting in the hands of the lecturer," being in itself a misnomer. As a matter of fact, the master is in charge of the meeting from the first rap of the gavel until the closing benediction and should occupy his chair as much during the literary program as at any other time. The lecturer simply conducts the program features, but should not be required to maintain order or otherwise assume the functions of the master. The authority of the latter never suspends during the progress of the grange meeting, and the proper function of the lecturer is always secondary to that of the master. A clear understanding of this fact makes for pleasant relations and for the greatest success.

Question—What is the best season for holding children's night?

Answer—In the majority of granges June has been the most common month for entertaining the children, and this custom still largely prevails. Yet there is a growing disposition to get away from the month of school graduations and church observances, both of which occupy so much of the time and strength of the children. A July date has been adopted in many granges, while this particular evening is now often set for the second meeting night in September, thus securing the assistance of the teachers, who are invaluable helpers in training the children.

Question—Is there danger that competitive nights will arouse friction among the members?

Answer—So far as reported very little difficulty has ever arisen from such cause, though cases of this sort are not unknown. Where they have occurred it has been due simply to lack of tact on somebody's part and might as easily have grown out of any other occasion. However, the competitive night is rapidly taking on the form of simply the two sides presenting their respective programs without decision, judges or forfeit. This method proves quite as satisfactory as the other, leaves every spectator to judge for himself or herself which side did the better and eliminates all chance of any unpleasantness afterward.

Question—Can you tell us of any state where the grange has taken up the matter of lecture courses or attempted to do anything of that nature for its rural towns?

Answer—New Hampshire is making an extensive trial of just this plan and has a well established lecture bureau, which furnishes fine courses for the country towns. These lectures are highly spoken of and seem to meet a real need in the rural communities. The originator of the bureau was the state lecturer, Richard Pattee of Plymouth, who has charge of the work and its extension. Inquiry from Mr. Pattee will secure whatever details of the course may be desired.—Official Organ.

A WORTHY TRIBUTE.

O. H. Kelly, Founder of the Grange, Styled a World's Benefactor.

Today there is living quietly in the city of Washington one whose name deserves a place in the list of world's benefactors, one who in his day and time did much in his line of work and sphere of action that is worthy of the world's notice, the world's appreciation and the world's approbation.

The man is O. H. Kelly, the father of the grange. While there were associated with him others who saw much promise in his plans for a great farmers' organization, yet his was the master mind and he the master workman and his policies, principles and public interest the aroused public conscience and searching public concern. The movement which this remarkable man bequeathed to his countrymen cannot at the present time be fully and fitly estimated, yet we believe it is generally accepted as a move in the right direction, and the result of work thus started is to be in the final outcome one of such magnitude and importance as to command and secure the plaudits that we are wont to bestow on great undertakings that are followed by great public achievements.—W. N. Giles.

The Grange Recognized.

Congressman William Sulzer of New York, in a speech before the house of representatives on April 8 on "National Aid For Good Roads" asked unanimous consent to print as a part of his remarks an address by Hon. J. Bachelder, master of the national grange, on this subject. Consent was granted, and the address appears in the Record. This is an indication of at least one congressman's opinion on the influence of the grange in legislation.

Keep on Keepin' On.

If the day looks kinder gloomy
An' your chances kinder slim,
If the situation's puzzlin'
An' the prospect's awful grim
An' perplexities keep pressin'

Jus' bustle up an' grit your teeth
An' keep on keepin' on.

DEMOCRATS LOOK TO GOV. VARDAMAN FOR AID

Known Throughout the South As A Negro Baiter.

Among the prominent Democrats of the South who have been invited by Chairman Murray Vanever, of the Democratic State Central Committee, to come to Maryland and defend the disfranchising amendment is former Governor James K. Vardaman, of Mississippi. It is understood that Mr. Vardaman has accepted the invitation, and in order to do this has cancelled a half dozen lecture engagements. Four years ago, when the Poe amendment was the paramount issue in the Democratic campaign, Mr. Vardaman who was then Governor of Mississippi, was invited to participate in the Maryland campaign. Serious objections were raised to his presence here. Anyhow, Mr. Vardaman did not come.

The invitation extended to Mr. Vardaman shows to what desperate straits the Maryland Democrats are driven in their effort to secure popular approval of their pet scheme to make Maryland a one party State. Until his election as Governor of Mississippi in 1903 he was a politician of the type common everywhere—plausible, ready to take up any issue that promised success and known in his own State solely for the insistence with which he constantly ran for office and the persistence with which he was turned down whenever opportunity offered. In 1903 he succeeded in becoming Governor of Mississippi, despite the opposition of men like Senator McLaurin, Governor Long and other Democrats of the State, who knew the man and, recognizing his demagoguery and his pandering to the lowest element in politics, feared only too well that his administration would bring disgrace upon their State. Their fears were quickly realized.

On January 10, 1903, when his election was assured because of his success at the primaries, Mr. Vardaman printed in a paper of which he was editor and proprietor, an attack on the mother of President Roosevelt—an estimable Southern woman, resting for many years in an honored grave—an attack so vile that it cannot be reprinted in any journal. A cry of execration went up over the entire country. Here and there an apologist appeared, but the papers of Mississippi as a rule and the men of the South everywhere hung their heads in shame and asked only that the South be not judged by the mouthings of a vulgarian who happened to hold high office.

He wisely remained away from Washington at the time of the inauguration of President Roosevelt, recognizing that his presence in Washington would be the signal for an outburst of indignation. When the battleship Mississippi was launched at Philadelphia in 1905 again Governor Vardaman feared to face men, and he turned over to Senator Money, a gentleman who worthily represents his State in the Senate, the duty of representing Mississippi at the launching.

Until, by his foul reflections on a good woman, whose grave should have sheltered her from even a Vardaman, he attained the notoriety of execration, this man was known only in Mississippi as a fanatic negro baiter. Presumably, it is because of his record as the most violent hater of the black man in all the world the Democrats in their desperation think of bringing him into Maryland. He made his campaign for the governorship in 1902 and 1903 solely on the fanatic issue of the negro. The negro as a menace in Mississippi in 1902 and 1903 was nothing short of absurd, for the negro as a political factor had absolutely disappeared. The Mississippi Constitutional Convention of 1890 by its "understanding clause," had driven the negro from the polls. Between the registers in the registration booths, with their questions as to the interpretation of the Constitution, and the regulators at the polls with their shot guns and clubs, the colored men of Mississippi had soon realized that it was useless for them to attempt to vote, not to say fatal. But 18 years after the adoption of this amendment, when there was scarcely any negro voters in all Mississippi, Mr. Vardaman solemnly pretended that education would make the negro a menace to the white men of Mississippi, and he advocated that educating the negro meant to make him dangerous to society. He promised that if he were elected governor not one cent should be spent on the education of the negroes of Mississippi, except the revenues derived by the State from the taxes paid by the negro themselves—a sum so small that had he been sincere Mr. Vardaman would have promised that the colored schools of Mississippi should be practically closed and the colored children of the State deprived of education. Of course, it was only a demagogue's trick. During his term as Governor he never alluded to the promise he made in his gicampan.

PANAMA AFTER MORE TROUBLE

Uncle Sam May Be Compelled to Spank the Kid.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 27—Apparently the United States government has a little further business to transact with the government, and, incidentally, the police officials of Panama concerning the protection of American citizens in that country.

George T. Weitzel, secretary of the American Legation at Panama, and in charge at present during the absence of Minister Herbert G. Squires, on leave, was instructed by cable Friday by Acting Secretary of State Wilson to request the Panama authorities to make a thorough investigation of the treatment of William Miller. Mr. Miller, who temporarily took up his abode in Panama City, was recently arrested on the charge of drunkenness. According to the complaint which has reached the State Department on behalf of the unfortunate American, he was not permitted by the police to lock the door of his residence, where he lived alone, and that, as a result, a traveling bag containing $175 in gold and $74 in silver was stolen from his house during his imprisonment.

The State Department is not at all pleased with the result of the trial in the case of the murder of Charles Rand, boatswain's mate of the naval transport Buffalo, which took place September 29, 1908. After the case had dragged nearly a year and the Panama authorities promised that they would properly punish the men responsible for Rand's death, a trial was finally brought about. This was not until the State Department had given what was practically an ultimatus that unless the guilty persons were brought to trial and a guarantee of protection of American sailors and other citizens given, this government, by provision of the canal treaty, would police the territory adjacent to the Zone, including Panama City and Colon.

According to the reports which have just reached the State Department, Jacinto Escudera, the man charged with killing Rand, was tried September 2, in the Superior Court of Panama City, before the customary jury of three men. Rand, while accompanied by another sailor, was pounced upon and stabbed so severely that he died the next day, while his companion was badly beaten. Notwithstanding that thorough investigations were made by the consul and officials of the legation, as well as by officers from the Buffalo, the jury, after little more than one hour's deliberation, gave a verdict of not guilty.

"RING PERIL" vs. "NEGRO PERIL."

First is Real, Latter Imaginary, says Frank E. Williams, Republican Candidate for Comptroller.

In accepting the nomination for Comptroller at the hands of the Republican party, Frank E. Williams sounded the key-note of the campaign, when he declared last Wednesday that the "Negro Peril" is a myth, but the "Ring Peril" is not only a reality, but a menace fraught with such danger that no good citizen can afford to ignore it. In support of his first contention, he referred, among other proofs, to an editorial in the Baltimore Sun of Sept. 20, 1895, in which that erratic journal solemnly declared, that "There is no possibility of negro domination in this State" and attributes the agitation of it at that time to "the low cunning of the bosses" whose only object in doing so was "to try to save themselves by raising a false alarm against a danger that in no way threatens us."

That the danger of "Ring" domination is upon the other hand not only real, but imminent, becomes startlingly apparent when the registration and election figures are studied. Without going into all the details, it is a sufficient warning to say that, with the negro vote eliminated the present Democratic "machine" will have almost undisputed control in every branch of the State and City government. With a majority of 50,000 in the State and 20,000 in Baltimore, it would of course, choose both Governor and Mayor, thereby securing all the appointive offices in both. With a majority of at least 50 per cent in every county in the State, except Frederick, Washington, Allegany and Garrett, it would have 23 senators, out of 27, and 84 members, out of 101, in the House, thus controlling that body overwhelmingly. In Baltimore City it would have a safe majority in every ward except three. With these figures before us and with the memory of what happened under the domination of the Gorman-Rasin "Ring" can it be doubted for an instant that their successors, who now run the "machine" if vested with such enormous power, would treat both State and City to a saturnalia of graft and corruption compared with which the work of the old-time Ringsters would appear insignificant?

Second only to Mr. William's address of acceptance in point of importance, was the hearing of the "Black Line" ballot cases before Attorney General Straus, on Friday last. Former U. S. Attorney General Charles J. Bonaparte, U. S. District Attorney John C. Ross and former State Senator Henry M. McCullough made the arguments on behalf of the Republican State Central Committee, and Mr. Leigh Bonsal appeared for the independent Democrats. The Democratic "Machine" had no representative, the presumption being that they could find no reputable lawyer, even among their own ranks, who would attempt to defend such an infamous outrage upon the electorate of the counties involved. The points made in the arguments were that the entire scheme is illegal because: 1st. It is the work of the two Democratic Supervisors of Election alone, the Republican Supervisor being debarred from even entering a protest. 2nd. Because it is a direct violation of the provisions of the Election Law prohibiting emblems, the "Black Line" being declared equivalent thereto, if not better than any emblem. 3rd. Because it is designed to assist, and actually does assist, illiterates of one party in voting while it confuses those of the other party, even if they are not illiterate. Attorney General Straus listened attentively to the arguments and promised to render an opinion in a few days. The hearing was the result of persistent efforts upon the part of Chairman John B. Hanna, acting under instructions from the State Central Committee, to force the Governor and the Attorney General to take specific action in the matter long enough before Election Day to permit of other steps in the event of an adverse opinion in the pending cases.

A third item of importance was the disfranchisement of at least 1,000 white voters in Baltimore City on the first day of registration by the infamous measure passed at the Special Session of 1901, at the instance of U. S. Senator John Walter Smith, then Governor, and the other Democratic bosses and known as the "Little Naturalization Law, of Maryland."

UNCOVERING PLOTTERS.

The Democratic machine did not appear at the public hearing to defend their fraudulent practices in the Wilson law counties. The public took notice of their absence as pretty good evidence that the Ring was afraid to openly advocate the crooked things done by their henchmen at their direction. Smarting under the criticism leveled at them, they now, it is said, desire to be heard before the Attorney General renders his decision. Something will have been gained if the Ring comes from under cover and admits its complicity.

THOSE GOOD ROADS.

At the beginning of his career as chief executive of the state, Governer Crothers announced with a large degree of impressiveness a scheme for constructing good roads in the various counties of the state. In response to the Governor's recommendation, the legislature which assembled in January, 1908, passed a state road law and authorized a $5,000,000 bonded loan to pay for the roads. The Governor appointed a road commission, with one of his personal friends, residing in his own county, as chairman of the commission at an annual salary of $2,500. No great amount of time was lost in getting the managerial system in shape and the official salaries agoing. But there does not seem to have been much else agoing except the salaries. Nearly two years have expired and practically nothing has been accomplished in way of road-building under the new state law.

There has been a large amount of traveling up and down and going to and fro by the commission. An extensive excursion was even made into other states, nominally for the purpose of gathering information both concerning methods of construction and ways and means of effecting economy in road building. There was a general disposition to excuse the long drawn out delay in beginning actual work, on the theory that the Crothers commission should be allowed time to obtain an education. But when contracts were invited, the bids sent in were fanciful in the high reach of the prices named for doing the work. On the surface it might not seem that the commission is responsible for the boggle that has arised in connection with the placing of road-building contracts. But there must be something wrong in the managerial system, some looseness or inadequacy of method to account for the fact that higher rates for construction work have been demanded under the auspices of the Crothers commission than were asked for under the older Shoemaker law.

Surely road building upon a large scale can be accomplished more economically that upon a small scale. The expenditure of $5,000,000 in road construction is an item of sufficient magnitude to attract the attention of the close figuring of the best equipped road-building companies. Has the pernicious touch of machine politics gotten into this state road-building scheme? That was the danger which reflecting people feared when the original Crothers proposition was announced. The original suggestion was that the state should build the roads; that the commission which the Governor would be empowered to appoint under the law should have the handling of the $5,000,000 for direct distribution. This would have opened the door wide for the building of a powerful political machine by use of the $5,000,000 road fund. After all, has "practical" politics crept into this road-building business? Why otherwise is there such a continual boggle in the business?

THE SUN AND NEGRO DOMINATION

In an editorial which appeared in the Baltimore Sun, September 20, 1895, the Sun admitted that the cry of negro domination was simply a false alarm raised by the Democratic bosses in order to save themselves. Said the Baltimore Sun under the above date:

The low cunning of the bosses is seen in their persistent attempt to involve the honest Democrats of Maryland in a revival of old war issues, and especially to play upon whatever fears may linger in their minds as to the possible revival of the question of race supremacy. It is an appeal latent to apprehensions and anxieties which had good, solid ground in a period that has happily passed forever. There is no possibility of negro domination in this State, nor that the negro voters, who constitute only 18 per cent. of our total voting population, can ever become a ruling factor in either our State or city government. Whatever vitality may be left in the race issue in States further South, where the relative strength of the black vote to the white vote is much greater, there is none left in it in Maryland. No one knows this better than Gorman and Rasin and the only object they have in view in pretending to sound the alarm against the possibility of the ascendancy of the negro is to try and save themselves by raising a false alarm against a danger that in no way threatens us.

OFFICEHOLDERS TO RESCUE.

The expected has happened. A "league" of Democratic lawyers has been formed to push the Straus disfranchisement scheme and to fasten in perpetuity, if possible, the present Democratic oligarchy about the necks of a helpless people. So far as disclosed, the personnel of this combination is made up for the most part of about 50 officeholders, ex-officeholders, would-be officeholders or the relatives and friends of these several classes of model citizens. Included in the 50 we naturally find also several of the men who assisted Mr. Straus in the devious and perilous task of concocting the amendment along lines that would permit a self-respecting barrister to accept a retainer for the Democratic machine and put up an argument that could be made with a straight face in the remote contingency that the question should ever reach the courts.

Ex-Attorney General Bryan, who assumes the presidency of the "league," seems to have recovered from his modesty and reserve of yesterday, and now boldly joins in the opinion that the amendment does not conflict with the federal Constitution and is not unconstitutional. Only a few days ago he was unwilling to commit himself and was content to give a brief outline of the "obvious argument in favor of the proposition" of constutionality, while speaking with "reserve in discussing what position" the Supreme Court would take on the question. As a promoter of acrobatic mental performances the amendment issue seems to be a success.

One of the reasons advanced by the "league" for its confidence in the legal soundness of the measure, is the claim that the Republican party would not oppose it if it was clearly invalid, but would allow it to pass and then have it set aside by the courts. Wouldn't that be a pretty trap! What would the Democratic oligarchy do to the poor people of this state during the two years of its unfettered supremacy? Everybody, except possibly the great lawyers of this "league" knows that it would take at least two years to secure a decision by the Supreme Court. In the interval shere would be a perfect riot of ringism. Nothing could stop the further mutilation of our election laws by a packed legislature. Bypartisan election boards would soon be a memory, and the few precious checks and safeguards still existent would fade with the setting sun.

Biggest Pay in Two Years.

The largest pay roll in the last two years is what is claimed for the one Saturday by the Clarksburg Fuel and Fairmont Coal Companies, together with the numerons independent companies. The combined pay of the two companies named was more than $300,000 and that of the independent combined made the total reach almost $400,000. The pay was for the month of August, the busiest one in two years, and the prospect is good for still busier times.

Local Teachers' Institute.

The Garrett County Teachers' Association will hold local institutes upon the dates given below at the following places: Grantsville, October 2; Kitzmillersville, October 9; Friendsville, October 23; Accident, October 30; Deer Park, November 3. The principals of the above named schools will arrange the programs. If there should be any sufficient reason why the above dates should be changed, the alteration will be made upon request to the president of the association.

HOTEL COMPANY WANTS TRAINS TO STOP SUNDAYS

Inter-State Commerce Commission Asked to Order Innovation for Mt. Lake.

The Loch Lynn Construction Company of Garrett county, Md., brought suit against the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad to compel the company to stop all passenger trains at Mountain Lake Park on Sunday and evidence in the case was taken Monday at Fairmont, W. Va., before Mr. McCornick of Washington, D. C., a representative of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The case involves the right of a railroad company for a consideration to contract with one party by which the rights and privileges of another company are alleged to be taken away. Testimony was offered by the plaintiff, the defendant and the Mountain Lake Park Association. It was shown in the testimony that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company several years ago entered into a contract with the Mountain Lake Park Association that in consideration of a strip of land at Mountain Lake Park to be used for railroad purposes, the railroad company would never stop any Sunday trains at Mountain Lake Park, which is a relig ous community.

The Loch Lynn Construction Company, which owns a large hotel just across the railroad tracks opposite Mountain Lake Park claims that its patronage is impaired by reason of the inability of persons to get in and out of Mountain Lake Park on Sunday. It claims that the refusal of the railroad company to stop trains there is a discrimination against the Loch Lynn Company in favor of Oakland and Deer Park, at which places summer hotels are also conducted and the alleged discrimination is in violation of the law of the Interstate Commerce Commission which makes public carriers serve alike. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company practically agreed that the contention of the Loch Lynn Company is right and made no serions objection to the stopping of trains on Sunday, but the Mountain Lake Park Association, wishing to maintain a quiet religions community on Sunday insists that the contract be carried out. A mass of testimony was taken which shows that the plaintiff was injured by the failure of the railroad company to stop Sunday trains.

G. M. Alexander, attorney, appeared for the plaintiff and Judge Elliott of Baltimore, for the Mountain Lake Park Association. The railroad company was also represented by counsel. The case will come up for a hearing before the commission in November. Among those who testified were Mr. R. T. Cunningham and Mrs. B. C. List for the Loch Lynn Company and Dr. W. W. Davis, superintendent, for the Mountain Lake Park Association. The question is regarded as a novel one and the like of which has probably never been before the commission.

THEN AND NOW.

In 1905 United States Senator Rayner opposed the constitutional amendment then submitted to the suffrage of the people because it lacked an educational test as a qualification for the right to vote, and because, in his opinion, it would have disfranchised thousands upon thousands of his white fellow-citizens.

In 1909 he favors the adoption of the disfranchising amendment now pending and pours out floods of oratory to emphasize his anxious zeal for its success. He accepts the bastard provision imposed upon the negro, and which he asserts does not apply to any white citizen, as an educational test and in strict harmony with the views he entertained four years ago. This test may meet Senator Rayner's judgment of the attainment in intelligence that should be required of the negro to entitle him to vote, but it is a test which today could not be met by one in a hundred of the white voters of the State.

If Senator Rayner were called upon, without previous notification, to submit to it he would probably fail to prove himself a qualified voter. Could he, without reference to some authority, sit down and write off hand the full name of the President of the United States, of one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, of the Governor of Maryland, of one of the Judges of the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and of the Mayor of Baltimore City? Yet that is precisely what is required by the amendment of a negro in Baltimore City, and, if a resident of one of the counties, the substitution of the name of a county commissioner for that of the mayor. This, however, is not the only requirement, there being other provisions still more difficult and especially applicable to men who make a living by working for wages, as most negroes do.

The injustice of the amendment, on this account, is so glaring that it is difficult to conceive how any fair minded man can vote for it. It may be uncharitable to suggest that in Senator Rayner's case a change of circumstances has altered his judgment, but four years ago, he was not a candidate for the United States Senate.

REPORT OF OAKLAND DISTRICT.

General Superintendent R. B. Ward Reviews Work Accomplished in His District During Past Year.

To Bishop L. B. Wilson, D. D., LL. D., President, and Members of the West Virginia Conference:

In making this my sixth annual report to this Conference, it is with profound gratitude to Almighty God, our Heavenly Father for his gracious providence, his kindly leading through these six years of strenuous activity and constant toil, we have been sufficiently provided for and safely kept by his ever watchful care. For the preservation of our life, the safekeeping of our family and a place to work in his great harvest field, we shall ever be grateful.

I am pleased to report that the work has gone steadily forward on the district with but few exceptions, and real progress on all lines of church work.

THE POLICY ENFORCED.

It has been our constant thought that nothing great or lasting can be accomplished without order or discipline, and knowing of no ecclesiastical discipline better than our own, we have kept close to our Methodist Discipline, and knowing that the Gospel of Jesus is the only Glad Tiding of Salvation to a lost world, we have sought to preach Jesus Christ and him crucified.

The pastors have been preeminently faithful and gratifyingly successful in proclaiming this message from their pulpits as the healthful conditions of the charges will show.

REVIVALS.

The revival spirit has prevailed to a greater or less extent throughout the entire district. Conversions have been reported to me from every charge in the district, ranging in number of conversions from 3 to 333 the maximum, giving the total number of conversions for the year at 1850.

PASTORAL LABORS.

The preachers of the Oakland district, as a rule, give much time to pastoral labor. This is highly endorsed and much appreciated by our people. It not only helps and encourages them but it helps and developes the pastor and makes a better preacher of him. Two things are very necessary to the preacher: He must know the message and he must know men.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

I think we have a fairly well organized system of Sunday Schools in this district. We have in this district 130 Sunday Schools, 906 officers and teachers and between 6,000 and 7,000 scholars. In the main I think good and faithful work is done in these schools. Many of our young people are members of church.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

The Epworth League is still alive and doing effective work. A very profitable convention was held at Mt. Lake Park in June, under the presidency of J. B. Workman. In many country places it is difficult to keep up an interest and even maintain a permanent organization. For this two reasons might be assigned: First, the traditional idea that things were not formerly done that way, and second, a lack of suitable leadership.

BENEVOLENCES.

The importance of a large liberality upon the part of all our people in the support of the benevolent enterprises of the church has been faithfully and persistently enforced. Quite a number of our people are in heartiest sympathy with the church and its plans to extend the Redeemer's kingdom in the earth and do all they can to aid and encourage our benevolent work. This is especially true in reference to our work in foreign mission fields and there is a growing interest in our home mission work. They are coming to know that God is sending the heathen and the unevangelized into our midst that we may lead them to the Master; yet I am sorry to say that we have entirely too many people among us who care little for missions, either foreign or home. These we have tried to point to the more than 900,000,000 unconverted heathen in the world and get them to hear the words of our divine Lord when he said, "Go into all the world and teach my Gospel to every creature. Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world."

PASTORS SALARIES.

Two things have I urged in reference to pastors salaries: First, that they should be fixed at a liberal amount. "The laborer is worthy of his hire," and "They that preach the Gospel shall live of the Gospel," and second, that the salary be paid in full. I am glad to record that there has been some improvement in the first instance. Larger salaries are apportioned than a few years ago, yet in many cases they are still too meager. In the second instance I am sorry that all the salaries will not be paid in full. This ought not to be, and I am grateful to the Lay Members' Association for their earnest effort and co-operation in reference to increasing and paying pastors' salaries. Six years ago the Oakland District apportioned its pastors' salaries at $12,649. This year they are apportioned at $21,650. This is exclusive of house rent.

CHURCH BUILDING.

On the Howesville charge, at the Fairview appointment, a beautiful and convenient country church was built at a cost of $1,200 and dedicated by the District Superintendent Nov. 8th.

On the Thayerville charge, at the Dodge appointment, a church costing $1,000 was built and dedicated by the Superintendent.

On the Montrose charge a church was built at the Salem appointment and dedicated September 19th by Rev. C. B. Meredith.

At Jennings, Md., a splendid frame church costing $1600 was built, and dedicated September 26th by the superintendent.

CHURCH AND PARSONAGE IMPROVEMENT

At Parsons a pipe organ was placed in the church and some other improvements amounting to $1000.

The Hambleton church was improved to amount of $100.

At Blaine a debt of $300 on the parsonage has been paid.

At Friendsville the parsonage has been improved at a cost of $145.

The Selbysport church has been improved at a cost of $175.

The Blooming Rose cemetery has been enlarged and improved at a cost of $200.

At Friendsville a new organ has been put in the church at a cost of $125.

The Thomas church and parsonage have been improved, costing $500.

Swanton has paid $75 on church debt.

Mt. Lake Park has painted the church costing $40.

St. George charge, the Mt. Carmel church was improved at a cost of $43.

The parsonage at Oakland was improved at a cost of $250.

Newburg has paid on church indebtedness $900.

Montrose has improved the parsonage at a cost of $100.

Kingwood paid the last of the parsonage debt amounting to $60.

Hendrick improved the church costing $70.

Bruceton charge, Harmony Grove church was improved at a cost of $150.

Davis church properties improved amounting to $350.

Bruceton parsonage was improved costing $75.

Brandonville churches and parsonage have improved, costing $200.

On Bayard church improvements cost $20.

The Aurora parsonage improvement cost $15.

WORK AMONG OUR ITALIAN BRETHREN.

Bro. Nicola Di Stephano, while in college at West Virginia Wesleyan, has found time to do much preaching among our Italian brethren, though at times very much embarrassed because of limited finances. We need more money and greater concentration in this work. Will not some of our loyal laymen lend a helping hand to this work? The Italians seem eager to hear the Gospel from an evangelic source.

THE PREACHERS.

There are thirty-three preachers in charge in the Oakland district. They are a faithful band of Christian toilers. They love the church and the cause for which Jesus died. No stain has been brought upon the church by these men. They have faithfully toiled through the years. Sometimes the pay has been meager, indeed, but they have complained but little. I have loved and trusted them. They have been good and kind to me. During the present year they went into their pockets, gave me more than $100 and said to me: "Go to the great Epworth League Convention at Seattle. See the great northwest." I went at the expense of these good brothers. Do I thank them? That word is too weak. Brethren, my heart's gratitude goes out to you. I will hold you in everlasting remembrance. May the God of all grace command his richest blessing upon you. Brethren, I shall not forget you. I will remember, love and trust you in the future. Command my cooperation when expedient.

PERSONAL EFFORT.

I came to the district in a hurry without any solicitation upon my part, whatever. Bishop Mallalieu appointed me to the task. I have worked in a hurry, though not carelessly, I have not worried, yet I have felt the burden. I am glad I came, I trust you are not too sorry. These have been strenuous years, but not years of vanity I trust. God has been good, His church has gone forward. We are stronger in the Oakland district as a church than ever before. May the Kingdom ever go forward.

With this report I close my work on the District as far as I know, and turn my eyes once again to the future, and wait my orders, without I think, undue solicitude upon my part. I crave that element of faith which will enable me at all times to hear that voice which said "I am with you always" even to the end of time live.

R. B. WARD,
District Superintendent.

Mr. Caton Dead.

Wm. F. Caton, ex-county clerk of Tucker county, W. Va., died at the Davis hospital Saturday last from appendicitis. He was editor of the Tucker Democrat when located at St. George, and was elected county clerk in 1890 and again in 1896, overcoming a large Republican majority. He, with Sheriff Harper, were the only Democrats Tucker county elected. Since the year 1900 he has been in the telephone business and developed that enterprise wonderfully.

Drowsy Chicken Thieves.

When S. P. Young of Rockwood went to feed his chickens Tuesday morning, he found a number of chicken heads. He trailed the thieves a mile into the country and found them sleeping by a fire. He secured the services of officers who arrested L. M. Caubaugh and Frank Leidyder as they were asleep the fire after having feasted on the chickens. Leidyder succeeded in escaping from the officers as he was being taken to jail.

Real Estate News.

The E. S. West real estate agency is keeping up its record for deals in property. The last deal put through was for the John Michael place of five acres and small dwelling located on the Oakland-Mountain Lake road, which was sold yesterday afternoon to Mr. N. G. Sturm, of Worthington, W. Va., for $1,800.

THE DEATH RECORD.

JOSEPH HENRY DAVIS.

Joseph Henry Davis, a well known resident of Selbysport, Garrett county, is dead, aged 66 years. He served in the Union army when he contracted malaria and he has never been well since, his death being due indirectly to this ailment. He is survived by his wife, two sons and five daughters.

J. ALFERD THOMPSON.

Mr. J. Alfred Thompson, aged thirty years, died at the Echard Cottage, Mountain Lake Park, last Thursday at noon after an illness of three weeks of typhoid fever. Mr. Thompson was a native of Frederick, Md., and resided near Baltimore. He was employed as a train auditor on the B. & O. R. R., his run being from Cumberland to Pittsburg, he having been taken ill at the former city and came to the Park where his family resided during the summer. He was a member of the Masonic Fraternity and his remains were escorted to the station at the Park by a delegation of the membership of the Oakland Lodge last Friday morning and shipped from that point to Baltimore where the interment was made on Saturday.

MRS. SUSAN MYERS.

August 6th, 1909, Mrs. Susan Myers, wife of Elijah Myers, of Frazee Ridge, departed this life after an illness of two weeks. Cause of death an illness of long standing and old age. She was born Nov. 12th, 1831; was married to Elijah Myers Jan. 12th, 1853. To this union was born twelve children, eight boys and four girls, eight of whom are now living, six boys and two girls, all married and living close the home of their childhood. Four preceded her to a home in heaven more than forty years ago. Those living are William F., John M., J. S., Mary Ellen, married to Sam. L. Bowling, Isaac T., George W., Walter G., and Hannah, wife of Jeff. Lowdermilk. There are living 35 grand children and 9 great-grand children. Sometimes nearly the whole family would go home at once, which was always a joy and comfort to them. Nothing pleased her better than to have as many as could come and partake of their hospitality. She was a member of church for more than 60 years. She not only professed Christ but lived as He would have her live each day, always ready to minister to the sick and care for the suffering and feed the hungry with joy and gladness. She was ever kind at home and yet firm in her commands; never was known to be unkind or hasty. I lived for 40 years at home and can truthfully say that I never heard my mother say a bad word in all my life. She had no fear of death, but was anxious to go to meet her Saviour and children, who have waited so long for her coming. She was laid to rest in the old Myers burying ground at Markleysburg, Pa., to await the call for all to come to judgment. A great gathering of relatives, neighbors and friends followed her to the last resting place. The funeral was conducted by Rev. Wolfe, pastor of the M. E. church, Friendsville charge. The pall bearers were John M., J. Stanley, Isaac T. and Walter G. Myers, Sam. S. Bowling and John Hoff.

We know she rests from her toil and labors. Her afflictions are unknown to her now. She can never come to us but we can go to her.

The following lines we dedicated to our mother:

When our earthly life is ended
And our earthly mission done,
We shall go across the river
At the setting of the sun,
And in God's celestial mansion,
Clothed in garments strangely fair,
We shall meet mother gone before us,
We shall know each other there.

Yes, we'll meet her in the city
That is just across the strand,
And our hearts will leap with rapture
When we take her by the hand.
Oh, how sweet will be the meeting,
Earthly words can ne'er declare;
We shall know the bliss of heaven
When we meet mother over there.

Do not tell us that our mother
Lose her earthly mem'ries quite,
When she sings among the angels
In the heavenly mansions bright;
Oh, we know that we shall know her
Though the angels' robe she'll wear
When she bids us welcome over,
We shall know dear mother there.

CROP REPORTERS FOR THE CENSUS OF AGRICULTURE

Director Durand Will Secure Progressive Farmers to Assist in Taking Census.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 27.—Forty-five thousand enumerators out of the estimated grand total of 65,000, will be engaged April 15th next in gathering the required information concerning agriculture for the thirteenth decennial U. S. census. Director Durand purposes making every effort to secure progressive farmers and crop reporters for these places. His action is based upon the recommendations of Chief Statistician LeGrand Powers and the advisory board of special agents composed of professors of economics and farm experts who have been assisting in the formulation of the schedule of inquiries concerning farm operations and equipments. It is believed that the selection of this class of men, already familiar with statistical methods of securing data and reporting it in comprehendible form, will add greatly to the efficiency of the census and to the scientific value of the information obtained. Director Durand does not anticipate any difficulty in procuring enumerators of this kind as there are in every state of the Union, hundreds of crop reporters acting for the department of agriculture, representatives of state boards of agriculture, etc.

The agricultural schedule which is to be placed in the hands of these enumerators is nearing completion by the census bureau. The advisory board who are acquainted with practical agriculture, its varying conditions, and who are active in their respective states in assisting the farmers to improve their farm methods, have been most earnest and no effort is being spared to make the schedule as simple as possible, and yet secure the greatest amount of important information concerning agriculture.

By means of the census schedule an effort will be made to secure an accurate statement of the total number of acres of land in the farms of the country, by states and counties; also the improved area, number, and size of farms. On account of the growing importance of tenancy in many parts of the country, considerable information will be secured as to whether farms are operated by owners, tenants or hired managers. Infromation about the value of farms, buildings, and other permanent improvements, and of the farm equipment, both machinery, implements and live stock, will be secured.

An important part of the schedule will be that enabling a study of the crops and crop products of 1909. The enumerators will ask about areas, quantities produced, and value of crops, in the case of all the principal crops grown in all parts of the United States. This inquiry covers grains and seeds, hay and forage crops, and all important special crops, such as fruits, nuts and vegetables, cotton, tobacco, rice, hemp, potatoes, broom-corn, etc. By-products, like flax straw for tow and twine, and such manufactured products as wines, cider and vinegar, dried fruits, sugar, syrup, etc., will not be overlooked by the questions in the schedule.

The inquiries concerning live stock and their stock products, also include cattle, work animals, sheep and goats, swine, poultry and bees. The facts as to the number and value of live stock at the time of the enumeration are to be secured in some detail, taking into consideration ages, sex and use of animals. Futhermore, data will be secured relating to the number and value of each species of animal raised, purchased and sold, and the quantity and value of animal products, such as milk, cream, butter and cheese, wool, eggs, honey and wax.

A few special questions of a general nature may be included to secure valuable related information. Among these is one which will be made concerning the area and character of woodland in farms.

There will be but one schedule for agriculture. There may be a small schedule for the enumeration of animals in cities. This will be carried by the city enumerators and it will cover horses, milch cows, chickens, etc., housed barns, stables, etc., in the cities. No attempt will be made to get the area of city gardens or vacant cultivation.

CONSCIOUS AS LION CHEWED HIS LEG

African Hunter Whose Aim Was Bad, Severely Mauled by Wounded Animal.

Frederick Courtney Selous, the well-known African hunter, who is just back in England after several months spent in the region in which Col. Roosevelt has been displaying his prowess, describes rather realistically the unfortunate encounter of Harry Williams, one of William N. McMillan's hunting companions, with a lion, which left its wicked marks upon him. Williams' escape with his life was very narrow, and it was for a long time a question whether he would not be compelled to sacrifice a leg.

Going through grass about breast-high, with his gun-bearer, one day, a lion suddenly arose and started to move away from them. This behavior, by the way, Mr. Selous says, is not at all unusual. Williams was anxious to get the lion, and clapped his hands to irritate it. It turned and walked toward the hunter, but the distance between them was still several hundred yards. Williams took aim, but instead of waiting calmly until the beast had drawn comparatively near, fired prematurely, one charge of his heavy gun immediately following the other. The first ball flew wide and the other merely grazed the lion's shoulder. Then, lashing his tail in intense anger, the great cat came forward by leaps. The gun-bearer had another gun, but there was no time for him to hand it to his chief. There were no large trees nearby that could be climbed. The only protection was a young bamboo copse, and around this Williams ran. In less time than it takes to tell it, the lion had him. He seized one of his legs and sank his teeth deep into it. Luckily the lion, who was an old fellow, had lost one of his longer tusks, but the corresponding one on the other side of the jaw passed just between the two bones of the lacerated leg, and then the lion, with the grip upon him, shook the unlucky hunter as a dog does fowl which it has caught in similar manner.

Williams' life at that moment was worth only a very small purchase. One stroke of the lion's paw upon the head would have finished him. All this time the gun-bearer was displaying a grit unusual in his kind. He had approached the lion, striving to discharge the other gun. But he did not understand the method of working the gun. Try as he would, he could not inject a cartridge into the firing chamber. In tones of entreaty he asked Williams how it was done. Though suffering great agony, the hunter retained his consciousness. He gave the needed directions while the lion was ravenously chewing his leg. The native fired two big charges into the flank of the beast, and it rolled over dead. Yet it proved a rather difficult task to withdraw its teeth from the wound in Williams' leg. The latter was taken as quickly as possible into camp and one of the Uganda railway surgeons was summoned.

It was found after a few hours that poison from the fang of the lion had infiltrated the flesh, muscles and tendons around the bones of the leg. The conseqnent inflammation was severe and threatening. Unfortunately the wound was permitted to heal too rapidly in the outer part, and thus was closed before the septic suppuration had ceased. Several operations were performed to save the leg. At last accounts Mr Williams had not yet wholly recovered, but he has, at least, the satisfaction of owning the skin of the beast that mauled him.

DIRT ROAD IMPROVER

Wonderful Change Made by Using the Split Log Drag.

It has been said that the only 10 per cent. of the roads in the entire United States are the main traveled highways. The other 90 per cent. are the common, everyday dirt roads. In the ordinary discussion regarding road improvement our thoughts and energies so frequently lead us to the discussion of macadamized roads, brick, stone and other specially constructed roadbeds that the vast majority of our dirt roads are lost sight of. We talk about necessity for road rollers and road scrapers, rock crushers and various other essential roadmaking devices, and then when we figure out the cost of such roads at from $3,000 to $15,000 per mile we oftentimes wonder how many generations, it will take for our dirt roads to be adequately maintained, according to the best systems. Because of the utter hopelessness of getting macadamized or other expensive improved roads in his locality in Missouri a man named D. Ward King built a drag out of a log split in half some thirteen years ago, and after every rain, while the mud was soft, he drove up and down and road in front of his farm for half a mile, pulling the drag at an angle of forty-five degrees. Such marvelous improvement resulted from the use of this primitive device that scientific investigation by road engineers has been instigated, and the matter has now passed beyond the experimental or guesswork stage.

The 90 percent of our dirt roads in the United states, properly dragged after a rain, can be made almost as satisfactory during the greater part of the year as expressively hard surfaced highways and at a ridiculously small cost per mile, carrying from $5 to $100. In the light of the impossibility of macadamizing all our 2,000,000 miles of roads in the United States in one generation or even in any limited period of time, and in the light of the effective and immediate results obtained from dragging the highways, the study of this method can be followed with much profit.

First of all, dragging a road when muddy fills in the ruts, closes up uneven spaces and makes a smooth surface. Of course traffic over such a road will immediately proceed to cut it up again. However, as dragging is persisted in and the mud is worked into a clayey-like mass and becomes dry it likewise becomes hard. Eventually the top of the road presents a resistant shell-like cake of tough mud as hard as unburnt brick.

After a time it will be noticed that a road that has been dragged will become dry much sooner than neglected stretches of road in the same neighborhood. The more attention given to dragging a road the quicker will it dry out ahead of its neighbors. Eventually after several years of persistent dragging the mud shell on the surface of such a road will become so hard that even after a cloudburst of rain a pick will with difficulty be made to penetrate the surface for over two inches.

By the skilled use of the drag a road can be made higher in the middle. The average neglected country road is usually hollow in the middle and after a rain has small lakes and pools standing over its surface, sometimes for many days and weeks. But the dragged road, having such a crown sheds water into the side gutters.

These facts to the uninitiated or skeptical may on first impression seem farfetched or exaggerated, but they are facts based on the experience of reputable men from Missouri to New York state who have been dragging the country dirt roads after every rain.

The roads today in many sections of the United States are no better than they were fifty years ago, even with the labor and money that have been expended upon them. In some localities almost the entire amount of the tax is expended in temporary work, while nothing is spent for permanent improvement, with the result that conditions remain unchanged. The sooner we can get a system of road dragging inaugurated in every community the sooner will we have the 90 per cent of our neglected dirt roads adequately and permanently improved throughout the greater part of the year in the United States.—Donald McCaskey, M. D.

CUMBERLAND'S COMING EVENT

$15,000 in Purses and Premiums Bespeaks Greatness of Exhibition.

Preparations are rapidly being completed for the annual meeting of the Cumberland Fair and Agricultural Association, October 5, 6, 7 and 8, 1909, which this year promiseds features of which but few similar enterprises in this section of the country can boast,

Special attention is being paid to the live stock and agricultural exhibits. Years ago, the Cumberland fair was noted for these features. Now that the fair have been revived and it has been shown by the experience of the past few years that the people are anxious to bestow their patronage, more so than ever will the facilities of the fair be utilized in behalf of live stock, poultry, agricultural and horticultural features and a display of farming machinery. Allegany county has grown in importance as an agricultural county and the same can be said of Garrett, while the country about has become one of the most important for fruit culture, especially apples and peaches, in the country. All these exhibits are being encouraged. The department of domestic manufactures and fine arts promises to be completely filled. Miss Verna Holt, of Cumberland, formerly of Clarksburg, W. Va., will be the manager of the dispaly of fine aticles.

The purses and premiums this year amount to about $15,000. The speed program includes a $1,000 stake race for each of the four days, while the other purses call for $400, except the free-for-all trot or pace on the last day, which is for $500. All the running races are for $150 purses. Some of the best racers of the country will be at the fair, Cumberland being in the Ohio, Pennsylvania, Maryland and West Virginia circuit. Track record breaking horses in the West Virginia circuit this season have been entered.

The complete speed program is as follows:

TUESDAY—October 5.

	Purses.
2:25 Pace	$ 400
2:19 Trot (special conditions)	1000
2:15 Pace	400
Running, mile dash	150

WEDNESDAY—October 6.

	Purses.
2:12 Pace (special conditions)	$1000
2:21 Trot	400
2:20 Pace	400
Running, 1¼ mile dash	150
Running, ¾ mile dash	150

THURSDAY—October 7.

	Purses.
2:17 Trot	$ 400
2:18 Pace (special conditions)	1000
2:14 Pace	400
Running, 1¼ mile dash	150
Running, ¾ mile dash	150

FRIDAY—October 8.

	Purses.
Free for all—Trot or Pace	$ 500
2:15 Trot (special conditions)	1000
2:25 Trot	400
Consolation mile dash	100
Running, 1 mile dash—Gentlemen Riders—For Cup.

The big outside free attraction will be Strobel's airship, which will later be at the Hagerstown Fair. This ship sails through the air at the will of the navigator, ascending and descending as he he would wish. He will also exhibit flying machines.

There will be an automobile show and the W. W. Garage Co., Cumberland, has offered a prize of $25 for the best looking machine—one decorated with its regular equipment. Motorists of Allegany and Garrett counties, Md., Mineral and Hampshire counties W. Va., and Bedford and Somerset counties, Pa., can enter this contest. Ladies will be judges.

The Baltimore Jockey Club, to encourage the Horse Show feature of the fair, which promises to be one of the most important, has offered a prize of $15 for the best single driver.

A handsome cup will be given to the winners in the race for gentlemen riders. There are already entries in this race from Maryland and West Virginia.

Foot racing, which is such a popular sport in Maryland coal regions, will also be introduced as a special feature. The events will include a 100-yard and a 200-yard dash with a $50 purse for each. The entries will close October 2.

Excursion rates will be offered by the various railroads and a special train will be run daily by the Western Maryland railroad from Central station to the grounds, while the street car service will be fully adequate,

TIPS ON SANDWICHES

How to Make Them Appetizing With Little Trouble.

The housewife who learns the art of making sandwiches is always well fortified against problems when serving an informal luncheon to guests. Close grained bread should be used for coarse bread will crumble. And bread baked in round tins is preferable to that cut into slices and cut with a biscuit cutter, since the baked edges preserve the shape. Moist fillings should be laid between lettuce leaves, and by buttering the bread the moisture cannot penetrate it, making it soggy. Melted butter can be used if it is not soft enough to spread. A salmon sandwich is a tempting article of food and should be half mixed with chopped boiled egg and very thin slices of olives and pickles. The wise hostess will make two different kinds of sandwiches, some with the mixture moistened with vinegar or lemon juice, others without, for many persons cannot take acids. Practical all meat sandwiches are extremely rich, and strong condiments are noticeable in the filling, especially mustard, and catchup. While white meat make a delicate sandwich, yet the darker meats mixed with mayonnaise and other relishes, are more appetizing in every way.

When hot sandwiches are served at a noonday luncheon at home the contents of the sandwiches are placed between the layers of bread and fried, or the bread is toasted and covered with a cooked meat filling, then covered with buttered toast and served hot. Peanuts mixed with mayonnaise and sliced egg make a good sandwich. They make a fruit sandwich which is well liked by those who are fond of fruit and bread. The filling consists of chopped dates, figs, lemon juice and ground nuts, lightly mixed with tart jelly. The bread is buttered for this. Candied fruits are often used, but often the sandwich is a bread cake, more of the angel food cake variety, filled with fruits and moistened with cherry juice or the liquor from preserved pineapple or peaches.

BROTHERS.

The Love That Kept One and Drove the Other Away.

By OSCAR GRUENDER.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

Two brothers in love with one and the same girl, three hearts fired with the divine passion, three souls struggling with the agony of love and hope and fear—this was the horrible dilemma that fettered John and Dick Cummings and the beautiful, bewitching Edith Stearn.

For months it had been brewing—this immense struggle of hearts. And yet on the surface there was not a ripple. The brothers vied desperately, but good naturedly. Their companionship was not strained; it suffered no spasmodic fits of jealousy or anger. The most exemplary good fellowship prevailed, but somewhere in that good fellowship there lurked the silent, irrepressible conflict.

And John and Dick knew it. They felt it. Nevertheless the subject was never broached. Each in his own way sought to win the laurels of love, likewise dreading the crucial moment, for one, only one, could win.

The climax came suddenly and unexpectedly. John had come upon them—Edith and Dick—unexpectedly in his own elysium, a little spot in the wilderness of Iron Grove. He had gone there to dream of her. When he beheld the two the reverie left his brain as a rocket leaves the earth, and he sizzled and trembled with excitement.

At once he was a frenzied eavesdropper. He must hear. Surely he had a right.

Cautiously he made his way through the hedges; he drew himself forward on his hands and knees.

He beheld them seated far apart on the old log. Edith was plying the soft ground with a stick. She jabbed thoughtlessly and at random. Her soft hazel eyes were riveted on the ground, and her attitude was pensive. Dick, with his elbows on his knees and his chin on his hands, was a duplicate in pensiveness. Verily it looked like a quarrel, and into John's heart there stole a bit of diabolical joy.

Dick was the first to break the ominous silence.

"You say that you love me, Edith," he said hoarsely, "and that you do not—cannot love John. Very well. But you must tell him so too. You are now bound by your very love to explain. Now that we know and understand we must confess. Deception must cease."

"Yes, yes, I know," replied Edith, digging a little more savagely. Then impulsively she dropped the stick, sat down beside Dick and put her arms around his neck. "He is your brother," she said feelingly, "and, oh, how I do hate to pain him. But I will tell him, only I want to break it gently. I know he half expects— What is that noise?"

"Nothing, nothing," broke in Dick impatiently.

But that noise was something. It was John wriggling through the hedges. He had heard enough—too much—already. Would he never get out of that shrubbery?

Once clear of the spot he threw himself on the grass. For a time he could not think. Before his eyes there jigged and ambled a dizzy world. But bit by bit the mental chaos eked itself out, and there remained only the sickening realization.

This, then, was the truth. She did not care for him after all. It was Dick she loved, and Dick alone could make her happy. But, then, he could do little, too, in making her happy. He might go away and save her the pain of telling, of breaking it to him. That would bring a little joy anyway. Of course she would never know, but what did it matter? Would he not carry in his heart the conviction that he had done something for her—that, after all, he had not loved in vain?

Yes, there would be that consciousness. He told himself so again and again and that he would go away. But where?

To the Philippines. There was some fighting there, and Uncle Sam was calling for volunteers. He would answer the summons; he would serve his country and serve his love.

He bade adieu to Iron Grove. His gaze wandered to the little spot, his elysium, once. An ache stole into his heart, and a lump rose in his throat, but he fought it bravely and turned away.

Within two hours he was back in the city and in the recruiting office. The examination he passed with ease. But his luck did not stop at that. He was told that duty began on the morrow. A few weeks in the eastern barracks and then the Philippines!

That night he dreamed of fighting in the tropics. And then came visions of the dear fatherland and of Edith. Delirious, kneeling, his arms outstretched, he beckoned her to come across the waters. He called her by name; he rallied and called, and in his voice there was the wail of a broken heart.

In the morning there were a few more things to pack. With alacrity he proceeded to jam these into the trunk. While he was thus engaged Dick entered the room.

"I suppose you have already heard," said John, tugging hard at the strap. "I've enlisted."

"Enlisted!" exclaimed Dick, his eyes starting from their sockets.

"Yes. You see, Dick, one of us ought to go. Besides, I'm getting tired of hanging around home. I want to go out and see a little of the world."

"But, I—I thought you cared?" ventured Dick.

"Cared what?" snapped John, almost angrily.

Dick said nothing, but reddened all over.

"I never cared—never!" John gave the brazen lie with such vehemence that something like an incubus toppled off Dick's breast.

"But you can do me a favor, Dick. You can bid her goodby for me. You see, I'll hardly have time, for the dray 'll be here presently. Ah, there comes my man now," and he yanked his trunk toward the door.

"And now, Dick, I must say goodby." He put his hands on Dick's shoulders and looked into his eyes as if he were gazing into the very soul of him. "I'm going far away," he continued huskily, "and I know I'll feel a bit lonely. But by and by I'll get used to it. And if you'll only think of me a little—you and Edith—it will make it easier—much easier. And I'll be happy. You promise? Good! God bless you both. There—now don't, Dick! Goodby, goodby!"

Where Eloquence Is Wasted.

It might have been supposed that Addison, the most polished writer of our Augustan age; that Burke, with his versatile intellect and exuberant eloquence; that Mackintosh, with his almost encyclopedic learning, and that Jekyll, who had set a hundred dinner tables in a roar, would one and all have achieved conspicuous success in the house of commons.

But, as Macaulay has pointed out, exactly the reverse was the case. Their speeches produced no effect. They wearied and bewildered their audience. And their rising to speak was too often the signal for a general exodus. In fact, as was said of Burke, they acted as a dinner bell. Even Macaulay himself, though on two occasions his speeches changed the fate of a division, was in no sense of the word an orator or even a great debater. His voice was too shrill and monotonous, and he poured out a torrent of words with such headlong fluency as to confuse his hearers as well as to baffle the quickest of parliamentary reporters. Bulwer Lytton, again, could recite an admirable essay, but his delivery was bad, and the seesaw gestures which accompanied his speech were as "grotesque as those of an old fashioned postboy."

In our own generation no two men probably have had more highly cultivated minds than John Stuart Mill and John Morley, but as far as their parliamentary utterances go their names are "writ in water."—Blackwood's Magazine.

Revenged.

He was asking the old man for his daughter in marriage. He was talking tremblingly, hesitatingly, as you read in story books. Now came the old man's turn to speak, and as he began his face was white with passion and his voice shook with excitement.

"You want to marry my daughter?" he said. "Ah! Twenty years ago your father crippled me in a business deal, and I swore to be revenged, and now my time has come."

He paused for breath, and the aspirant for the maiden's hand was about to beat a hasty retreat in the face of supposed defeat when the father broke forth again:

"Yes, sir; I swore to be revenged, and I'll now strike the father through the son. Want my daughter, eh? Well, take her, and may she prove as expensive to you as she has to me."

The old man dropped into his chair worn out with the excitement of his plot, and the young man fainted.

An Object Lesson.

A certain miserly old gentleman pulled up his horse and trap at the door of a shop the other day and beckoned to a seedy looking individual who was singing in the streets. "Here, hold my horse a minute," he said.

The singer stopped in the middle of a verse and took up a position at the animal's head. When the old gentleman came out of the shop he bestowed a halfpenny upon the man and then lost no time in scrambling into the trap. The recipient, having gazed at the coin for a moment, jumped on the step. "Take it back, sir," he remarked tragically. "It means ruin to you."

"What do you say, sir?" thundered the old gentleman.

"Ah," was the solemn reply, "once I was just like you. I'd heaps o' money an' threw it about like water, an' look at me now! Ain't I a hobject lesson? Keep your wealth. I scorn to rob you!"—London Scraps.

CARE OF FLOWER BEDS.

How to Keep Them Beautiful All Through the Summer.

All flower beds should at this season of the year be kept in proper shape and condition. All seed pods and withered and yellow leaves should be carefully cleaned and picked off. Frequent stirring with the hoe is good, but not deep enough to in any way injure the roots. It is a good idea every time you mow the grass to take a sharp spade and cut the edge of all your flower beds. It keeps the grass from encroaching on the beds and also keeps the beds to their proper shape and form and makes them have a fresh and neat appearance.

By August many of the soft growing foliage bedding plants, such as coleus, alternantheras achryanthus, etc., will be growing freely and should be kept cut back and not allowed to become straggling. To be pretty, beds having plants of this kind should be uniform. The various colors should not be allowed to intermingle. Golden colored plants should not have red foliage ones sticking their shoots up through the yellow, etc. This is easily prevented by constantly pinching. The main point is to commence pinching early and take the tip out of the young growth. In this way you can scarcely see that the work is going on. If, however, you neglect them until the plants are very tall then you leave stems showing, and the beds are unsightly for awhile.

Some beds are greatly benefited by a mulching of well rotted stable manure. It is necessary to shake out all the long straw before using, and if the manure is in large pieces chop it with a spade. Rose beds, cannas, hardy herbaceous and verbena beds are all benefited by mulching. We do not believe it is necessary to thus mulch soft plants, such as the coleus and geraniums, as they grow very well without it. The work of mulching is very simple. All you want to do is to spread the manure over the bed carefully to the depth of about one inch.

How often flower beds in the open air should be watered depends to a great extent upon the character of the soil and variety of plants. If the soil is good stiff loam and you have frequent showers you do not need to water at all. If it is sandy, as near the coast, and the weather dry it is beneficial to water every day. Geraniums seldom need watering when growing in good garden soil. With much water they grow too much to foliage. Cannas and plants of this character do not require much water. For them and geraniums we prefer much hoeing.

If using a hose sprinkler to water have just force enough to water without washing the ground. Hold the sprinkler near the ground so the water goes first where you want it. Geraniums should not have the flower heads watered if you can avoid it, as it spoils them completely. The evening, after sundown, is the best time to water, as the plants have all night to take up the moisture, and artificial watering is soon evaporated under the combined effects of wind and hot summer sun.

How to Remove Dark Freckles.

An almond-lemon plaster is the best remedy for removing dark freckles. Smooth a tablespoonful of dry mustard with lemon juice and then add a teaspoonful of oil of almonds. This treatment is strenuous and should be taken in the evening just before retiring. Spread the paste evenly all over the skin, taking great care to keep it away from the eyes as much as possible. In a few minutes the paste begins to burn the skin, and then it should be washed off immediately. The burning sensation means that the skin is beginning to bleach. Be sure to get the face thoroughly cleaned with hot water and then massage a good cold cream or skin food into the skin. Only a few days of this treatment are necessary, and then the face peels as it does when sunburned. Even the most obstinate freckles may be removed with this treatment. The rosewater and borax solution must be used every few days to keep the skin free from freckles.

How to Make Homemade Soap.

In trimming meats before cooking save all waste scraps of fat, try out and put in a tin pail until you have collected about five and a half pounds of grease. Melt, strain through a wire sieve into a dishpan and cool to lukewarm. Dissolve in an earthen vessel a ten cent can of lye and three tablespoonfuls of borax in three and one-half pints of cold water. Let the lye mixture also become lukewarm. When the grease and lye are of the same temperature pour the lye into the grease, stir about two minutes and pour into square or round granite pans. The soap will be hard and ready to cut in about twelve hours. This makes a hard soap that does not injure the hands.

How to Cure Insect Bites.

For insect bites and bee and wasp stings there is nothing better than this wash: Dissolve one ounce of powdered borax in a half pint of water that has been boiled and allowed to cool. If preferred, rose, orange or elder water may be used in place of the boiled water. The bites or stings are to be touched occasionally with the water as long as any irritation remains.

How to Keep Rugs Flat.

Girls who have a habit of shuffling their feet, thereby incurring frequent scoldings for kicking up rugs, will find life pleasanter if they cut triangles of medium weight cardboard and sew them on the under side of rugs at each corner.

THE LURE OF THE MASK

By HAROLD MacGRATH

A Fascinating Romance by One of the Most Popular Novelists of the Day

The Lure of the Mask

A story of the most alluring character in fiction. Such a woman in real life often decides the destiny of a nation. To read of her is as interesting and exciting as it would be to meet her. You will find the story fascinating from beginning to end.

By Harold MacGrath

THROUGH the popularity and merit of his earlier literary hits, "Arms and the Woman," "The Puppet Crown," "The Grey Cloak," "Half a Rogue" and "The Man on the Box," Mr. MacGrath has won high rank as a fictionist.

GREAT PLANETS CAUSE ALARM

Position of Planets Threaten Earth With Chaos.

By United Press.

ROME, Sept. 28.—M. Baron, a famous astronomer, today added his warning to that of others voiced during the past week, predicting violent seismic disturbances in the next few days. He says the sun spot is the largest ever seen, and he believes it responsible for Saturday's electrical phenomena. Within the next few days the position of the sun, moon, Mars, Saturn and Jupiter will be such as to produce a terrific strain on the earth, and may result in the earth's shape, becoming eliptical instead of spherical. There is great alarm among the people.

BETHLEHEM.

As we have not seen any items from this place for some time, we will pen a few.

Cutting corn and threshing buckwheat is the order of the day.

Jack Frost has visited us but the crops were not damaged to a great extent.

Mrs. Bert Ashby and children are visiting at J. T. Moon's this week.

Mrs. Ella Tasker and daughter Emily left here last week for Oklahoma, from which place they will go to New Mexico to homestead. We were sorry to see them go and will miss them very much. We wish them a pleasant western trip.

Mr. H. H. Hardesty was seen in this community last week.

Mr. H. D. Harvey and Mrs. Huldah Lish were visiting relatives in this section Saturday and Sunday.

Miss Ruth Moon has returned home from Keyser, where she has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Wm. Wagner.

Mr. C. Hilleary was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Lish Sunday.

We are sorry to hear that our Sunday school has closed. We have had a very successful Sunday school this summer with Mr. A. E. Bosely as superintendent.

Rev. H. A. Hardesty expects to attend the M. E. conference at Manningtion.

Mr. R. E. Paugh is still out with his threshing machine. We wonder how long it will be before the chickens can go to roost in peace. Mr. Alex. Moon is farming for Mr. Paugh at present.

Our school is being conducted by Miss Odessa Harvey with an enrollment of 18 pupils.

Mr. George Wilson and sister were visiting Mr. and Mrs. Z. H. Moon last Sunday.

There is a great deal of confusion in the community concerning the appearance of a curious kind of a tick. They are sometimes cal politics. The ladies think of using an exterminator of some sort to get rid of them. The Republicans are standing their ground.

Success to THE REPUBLICAN and its editor. HAPPY HOOLIGAN.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Miss Mammie, the 15-year old foster daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Smith Lish, of Loch Lynn, died Tuesday morning after an illness of a few days. She participated in choir practice in the U. B. church Saturday evening last.

Rev. C. W. Hudson was critically ill Wednesday morning but is now out of danger.

The Mountain Lake Park hotel will close for the season today, after the most successful season in its history. Mr. Dunnington has leased the Sherwood at Grafton and will take possession immediately.

Rev. J. O. Bolton left for conference Tuesday afternoon, with all claims met. The official board passed a resolution unanimously asking for his return.

Rev. H. E. Friend was in the Park Monday night and left Tuesday afternoon for conference.

State Superintendent Anderson of the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland will deliver an address in the M. E. church here at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon. Everybody invited.

Mrs. Flora Reed, matron of the State Normal School at Fairmont, W. Va., was visiting friends here Saturday and Sunday.

Superintendent Davis has a force of men engaged in ditching the Park front with the ultimate intention of making a golf course from the board walk to the Carr cottage, to be under the management of the Ladies' civic Club.

Miss Edna Chance will spend the winter near Philadelphia.

Mr. Gay W. Hayden will probably spend the winter in Grafton, W. Va.

Rev. Dr. W. W. Davis, of the Park, returned from Fairmont Tuesday evening, where he had been as a witness before the examiner in the case of the Loch Lynn Construction Company vs. the B. & O. R. R., an account of which appears in another columns of this paper.

STOVE PATENT.

CHAS. S. DAVIS, of J. M. Davis & Sons,

has been granted several patents on their DAVIS RANGE which they have been offering to their trade during the past year and have now over 100 in use.

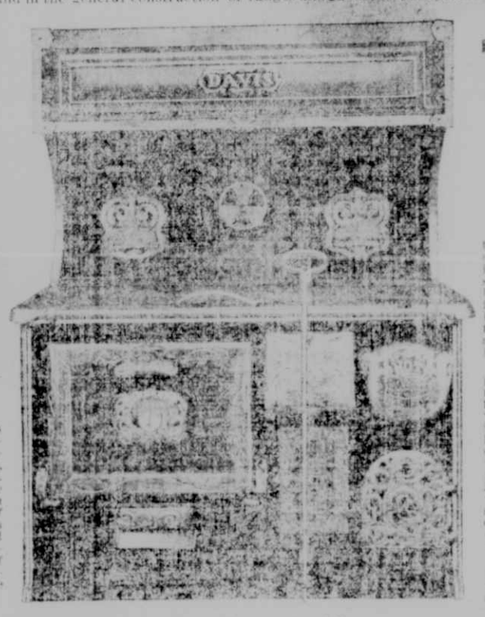
The following advertisement is taken from J. M. Davis & Sons' Hardware Bulletin and fully explains its many advantages.

Showing under side and working parts of grate.

Where, What and How to Buy

DAVIS PATENT STEEL RANGES

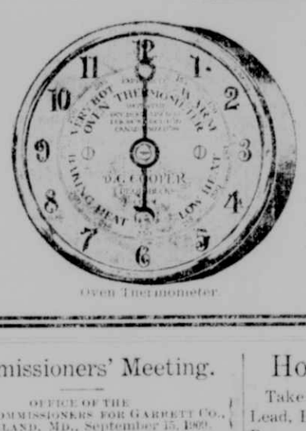
Nothing Like It Ever Offered to the Trade



After years of experience in the Stove and Range business we take great pride in announcing that we have produced the most wonderful Steel Range that was ever offered to the trade. Its construction is entirely different from the old style of Ranges. In planning and constructing the Davis Steel Ranges every improvement that would add to its durability and convenience for the housewife has been carefully guarded, and in its construction possibly more points are patented than will be found in any half dozen ranges now offered to the trade. The fire-box of any range is the part that always gives out first, and with this thought in view was planned in a way that the liners and grates are entirely different from those found in the general construction of ranges and should last for years.

Top side of Grate.

Poker Shaker that extends through handhole.



The special features of grate rest, oven flues, fire lining grates and poker shaker are found only on the Davis. It is the most durable Range ever offered to the trade at a reasonable price, and is in reach of all.

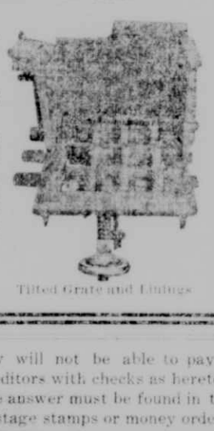
Any one contemplating buying a range, if they will take the time to investigate the Davis Steel Range cannot help but see themselves the many advantages and superior qualities in its construction. All we ask is a chance to show our Ranges in comparison with others, both as to price and quality.

Write for our booklet. It will tell you where it differs from all others.

All of the Davis Ranges are provided with a reliable oven thermometer or heat indicator, placed in the oven door. It shows accurately the temperature of the oven without the necessity of opening the door, which allows the accumulated heat to escape. Unquestionably it is one of the greatest conveniences ever brought to the housekeepers aid.

Oven Thermometer

Davis No. 8-74 Steel Range complete with reservoir, high and low closet, heavy lined throughout; has oven thermometer and all the improvements.



Strong Points that Make Davis Steel Ranges Most Desirable.

Enclosed reservoir heated by patent process.

A grate rest with large openings next to oven, avoiding accumulation of ashes.

Rocking grates with poker and hand shake, easy to operate, for wood and coal.

Extended lugs on end of grate bars that act as guards to prevent cinders from clogging or wedging between the tilted bars.

QUEER FEDERAL STATUTE PASSED

Forbids the Issuing of Checks for Less Than $1 Under a Heavy Penalty.

A new federal statute that goes into effect on January 1 has caused considerable discussion among banking men, since its provisions have become known. The law forbids the issuance of any checks in the sum of less than one dollar. The violation can be punished by a heavy fine and imprisonment. The law reads:

"No person shall make, issue, circulate or pay out any note, check, memorandum, token or other obligation for a less sum than one dollar, intended to circulate as money or to be received or used in lieu of lawful money of the United States, and every person so offending shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisonment not more than six months or both."

The announcement that such a law will go into effect has been something of a surprise to the public and it was not generally known.

There has been a query arisen as to what is to be done in settling the accounts of bankrupts, creditors often by the decrees of bankruptcy courts, being entitled to sums less than one dollar. The trustee in the terms of the new law will not be able to pay off these creditors with checks as heretofore and the answer must be found in the use of postage stamps or money orders.

REPUBLICAN CAMPAIGN OPENS SATURDAY NIGHT.

A Monster Mass Meeting Predicted at Oakland Opera House That Evening.

The Republican party will open its campaign in Garrett county Saturday night of this week when a monster mass meeting will be held in the Oakland Opera House, the speakers being three of the most prominent orators and entertaining talkers in the State, Hon. Frank Williams, candidate for Comptroller, Gen. L. Allison Wilmer and Ex-Congressman Charles R. Schirm, of Baltimore.

The Deer Park Cornet Band and the Mountain City Band of Oakland have been engaged to furnish music for the occasion and the committee has issued invitations to a large number to attend the meeting, which promises to be a record breaker so far as numbers present count and the enthusiasm which is bound to prevail.

Other meetings in the county have been arranged for to be held at various points along the B. & O. railroad and the smaller settlements adjacent to Oakland as set forth in an advertisement appearing in this paper today.

All are cordially invited to attend.

Obituary.

Mamie Lucile Lish, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. S Lish, passed away peacefully Tuesday morning, Sept. 28, 1909, aged 15 years, 5 months and 8 days. She was a winsome, lovable child, always having a pleasant smile and kind word for every one whom she met. She gave her heart to God and was baptized in 1904 by Rev. W. H. Faust and had ever since lived a consistent christian life. She was always at her post of duty in her church work unless hindered by sickness. Her sickness she bore uncomplainingly, her last words to her pastor being that Jesus was with her to comfort and help her. Her first thought was always for others rather than for herself. Her funeral was conducted by Rev. J. G. McEndoe. Her pastor was too ill to be present. Her body was laid to rest in the White cemetery at Pleasant Valley. Six young girls acted as pall bearers—Misses Lottie McEndoe, Myrtle Cunningham, Lizzie Moon, Emma Kearns, Lacie Moreland and Maud Queer. The casket was followed into the church by the following schoolmates bearing flowers—Hellice Rathbun, Agatha Martin, Amelia Bunce, Stella Gibson, Roy and Cora Lee, Robert Kearns, John Martin, James Hamilton, Wilmer Crane, Robert Miller and Herbert Leighton, Jr. We weep not for her, for she is at rest with her Savior, but our hearts go out in loving sympathy to those who so keenly feel the separation from one so dearly loved.

HER PASTOR.

A CORPORATION ATTORNEY'S PRAYER

Invokes Blessings on Things Accomplished and Asks Forgiveness for Blunders.

Oh, thou great and powerful Corporation, the greatest within our state, the one that I adore and is free from taxation: I implore thee to come to my aid and assist me in this, my hour of tribulation, for my own party has gotten tired of my bossism and has disinherited me. Thou knowest that I have been in thy employ lo, these many years. Thou knowest that I have always done thy bidding and have defended thee against the good people of our county. Thou hast killed my neighbors' cows—and horses—and I have always defended thee, whether just or unjust.

Thou great and powerful Corporation, thou knowest that I have fostered a new party here in order to attract votes from the Republican party to our candidate. Thou knowest the corrupt practices act prohibits us from repeating what we did fifteen years ago, but we beseech thee to use your lash over your employees until they turn from their political affiliations and flee unto us and help elect our candidate.

We thank thee for the chairman thou sent us at our first meeting, although he never cast a vote within our county.

We thank thee for the engineer that is taking such an active part in our deceptive movement. I find him an exceedingly handy article, although unlike the chairman you sent us, he cast his first vote in our county last fall. Oh, thou great and powerful corporation, as well as the people of our party, forgive me for the blunder I made in drawing up my new party's platform for when I compared our election expenses with the expenses of Mineral county, W. Va., I forgot that Mineral county as well as the state of West Virginia, was controlled by the Republican party, and I note when comparing the expenses they are 7 to 1 in favor of a Republican Governor. I implore thy forgiveness for I got the suggestion from the engineer you sent us and I believe that sin should be charged to him.

Now great and powerful Corporation, forgive me for all unforeseen errors, and when election day rolls around, I hope you will say, "well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast disrupted thine own party and shown thy self to be an insurgent for the sake of deceiving Republicans into voting for a certain candidate to thine own advantage. Come down from the mountain top and receive thy reward."

May Lose His Leg.

Oscar Broadwater, of Avilton, will probably lose his leg as the result of an accident. He fell from a haymow two weeks ago. He will be sent to the Western Maryland Hospital, Cumberland, to undergo an operation.

IS THE PROPOSED SUFFRAGE AMENDMENT IN ANY SENSE A NECESSITY?

A Serious Question To Be Considered By Garrett County Republicans.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Through the press, in the political circles, on the street corner and by the wayside, where ever men meet who are alive to their own interests and the interest to their fellow man, we hear long drawn out and sometimes heated discussions of the proposed suffrage amendment. The energy manifested by the exponents of the proposition, in their strenuous efforts to thrust upon the people of Maryland a measure so evidently distasteful to them, proves that the ratification of the Amendment by the voters of the state at the November election is a matter of grave importance to the instigators and promoters of the scheme. The equally vigorous denunciation of the measure by its patriotic opponents proves also that the defeat of the amendment by the vote of the people is a matter of vital importance to them, and all this state-wide agitation is bringing before the people the real live and paramount issue in the political campaign now opening. It is therefore proper that the proposition be openly and fairly discussed in order that the voter may understand his position and be able to meet the issue intelligently.

When ever a real need of any people could be supplied by the enactment of a new law, or the repealing of an old one, remedial legislation becomes a real necessity; whenever the moral, social or civic condition of any people can be improved by the modification of an established law, it becomes the absolute duty of the people's representatives to suitably amend that law, but in all cases where these ends cannot be attained legislation becomes a dangerous and unwarranted experiment. That bevy of ignoble politicians, who propose to amend the Constitution of the State of Maryland and at the same time virtually annul a portion of the Constitution of the United States, which, since its adoption, has been regarded as the supreme law of the land, cannot reasonably expect the citizen of the state to adopt their suffrage amendment until they have shown that an absolute need of the people demands such a measure and can clearly show that the amendment will supply that need.

Since the politicians have not, cannot, and will not produce evidence to prove that the needs of the people of Maryland demand that their right of suffrage be restricted, it is up to the individual citizen to determine that matter for himself, a task which will be easily and quickly accomplished if every citizen of the state will ask himself the simple question, "Do I enjoy too much sovereign right or civil liberty as a voting citizen?" and until at least a majority of all the voters in the state are willing to answer that question affirmatively there cannot be said to exist a need for restricting their civil rights, and the proposed suffrage Amendment is therefore not a necessity in any sense of the word.

Prior to the last session of the Maryland Legislature, ninety-nine per cent. of the citizens of the state never dreamed that they were over burdened with civil rights, and an equally large percentage of the people were not aware that their representatives were in favor of restricting and hampering their liberties by the enactment of a disfranchising measure, hence when that band of professional inventors of auxiliary political machines came rushing out of their diabolical workshop and thrust into the face of the people their latest invention in the shape of the proposed amendment, the people discovered for the first time that God had given, and the supreme law of the land had guaranteed to them, more civil rights than they could properly digest, at least that is what a few political quacks would have them believe. Now these same crafty politicians, posing as benefactors of mankind, are assuming wise airs and propose to administer an antedote in the ratification of the suffrage amendmend labelled, "A cure for the black peril," and yet with all their fiery eloquence and the bluster of their vassals beating about the bush, have found it utterly impossible to show the voters of Maryland that their proposed measure is in any sense a present necessity, which would be the only real logical reason for its adoption.

Whenever, in the history of man, a general need has arisen which could be supplied by a modification of their governing laws, that need has been first felt among the people and the demand for the needed legislation has always come from the mass of the people. This proper and very natural law of free government and modern liberty is the fundamental principal of "a government of the people, for the people and by the people," but in this gracious year and in the noble state of Maryland, when the people are not conscious of a need for an amendment to the constitution of the state, a few wise politicians declare that the citizens of this state are too stupid to be conscious of a need even when one exists and with the Amendment warclub in their hands are rushing rampant throughout the length and breadth of the state trying to hoodwink the people into accepting a measure that would trick them out of their dearest right, the privilege of voting.

No amount of theorizing upon the subject, however, will relieve us of the necessity of meeting the proposition face to face, and if we as citizens of Garrett county and of the State of Maryland, may hope to settle the matter intelligently at the polls in the approaching election, we must not be satisfied with a mere study of the origin and character of the amendment itself, but must look beyond it and see what would be the result were it to become a law.

I ask myself the question, "If this amendment should become a law, who of my neighbors will be disfranchised?" In answering this question, we will suppose that were the amendment adopted it would be literally and fairly enforced; then the answer is evident, and that all men, regardless of color or party affiliation, who could not comply with the requirement of the law would be disfranchised, thousands of them, not because they are undesirable or vicious citizens, but because they themselves or their fathers failed to do something forty years ago which the super-wise politician of Maryland today say they should have done. It is to this particular class of our fellow citizens and neighbors, that it is our purpose to particularly refer in this letter. The sturdy, thrifty, capable and desirable citizenship of Garrett county, is made up largely of men of German birth, or their direct descendants, and among them we find a large number of Germans who adopted Maryland as their home and who would fight to defend her honor, but since they failed to apply for their naturalization papers prior to January 1st, 1869, the proposed amendment declares that neither they nor their sons would be qualified to register and vote in the elections of the county and state. I have in mind a good law abiding German citizen of Garrett county who has been an active, faithful and loyal Democrat, respected and esteemed by his fellow men and in all respects worthy of all the privileges of citizenship, and in this case, as well as in thousands of parallel cases, the amendment would deprive many of our best citizens of their highest civil rights. Can anyone assert that the foreign-born residents of Maryland who became citizens by naturalization prior to 1869 are any better than those who were naturalized later, or that the sons of foreign born parents who voted before that year are any more deserving of the rights and privilege of citizenship than those of parents who did not vote until after that year? but such an unreasonable and unfair distinction is made in the amendment.

How many sons of foreign-born parents living in Garrest county today would be willing to go before a board of registrars and make oath that his father voted before 1869, and yet that is just what will be required of them should the suffrage amendment be ratified by the vote of the people at the election on the second day of next November.

The amendment proposition, therefore, does not seem to be a question of politics so much as a question of a square deal between man and man, and a fair man will not give his sanction to a movement which would rob his neighbor of his natural rights, no matter to what political faith that neighbor belonged, or from what nationality he sprung, so may every man in Garrett county, of all parties, who feels that the restrictions of the amendment would not disfranchise him, remember that by voting for its passage he is helping to disfranchise many of his neighbors who are as good and worthy as he is, and in the noble spirit of American fairness, cast his ballot against the measure choosing rather to be found enlisted in the common cause of humanity than in the company of political schemers.

THE M. E. CONFERENCE ADJOURNED MONDAY

General Shakenp in Oakland District Appointments—Rev. Reed New Superintendent.

The sixty-third annual session of the West Virginia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church came to a close at Mannington Monday afternoon about 4:30 o'clock, after the reading of the appointments of the ministers to their various charges.

The day was one of suspence to all of the ministers and their friends, as it was expected that the appointments would be read at noon, but at that time a message came from the cabinet meeting, presided over by Bishop Wilson, that another session would be called at 2:30 in the afternoon when the appointments would be read. A large, anxious crowd gathered for the afternoon session, and after the meeting opened it was some time before the assignments were named. A large amount of routine business was taken up and dispensed with, and the resolutions adopted by the conference were read.

After the finishing of the business proceedings, all joined in singing "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," any the closing prayer was made by the Rev. Dr. Hiatt, of Moundsville. Bishop Wilson then talked for some few minutes to the ministers, his remarks being very inspiring. He said that the appointments had been made after due consideration on the part of all concerned, and in the best manner that they were able to do, and it was hoped that they were satisfactory.

Bishop Wilson then read the appointments to the eager assemblage and the conference adjourned after the singing of "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow."

The appointments for Oakland District are as follows:

Rev. J. B. Workman, whose services as pastor of St. Paul's church in Oakland for the past five years have been an inspiration to many, goes to Wesley Chapel, Wheeling. Mr. Workman will preach his farewell sermon to the local congregation Sunday at which time the members of the local lodge Knights of Pythias, of which organization the minister is a loyal member, will be present in a body as a mark of esteem and the brotherly affection in which Mr. Workman is held by his fellow Pythians.

Dr. R B. Ward, the retiring District Superintendent, has been returned to the Cameron church of which he was pastor when he was elevated to the superintendency of the Oakland District.

Rev. J. O. Bolton, of the Park, goes to Sutton, W. Va., taking the place of Rev. Williamson, who comes to Oakland, and whose reputation as a strong, forceful speaker and an excellent, God-loving man has preceded him.

Rev. G. W. Kepler will be stationed at Wallace, Morgantown District, where we know he will gather about him many warm friends.

The new superintendent of Oakland District, Rev. W. D. Reed, comes to his work well equipped mentally and physically to crrry it on along the same lines laid down by his predecessor, Dr. Ward, who has been eminently successful.

FOR SALE CHEAP—Two first class heating stoves formerly used in the Oakland Presbyterian Church. Apply to G. A. Fraley, Garrett National Bank, Oakland.

OCTOBER WEATHER

Frost and Snow Flurrieo Will Show Up During Month.

Peter R. Smith promises us rather nice weather for October. Plenty of sunshine and just enough frost and snow flurries to let us know winter is coming. His forecast follows:

General cloudiness, a high temperature, and threatning weather will prevail as September passes over to October.

A storm wave will start in the west on the 2nd, continuing on transit to the 5th over the different sections of the country.

The conditions attending the wave denote rain, wind and some electric action of the wave as it passes on east. A touch of autumnal weather will follow on its trail on the northern border of the country and also mountain sections may have an early view of sleet and snow. Frosts are likely to show up in central parts where the absence of clouds will permit on the mornings of the 5th or 6th.

On the 9th and 10th some changes in weather conditions will show up which will be attended by an increase in the heat of the temperature, bringing on changes in the course of air currents and then followed by cooler weather.

As the 12th is reached clouds will begin to unite, the temperature will increase in heat, and conditions denoting the formation of a storm wave will be apparent. The wave will be central on the 14th. As it moves on east it will increase in strength and spread in area till most sections of the country will be reached in some form of disturbance, either in rain, wind and changes of temperature. Thunder and lightning will be experienced at a number of places. The northern lakes will have a touch of autumnal storms. The period will wind up in central parts with clearing cooler weather and frosty mornings will appear about the 15th or 16th.

On the 19th, 20th and 21st the disturbing forces denote cold rains and winds from the northwest and also several days of unpleasant weather. As the clouds pass away from the sky bright days and frosty nights will appear.

The 27th and 28th denotes the center of a storm period. At the beginning of the period a high temperature will prevail and spread over most parts of the country. The disturbing elements indicate intense storms touching most parts with rain, wind and thunder and lightning. High autumnal winds will prevail on the northern lakes and also at many other places.

At the winding up of the period the hand of winter will be present and exhibit some snow flurries over many parts of the country.

GRANTSVILLE.

The issues of the campaign are now being discussed upon the platform and in the press, as appropriate to this occasion we present for your thoughtful consideration a matter that deeply concerns and should be of interest to all.

Eternal vigilance, as you well know, is the price of liberty, which will wilt and perish if not safeguarded by vigilant, resourceful minds, patriotic hearts and strong arms. We must think and think seriously, work hard and conscientiously, and be ever alert and vigilant, if the sacred trust handed to us by our fathers, this precious inheritance of freedom, is not to become a comic imitation of real democracy, and government of the people, for the people, by the people become first a farce and then vanish from the face of the earth.

The Republican party presents for our consideration the best men to be found within their ranks and the principle they represent is "honest suffrage for honest men."

The Democratic party presents the names of her best men and while nothing can be said of them personally, politically they are contending for an issue that should bring the blush of shame to the face of every honest man within their party ranks. When they attempt to deprive the poor but honest man of one of the few privileges which he enjoys, and that is his right to vote and have that vote counted.

The People's Party, as we understand the situation, is first, last and all the time for the reelection of Judge Boyd, and the people are wondering why the party was ever born.

Then it becomes the voters' duty to weigh the issues for which each party stands, and we fail to see how any fair minded man, be he either Republican, Democrat, or no party man, can help but vote for the standard bearer in Garrett county, Mr. Harvey J. Speicher, and all the men on the Republican ticket from Williams to Sincell, for they certainly stand for "honest suffrage for honest men."

VOLUME 33. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1909. NUMBER 32

REPUBLICAN CAMPAIGN OPENS SATURDAY NIGHT.

A Monster Mass Meeting Predicted at Oakland Opera House That Evening.

The Republican party will open its campaign in Garrett county Saturday night of this week when a monster mass meeting will be held in the Oakland Opera House, the speakers being three of the most prominent orators and entertaining talkers in the State, Hon. Frank Williams, candidate for Comptroller, Gen. L. Allison Wilmer and Ex-Congressman Charles R. Schirm, of Baltimore.

The Deer Park Cornet Band and the Mountain City Band of Oakland have been engaged to furnish music for the occasion and the committee has issued invitations to a large number to attend the meeting, which promises to be a record breaker so far as numbers present count and the enthusiasm which is bound to prevail.

Other meetings in the county have been arranged for to be held at various points along the B. & O. railroad and the smaller settlements adjacent to Oakland as set forth in an advertisement appearing in this paper today.

All are cordially invited to attend.

Obituary.

Mamie Lucile Lish, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. S Lish, passed away peacefully Tuesday morning, Sept. 28, 1909, aged 15 years, 5 months and 8 days. She was a winsome, lovable child, always having a pleasant smile and kind word for every one whom she met. She gave her heart to God and was baptized in 1904 by Rev. W. B. Faust and had ever since lived a consistent christian life. She was always at her post of duty in her church work unless hindered by sickness. Her sickness she bore uncomplainingly, her last words to her pastor being that Jesus was with her to comfort and help her. Her first thought was always for others rather than for herself. Her funeral was conducted by Rev. J. G. McEndoe. Her pastor was too ill to be present. Her body was laid to rest in the White cemetery at Pleasant Valley. Six young girls acted as pall bearers—Misses Lottie McEndoe, Myrtle Cunningham, Lizzie Moon, Emma Kearns, Lacie Moreland and Maud Queer. The casket was followed into the church by the following schoolmates bearing flowers—Hellice Rathbun, Agatha Martin, Amelia Bunce, Stella Gibson, Roy and Cora Lee, Robert Kearns, John Martin, James Hamilton, Wilmer Crane, Robert Miller and Herbert Leighton, Jr. We weep not for her, for she is at rest with her Savior, but our hearts go out in loving sympathy to those who so keenly feel the separation from one so dearly loved.

HER PASTOR.

A CORPORATION ATTORNEY'S PRAYER

Invokes Blessings on Things Accomplished and Asks Forgiveness for Blunders.

Oh, thou great and powerful Corporation, the greatest within our state, the one that I adore and is free from taxation: I implore thee to come to my aid and assist me in this, my hour of tribulation, for my own party has gotten tired of my bossism and has disinherited me. Thou knowest that I have been in thy employ lo, these many years. Thou knowest that I have always done thy bidding and have defended thee against the good people of our county. Thou hast killed my neighbors' cows—and horses—and I have always defended thee, whether just or unjust.

Thou great and powerful Corporation, thou knowest that I have fostered a new party here in order to attract votes from the Republican party to our candidate. Thou knowest the corrupt practices act prohibits us from repeating what we did fifteen years ago, but we beseech thee to use your lash over your employees until they turn from their political affiliations and flee unto us and help elect our candidate.

We thank thee for the chairman thou sent us at our first meeting, although he never cast a vote within our county.

We thank thee for the engineer that is taking such an active part in our deceptive movement. I find him an exceedingly handy article, although unlike the chairman you sent us, he cast his first vote in our county last fall. Oh, thou great and powerful corporation, as well as the people of our party, forgive me for the blunder I made in drawing up my new party's platform for when I compared our election expenses with the expenses of Mineral county, W. Va., I forgot that Mineral county as well as the state of West Virginia, was controlled by the Republican party, and I note when comparing the expenses they are 7 to 1 in favor of a Republican Governor. I implore thy forgiveness for I got the suggestion from the engineer you sent us and I believe that sin should be charged to him.

Now great and powerful Corporation, forgive me for all unforeseen errors, and when election day rolls around, I hope you will say, "well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast disrupted thine own party and shown thyself to be an insurgent for the sake of deceiving Republicans into voting for a certain candidate to thine own advantage. Come down from the mountain top and receive thy reward."

May Lose His Leg.

Oscar Broadwater, of Avilton, will probably lose his leg as the result of an accident. He fell from a haymow two weeks ago. He will be sent to the Western Maryland Hospital, Cumberland, to undergo an operation.

IS THE PROPOSED SUFFRAGE AMENDMENT IN ANY SENSE A NECESSITY?

A Serious Question To Be Considered By Garrett County Republicans.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Rev. J. B. Workman, whose services as pastor of St. Paul's church in Oakland for the past five years have been an inspiration to many, goes to Wesley Chapel, Wheeling. Mr. Workman will preach his farewell sermon to the local congregation Sunday at which time the members of the local lodge Knights of Pythias, of which organization the minister is a loyal member, will be present in a body as a mark of esteem and the brotherly affection in which Mr. Workman is held by his fellow Pythians.

Dr. R. B. Ward, the retiring District Superintendent, has been returned to the Cameron church of which he was pastor when he was elevated to the superintendency of the Oakland District.

Rev. J. O. Bolton, of the Park, goes to Sutton, W. Va., taking the place of Rev. Williamson, who comes to Oakland, and whose reputation as a strong, forceful speaker and an excellent, God-loving man has preceded him.

Rev. G. W. Kepler will be stationed at Wallace, Morgantown District, where we know he will gather about him many warm friends.

The new superintendent of Oakland District, Rev. W. D. Reed, comes to his work well equipped mentally and physically to crrry it on along the same lines laid down by his predecessor, Dr. Ward, who has been eminently successful.

OCTOBER WEATHER

Frost and Snow Flurrieo Will Show Up During Month.

Peter R. Smith promises us rather nice weather for October. Plenty of sunshine and just enough frost and snow flurries to let us know winter is coming. His forecast follows:

General cloudiness, a high temperature, and threatning weather will prevail as September passes over to October.

A storm wave will start in the west on the 2nd, continuing on transit to the 5th over the different sections of the country.

The conditions attending the wave denote rain, wind and some electric action of the wave as it passes on east. A touch of autumnal weather will follow on its trail on the northern border of the country and also mountain sections may have an early view of sleet and snow. Frosts are likely to show up in central parts where the absence of clouds will permit on the mornings of the 5th or 6th.

On the 9th and 10th some changes in weather conditions will show up which will be attended by an increase in the heat of the temperature, bringing on changes in the course of air currents and then followed by cooler weather.

As the 12th is reached clouds will begin to unite, the temperature will increase in heat, and conditions denoting the formation of a storm wave will be apparent. The wave will be central on the 14th. As it moves on east it will increase in strength and spread in area till most sections of the country will be reached in some form of disturbance, either in rain, wind and changes of temperature. Thunder and lightning will be experienced at a number of places. The northern lakes will have a touch of autumnal storms. The period will wind up in central parts with clearing cooler weather and frosty mornings will appear about the 15th or 16th.

On the 19th, 20th and 21st the disturbing forces denote cold rains and winds from the northwest and also several days of unpleasant weather. As the clouds pass away from the sky bright days and frosty nights will appear.

The 27th and 28th denotes the center of a storm period. At the beginning of the period a high temperature will prevail and spread over most parts of the country. The disturbing elements indicate intense storms touching most parts with rain, wind and thunder and lightning. High autumnal winds will prevail on the northern lakes and also at many other places.

At the winding up of the period the hand of winter will be present and exhibit some snow flurries over many parts of the country.

GRANTSVILLE.

The issues of the campaign are now being discussed upon the platform and in the press, as appropriate to this occasion we present for your thoughtful consideration a matter that deeply concerns and should be of interest to all.

Eternal vigilance, as you well know, is the price of liberty, which will wilt and perish if not safeguarded by vigilant, resourceful minds, patriotic hearts and strong arms. We must think and think seriously, work hard and conscientiously, and be ever alert and vigilant, if the sacred trust handed to us by our fathers, this precious inheritance of freedom, is not to become a comic imitation of real democracy, and government of the people, for the people, by the people become first a farce and then vanish from the face of the earth.

The Republican party presents for our consideration the best men to be found within their ranks and the principle they represent is "honest suffrage for honest men."

The Democratic party presents the names of her best men and while nothing can be said of them personally, politically they are contending for an issue that should bring the blush of shame to the face of every honest man within their party ranks. When they attempt to deprive the poor but honest man of one of the few privileges which he enjoys, and that is his right to vote and have that vote counted.

The People's Party, as we understand the situation, is first, last and all the time for the reelection of Judge Boyd, and the people are wondering why the party was ever born.

Then it becomes the voters' duty to weigh the issues for which each party stands, and we fail to see how any fair minded man, be he either Republican, Democrat, or no party man, can help but vote for the standard bearer in Garrett county, Mr. Harvey J. Speicher, and all the men on the Republican ticket from Williams to Sinceil, for they certainly stand for "honest suffrage for honest men."

A REPUBLICAN FROM PRINCIPLE.

The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Copyright, 1908, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

What humans are chiefly hunting for nowadays is inspiration in one form or another. This story cannot fail to give its reader inspiration, and therefore its value can hardly be overestimated. The magic of the love of man for woman, that, aroused simply by the sound of a voice, causes a young millionaire to cross oceans and traverse foreign lands to find his fate was never better pictured. The story is intensely romantic and alluringly mysterious. The insidious evils of unwise marriage with foreign "noblemen" are cleverly shown, and the familiar Italian brand of intrigue is laid bare. The author shows that the reward of patience and purity is happiness and that the wages of sin is death. He makes you laugh when he pictures the adventures of an American comic opera troupe stranded in foreign lands. He makes you thrill with the wanderlust when he describes La Bella Napoli and the vine covered slopes that rim the Mediterranean.

CHAPTER I.

THE VOICE IN THE FOG.

Out of the unromantic night out of the somber blurring January fog, came a voice lifted in song, a soprano, rich, full and round, young, yet matured, sweet and mysterious as a night bird's, haunting and elusive as the murmur of the sea in a shell—a lilt from "La Fille de Mme. Angot," a light opera long since forgotten in New York. Hillard, genuinely astonished, lowered his pipe and listened.

The voice rose and sank and soared again, drawing nearer and nearer. It was joyous and unrestrained, and there was youth in it, the touch of spring and the breath of flowers. The music was Lecocq's—that is to say, French—but the tongue was of a country which Hillard knew to be the garden of the world. Presently he observed a shadow emerge from the yellow mist, to come within the circle of light, which, faint as it was, limned in against the nothingness beyond the form of a woman. She walked directly under his window.

As the invisible comes suddenly out of the future to assume distinct proportions which either make or mar us, so did this unknown cantatrice come out of the fog that night and enter into Hillard's life, to readjust its ambitions, to divert its aimless course, to give impetus to it and a directness which hitherto it had not known.

"Ah!"

He leaned over the sill at a perilous angle, the bright coal of his pipe spilling comet-wise to the areaway below. He was only subconscious of having spoken, but this syllable was sufficient to spoil the enchantment. The voice ceased abruptly, with an odd break. The singer looked up. Possibly her astonishment surpassed even that of her audience. For a few minutes she had forgotten that she was in New York; she had forgotten the pain in her heart; there had been only an irresistible longing to sing.

Though she raised her face, he could distinguish no feature, for the light was behind. However, he was a man who made up his mind quickly. Brunette or blond, beautiful or otherwise, it needed but a moment to find out. Even as this decision was made he was in the upper hall, taking the stairs two at a bound. He ran out into the night bareheaded. Up the street he saw a flying shadow. Plainly she had anticipated his impulse. She was gone. He cupped his ear with his hand in vain. There was nothing but fog and silence.

"Well, if this doesn't beat the Dutch!" he murmured.

He laughed disappointedly. It did not matter that he was three and thirty. He still retained youth enough to feel chagrined at such a trivial defeat. Here had been something like a genuine adventure, and it had slipped like water through his clumsy fingers.

"Deuce take the fog! But for that I'd have caught her."

But reason promptly asked him what he should have done had he caught the singer. Yes, supposing he had, what excuse would he have had to offer? Who could she be? What peculiar whimsical freak had sent her singing past his window at 1 o'clock of the morning? A grand opera singer returning home from a late supper? But he dismissed this opinion even as he advanced it. He knew something about grand opera singers. They attend late suppers, it is true, but they ride home in luxurious carriages and never risk their golden voices in this careless if romantic fashion. As for being a comic opera star, he refused to admit the possibility, and he relegated this well satisfied constellation to the darks of limbo. He had heard a voice.

A policeman came lumbering over to add or subtract his quota of interest in the affair. Hillard wisely stopped and waited for him.

"I heard a woman singin'," the guardian of the law said roughly.

"So did I."

"Huh! See her?"

"For a moment," Hillard admitted.

"Well, we can't have none o' this in the streets. It's disorderly."

"My friend," said Hillard, rather annoyed at the policeman's tone, "you don't think for an instant that I was directing this operetta?"

"Think? Where's your hat?"

Hillard ran his hand over his head. The policeman had him there. "I did not bring it out."

"Too warm and summery, huh? It don't look good. I've been watchin' these parts fer a leddy. They call her Leddy Lighttinger, an' she has some o' the gents done to a pulp when it comes to liftin' jools an' trinkets. Somebody fergits to lock the front door, an' she finds it out. Why did you come out without yer lid?"

"Just forgot it, that's all."

"Which way'd she go?"

"You'll need a map and a search light. I started to run after her myself. I heard a voice from my window; I saw a woman; I made for the street; niente!"

"Huh?"

"Niente, nothing!"

"Oh, I see—dago. Seems to me now that this woman was singin' I-taly-an too." They were nearing the light, and the policeman gazed intently at the hatless young man. "Why, it's Mr Hillard! I'm surprised. Well, well! Some day I'll run in a bunch o' these chorus leddies, jes' fer a lesson. They git lively at the restaurants over on Broadway, an' thin they raise the dead with their singin', which often as not is anything but singin'. An' here it is after 1."

"But this was not a chorus lady," replied Hillard, thoughtfully reaching

Out of the somber fog came a voice lifted in song

into his vest for a cigar. "The lady had a singing voice."

"Huh! They all think alike about that. But meibe she wasn't head at the business. Anyhow"—

"It was rather out of time and place, eh?" helpfully.

"That's about the size of it. Fer Leddy Lighttinger is a case. She has us all thinkin' on our nights off. Cleer an' edjicated an' jabbers in half a dozen tongues. It's a thousand to the man who jugs her. But she don't sing; at least they ain't any report to that effect. Perhaps your leddy was jes' larkin' a bit. But it's got to be stopped."

Hillard passed over the cigar, and the policeman bit off the end, nodding with approval at such foresight. "Didn't get a peep at her face?"

"Not a single feature. The light was behind her."

"An' how was she dressed?"

"In fog, for all I could see."

"On the level now, didn't you know who she was?" The policeman gave Hillard a sly dig in the ribs with his club.

"On my word!"

"Some swell, mebbe."

"Undoubtedly a lady. That's why it looks odd—why it brought me into the street. She sang in classic Italian. And, what's more, for the privilege of hearing that voice again I should not mind sitting on this cold curb till the milkman comes around in the morning."

"That wouldn't be fer long," laughed the policeman, taking out his watch and holding it close to the end of his cigar. "Twenty minutes after 1. Well, I must be gittin' back to me beat. Been to Italy?"

"I was born there," patiently.

"No! Why, you're no dago!"

"Not so much as an eyelash. The stork happened to drop the basket there, that's all."

"Ha, I see! Well, Amerika is good enough fer me an' mine," complacently.

"I dare say!"

"An' if this stogy continues to behave we'll say no more about the vanishin' leddy." The policeman strolled off, his suspicions in nowise removed. He knew many rich young bachelors like Hillard. If it wasn't a chorus lady it was a prima donna, which was not far from being the same thing.

Hillard regained his room and leaned with his back to the radiator. He had an idea. It was rather green and salad, but as soon as his hands were warm he determined to put this idea into immediate use. The voice had stirred him deeply, stirred him with the longing to hear it again, to learn what extraordinary impulse had loosed the song.

Never the winter came with its weary round of rain and fog and snow that his heart and mind did not fly over the tideless southern sea to the land of his birth if not of his blood—Sorrento, that jewel of the sun bathed cliffs!

With a quick gesture of both hands—Latin, always Latin—he crossed the room to a small writing desk, turned on the lights and sat down. After several attempts he realized that the letter he had in mind was not the simplest to compose. There were a dozen futile efforts before he produced anything like satisfaction. Then he filled out a small check. A little later he stole downstairs, around the corner to the local branch of the postoffice and returned. It was only a blind throw, such as dicers sometimes make in the dark. But chance loves her true gamester, and to him she makes a faithful servant.

He picked up a novel. "I should be sorely tempted to call any other man a silly ass, Leddy Lightfinger—it would be a fine joke if my singer turned out to be that irregular person."

He fell to reading, but soon yawned. He shied the book into a corner, drew off his boots and cast them into the hall. A moment after his valet appeared, gathered up the boots and waited.

"I want nothing, Giovanni. I have only been around to the postoffice."

"I heard the door open and close four times, signor."

"It was I. If this fog does not change I shall want my riding breeches to morrow morning."

"It always rains here," Giovanni remarked.

"Not always. There are pleasant days in the spring and summer. It is because this is not Italy. The Hollander wonders how any reasonable being can dwell in a country where they do not drink gin. It's home, Giovanni. Rain pelts you from a different angle here. There is nothing more. You may go. It is 2 o'clock, and you are dead for sleep."

But Giovanni only bowed. He did not stir.

"It is seven years now, signor."

"So it is—seven this coming April."

"I am now an American citizen and may return to my good Italia without danger."

"That depends. If you do not run across any official who recognizes you."

Giovanni spread his hands. "Official memory seldom lasts so long as seven years. The signor has crossed four times in this period."

"I would gladly have taken you each time, as you know."

"Oh, yes! But in two or three years the police do not forget. In seven it is different."

"Ah!" Hillard was beginning to understand the trend of this conversation. "So, then, you wish to return?"

"Yes, signor. I have saved a little money," modestly.

"A little?" Hillard laughed. "For seven years you have received fifty American dollars every month, and out of it you do not spend as many copper centesimi. I am certain that you have 20,000 lire tucked away in your stocking—a fortune!"

"I buy the blacking for the signor's boots," gravely.

Hillard saw the twinkle in the black eyes. "I have never," he said truthfully, "asked you to black my boots."

"Penance, signor, penance for my sins, and I am not without gratitude. There was a time when I had rather cut off a hand than black a boot. But all that is changed. We of the Sabine hills are proud, as the signor knows. We are Romans out there. We despise the cities, and we do not hold out our palms for the traveler's pennies. I am a peasant, but always remember the blood of the Caesars. Who can say? Besides, I have held a sword for the church. I owe no allegiance to the puny house of Savoy." There was no twinkle in the black eyes now. There was a ferocious gleam. "Pardon, signor. I grow boastful. I am old and should know better. But does the signor return to Italy in the spring?"

"I don't know, Giovanni. I don't know. But what's on your mind?"

"Nothing new, signor," with eyes cast down to hide the returning lights.

"You are a bloodthirsty ruffian!" said Hillard shortly.

"I am as the good God made me. Besides, the holy father will do something for one who fought for the cause."

"He will certainly not countenance bloodshed, Giovanni."

"He can absolve it."

"I was in hopes you had forgotten."

"Forgotten! The signor will never understand. She was so pretty and youthful and innocent! She sang like the nightingale. Up with the dawn, to sleep with the stars. We were alone, she and I. The sheep supported me, and she sold her roses and dried lavender. It was all so beautiful—till he came. Ah, had he loved her! But a plaything, a pastime! The signor never had a daughter. What is she now? A nameless thing in the streets!" Giovanni raised his arms tragically. The boots clattered to the floor. "Seven years! It is a long time for one of my blood to wait."

"Seven years! It is a long time to wait."

"Enough!" cried Hillard, but there was a hardness in his throat at the sight of the old man's tears. Where was the proud and stately man, the black bearded shepherd in faded blue linen, in picturesque garters, with his reedlike pipe, that he, Hillard, had known in his boyhood days? "I can give you only my sympathy for your loss," said Hillard, "but I abhor the spirit of revenge which cannot find satisfaction in anything save murder."

Giovanni bowed gravely and made off with his boots. Hillard remained staring thoughtfully at the many colored squares in the rug under his feet. It would be lonesome with Giovanni gone. The old man had evidently made up his mind. But the woman with the voice, would she see the notice in the paper? And if she did would she reply to it? What a foundation for a romance! Bah! He prepared for bed.

To those who reckon earthly treasures as the only thing worth having John Hillard was a fortunate young man. That he was without kith or kin was considered by many as an additional piece of good fortune. Born in Sorrento, in one of the charming villas which sweep down to the very brow of the cliffs, educated in Rome up to his fifteenth year, taken at that age from the dreamy drifting land and thrust into the noisy, bustling life which was his inheritance; fatherless and motherless at twenty, a college youth who was forever mixing his Italian with his English and being laughed at, hating tumult and loving quiet, warm hearted and impulsive, yet meeting only habitual reserve from his compatriots whichever way he turned, it is not to be wondered at that he preferred the land of his birth to that of his blood.

The old house in which he lived was not in the fashionable quarter of the town, but that did not matter. Nor did it vary externally from any of its unpretentious neighbors. A cook, a butler and a valet were his retinue.

Giovanni sought his own room at the end of the hall, squatted on a low stool and solemnly began the business of blacking his master's boots. He was still as lean and tall as a Lombardy poplar, this handsome old Roman. His hair was white; there was now no black beard on his face, which was as brown and creased as Spanish levant, and some of the fullness was gone from his chest and arms, but for all that he carried his fifty odd years lightly. He worked swiftly tonight, but his mind was far away from his task.

There was a pitiful story, commonplace enough—a daughter, a loose living officer, a knife flung from a dark alley, the sudden flight to the south. Hillard had found him wandering through the streets of Naples, hiding from the carabinieri as best he could. Hillard contrived to smuggle him on the private yacht of a friend. He found a peasant who was reconsidering the advisability of digging sewers and laying railroad ties in the Eldorado of the west. A few pieces of silver and the passport changed hands. With this Giovanni blandly hid his way into the United States. After one time he applied for citizenship, and through Hillard's influence it was accorded him. He solemnly voted when elections came round and hoarded his wages, like the thrifty man he was. Some day he would return to Rome or Naples or Venice or Florence, as the case might be, and then!

When the boots shone dawlessly he carried them to Hillard's door and softly tiptoed back. He put his face against the cold window. He, too, had heard the voice. How his heart hurt him with its wild hope! But only for a moment. It was not the voice he hungered for. The words were Italian, but he knew that the woman who sang them was not.

THE GRANGE

THE SUMMER RALLIES.

Past State Master Horton of Michigan Gives Some Excellent Suggestions.

The grange field day or rally is nowhere more successful than in the busy grange state of Michigan, and that success is largely due to the efforts of Past Master Horton. In the last number of the state lecturer's bulletin he answers some timely questions on the subject. They are as follows:

What are some of the essentials of success on the part of a committee on arrangements for a grange rally?

First, an earnest, active desire to make the rally a success as a strengthener and builder of grange sentiment in the vicinity where held; second, a fixed plan for program, advertising and all essential details thoroughly prepared and executed; third, make the plan broad and liberal so all farmers will feel free to attend. Prepare for enjoyment as well as profit, but do not let side attractions interfere with a deliberate rendition of the program.

Will you kindly give a few suggestions to lecturers in making up a program for a rally?

So far as possible have all subjects, speeches, recitations and songs of such a nature and character as to turn the thoughts of all listeners toward the grange. Patrons should be on the grounds early so as to meet and to greet all arrivals, and especially strangers need to be shown about details and plans for the day. The program should be broad in that, extra from the main speaker, who will cover a general ground, the ladies, young people and children may be recognized.

What are a few appropriate topics for addresses or papers by local speakers at 1909 rallies?

Organization of farmers a necessity of the day.

The grange is the ideal form and plan of organization.

The farmers unorganized are at the mercy of other organized interests.

Success on the broader basis means social, intellectual and business contact, and organization gives it.

The grange stands for all that is progressive and ideal in farm life.

The grange creates independence in the farmer man and woman, and by their respecting themselves others respect them.

Will you give a few pertinent pointers for state speakers to observe?

Keep in mind that a rally is a grange occasion and as such is worthy of thorough preparation. The grange is independent of all partisan politics and personal ambitions, and because of this a rally speaker should studiously avoid all these lest his influence will be adverse to the real cause he represents. Be earnest in presenting the grange cause, for in no other way can the confidence of hearers be secured. Do not be timid in urging benefits of farmers, for, as agriculture prospers, so do all others interests, and this cannot be truthfully said of any other interest. G. B. HORTON.

Pomona Day Program.

Prepared by Miss Nellie A. Mayo, Pomona of Michigan state grange. The hall should be decorated with autumn leaves and fruit, while Pomona's station should be made particularly attractive for the occasion:

Music by the grange.

Roll call, each one giving helpful suggestion in regard to fruit culture.

Spraying fruit, the best method for all fruits.

The best way to make a strawberry bed.

Growing small fruit for market.

Up to date methods of marketing fruit.

South Dakota Grange.

On April 13 the South Dakota state grange was organized. There were sixteen subordinate granges represented. Charles B. Hoyt of Dempster was elected master. An address was given by S. J. Conklin, who was a member of the Order forty years ago, when it was flourishing in that state. After the installation of the new officers the patrons visited the State college, where a public meeting was held in the evening. President R. L. Slagle of the State college delivered an address on "The College and Grange." A committee was appointed to organize a grange fire insurance company. The sixth degree was conferred upon forty-five candidates. H. I. Stearns was appointed general deputy for the state.

South Dakota's State Master.

Charles B. Hoyt, formerly identified with grange work in New Hampshire and overseer of the state grange, is now located at Dempster, S. D., and was recently elected master of the new state grange of that state.

Obliging Jordan.

By W. F. Bryan.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

"Well, sir?"

George Jordan swung around in his office chair and regarded Sidney Harlan with a portentous frown.

"I though I told you not to bother me again about Vera until you had money enough to support a wife."

"You did," assented Sidney, "but, you see"—

"I don't see you," broke in Jordan, "and I have had an eye on you, too, sir. You have some $8,000 in the bank, drawing 3 per cent. I offered you an opportunity to invest it at 10 per cent, and you refused."

"But, you see, I thought"—

"That's the trouble. You don't think right!" thundered Jordan. "You are afraid to risk it in a speculation which, I believe, will do better even than the 10 per cent I prophesied. Then you hang on to that absurd farm which is 'bound to be valuable some day' because it is on the water front."

"It is valuable already," interrupted Sidney. "In a year from now"—

"It will be worth just as much as it is worth today and will be the same five years hence. A paltry bank account and a hundred acres of your farm, and yet you insist that you are entitled to come here and bother me about Vera every six months. It's absurd. It wastes my time."

"But this time"— broke in Sidney pleadingly.

"Last time it was the rumor that a trolley line was to be built, and you wanted to cut your farm up into building lots. You're dippy about the value of that land. I've got 200 acres more than that I'll sell you for your $8,000 cash. That's about $40 an acre."

"YOU'RE PAYING TWICE WHAT THAT LAND IS WORTH."

"I'll take you," agreed Sidney as he drew out his check book. "Will you have the transfer made out at once?"

Jordan stared incredulously. It seemed too good to be true. Though he was a rich man, Jordan was terribly pressed for ready cash with which to swing certain deals, and this $8,000 would solve several financial problems.

Rising, he led the way across the hall to the offices of his lawyers, instructing them to make out a deed to Harlan, and the latter sat down to wait for it, being assured that it would require but a few minutes.

The clerk did not explain that a similar deed had been drawn up only a few weeks before, when Jordan had sought to sell the ground for half of what he was getting from Harlan.

The deal had fallen through, and it only remained to recopy the document with the new name and terms. In twenty minutes Harlan owned the property and an office boy was on his way to the bank with the check for Jordan.

Harlan followed Jordan to his own offices, but at the door the elder turned.

"If you think you have won my admiration with any such grand stand play as this," he said brutally, "you have made a mistake. You're paying twice what that land is worth just to call my bluff. That's not the sort of man I want for a son-in-law. I want a man who can drive a bargain, not one who can be fooled the way you have been."

"If you will let me explain"— began Harlan; but, with a laugh, Jordan shut the door between them. He was still chuckling over the incident when a card was brought in, to be followed by a sharp, eager looking man, a local real estate agent.

"Uncommon cheerful you look," commented the newcomer as he took a chair uninvited.

"Just been turning down my daughter's suitor and getting rid of a lot of useless real estate by loading it on him," responded Jordan, with a chuckle. "That's the seventh time I've told Harlan that he couldn't marry Vera."

"And you sold him that parcel of land out by the lake?" asked the other man.

Jordan nodded. "And at forty an acre," he said, with a grin. "Got rid of the whole 200 acres. He's an idea that some of these days the land is going to be worth something. I knew he had $8,000 in bank, and I let him buy the lot for just what he had. I bet he can't even pay the taxes."

"You haven't delivered the deeds yet, have you?"

"Did you think I was going to give him a chance to cool off?" demanded Jordan. "That's not my way of doing business. I just took him across the hall and had the deeds drawn and turned over to him. The money is in the bank by now."

"And you can't possibly get it back?" asked the other man anxiously.

"I couldn't be forced to take it back," was the answer, followed by a rumbling laugh. "I've put that parcel on poor Harlan so tight that it's going to stick. What's worrying you about it?"

"Jordan, Harlan didn't tell you that he had given forty acres of his land to the Mower and Reaper people, did he?" asked the agent.

"They're going to take a site on the other side of the river," said Jordan. "I picked up a few acres cheap just the other side of their plant. They employ several thousand people, and there will be a fortune in sites for homes for the workmen."

"They were planning to build over there," said the visitor slowly, "but the cost of the land was run up when it was discovered who wanted it. Then Harlan came along and heard of the deal and gave them forty acres outright and looked to the other sixty to make his profit. Now you've made him a present of 200 acres for $40 when I came to offer you an even $100 an acre."

For a moment Jordan's face purpled. He knew the ground, and he knew that the 200 acres were about all that could be used by the factory and the town that would arise near by.

It would be impossible to pick up any more land, for Harlan's holdings were on a peninsula, and the Jordan tract was immediately behind that. On the other side of the road was a marsh that it would scarcely pay to fill in. Harlan had the game in his own hands.

The visitor took his departure when he found that Jordan had no land to sell, and the old man was left alone to think things over. As the result of his cogitations he reached for the telephone and called up his house.

"Is young Harlan there?" he asked when he heard his daughter's voice in answer. "Tell him to wait," he added. "Ask him to stay to dinner. We might as well settle when you two are to be married."

"I wanted to let him in on my information," explained Sidney when Vera demanded light on the peculiar message. "It seems that he wants his son-in-law to be able to do him, and—I did him—just to oblige."

"And you'll sell the land back to him?" urged Vera.

"Not a lot of it," asserted Harlan. "He wouldn't really like me if I did."

Effect of an "H."

A cockney whose name was Ogton, which he, following the usage of his class, pronounced Hogtown, settled at the beginning of the last century in the city of New York, where he did business as a trader. His prefixing of the "h" was the occasion of a postoffice story which Dunlap, the author of the "History of the Arts of Design," tells.

Before the clerks of the postoffice knew Ogton he called day after day to inquire if there were "any letters for John Hogtown."

"None, sir," was the invariable answer.

"Very strange," said he, feeling uneasy about the goods he had ordered from England and the bills of exchange he had remitted.

One day after the usual question, "Any letters for John Hogtown?" his eye, following the clerk, noticed that he was looking among the letters beginning with H.

"'Ollo!" cried he. "What are you looking there for? I said John Hogtown."

"I know it, sir, and I am looking for John Hogtown, and there's nothing for you."

"Nay, nay!" shouted John. "Don't look among the haitches. Look among the hoes." And among the O's were found a pile of letters addressed to John Ogton, which had been accumulating for many a week.

He Obeyed Orders.

Years ago when Clemenceau was the mayor of Martre and at the same time a deputy he opened a dispensary in the quarter, where advice was given free, for Clemenceau is a specialist in skin diseases. One day he noticed that he had just one hour in which to get his luncheon and go down to the chamber, where he had to interpellate the government. He called his assistant and said, "How many more patients are there waiting?"

"Six," replied the man.

Four of these six had their cases diagnosed, and Clemenceau, after another glance at his watch, said, "Tell the other two to undress at once, as I have only two more minutes to wait." One entered, and Clemenceau wrote out a prescription in the twinkling of an eye.

The last man came in as naked as the day when he was born. Clemenceau eyed him for a minute and then said: "You are suffering from no skin disease. What have you come here to worry me for?"

The man looked at him aghast for a minute and replied: "Skin disease? I never said I had a skin disease. Your man came in and told me to undress, M. le Depute, and I did so. All I wanted to ask you was to use your influence to get my sister a place in the postoffices in Algeria."

Clemenceau smiled, took his name and did use his influence.

THE LURE OF THE MASK

By HAROLD MacGRATH

A Fascinating Romance by One of the Most Popular Novelists of the Day

The Lure of the Mask

A story of the most alluring character in fiction. Such a woman in real life often decides the destiny of a nation. To read of her is as interesting and exciting as it would be to meet her. You will find the story fascinating from beginning to end.

By Harold MacGrath

THROUGH the popularity and merit of his earlier literary hits, "Arms and the Woman," "The Puppet Crown," "The Grey Cloak," "Half a Rogue" and "The Man on the Box," Mr. MacGrath has won high rank as a fictionist.

"The Lure of the Mask" is rated his best

THE JUDICIARY AND THE STRAUS AMENDMENT.

President Taft has condemned the Straus amendment. He has told the people of Maryland that it "is a violation of the spirit of the Fifteenth Amendment" which "ought to be voted down by everyone, whether Democratic or Republican, who is in favor of a square deal."

This is the language not only of the President of the United States, but of one who is a great statesman, a great constitutional lawyer, and who in his time has been a great Federal judge. No one on earth is better qualified to pass an opinion on the Straus amendment than is President Taft. He is sincere and honest. He is well-informed on the political situation in Maryland. He knows the motives behind this scheme and their dishonesty and utter disregard of human rights justly call forth his indignation. Such an outrage as this amendment proposes must arouse the wrath of every honest man, be he Democrat or Republican, just as it has aroused the wrath of the President.

But while the President's condemnation of the Straus amendment will be a call to arms to every Republican in the State, if such a thing were needed, it will have no weight with the corrupt Democratic oligarchy who are bent on the destruction and disruption of the Republican party in Maryland. Regardless of the views of the President, the Democratic organization continues with its survive-or-perish struggle to secure the adoption of the disfranchising amendment at the November election in order to make Maryland a one party State.

The Republicans of Western Maryland should make no mistake. They should not rest in fancied security. The Democratic party is determined to accomplish this purpose. It is determined to destroy the Republican party in Maryland. It was determined to do it in 1905, when it came forward with the Poe amendment, and it is even more determined to do it now, when it comes forward with the Straus amendment. And no matter what may be the fate of the Straus amendment, no matter how overwhelming a defeat it may receive at the hands of the people, the Democratic party will not be discouraged or abandon its project. As sure as the sun rises and sets it will come forward again after the next session of the Legislature with another disfranchising amendment aimed as a deathblow at the Republican party. And if again it is defeated, it will bide its time for the next attempt, for the Democratic party will be satisfied with nothing less than the adoption of a measure which will restrict the suffrage to an extent that will guarantee the practical extinction of the Republican party in this State.

But the Democratic party has two tasks to perform. It must not only secure the adoption of the disfranchising amendment by the people, but it must be in a position to have the measure upheld by the courts. But the Democratic party anti ipates no difficulty in the courts. It has provided and is endeavoring with much success to continue to provide for that contingency. It now has practically a monopoly of the judiciary of the State. As regards the Court of Appeals the Democratic party enjoys at present an unquestionable supremacy. This court, composed of one Republican and seven Democratic judges, stamps with the seal of its judicial approval the partisan election legislation of the Democratic party. It has done so in the past and will do so again in the future. These statements are sufficiently serious to require corroboration, which is furnished when we say that the Democratic Court of Appeals of Maryland has held that the intention of the voter cuts no figure and that if the crossmark extends even an infinitesimal distance beyond the margins of the box the ballot must be rejected. This decision of the Democratic Court of Appeals cost the Republican party many thousands of votes in the State of Maryland and is responsible more than anything else for the continued rule of the Democratic party in this State. And yet the Democratic party has the effrontery to describe this tribunal as "nonpartisan" and to ask the Republican voters of the Fourth Judicial Circuit to guarantee continued Democratic supremacy in that court by the election of the Democratic nominee for judge in this circuit. The attitude of the Democratic party is an insult to the intelligence of the well-informed and thinking Republicans of Western Maryland. We will not kiss the hand which smites us, for such is not the part of manhood. The life of the Republican party in this State is at stake, theatened by the Straus amendment, and back of that amendment, ready to ratify and enforce it, if adopted, stands a Democratic Court of Appeals. In the face of these facts it is more than manifest wisdom—it is mere self-preservation for the Republicans of the Western end of the State to avail themselves of the opportunity at hand and elect the able, upright and fearless nominee of the Republican party to the bench of the Court of Appeals. Any other course would be fantastic folly, would be to court destruction and lend aid and comfort to the corrupt Democratic organization which is determined that the party of Lincoln, Grant and McKinley, of Roosevelt and Taft shall be exiled from power in this State.

IN THESE physical culture days some people display great agility in dodging taxes.

PEOPLE who are always harping on their troubles don't dispense a very high grade of music.

THE chairmanship of the new party was kept as close to the family as the boss could well keep it.

WE all like to brag of our ancestors, but sometimes forget to live so that our descendants can do the same thing.

RAYNER'S OPINION OF THE PREVIOUS EFFORTS OF HIS PRESENT PALS.

(Isidor Rayner in Baltimore News, October 18th, 1905.)

I want it to be distinctly known that there is no one in this State who feels more strongly than I do upon the subject of an educational test as a qualification for the right of suffrage, and the stronger this test is made within proper bounds the more it meets with my approval, and as an honest standard of of this sort would have substantially eliminated the negro and maintained the absolute supremacy of the white race in this State, it should have been submitted to the people in lieu of the proposition that is now before us. This wretched piece of jugglery which now confronts us was conceived in fraud and it will be executed in iniquity. It disfranchises thousands upon thousands of my fellow-citizens, lays low their hopes, deprives them of their vested political rights, places them upon a par and equality with every illiterate negro in every registration booth in Maryland, tosses away their citizenship, and makes it the toy and plaything of an irresponsible body of election officers; and right in this community, where they have lived an orderly and law-abiding people, invades their homes and firesides and proclaims the hideous doctrine that their posterity shall forever, politically, be banished and expatriated, because their ancestors selected the shores of Maryland as a congenial soil upon which to plant the tree of civil and religious liberty, under whose shade they could defy the oppressor's hand and breathe the unpolluted air of freedom.

SOME that attended the People's party convention, and others in sympathy with it are very sore. They say it was a conspiracy.

DOES the B. & O. R. R. pay its full quota of taxes in this county? If not, why?

Shall We Have Home Rule?

Are the destinies of the people of the fourth judicial circuit to be controlled and decided by the silk stocking Democracy of Baltimore city with the assistance of a horde of Democratic officeholders and politicians from the other counties of the State? Have the people of this circuit sufficient intelligence to manage their own affairs, or are they so ignorant that they require the advice, the dictation and the guardianship of the Democracy of Baltimore and the remote parts of the State:

Perhaps the most desperate and defiant partisan act with which the Democracy of Maryland has ever insulted and offended the Republican party was the publication in Saturday's newspapers of a half page advertisement in which John P. Poe, author of the Poe amendment, and Isaac Lobe Straus, author of the Straus amendment, together with a bellowing herd of hidebound Democratic officeholders and politicians, have the effrontry to come into the open and advise the Republicans of this circuit to elect the Democratic nominee for the bench of the Court of Appeals. If ever there was the slightest scintilla of reason, real or imaginary, in favor of any Republican voter giving support to the Democratic nominee for the bench, the fact that the high priests of disfranchisement, John P. Poe and Isaac Lobe Straus, want him here, destroys it utterly and makes it null. These conspirators against the liberties of the people, these vote thieves, these arch-plotters for the destruction of the Republican party,—they are not short-sighted, they plan for the future and look to a day when a Poe amendment or a Straus amendment will reach the Court of Appeals of Maryland. Therefore no Republican must be elected to the bench. It must be guarded as the sacred citadel of Democracy, the final fortress of its hope, and when the great Republican party raises its honest eyes to the holy tribunal and in defence of its very existence asks adequate representation there, it is to be cursed for blasphemy and stoned to death for sacrilege by the partisan Democratic press of the State.

Published by authority of DeWarren H. Reynolds, local attorney for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and political agent of the Democratic nominee for the bench, we have searched this long list in vain for the name of any man whose advice can safely be followed by any voter who knows the glorious history of the great Republican party and desires it to continue to exist in Maryland. Ninety-nine per cent. of the names on the list have never before been heard of in Allegany County except in the capacity of Democratic officeholders. It does not contain a single prominent name, the owner of which has not drawn money from the State or national treasuries under Democratic administrations. Those on the list who are not Democratic officeholders, Democratic politicians or merely plain Democrats, are the legal servants and hirelings of the big corporations, and in most cases the signers thereof answer all four descriptions.

It is a significant fact that this list, published in the interest of the candidacy of Judge Boyd, is headed by Mr. Bernard Carter, Baltimore Democrat and general counsel in Maryland for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. Next on the list comes Mr. Isidor Rayner, Democratic officholder, who in speaking recently of the four years' Republican administration of Governor Lowndes used the following language:

"I assert that they were the most disgraceful that ever dishonored the political annals of Maryland. Public and private bills and measures were marketed to the highest bidder. Reports of committees were delayed to await the payment of the consideration they were sold for. The corridors of the State House were turned into an auction block and the halls of the General Assembly into a sutler's camp; and everywhere upon the avenues and highways of legislation the lobby reigned supreme and there was an unbroken carnival of riot and corruption."

So much for Mr. Rayner. Next on the list in sweet propinquity come the names of John P. Poe and Isaac Lobe Straus, the heavenly twins,—the two Democrats who draw up disfranchising amendments for their party. All these men are supporting the Straus amendment and it follows as a logical sequence that they want Democratic judges elected to the Court of Appeals. Next comes Mr. George R. Gaither, of Baltimore, a Republican corporation lawyer and general counsel of the Western Maryland Railroad and other Gould interests in Maryland. Then follows the name of Mr. Edgar H. Gans, Baltimore Democrat, skilled in making the worse appear the better reason and general counsel for the Consolidated Gas & Electric Company of Baltimore city, the most powerful corporation in the South operating exclusively in one State. Next on the list we discover with admiration mixed with awe that a man by the name of Whitlock has condescend to sign his name. Mr. Whitlock is a high-flier in the Maryland snobocracy, a man with very English ideas, don't you know, whose chief and only claim to fame rests on the agitation which he started a few years ago in favor of the wearing of silk gowns and powdered wigs by the judges of our Maryland courts. Going still further down the list we are gratified to find the name of a Democratic justice of the peace in Baltimore city, James B. Fechtig by name, considers himself competent to advise the Republican of this circuit as to their duty and lays down his onerous judicial burdens long enough to do so. And to cap the climax of absurdity and partisanship we find that even the soldiery of the Democratic State administration is lined up behind the Democratic nominee for the bench, when we discover on the list the name of another Baltimore Democrat, the redoubtable warrior and hero of many a stricken field, Colonel E. Baker Clotworthy, of the Maryland National Gaurds, otherwise known as the "State militia," which has paid Allegany county several memorable and pleasant visits and which many people think is maintained chiefly for possible emergencies in this region.

The Democratic party, in its blind and unreasoning partisanship, commits a supreme folly when it bases its campaign policy on the belief that the people of this circuit will submit to dictation from Baltimoreans or citizens of other counties. As regards our population, man for man, and total for total, the level of intelligence, education and wisdom, political and otherwise, is as high and higher in Allegany, Garrett and Washington counties than it is elsewhere in the State. There has been too much outside interference in this campaign and it all has been in behalf of the Democratic nominee fo the bench. Gratuitous advice from outsiders is a reflection upon the intelligence of our people, and when it comes from such Democrats as Bernard Carter, Edgar H. Gans, John P. Poe, Isaac Lobe Straus and Isidor Rayner, it transgresses the limits of patience and is obnoxious to the verge of insult. FOR TEN YEARS THE REPUBLICAN PARTY IN MARYLAND HAS EXISTED UNDER THE DREAD AND SINISTER SHADOW OF DISFRANCHISEMENT. And now we find the united Democratic party and the united Democratic press, not of this circuit alone, but of the entire State, exhausting the weapons of partisan armory in a united, desperate and frantic effort to elect one more Democratic judge to the bench of a Court of Appeals which is already over whelmingly Democratic. This can mean but one thing, that the Democratic party is determined at any cost to maintain its monopoly of the highest court of the State. At the present time the fourth judicial circuit is the only section of the State in which the Republican party has in its power to elect a judge of the Court of Appeals. The Democratic party knows this, and therefore it levels all its guns at the Republican nominee for the bench in this circuit. The Democracy of Maryland is making a greater effort to defeat D. Lindley Sloan, Republican nominee for chief judge in this circuit, than it is to elect the combined Democratic State and county ticket. But this self assumed task of the Democracy of the State and of Baltimore city is one hopeless and impossible of accomplishment. The Republicans of the fourth judicial circuit are convinced that the Republican party is as much entitled to adequate representation on the bench of the Court of Appeals of Maryland as is the Democratic party, and they are determinee to have it.

BOND.

The public school opened here Monday with an enrollment of about forty pupils and with Miss Merle Fowler as teacher.

The circular side of the DuBois & Bond Bros. large double mill is running this week. We enjoy hearing the rumble of the massive machinery again after the shut-down.

Clarence Bish and family and Hark Sterling and family are moving to Alexander, W. Va., this week, where they have accepted positions on the large new mill of the Croft Lumber Company. We regret to see these good people leave our town.

DuBois & Bond Bros. are sending out an average of about six cars of lumber each day.

It has been rumored that DuBois & Bond Bros. have bought the timber on the large tract of the North Maryland Lumber Company, but Mr. Bond says this rumor is unfounded. We are all looking forward with much interest to the time when this plant begins cutting timber on this tract.

We have not had much politics here this fall as the people generally are all of one mind and that is for the regularly nominated Republican ticket. We can easily see through the scheme of the People's party movement even if we are away back in the woods and we are wondering at some being so dead easy that live out in the open.

STOYER.

We are not dead, but were dreaming last week and here we come—"The Wide Awakes."

There are many indications that this is not always the land of sunshine and flowers. Jack Frost has visited us, and we are awakened to the fact that these beautiful autumn days are drawing to a close.

The farmers of this section are busy storing away their potatoes and fruit; shucking corn is also the order of the day.

The people of our town are rejoicing since Mr. Thos. Melvin has returned from Harrisburg, Pa., and brougth the good news that the mines of this place will resume work Oct. 4. It will take quite a while before we can begin work in earnest, as the mines are in very bad condition.

Mrs. B. F. Harvey and Miss Fannie Moon were visiting in town one day last week.

W. T. Stoyer made a business trip to Oakland last Friday. He was accompanied home by his niece, Miss Lyda Stoyer.

Mr. Ed. Tasker, former store manager of this place, made a business call here last week.

The saw mill owned by Mr. McHenry near here, was burned down last Friday night, but it will soon be in operation again.

Mrs. Elmer Tice and daughter were visiting at Dodson Sunday.

Mr. George Farris and daughter, Silvia, were visiting at Wilsonia Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. George Copeland, of Oakland, were visiting Mrs. Copeland's parents at this place for a few days.

Messrs. Jack Wilson, Henry Harper and Harrison Stoyer were the guests of Chas. Kidd Sunday last.

Messrs. Chas. and Albert Stoyer were visiting friends here Sunday.

Miss Sallie Cooper and Vieroy Cleary, of Oak Grove, were visiting in town last week.

Mrs. Mary Wilson has returned home after visiting friends near Blaine for a few days.

Misses Grace Riley and Ida Harvey were driving in town Sunday with the finest runabout and driving horse in this whole country.

Quite a number of our young people attended Epworth League at White Church Sunday night. IOLA.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Rev. J. O. Bolton has been taken from us after a year of satisfactory service as our pastor, and Rev. P. Z. Musgrave comes to us from the Newburg charge, and will preach Sunday morning and evening. Rev. Bolton goes to Sutton. It is now Mountain Lake Park charge, Deer Park and Bond having been placed in what was the Swanton charge but now becomes the Deer Park charge. The Mountain Lake charge will consist of Mt. Lake and Wesley Chapel. We will have preaching every Sunday and twice on every other Sunday.

Mr. B. F. Crane has moved from the Queenwood to his own residence in Loch Lynn.

Messrs. Rathbun & Sons are erecting an addition to their store room to be used as an office.

The natural gas company will put in a large street light in fron of the post-office—in Loch Lynn.

Mr. E. E. Friend attended Conference last week.

Mrs. Adam Long came home Sunday from the hospital in Cumberland.

Messrs. Paul and Willard Sperry have been given positions in the B. & O. office in Baltimore.

Mr. Erastus Rathbun is quite ill.

Rev. L. A. Rudisill has been confined to his home for a week past. He is now better but is not able for duty in the postoffice.

Mr. Walter G. Myers and family, of near Friendsville, moved last week to Mountain Lake Park where they are occupying a house controlled by the Hopkins agency.

CONFERENCE MINUTES BEING PRINTED.

Contract Awarded This Office by Secretary J. B. Workman.

The work of printing the minutes of the sixty-third annual conference of the M. E. church has been awarded this office by the secretary, Rev. J. B. Workman, and work upon the same has already begun.

The minutes this year will practically be the same size and form as in years past, the only changes being those made to conform with the requirements adopted by the General Conference held in Baltimore a year or two ago.

Mrs. Henry W. McComas went to Baltimore Thursday night where she is spending the present week on a visit to relatives and friends.

Mrs. S. E. Shirer, who spent a few days in Grafton as the guest of her sister, Mrs G. A Bolden, returned to her home in Oakland Monday evening.

The ladies of the Oakland Lutheran church are arranging to conduct a bazaar shortly. See announcement of the date in a later issue of this paper.

LOST—A hunting case gold watch on Wednesday night. Had a black fob attached. Reward if returned to W. R. Browning, Oakland, Md.

Unexpected demands for advertising space in our columns this week has crowded out quite a lot of other matter which will appear in later issues of THE REPUBLICAN.

The hour for holding the Sunday school session in St. Paul's M. E. church was changed last Sunday by a vote of the school from the 9:30 hour in the morning to 2:15 in the afternoon.

Messrs. Fred. A. Thayer and C. F. Hammond went to Mannington, W. Va., last Friday to attend the closing sessions of the West Virginia Conference, returning to Oakland Monday afternoon.

Mr. Bernard Giessman returned to Washington, D. C., Monday morning after spending the summer in Oakland with his parents. Mr. Giessman is now in the government service in a clerical capacity.

Mr. Ralph Thayer, of the West Virginia University, Morgantown, came to Oakland Monday evening and on Tuesday was enrolled as one who will be qualified to vote next month. He returned to school Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. John H. Sanders, of near Sunnyside, returned to his home last Friday from a three weeks' trip through the west, principally in Illinois and adjacent states, where he spent the the time very pleasantly with friends and relatives.

Mr. William J. Wilson, of District No. 8, made two trips to Oakland on business during the past week, thus beating his record of years, his limit being but one visit annually. All were pleased to meet the jovial gentleman, however.

Mr. G. A. Fraley returned to Oakland Sunday morning from a brief visit to his brother at Newell, W. Va., to which point he went, accompanied by Mrs. Fraley, last Wednesday. Mrs. Fraley remained in Wheeling as a patient in Dr. Hattie B. Jones' hospital, where she will remain until her health is restored.

Mr. Timothy Moon, son of Mr. Abraham Moon, of near Gormania, was brought to Oakland last Thursday night from Buckhannon, W. Va., where he was a student in the West Virginia Weslevan College, suffering with an attack of typhoid fever and after remaining in Oakland over night accompanied his father home Friday morning. Mr. Moon's condition, while not satisfactory is not at all alarming to his friends and family.

Mr. N. U. Bond, general manager of the Croft Lumber Company at Alexander, W. Va., accompanied by Mr. S. A. Kendall and Mr. J. H. Henderson, both of whom are financially interested in the concern, left Oakland Tuesday afternoon for Alexander in order to be present this morning when the large mill will be started and the first log cut. The editor of this paper acknowledges the receipt of an invitation to accompany the party and regrets very much his inability to do so on account of business requiring his presence in Oakland.

Our jovial friend, Harry Leatham, of Keyser, Md. was a visitor to this city one day last week and while here was showing his friends a relic of rare value. It was in the shape of a pocket knife evidently lost by some British soldier in General Forbes' army on its way to capture Fort Duquesne in 1758 and was recently found near Mr. Leatham's home. While the blade is badly corroded, the handle, which was made of bronze, is in a fine state of preservation. On the one side of the handle is the inscription "British Fleet 1757." On the other side is "Success to They." Mr. Leatham prizes the relic very highly and has refused flattering offers for it.—Meyersdale Republican.

Farm for Sale.

I offer my farm in District No. 4 for sale. It contains 172 acres, one-third under fence and about forty acres cleared. About 250 bearing apple trees and 10 pear trees are on the place. Well watered and is two and a-half miles from the B. & O. R. R. About 200,000 feet of oak timber and 1,000 ties may be cut from the woodland. Terms will be made to suit purchaser.

MET WITH ACCIDENT.

Dr. M. C Hinebaugh Had a Narrow Escape Saturday Night.

Last Saturday night Dr. M. C. Hinebaugh, of Oakland, had a narrow escape from serious injury and possibly death, when his buggy, drawn by two horses, was run down by one of the traction engines used in road construction work on Hooppole near the Dodge School house, about four miles north of town.

The physician was accompanied by his driver and was on his way to answer a professional call when the engine and buggy came together at one of the narrowest places in the roadway, the driver of the engine being unable to see the vehicle or horses until he was upon them. The buggy was crushed against the embankment on one side and the ponderous engine on the other when the occupants jumped out but retained control of the horses, the only injury resulting being a badly bruised leg sustained by Dr. Hinebaugh and the complete demolition of the front running gear of the buggy.

Crowded Out.

We have a lengthy communication from the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland which is unavoidably crowded out of the current issue of THE REPUBLICAN, but which will appear in our next issue.

Card of Thanks.

I desire to use the columns of your paper to express my heartfelt thanks to the members of Oak Lodge Number 8, I. O. O. F., and the good people of Mt. Lake Park for their sympathies expressed by their generous contributions and kindness shown during the illness of my wife. May all be liberally rewarded for same.

REPUBLICAN COMMITTEE.

FOREST DAMAGES.

Last Year Memorable for Forest Fire Destruction.

Forest fires are causing considerable damage in many parts of the country at present. It will be several months before the total destruction is known for the fire season has considerable time to run. In figuring out this year's losses, it will be natural to make comparison with losses for last year, which, according to Treadwell Cleveland, Jr., in the Year Book of the Department of Agriculture, will cause 1908 to be long remembered.

"A dry season, combined with what seemed to be even more than the usual indifference toward small fires which might easily have been extinguished at the start," says Mr. Cleveland, "caused destructive conflagrations in practically every state, with losses aggregating $100,000,000. In comparison with the havoc wrought elsewhere, the damage done to the National Forests was exceedingly slight. Had fires raged within the Forests as they did outside, they would have destroyed timber worth $30,000,000—enough to run the Forest Service for six years. Moreover, it is practically certain that most if not all of the damage which was done might have been prevented had the forests been fully manned.

"Finally, the estimates of loss made by the service on National Forests are particularly searching, and take full account of the injury done to young growth. Commonly estimates of loss from forest fires are based upon the damage done to standing timber and to property; they do not reckon the usually far greater loss in injury or destruction of young growing stock."

The methods by which the government keeps down the fire losses in the National Forests include:

1. Constant and systematic patrol by picked forces of rangers and guards.

2. The construction of roads, trails and telephone lines, which facilitate the massing of large fire-fighting forces.

3. The construction of fire lines which, in some instances, check the spread of fire without human help.

4. The equipment of the forests with fire-fighting tools and other supplies necessary in fighting fires. The supplies of tools are kept at convenient points at all times, in order to have them easily accessible to Forest officers in case fires break out.

5. Cooperation with railroads, timberland owners, and settlers in fire protection, in this way making it possible to protect both the lands of the companies and the Forest Service at a much smaller cost to the Government than would be the case were the National Forest lands alone protected by the local officers.

Just as the practice of forestry is important in the movement for the conservation of all natural resources, so is the protection of the forests from fires important in the furtherance of rational forest work. In fact, forestry in many instances means nothing more than conservative lumbering and the prevention of forest fires. Uncle Sam realizes that only through the wise use and care of the forests will it be possible to make natural timberland permanently productive. The practice of forestry does not mean abbreviating the use of the land. Instead, conservative lumbering and protection of the young growth from fire will bring about a steadily increasing use, for with cultivation and care the yield of the forest increases and the product improves in the same way that the value of the farm increases under a proper system of management.

Two horses, buggy and cart for sale at once at a bargain; one black horse, one a bay, the latter a perfectly safe animal for ladies or children to drive; a good leader and will work any place.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson II.—Fourth Quarter, For Oct. 10, 1909.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Acts xxiii, 11-24. Memory Verse, 11—Golden Text, Ps. xci, 2—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

The two great events of this chapter are Paul testifying before the Jewish council and his being sent to Felix, the governor of Caesarea. The chief captain, having rescued him from the Jerusalem mob and having given him permission to speak to them from the stairs before being taken into the castle, was greatly perplexed when, after a time of great silence and patient listening, the multitude suddenly became full of frenzy because of something he said. As Paul had spoken in Hebrew the chief captain knew not what he had talked about nor what stirred them so. He was about to extort from the prisoner by scourging the reason of their outcry when Paul told him he was a Roman citizen.

Paul's first utterance drew forth a rebuke from the high priest and a command to smite him on the mouth. Jesus was probably smitten thus (John xviii, 2), but he answered meekly. Paul not so meekly at first. Perceiving that some of those present were Pharisees and some Sadducees, Paul acknowledged himself a Pharisee and said, "Of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question," for the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel nor spirit, but the Pharisees confess both (verses 6, 8). This led to a strife between the two parties, the Pharisees taking Paul's part and crying: "We find no evil in this man. Let us not fight against God." The strife between the two parties was so great that again the chief captain was compelled to rescue Paul from them by force and bring him into the castle.

Can you wonder that the church as seen by the world today does not draw men to God through Jesus Christ? All sorts of religion, Trinitarian and Unitarian, Calvinist and Armenian, post-millennial and pre-millennial, are in the eyes of the world just so many opinions of men, one as good as another and none good for much, for where is He seen who has all power in heaven and on earth, the Righteous One, the Prince of Peace, will such religion ever win the world to Christ? The Scriptures do not so teach us, but God has a plan which He has revealed to us in His word, and every purpose of His shall be performed (Isa. xiv, 24). Verse 11 is certainly a light above the brightness of the sun in the midst of the surrounding darkness, not simply the darkness of the natural night, but the spiritual darkness of the times. "The Lord stood by him," and he never could forget it. Hear him as after many years, when he felt that the time of his departure had really come, he says, "The Lord stood with me and strengthened me" (II Tim. iv, 17); "Be of good cheer, Paul!" Imagine, if you can, the events of the past day or two and put yourself in Paul's place and say what such a visit from the Lord Jesus and such words might mean to you. Was Paul beginning to see that perhaps his coming to Jerusalem was a mistake, to say the least, and that he had brought all this on himself by not heeding the voice of the Spirit and the counsel of his brethren, and was he cast down and discouraged? Well, here is his blessed Lord, who loves to the uttermost and to the end, the one who said to Simon Peter: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the cock shall not crow till thou hast denied me thrice. Let not your heart be troubled." Oh, He is so full of compassion! He knows us thoroughly and loves us notwithstanding all the sin and weakness He sees in us. Whatever may have been your failure, dear reader, if you are truly His and do really desire to please Him, He is saying to you, "Be of good cheer!" Consider the other five places where Jesus and He only, used this particular word, one word in the Greek (Matt. ix, 2, 22; xiv, 27; Mark x, 49; John xvi, 33), and whether you are utterly helpless physically, or your life seems surely going from you, or you think you shall perish, or you can't see anything, or your trials seem too great, He is saying, "Be of good cheer."

The mob might howl and the religious ones contend, but the Lord in heaven had heard Paul testify to Him. If by word and deed we are testifying of Him, then it is truly the work of the Spirit in us (John xv, 26). Paul is assured that he must bear witness at Rome also, as he had desired. "The Lord will fulfill the desire of them that fear Him" (Ps. cxlv, 19). "Delight thyself in the Lord, and He shall give thee the desires of thine heart" (Ps. xxxvii, 4)—this verse is lesson enough for a lifetime. But let us look further. During the night Paul received these assurances from the Lord Himself: In the morning his sister's son brings him word that more than forty men have sworn that they will neither eat nor drink till they have killed him. God and the devil. He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh the Lord shall have them in derision. I wonder how long they fasted ere they discovered the vanity of their oath and purpose. Paul did not disregard their purpose, but through the boy made it known to the authorities and then rested in the Lord to work out His purpose, part of which was evidently to send him to Caesarea.

ICED TEA.

How to Make and Serve This Refreshing Summer Drink.

However the doctors and health fearful may revile iced tea, it is bound to stay as long as thermometers are so unruly in summer. It is surprising, considering the amount of iced tea Americans consume, how rarely it is good.

The most scientific and supposedly healthful way to prepare it is to pour freshly brewed hot tea over a large lump of ice, then pour into glasses half filled with shaved ice.

More economical is it to make a small quantity of rather strong tea several hours before it is to be used, let it cool in the refrigerator and weaken to the desired consistency with iced water just before needed.

It is a mistake to think iced tea can be cooled by a few lumps in the pitcher. There must be either cracked or shaved ice in glasses to make it palatable.

Lemon is also better added before the meal than at it. The usual way is to pass a section of lemon to each guest. Far better is the taste if both lemon and sugar are mixed with the tea when the iced water is added. Better yet is it to adopt the Russian plan of grating the rind of a lemon and pouring hot tea over it.

If lemon is passed, as it may have to be when some of the family do not like it, cut into lengthwise sections rather than thin rounds and pass in addition a small glass pitcher filled with extra lemon juice.

Mint leaves or lemon verbena added to iced tea, besides the lemon, gives a delicious flavor. It is also good with a little ginger syrup or a few drops of rum.

One hostess on gala occasions serves her iced tea poured cold over lemon, orange or pineapple sherbet. This is served in a punch bowl, and each guest fills her tall glass with the mixture. In this case cracked ice is not used.

The thinner and more slender an iced tea glass is the more refreshing it tastes. It should be stood on a glass saucer or tumbler coaster. If possible use long handled spoons.

How to Clean Straw Matting.

To take up and clean straw matting, first remove as much of the furniture as possible and the pictures and ornaments, then sweep the matting with a damp broom, then remove tacks and roll up one strip at a time and take it either out on the grass or the roof, and if possible hang on a line for awhile. Then sweep the room carefully and take up the first dirt as you go along. Then with plenty of hot water and soap wash floor and open windows wide. Then the matting can be tended to. Sweep the wrong side, strip at a time, and with a pail of clean water with some white soap and a little ammonia in it and soft cloths wash the matting thoroughly and wipe very dry. Go over all the strips on the wrong side and then let them dry. Do the same to the right side and when putting down the matting bring the freshest part into wear. By a little study this can be done, and the wrong side can be used just the same as the right. It helps a lot to put newspapers under, and then you can roll them right up and put them in the rubbish, and it saves a lot of dirt.

How to Cook Chicken and Macaroni.

Cover a jointed fowl with boiling water and boil for five minutes. Then cook until tender with the water just below the boiling point. Fry a tablespoonful of bits of salt pork, sprinkle the pieces of fowl with a half teaspoonful of salt, dust with a tablespoonful of flour and brown in the hot fat. Arrange the pieces in the center of a fireproof platter. Put around it one-fourth of a pound of macaroni which has been broken into half inch pieces and cooked tender in salted water with an onion and part of a carrot. Pour over a sauce made of one-fourth of a cupful each of flour and butter cooked together and one pint of chicken liquor. Sift over with cheese and set in oven long enough to melt cheese.

How to Dry Clean a Waist.

Here is a recently discovered way to clean a white lace waist that is equal to any dry cleaning process ever tried and one that requires an outlay of only a few cents instead of the dollars usually needed to make a soiled lace waist again presentable. This is nothing more than a simple cake of magnesia. Rub the magnesia thoroughly over the garment in question, paying extra attention to the more soiled places, roll it in a cloth and lay it away for several days, then shake it lightly to dislodge any of the chalky substance that may cling to it, and you will behold a metamorphosed waist that will delight your eyes with its freshness.

How to Clean Ivory Handled Knives.

A housewife often finds that the ivory handles of her knives have become spotted. They look rather hopeless, and yet they can be easily cleaned. A piece of chamois skin moistened in water and then dipped in powdered pumice will take any spot off ivory. Good hard rubbing is required, but after that and a good washing in hot water and soap the ivory will look like new.

How to Clean Silver Quickly.

Place two quarts of potato peelings and one quart of water in an iron frying pan or spider, cover and boil ten minutes. Then drop in as many silver spoons, knives and forks as the water will cover. Continue the boiling and in less than ten minutes they will look like new. Remove the silver, wash in usual manner, rubbing well with dry, soft towel.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city of several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements. These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

THE WET BLANKET.

SPEAKING of Affinities
Seeking
Their mates
Through forty-seven states,
Did you ever allow
As how
The rainstorm
Searches out
The picnic
And marks it for its own,
Leaving no stone
Or umbrella unturned?
If the constitution
Follows the flag,
Flaying fig
With new possessions
And being a little brother
To the oppressed,
So also
Does the rainstorm
Follow the picnic,
Comes
Without invitation
And often Without warning,
Scorning
Conventionalities,
It flops
Into the lap
As it were,
Of the gay revelers.
What's
To be done about it?
What can be?
Nothing at all.
It comes
Like a poor relation
Or
Like a policeman
To see about
The dog license,
Comes and settles down,
And there you are!

A Poor Substitute.

"We were caught in a severe thunderstorm without an umbrella."

"What did you do about it?"

"We borrowed a barn and used it for an umbrella."

"You were fortunate."

"Yes, but there was one unpleasant feature."

"What was that?"

"We had to return it when we were through with it."

Splendid Success.

"I understand he is building a flying machine."

"Yes. He thinks he has discovered a new principle."

"How is he getting along?"

"Very fine. He has only broken one leg so far."

Helped Some.

He courted her a season,
But still she was in doubt,
As to the status of her mind
He couldn't quite make out.
He wasn't making progress,
But when they were alone
He thought he was quite lucky
If he could hold his own.

For Parading.

"Would you recommend this bathing suit?"

"To tell the truth, I am afraid the it will shrink when it gets wet."

"Oh, I will be careful of it and take an umbrella along if it looks like rain."

Lucky to Be Able.

"You never want to pass a good thing."

"I did just today."

"What was it?"

"Money."

Suspicious.

"I believe that woman has designs on me."

"What are the symptoms?"

"When we were alone last night she proposed."

Suspicious.

"What is the matter with her?"

"I believe she has circular insanity."

"What are the symptoms?"

"She talks like a buzzsaw."

Demon Chauffeur.

His father was in prison;
His brother was in jail;
His uncle was a pirate;
His granddad robbed the mail;
He was a scorcher, so, you see,
He came by it quite honestly.

Not In Doubt.

"I wish I had $7.39."

"What would you do with it?"

"Spend it."

Picnics are pleasure excursions you have to labor two days in advance to prepare for and suffer from a week afterward.

One way to learn how to talk well is to keep still.

Having your own way often results in owning an unpleasant thoroughfare.

A thing to be both decorative and useful isn't likely to possess a high degree of either quality.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT HITS WHITE PERSONS

A Critical Analysis by John C. Rose, of Baltimore.

In response to a request for an opinion as to whether the proposed disfranchisement amendment would bar any white voter, Mr. John C. Rose, United States district attorney, sent a reply, in which he denies absolutely the contention that only colored men would be effected, and then proceeds to riddle the argument of those who hold otherwise. From a legal standpoint the analysis and the construction on the law, together with its damaging results, the argument of Mr. Rose is unanswerable.

The text of opinion embodied in the letter of Chairman Hanna is as follows:

Hon. John B. Hanna,
Chairman Republican State Central Committee of Maryland.

Dear Sir: You say that the advocate of the disfranchising amendment say that it will disfranchise no white voter. You ask me whether that statement is true.

I beg leave to say that it is not true. The amendment permits to be registered without complying with the property or memory tests the following classes of persons:

1. Those who on January 1, 1869, or prior thereto, were entitled to vote under the law of this state or of any other state of the United States in which such persons then resided.

2. The male descendants of such persons.

3. A foreign-born citizen of the United States naturalized between January 1, 1869, and November 2, 1609.

4. The male descendants of such persons.

5. Those persons who are physically unable to write out an application registration.

A white man may be a native of this country, have voted in Maryland or some other state, at every election since and including that of 1869, and yet he will be disfranchised by the proposed amendment unless he is able to comply with the property or memory tests. He may be so disfranchised because he was born since the first of January, 1848, and, therefore, was not himself entitled to vote on January 1, 1869, or prior thereto, and he may have been the native son of a foreign-born father, who was never naturalized. For illustration—the father may have come to this country in 1847. The son may have been born here at any time after the first day of January, 1848. The father may never have been naturalized and may, indeed, have died before he became entitled to be naturalized. Now this man, though a native of Maryland, and though he has voted for 40 years, was not entitled to vote on January 1, 1869, or prior thereto, and he himself the son of a father who was entitled to vote at any time before the first day of January 1, 1869, or of a father who was naturalized between January 1, 1869, and November 2, 1909. He cannot swear that his father was entitled to vote before January 1, 1869, because in some cases where he knows his family history he may know that his father was not so naturalized. In other cases he cannot make such affidavit because he has no information or belief on the subject, having absolutely no knowledge whatever on the point. While the proposed amendment makes his affidavit that his father was qualified prima facie evidence, it is only prima facie and can be rebutted, and it is expressly declared that anyone who make a wilfully false affidavit commits perjury. Not only is the person of the class above-mentioned himself disfranchised unless he can comply with the property or memory tests, but his sons are disfranchised and his grandsons will be when they become old enough to vote.

Any man who is born out of lawful wedlock at any time since the 1st day of January, 1848, and his descendants are placed in the same class with the bulk of those who have negro blood in their veins. No such person can vote unless he can comply with the property or memory tests.

If the amendment be adopted we will have inquiries in registration offices as to the legitimacy of blood of various applicants for registration.

A white man born out of lawful wedlock, say in 1850, and his sons cannot register unless they have $500 of property assessed to them or can pass the memory test, and his grandsons will be disfranchised when they arrived at the age of 21.

The word descendant, as used in the constitutional amendment, must, I assume, mean descendant born in lawful wedlock. If the opposite construction is put upon the word all the large portion of our colored population who have some admixture of white blood in their veins would, in many cases, be justified in swearing that they are descended from a white male ancestor who was entitled to vote in Maryland or some other state prior to January 1, 1869.

In the discussion of the effect of the amendment upon the white population its advocates have usually confined themselves to the case of white persons who are at present voters. They have nothing to say about those foreigners now residing among us who have not yet perfected their naturalization, nor about their children, nor about those persons who will hereafter come to this country from abroad and their children.

It is perfectly clear that a foreign-born person not yet naturalized and his children and descendants, and the children and descendants of all foreigners who will hereafter come to this country, will be forever subject to the same disfranchising conditions as those which the amendment makes applicable to the great bulk of our negro population.

Very truly yours,
JOHN C. ROSE.

COIN COLLECTION WONDERFUL ONE

Collector Has Great Showing, Result of Forty Years' Diligent Work.

Probably one of the most interesting and instructive bits of entertainment one is likely to run across in a day's travel of the town is Gottlieb Schmid's coin collection. Much has been said of this collection, but not all, for new things reveal themselves at every inspection of the collection, while he is constantly adding rare and beautiful ones thus making it a growing and ever larger list of specimens. Mr. Schmid never tires of telling people the history of his life long efforts in corraling the rarities, and he is also so well informed on the history of the countries of the world generally taken that his explanations as to the surroundings under which these coins were exchanged adds considerable to their value. Then, too, the coins have a great intrinsic value. They are worth a great deal in point of the value of the metals used in their coining, aside from the great premiums demanded for them.

He has been selecting and collecting these little representatives of the ancients for over 41 years, and has given much time and attention, besides some of his own coin in getting them together. They are arranged in the shape and design of a shield, such as is seen at the top of the reverse of the ordinary cent. Mr. Schmid has turned to account his literary attainments and the historical connection of each coin is at his tongues' end.

He is a great student of Shakespeare and ancient history, and this has aided him materially in selecting the coins with the greatest historical value.

His oldest dated coin is the Austrian Crown bearing the year 1486 plainly stamped on it. There are 252 coins in the collection, no two being alike! The heaviest coin is an Austrian double crown; it weighs three ounces, being a little larger in circumference than the American silver dollar, and three times as thick. These people who are so burdened with money that they cannot carry more than a pocketful of cartwheels, would certainly have had a picnic carrying some of these Austrian coins. It is dated 1604.

The smallest coin is also Austrian. It is one-thirty second of a ducat, worth seven cents. It is a gold coin, and is only as large as a capital "O" typewritten.

Possibly the strongest looking coin is the razor money of China. It is a blade, of copper, six inches long, curved ground and knife-like, and looks like a rusty razor blade. This coin like all other Chinese coins, has a hole in it. A square hole indicates the Chinese coin, while the Japanese coins have a round hole in them.

The razor coin comes from the Shun dynasty of 250 B. C.

Mr. Schmid considers his Jewish shekel his rarest coin. It is dated 120 B. C. The glass money of Egypt is peculiar looking, and has finely engraved work on it.

The bullet money of Siam, the "Tekel," pronounced like that "Mene, mene, tekel Upharsin" writing Belshazzar saw, is the size of a blue grape, and has hieroglyphics and pictures sprinkled over its sides. It is of comparatively recent date. The smallest silver coin is from Panama and is one-third the size of a dime.

The Lydian coin of 560 B. C. coming from the time of Croesus, the monarch who had plenty of coin to spare, is an interesting coin because of that fact. The Greek coins are beautiful and of many artistic designs.

Mr. Schmidt also has two Widow's mites, but he's not going to drop them in the collection box, they being very rare.

Lead coin from Pompeii shows that lead did not always get the black look that coin inspectors of our goverment give.

A coin from Henry VIII of England, who has wives "too tedious to mention," is of gold, thin as paper, and containing $2.50 worth of gold, but much more valuable as a rarity. About 15 years ago a Portuguese coin was ploughed up near Brownsville, Pa., and Mr. Schmid secured it for his collection. A gold coin of 1776 of the reign of our old friend, George III, was blown out of its resting place in Hell Gate harbor, New York. It had likely been dropped there by some redcoat in the year that made U. S. famous.

The is also a "cartwheel," dated 1797, from the same realm. It looks like a cartwheel in some respects and is three times as thick as a dollar. It is the old "two pence." A 1649 Cromwell coin is also in the collection, as are also coins from Charles I to III.

The old Ben Franklin cent of 1787 with the inscription, "Mind Your Business" is an interesting American coin. There are coins representing nearly every period of importance in our National history. The Lincoln penny is there, as is also the Eagle cent of Honest Abe's own time and day.

American dollars as they first looked and the latest one out are there for comparison.

And all 12 Caesars are represented on the coins of their respective periods. For while they ruled practically in consecutive order, and some but for a short time, yet those Caesars did things in a regular "Strenuous Deelightful" way that sometimes made each year almost a period of its own in Roman history.

In addition to these coins there are several medals significant of events of national importance.

Thers is no paper money, and Mr. Schmid does not deal in coins. He simply collects them.

When he gets one piece duplicated he sometimes sells the extra, but his aim is to make his collection one of the largest efforts in numismatics that can be found.

And he is succeeding most admirably. He has his coin board mounted under cover, and keeps it in a vault at the recorder's office, and is a treat to get his time long enough to hear these coins discussed, as ably and intelligently as Mr. Schmid naturally does it.—Uniontown Standard.

BLOOMINGTON.

The condition of Mr. Jesse Hartley, of Kitzmiller, who was injured in the Hamill mine ten days ago, is very critical and no hopes are held out for his ultimate recovery. He was taken to the Allegany Hospital, Cumberland, on the same day of the accident, where, after an examination, it was found that his back was broken, and the spinal cord crushed and the lower portion of his body completely paralyzed. He was taken to his home Sunday afternoon on No. 3 of the W. M. R. R.

Mr. Edward Devine is back at his post of duty with the Buxton & Landstreet store at Beryl, after a very pleasant vacation spent in the eastern cities. While away he visited New York city and spent four days in that town of the Tammany tiger, where he shook hands with Henry Hudson, kissed the Goddess of Liberty, threw a baseball over one of the tallest skyscrapers, squeezed the 875-pound fat woman in the zoo until she fainted, and dived off the Brooklyn bridge every morning for a bath.

Squire Moody was in Cumberland on business during the week.

Mrs. Anna Kemp and daughter Alma visited friends in Keyser on Thursday.

Five cases of diphtheria have occurred in the family of Mr. and Mrs. James Nelson, near Barnum, during the past week.

Mr. N. U. Bond, of Bond, is spending most of the present week at Alexander, working hard to get the big mill of the Croft Lumber Co., of that place, completed by October 7th, the day appointed for the trial test of the machinery and the opening of the plant.

Mr. James Green, of Elkins, traveling auditor for the W. M. R. R., was in town Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Coffman, the "newly-weds," of Kitzmiller, spent part of last week with relatives in town.

Mr. "Jimmy" Parrish, of Beryl, who enlisted in the U. S. army three years ago and was assigned to artillery service, is back from the army, on account of expiration of time of enlistment.

Mrs. Daisy Price and two children returned this week from a very pleasant visit to relatives in Terra Alta.

Mr. Jack Frost is here on his annual visit, painting the forest trees, coloring the pumpkins, opening the chestnut burrs and doing all kinds of mischief to the flower gardens.

The smiling face of Mr. Grover Glottelty, agent and telegraph operator at Barnum, will be missed from the office window for the next ten days. He is away on his vacation and is enjoying a much needed rest amongst his friends and relatives in and around Salisbury, Pa.

Mr. Matthew Hardman, of Columbus, Ohio, was in town last week, visiting friends and relatives he had not seen for twenty-six years. He is related to the well known Wildman family, of this vicinity, and this is his first visit since he left our town, his former home, in 1883. He has been in the service of the Hocking Valley railroad for the past twenty years and bears a certificate of efficiency from the manager and superintendent of the company. He was en route to the Hudson-Fulton festivities and was accompanied by his wife.

BITTINGER.

The ladies of the Lutheran church of this village will serve a chicken and waffle supper in the basement of the parsonage on next Saturday evening, October 9th, and everybody is cordially invited to attend. The proceeds arising from the supper will be used toward building a stable on the parsonage lot.

The threshing of the grain on the Cunningham farm, now owned by Jennings Brothers and located near this village, was finished last week, and according to reliable reports the total amount of wheat, oats and buckwheat produced on the farm this season was approximately 2800 bushels.

The teachers in charge of the various public schools in this neighborhood attended the local teachers' institute held at Grantsville on last Saturday.

Lawrence Bittinger and Miss Cora Wilt, both of Bear Hill, were quietly married at the Lutheran parsonage by Rev. Alvin Yugel on Wednesday evening of last week.

Thomas Hendershot is preparing to move his family from this place to Chaffee, W. Va., this week.

W. A. Althers is painting the residence occupied by Prof. J. C. Beahm and family.

Mrs. Mary Custer, of North Glade, was in this section last week, visiting relatives and attending to some business.

The farmers in this section are taking advantage of the prevailing fair weather to dig potatoes and husk corn.

A heavy frost and hard freeze was experienced here last Monday morning.

SHORT RUN.

We will break the monotony by giving you a few items from this place that will probably be of interest to some of the readers of your valuable paper.

The farmers are all done threshing buckwheat and cutting corn and consider both a very fair crop. The next thing on the bill of fare will be buckwheat cakes, sausage and maple syrup.

A crowd of young people drove up from Kitzmiller Sunday to the Wilson grave yard and placed some beautiful wreaths of flowers over the graves of relatives and friends.

Messrs. Jas. H. Wilson and Martin Sharpless, two experts in the piscatorial art, hied themselves to the Potomac last Saturday and there spent the day at their favorite sport returning late in the evening with a fine string of black bass.

Mr. Scott Moon, of Kurtz Chapel, came down the latter part of last week and completed the barn he has been constructing for Judge Wilson by putting in the hay fork.

Messrs. Alex and Sanford Moon, of the Glades, were mingling with friends in this community Saturday and Sunday.

Miss Delea Wilson and Sanford Moon drove over to Sulphur City Saturday and back Sunday. Say "Billy," you will have to keep your eye open or go back to Barrelsville and barrel yourself up for the winter.

Our school is progressing nicely under the efficient management of Miss Ida Wilson.

Ex-Judge Wilson was a business visitor in Oakland last Saturday.

Mr. Scott Harvey returned home Saturday from a successful threshing trip through Ryan's Glades.

Mr. Martin Sharpless and family, of Wilsell, W. Va., who have been sojourning with friends and relatives in this section for the past ten days, expect to return to their home the latter part of this week.

Miss Lois Harvey, who has been ill with typhoid fever for the past few weeks, is rapidly convalescing.

Mrs. Martin Sharpless and sister, Miss Ida Wilson, were pleasant visitors at Mrs. John Moon's Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Arthur Harvey, one of our esteemed young gentlemen, was calling on his best girl Sunday night and while returning home he was meditating on the pleasant hours he had just enjoyed. Not conscious of his position he tramped on a skunk and the odor that emanated therefrom necessitated the burying of his broad cloth suit Monday morning.

With success to THE REPUBLICAN.

SHERIFF'S SALE
OF VALUABLE
Real Estate
In Friendsville, Garrett County, Maryland.

Under and by virtue of a writ of fieri facias issued out of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Maryland, in No. 3 Judicials September Term, 1909, upon a judgment rendered upon the 20th day of February, 1909, at the suit of Abraham Stroose and Elias Whiteland, partner, trading as L. Stroose & Co., against Walter Collier, I have seized and taken into execution all the right, title and interest of the said Walter Collier in and to the hereinafter described property, and I hereby give notice that on the 16th Day of October, 1909,

SATURDAY,

at 1:30 o'clock A. M., in front of the First National Bank in Oakland, to satisfy said judgment and the interest and cost thereon, I will sell to the highest bidder all the rights, title and interest of said Walter Collier in and to all those two tracts of lands situated in Friendsville, Garrett county, Maryland, and described as follows:

1st. All those two lots of ground situate, lying and being in the town of Friendsville, Garrett county, Maryland, which are described as follows, to-wit:

Beginning for the first piece or parcel at a stake standing at the end of the 2rd line of E. Custer's lot, which will more fully appear by reference to a deed made by Thomas Garey and wife to Emanuel Custer in 1889, and running with said 3rd line reversed, North 81½ degrees West, 12½ perches to a stake; South 15¼ degrees West, 5 perches to a stake; South 81½ degrees East, 12½ perches; North 15¼ degrees East 5 perches to the place of beginning, containing 66 1-10 perches; this being a part of Militaey Lot No. 3282, and being commonly known as "The Taylor Hotel Property in the Town of Friendsville," Garrett County, Maryland.

Beginning for the second piece or parcel at the northwest corner of the river bridge, and running thence North 57½ degrees West, 6 3-10 perches; North 47½ degrees East, 10 perches to a point of Island, and thence by a straight line to the beginning, and being known as the "Liverty Stable Lot."

LOOKING AT THE PRACTICAL SIDE

There are thousands of independent Democrats, we are sure, who look upon the practical side of the disfranchising amendment. In an interview in The News today Bernard N. Baker expresses this view when he says:

As a Democrat and I have always been a Democrat—I ask that our party play the game fairly and stand or lose by its record. Maryland is naturally a Democratic State, and the Democratic candidates will be elected if men are nominated of high principles, honest and capable. If the leaders do not nominate such men, our party will be defeated. . . . . I believe there are enough honest, independent Democratic voters who think more of principle than to try and take advantage of a trick method to control the State, but are willing to depend on the honest merits of their candidates, and I believe that these voters will defeat this amendment.

The question whether or not the amendment is constitutional makes little difference to those who are thinking of the practical effect of the elimination of the negro vote. Their judgment as to the advisability of disfranchising this vote would not be altered if they were assured in advance by the Supreme Court of the United States that it could be done without violating the Constitution. The question they are asking is: What effect will disfranchisement have upon the welfare of the State? Knowing that if their party will keep a clean record and nominate good men it can elect them without difficulty; knowing that it can secure an overwhelming majority in the Legislature and the Council, the Democrat who has had experience with the Democratic machine must look with suspicion on its insistence upon making Maryland so strongly Democratic that the power of the independents to sway elections will be done away with. STOVE PATENT.

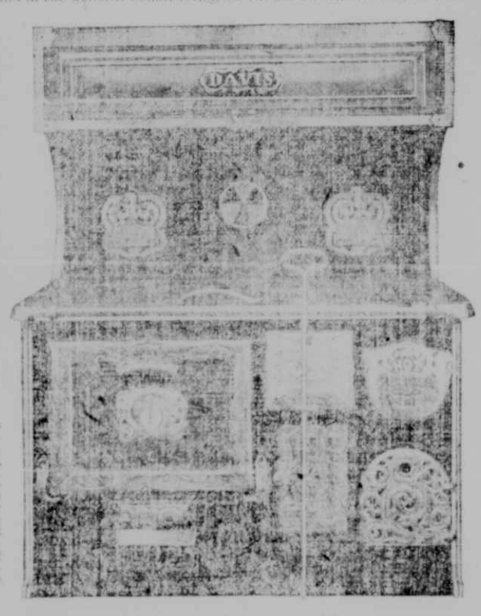
CHAS. S. DAVIS, of J. M. Davis & Sons,

has been granted several patents on their DAVIS RANGE which they have been offering to their trade during the past year and have now over 100 in use.

The following advertisement is taken from J. M. Davis & Sons' Hardware Bulletin and fully explains its many advantages.

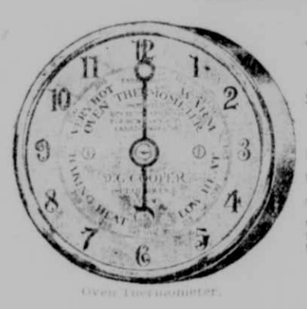
Showing under shie and working parts of grate.



Where, What and How to Buy
DAVIS PATENT STEEL RANGES

Nothing Like It Ever Offered to the Trade

After years of experience in the Stove and Range business we take great pride in announcing that we have produced the most wonderful Steel Range that was ever offered to the trade. Its construction is entirely different from the old style of Ranges. In planning and constructing the Davis Steel Ranges every improvement that would add to its durability and convenience for the housewife has been carefully guarded, and in its construction possibly more points are patented than will be found in any half dozen ranges now offered to the trade. The fire box of any range is the part that wears away out first, and with this thought in view we planned in a way that the fire box and grates are entirely different from those found in the general construction of ranges and should last for years.

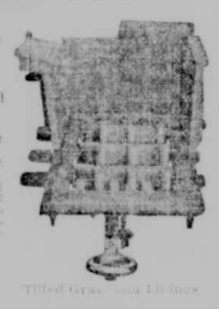


Power-Shaker grate extends through hood.

Top side of grate.

All of the Davis Ranges are provided with a baby oven thermometer, by which heat is indicated in the oven door. It shows accurately the temperature of the oven without the necessity of opening the door, which allows the escape of heat. It is one of the greatest conveniences to the housekeeper.

Oven Thermometer.



Davis No. 8-74 Steel Range complete with reservoir, high and low closet, heavy lined throughout, has oven thermometer and all the improvements.

Strong Points that Make Davis Steel Ranges Most Desirable.

Enclosed reservoir heated by patent process.

A grate rest with large operators next to oven, avoiding accompanying ash pans. Roasting grates with poker and lifting snake, easy to operate, for wood and coal. Extended fire box, two sets of grates, the first set as guards to prevent cinders from escaping or wedging between the tilted bars.

CAMPAIGN OPENS AUSPICIOUSLY IN OAKLAND

Last Saturday Night Wheh the Opera House Was Packed.

Many came to Oakland from the outlying towns and districts to attend the opening of the Republican campaign in Garrett county at a meeting held Saturday evening in the Oakland Opera House. Hon. Frank E. Williams, Republican candidate for comptroller, Gen. L. Allison Wilmer and ex-Congressman Charles R. Schirm arrived in Oakland from the east on the afternoon train and were taken in charge by a committee who escorted them about town and introduced them. They found the Republicans of Garrett in excellent spirits and sanguine of success in November, not only of electing the entire Republican county ticket, but in rolling up a majority of from 800 to 1,000 for the state ticket, an almost equally good majority for D. Lindley Sloan for chief judge of the Fourth Judicial District, a heavy majority against the disfranchisement amendment, and that the Republican county ticket will be elected by from 500 to 800 majority.

The mass meeting Saturday evening was a great success, being one of the largest ever held in this section. The Deer Park and Mountain City bands of Oakland furnished the music. T. J. Peddicord, Esq., the oldest member of the Garrett county bar, presided at the meeting and introduced the speakers. Hon. Frank E. Williams, candidate for comptroller, was the first speaker.

Mr. Williams said:

"I am not here to advocate my candidacy for comptroller. Senator Rayner, whose knowledge of men and things is without limitation, thinks I do not know the difference between a cashbook and a ledger. Well, quite a few years have elapsed since the days of my personal acquaintance with Senator Rayner and those years have taught the Senator some very touching things about cashbooks in his senatorial contests. Maybe the Senator does not know so well what [illegible] years have taught me since I had time ago professional for business exigence. I shall not stop to discuss it, but permit me to say, however, that if I should be elected comptroller of the state I hereby promise to enforce the law which governs the returns of the state collectors to the State Treasury; a law which has not been enforced in instances which I can easily cite, and I will undertake to prove that declaration before any competent jury in the state.

"I am not going to discuss the proposed amendment. I simply say to you, read it. It is like some people—the more you know it the more you dislike it. I received a letter today from a Baltimore lawyer who told me some time ago that he expected to vote for the amendment. I asked him if he had read it. He had not. Read it, I said and left him. His letter says he would not dare to vote for it now he has examined it. That is all we want—there is no doubt of what the people will do to the thing if only they realize what it is.

"The Democratic machine politicians are not a bit concerned about the 'vicious and illiterate negro vote.' They didn't seem a bit concerned about it ten years ago when they were constructing the platform on which John Walter Smith ran for Governor. That platform, you may remember, expressly promised to disturb none of the existing 'rights of the colored race.' They didn't seem to think that those rights were any menace to our political affairs at that time. Why should they think so now, when the colored vote is about 6 per cent. to 8 per cent. smaller than it was at that time? They do not think so. This whole appeal to race prejudice is simply a piece of rank political hypocrisy. It is not the colored vote they are after. It is the machinery of elections

"The Democrats have been reading the signs of the times. They have discerned the growing spirit of independency in political contests. They are noting with alarm the revolt in their own ranks against their indefensible regime. They must make sure of a strangle hold on future elections, and this proposed amendment is calculated to furnish it. Write that amendment into the Constitution of the state and you sign the death warrant of any possible deliverance from the Democratic machine, which is ruthlessly bent on maintaining its control of our political destinies. How is such a possible condition to be contemplated without protest? Have these gentlemen justified their claim to permanency of political power? We challenge their record on that score. Our state platform challenged it. They declined the challenge. They said the platform 'abused the Democratic administration.' Well, what did they expect us to do? Compliment it and crown it with garlands? If our platform did their administration injustice, why don't they refute and confound our deliverances? I, for one, don't care much about what happened a half a century ago in the 'know nothing' days about which Comptroller Hering spends his time in talking. We are living in the present. We have asked some very pointed and proper questions about the integrity and efficiency of our public officials of today. And as citizens and taxpayers we have a right to some better answer than a barking back to the distant past.

"We have no quarrel with the Democratic party as a great historic party, but we have a very serious quarrel with the way things are going in this state under the rule (or misrule) of the political cabal which has usurped the name and is dishonoring the traditions of that party. We have challenged their legislative record. Its riotous extravagance has been publicly censured by a Democratic governor and by the chief political organ of the Democratic party. They have no word of defense. They plead for a continuation of their legislative life on the ground of Senator Rayner's return to the United States Senate. I have never thought that much of a plea. Now I think it no plea at all. I, for one, am ready to stand up and be counted as against Senator Rayner's return, ever since his astounding declaration in my own county at a recent public meeting. He then and there declared, 'We propose to come as near to violating the Constitution of the United States as we possibly can, without actually violating it.'

"No brilliancy of intellect or graces of oratory can ever atone for the perfidy of that utterance from a man who has sworn to 'support and defend the Constitution.' Some better reason than Rayner's return to the Senate must be found to justify another Democratic legislature, when such legislatures have of late been 'scandalous and not half decent,' according to the testimony of their own household.

"We have challenged the authority of their administrative program. We invite them to the 'deadly parallel.' They are for a 'Public Utilities Commission.' At least they say they are. Why, such a bill was taken to the last legislature by the Reform League, and it could never be gotten out of the committee, the Governor himself declaring that it was a subject he knew nothing whatever about. They passed a primary election law—a law which the Governor declared a perfidious repudiation of their own platform and which everybody is so ashamed of that nobody seems willing to own it. A direct primary bill for my own county was introduced in the session of 1906 by our own senator and it could never be gotten out of committee, the chairman of the committee declaring that 'Mr. Crothers is opposed to it.' You may judge therefrom how sincere these gentlemen are in their advocacy of a just and fair direct primary.

"Under the pressure of an overwhelming public sentiment they passed a Corrupt Practices Act. I now ask them if they have shown any activity in its enforcement. They have been invited by their own party in divers places to note avowed violations of the act in primary contests, and I ask if the state administration has ever taken a single step toward examining these positive charges, much less punishing the violators.? What did these gentlemen of the Democratic machine do with the reform measures introduced at the last legislature? They are the precise measures recommended by the special commissions which the Governor has appointed in view of our approaching election.

"If these measures are right and wise as coming from those commissions, they are right and wise when introduced by a Republican legislator. But the Democratic ring at Annapolis promptly choked them to death. This is not the sort of thing they want enacted into law. They only want the political effect of promising it. We challenge their political abuses of the state patronage for political purposes. The Governor has been saying recently with much unction that a 'political party can not live on patronage.' Well, this Democratic machine is living on it. Don't take my word it. Take Governor Warfield's word. Take your own observation. Haven't they filled this state with an army of paid employes, who are of no use in the world to practi-

REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE FOR SENATE

HARVEY J. SPEICHER.

Mr. Harvey J. Speicher, the Republican party's candidate for the State Senate, was born in Accident district, this county, November 21, 1873. He is a son of Mr. John P. Speicher, one of the most successful farmers and respected citizens of the county, who was also born and reared in Garrett county. His grand parents were among its early pioneer settlers. Mr. Harvey J. Speicher is one of a family of six brothers and one sister. Four of the brothers are now living in the vicinity of Accident, where they are known for their industry and thrift and numbered among the best citizens. The early years of his life were spent on his father's farm, attending the public school during the winter months after he reached the school age. Afterwards he attended the Normal school of the county and later became one of Garrett's most successful teachers for a period of five years. After this Mr. Speicher turned his attention to farming and stock raising with great success, now owning one of the best farms in Accident district. He is aggressive and progressive in all his undertakings. He believes in method and industry. His uprightness and straightforward dealings with his fellowman has won for him a wide circle of friends, especially in Maryland, where he has dealt more extensively than in any other State.

On June 12, 1897, Miss Emma Gnegy, a daughter of Rev. Gnegy, of Meyersdale, Pa., became his wife, and five children bless a happy union in one of Accident's prettiest homes.

Combined with his expreience as a successful teacher, farmer and business man, his close observation of State and county affairs and his touch with its most important enterprises, public school system, public highways, and especially the county road system of Garrett.

It is believed by his friends that Mr Speicher is peculiarly well endowed and fitted to represent the people of this county in the Maryland Senate, with the assurance that they will have competent, effective and honorable service. As a citizen he has always taken a conspicuous part in enterprises that had for their object the better development of the resources of the community in which he lives and he will ably represent every interest of the county in the State Senate. He is a member of one of the leading churches of the county and has been and is yet a strong advocate of temperance and has lent his assistance to temperance legislation The voters of Garrett will find that they have chosen wisely when they send men like Mr. Speicher to look after matters of legislation at the State Capital.

REPUBLICAN GATHERINGS GENEROUSLY ATTENDED

A Fine Meeting at Sunnyside Monday Night.

On Monday evening a very well attended and enthusiastic meeting was held in the Sunnyside school house, in the interest of the Republican ticket. Notwithstanding the fact that it had been raining all day and that the meeting was changed from Red House to Sunnyside, the building was filled with voters of the neighborhood. There were also a number of ladies present.

The meeting was called to order by Mr. Samuel Lawton, and Mr. Guy Youtzy was named as chairman.

The first speaker was Mr. Geo. W. Legge, of the Oakland Bar, who delivered a very able and interesting address. Mr. Harvey J. Speicher, candidate for State Senate, followed and clearly demonstrated that Garrett's next representative in the State Senate will be a young man fully capable to look out for the best interest of his county. Mr. Speicher was warmly applauded. Messrs. D. E. Bolden, candidate for House of Delegates; Robt. L. Freise, candidate for County Treasurer; D. M. Dixon, candidate for County Commissioner, and Andrew Shartzer, candidate for Sheriff, also made brief addresses, after which Mr. J. Griffin Hall, of Baltimore, was introduced and for about an hour held the close attention of the audience, while he delivered a very interesting and eloquent address upon the issues of the campaign. He made a very strong appeal for not only the defeat of the Straus amendment, but also for the election of the entire Republican ticket.

In speaking of the re-election of Judge Boyd, Mr. Hall said, "Judge Boyd stands with all the Democratic nominees on the platform which endorses the Straus amendment and therefore they must all either stand or fall together. The odium attached to the amendment applies as much to Judge Boyd as it does to any other candidate on the Democratic ticket." The speaker paid a glowing tribute to Mr. D. Lindley Sloan, the Republican candidate, and said that Mr. Sloan would go upon the bench at a time in life when he was best calculated to render the most efficient service. Mr. Hall also called special attention to the importance of electing representatives to the legislature who would be able to secure the necessary legislation for the county, and showed the folly of sending men who would go to Annapolis as independents and therefore could not be called into caucus in election of a United States Senator, or on other measures. "Send party men," he said, "who will have the support of the representatives of their party to aid them in securing legislation for your county." Mr. Hall interspersed his address with a number of jokes and witticisms which caused much laughter and merriment. Before and after the meeting and between the speeches the Deer Park Cornet Band played a number of popular selections. Buttons bearing a very good picture of Mr. Harvey J. Speicher were distributed.

BIG RALLY AT RYAN'S GLADE.

On Tuesday evening one of the largest political meetings ever held in the neighborhood of Shook Shop, was held in the interest of the Republican ticket. The loyal Republicans of Ryan's Glade and their friends and neighbors filled the school house where the meeting was held, to its utmost capacity. Many were compelled to remain standing during the entire meeting. Close attention was paid to all the speakers, and outbursts of applause were quite frequent. In the absence of the chairman of the County Committee Mr. Samuel Lawton called the meeting the order and Mr. F. W. Kelso was called upon to preside, with Judge J. Thomas Moon as secretary. State's Attorney J. C. Renninger was the first speaker and while everybody expected a find address, it was generally conceded by all present that it was the best speech they had ever heard Garrett's brilliant State's Attorney make. It was a strong appeal for the defeat of the Democratic ticket and its infamous amendment, and a ringing call to the loyal Republicans and all lovers of honesty and justice to elect the entire Republican ticket.

Mr. Geo. W. Legge, Jr., of the Oakland Bar, who has been doing good work for the cause, was the next speaker and he too, delivered a strong, logical, eloquent and patriotic address which had the effect of working the audience up to a general hurrah pitch.

When Harvey J. Speicher was introduced as the next State Senator from Garrett county, he was greeted with loud and continued applause. His address was delivered in a calm, deliberate and forceful manner, and his hearers were at once convinced of his honesty and sincerity of purpose and of his ability to represent the county of his birth in the Senate of Maryland. Mr. Speicher, in the course of his address, said: "I have been nominated upon a platform, which stands for progressive government in the State of Maryland, and the right of every voter to cast his ballot according to the dictates of his conscience and to have that vote counted as cast, without running the gauntlet of a ballot to defraud him. I condemn the excessive cost to the taxpayers of the present election laws, and will vote for the passage of a more economical and just one, which will give the people greater privilege in the exercise of the right of franchise. I am opposed to the present registeation law requiring persons who move into this State to be compelled at great expense and loss of time to go to the county seat and make a declaration a year in advance that they intend to become voters therein. I know a number of good citizens and taxpayers in this county who do not exercise the right of franchise on account of this obnoxious law. It shall be my highest aim to carry out the wishes of the people in every particular. I know no bosses or dictation except the sovereign will of the people. If there is an element of strength in my character it is that of independence, freedom of thought and action, but at the same time, I believe in party organization. Upon this rests the foundation of this Republic and all successful enterprises. Upon all subjects presented to the legislature for its deliberation I propose to give my utmost careful, earnest and conscientious consideration, and I shall vote, as I believe, will be for the best interest of the people of our State and for our county."

Messrs. D. E. Bolden, Rob't L. Friese, D. M. Dixon and Andrew Shartzer followed in brief addresses, which were well received, and Mr. J. Griffin Hall of Baltimore, concluded the speaking with an earnest and convincing address, containing eloquence, logic, patriotism and humor. In speaking of the interest behind the so called "People's Ticket," Mr. Hall said it reminded him of the story of the duck hunter who wanted to shoot just one duck, but could not get near enough to get a shot at the ducks. He complained to an old duck hunter, who told him he ought to set out some decoy or wooden ducks to attract the real ones. "So," said Mr Hall, "the gentleman behind this so called 'People's party' has placed on the ticket several gentlemen for the different political parties, with the idea of using them as decoys to attarct the voters of this county so he may bag his duck. But he will find out that when the shooting season closes, November 2nd, that the good people of Garrett are too wise to be deceived by his decoys. The people know and demand the real thing."

The Deer Park Cornet band was present and rendered a number of fine selections.

INJURIES PROVED FATAL.

Two Year Old Boy Struck By Freight Train and Death Ensued.

One of the most frightful accidents occurring in this vicinity in recent years was that which took place at the Mountain Lake Park station last Thursday afternoon shortly after three o'clock. Ray Gilpin, aged a little over two years, was struck by the engine of an eastbound freight train, his injuries proving fatal the following day about noon when he was released from his sufferings.

Mr. Reuben Gilpin left his home near the railroad station to go to the depot did not notice that his little boy, Ray was following him. When the father reached the opposite side of the track he looked back in time to see the little fellow struck by a passing freight engine and hurled to one side. He gathered him up in his arms and hurried home where everything possible was done to alleviate his sufferings, but he passed away the next day.

The child was born in Cumberland and was two years, three months and eight days old. He was buried in the Wonberly burving ground, the funeral services being conducted by Rev. C. W. Hudson, the pastor of the Baptist church.

His father and mother, Mr. Reuben and Mrs. Eliza J. Gilpin, have the sincere sympathy of the community in their bereavement.

The Democratic Nominee and the Straus Amendment

Published by authority Republican Committee.

The Baltimore American, State organ of the Republican party in Maryland, in its issue of Tuesday, under the caption, "Judges and the Amendment," used the following language:

"The Republicans of the State should stand unqualifiedly for every move that can possibly aid in encompassing the defeat of the disfranchising amendment. There should be no compromise in any direction, least of all in the selection of the judicial circuit judges who constitute the Court of Appeals. This is no time for any Republican to consider even in the most distant manner the support of a Democrat for a chief judgeship. The crucial subject, of vast public interest, of overwhelming party importance, is the fate of the proposed suffrage amendment. Therefore no manner of excuse could be offered for any degree of support for any man who stands with the Democratic organization."

The Baltimore American then went on to say:

"It is a matter of common knowledge that Judge Boyd, owing allegiance to his party and sharing its views on the paramount issue (the disfranchising amendment) is alien in sympathy from the purpose and efforts of the Republican party. On the other hand, the Republican nominee, D. Lindley Sloan, stands ready in case of his election, and in case he should have to pass upon the mendment as a member of the Court of Appeals, to give its constitutional relations consideration, unaffected by the tremendous predilections which would have to be gotten rid of by Judge Boyd in order to afford the measure like unbiased consideration."

The above language of the Baltimore American will commend itself to the wisdom not only of every Republican in the fourth judicial circuit but of every Republican in Maryland, for every word it contains is absolutely true. President Taft, who was formerly an eminent Federal judge and who is a great constitutional lawyer, has condemned the Straus amendment as unconstitutional. Charles J. Bonaparte, Attorney General of the United States in President Roosevelt's cabinet, has condemned the Straus amendment as unconstitutional. Major Richard M. Venable, ex-Confederate soldier, professor of law in the University of Maryland and one of the greatest Democrats of the State, condemned the Straus amendment as unconstitutional. No Republican need hesitate to follow the guidance and accept the opinion of a Republican President and a Republican Attorney General, both of whom are great constitutional lawyers, on the legal aspects of the Straus amendment, a measure designed to destroy the Republican party in Maryland.

Yesterday's Evening Times, the Democratic organ, asks the question:

"What right or what authority has the Baltimore American to say that Judge Boyd has committed himself in advance to the suffrage amendment?"

And the Democratic organ goes on to say:

"Judge Boyd is too careful and cautious a man to give out in advance his views," ect., on a measure, such as the disfranchising amendment, "likely to come before him for judicial determination."

No one doubts for an instant that Judge Boyd, Democratic nominee, is "too careful and cautious a man" to give his views on the Straus disfranchising amendment publicity before the Republican party of this circuit at a time when he is a candidate for re-election. But the Democratic party and its nominee for the bench cannot hide its head in its confusion and seek refuge and concealment in the folds of the judicial ermine. The Straus amendment and the menace it holds concern the people of Maryland, and the Republican party of Maryland, far more than it concerns the bench, and the views entertained by the Democratic nominee for the bench on this most vital subject are known of all men. He is an upholder of the Straus amendment. He has received and published the written endorsement of John P. Poe, author of the Poe disfranchising amendment. He has received and published the written endorsement of Isaac Lobe Straus, the author of the Straus disfranchising amendment. He has received and published the written endorsement of Isidor Rayner, foremost among the advocates of the Straus disfranchising amendment and traducer of the administration of Governor Lowndes. His chief journalistic ally is the Baltimore Sun, the whole burden of whose song is to urge two things, first, the adoption of the Straus amendment for the destruction of the Republican party, and second, and of equal importance and connected therewith, the election of Judge Boyd to the bench to assist in giving it judicial sanction. It is by invincible right and indubitable authority of these indisputable facts that the Republican party of Maryland makes the direct, unqualified and unequivocal charge that the Democratic nominee for the bench in the fourth judicial circuit stands committed to the Straus disfranchising amendment.

And in the light of these facts the further advice of the Baltimore American to the Republicans of the whole State, as well as to those of this section, is simply pure and unadulterated common sense, when it says:

"A STRAIGHT VOTE FOR THE WHOLE REPUBLICAN TICKET IS THE DUTY OF EVERY REPUBLICAN. A SQUARE VOTE FOR THE REPUBLICAN JUDICIAL CANDIDATES IS THE IMPERATIVE NEED OF THE HOUR."

MORE "SUN" ADVICE.

The Baltimore Sun, State organ of the Democratic party in Maryland, which divides its time between advocating the adoption of the Straus amendment and supporting the candidacy of the Democratic nominee for the bench, published a lengthy editorial on the latter subject in its issue of Thursday, in the course of which it said:

"Republicans have abundant reasons for opposing the amendment in the fourth judicial circuit to drag the judiciary down to the level of party politics."

If, by the above language, the Sun means to say that when the great Republican party, for its own protection and in the exercise of its undoubted right, sees fit to name a candidate to oppose the Democratic nominee who is known to favor the disfranchisement schemes of his party, it is "dragging the judiciary down to the level of party politics," the Sun in spirit and letter is guilty of an untruth. It would appear that the Sun and the Democratic party, with its disfranchising amendments and its monopoly of the higher judiciary of the State, would like to make of the Republican party in Maryland a kind of political Cinderella. By suggestion, innuendo and hyperbolic praise of their own nominee, carried almost to the verge of nausea, they sedulously strive to create the impression that the Democratic party embraces in itself the State's entire stock of brains, ability and virtue. The level of intelligence in the party which elected Lloyd Lowndes governor, is not high enough to suit the Democratic party. Therefore disfranchising amendments must be passed to forever forestall any possibility of the return to power in the State of the party of Lincoln, Grant and McKinley. With an overwhelming preponderance of Democratic judges on the bench of the Court of Appeals, who have given in the past and will give in the future judicial sanction to partisan election laws passed by Democratic legislatures, the Republican party is chided like an erring child by the Democracy of the State for its effrontery in nominating a candidate for the bench of that tribunal. And this in the face of the fact that in the whole history of the State in no instance has a Democratic governor appointed a Republican to the bench, but on repeated and numerous occasions have replaced with Democrats deceased Republican judges elected by the people.

Aided and abetted by the Baltimore Sun, the Democracy of the State outside of this circuit is engaged in a desperate attempt to build up a false, mawkish and puerile condition of sentiment in the Republican ranks. We are asked to ignore President Taft's and former Attorney General Bonaparte's condemnation of the Straus amendment as unconstitutional and lay aside our political manhood and become accessories before the fact in extending aid and comfort to the Democratic party and its nominee for the bench, who would perpetrate this crime upon a free people and sully the fair name of the State. But "in vain the snare is set in the sight of any bird." With the Straus amendment they menace the very existence of the Republican party as a potential entity and at the same time they offer us their Democratic nominee who believes in and favors that iniquitous measure, and ask us to give him our votes. Every righteous, intelligent and patriotic Republican in the fourth judicial circuit can, with clear conscience and sense of duty performed, ask of the Democratic party, "Is thy servant a dog that he should do this thing?" No man who upholds the Straus disfranchising amendment, be he candidate for bench, legislature, sheriffalty, county treasurer, commissioner, clerk, road director or surveyor, deserves or should receive encouragement from any Republican. At the present moment the major scheme of the Democracy is to encompass the destruction of the Republican party of the State. While they rear aloft the hideous and tyrannical structure of disfranchisement let them not come to the Republican party for aid and succor for their nominees. In 1905 the Poe amendment was defeated in Allegany county by a majority of 1,806 votes. In the coming election the Straus amendment should be consigned to oblivion by an even more sweeping verdict, and the entire Republican ticket elected by majorities no less overwhelming. For Republicans to follow any other course would be weak, effeminate and pusillanimous—nay more, it would be suicidal. The Democratic party and its nominees must be taught an everlasting lesson for all time—that as long as they persist in their wicked, fraudulent and criminal tampering with the elective franchise of free American citizens the Republicans of Garrett county are united as an armed camp to sweep the vote-thieves and their sympathizers from the face of the political map.

Lesson III.—Fourth Quarter, For Oct. 17, 1909.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Acts xxiv, 10-27. Memory Verses, 25, 26—Golden Text, Acts xxiv, 16—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

In the close of the last chapter we saw how the chief captain, Claudius Lysias, sent Paul safely to Caesarea with a letter to Felix, the governor, in which he stated that there was nothing against the prisoner worthy of death or of bonds, but simply some question of Jewish law; that the Jews would have killed him if he had not rescued him from them; that he understood that they were still determined to kill him, and, being a Roman citizen, he had sent him to Caesarea, commanding his accusers to appear against him there. After five days the high priest and the elders, with a certain orator to speak for them, appeared before Felix, and Paul was brought forth to meet them. With some flattery, which evidently wearied Felix, and therefore the orator cut it short, he told a number of lies about Paul, which the high priest and the elders indorsed. Flattery and lying are still the order of the day among some religious bodies. But God is a God of truth, and in due time truth will prevail.

Being permitted to speak for himself, Paul denied all their accusations and briefly stated the whole truth of the matter, showing that it was wholly a matter of doctrine and of opinion as to what the Scriptures really taught; that he believed all that was written in the law and in the prophets and looked for a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust. This meant Jesus risen from the dead as Israel's promised Messiah, the Son of David, to sit on David's throne; also a fulfillment of Ezek. xxxvii, Jer. xxiii, Isa. lx, Dan. vii and all the prophets concerning the future of the nation and the king who shall reign in righteousness. It meant the resurrection of His body, the church, at His coming to the air for His saints (I Thess. iv, 16-18; I Cor. xv, 51-54), though that would not be specially in his mind, as he thought of Israel. It meant the resurrection of the unjust and the great white throne judgment at the end of the millennial reign of Christ. It meant that God will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom He hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance unto all men in that He hath raised Him from the dead (xvii, 31). This, with justification by faith through the finished work of Christ apart from any works of the law, was counted heresy by these zealous Jews. But Jesus Himself taught this kind of heresy when He said, "O fools and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken" (Luke xxiv, 25).

Today there are with many no reliable writings of Moses, no prediction whatever, no future for Israel, nothing supernatural, no coming again of Christ, no wrath of God, but all such are simply unbelievers and stand against Christ, for He testified that all things written in the law of Moses and in the prophets and in the Psalms concerning Him must be fulfilled (Luke xxiv, 44). Felix is said to have had more perfect knowledge of "the way" (verse 22) perhaps because his wife, Drusilla, was a Jewess, so he postponed the case until Lysias, the chief captain, should come and tell what he knew. Meantime he gave Paul into the keeping of a centurion, with orders to let him have liberty and to allow all his friends to come to see him and to minister to him. This made it comparatively easy for Paul and would give him opportunity to strengthen the faith of the brethren at Caesarea, and he would certainly have much to tell of the Lord's doings since first He met him on the way to Damascus, and they would not be apt to weary of hearing of His wondrous works.

From time to time Felix sent for him and heard him concerning the faith in Christ, and on one occasion as he and his wife, Drusilla, listened to Paul reasoning of righteousness, temperance and judgment to come Felix actually trembled, but put his convictions from him, saying: "Go thy way for this time. When I have a convenient season I will call for thee." For two years this continued, Felix always hoping that Paul would offer him money to release him, and with that hope he sent for him the oftener. But Paul, having no thought of any release but a righteous one, never offered him a bribe, and so the successor of Felix came into office and found Paul still a prisoner. Felix's convenient time to repent never having come.

"Tomorrow" is not only the great word in many lands concerning temporal affairs, but it is the devil's great word for all who give any thought to their souls' welfare and for many saved ones concerning good works which they know ought to be done. The word of the Lord is, "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation" (II Cor. vi, 2); "Today, if ye will hear His voice, harden not your hearts" (Heb. iii, 15). A word in Prov. xxix, 1, also comes to mind as we think of Felix and all such. The sinner may well tremble as he thinks of his own sin and is told that the unrighteous cannot enter the kingdom of God, but there is comfort in Rom. vi, 23. Concerning temperance, or self control, the result of righteousness, see Tit. ii, 12. Of judgment we have already spoken.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city of several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $288,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements. These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

TOWN PARKS.

Best Methods of Securing and Laying Out the Land.

In towns and small cities the most important park matter is acquisition of land. Park development may come later, as nearly all places land values increase rapidly, and it is necessary to apply all available funds to the purchase of land. Even if a town has but a stretch of wild land for a few years it is vastly to be desired over an improved "public square" or small area covered with closely clipped lawns. One hundred dollars per acre will plant all the fundamentals to make in the future the very best of parks. The only proper methods are, first, get all the land you can; second, use the best available funds in securing a plan from some competent landscape designer; third, plant out the trees provided for in the plan and then the shrubs. Let all lawns and small plants be unknown until the public can well afford them.

Trees and shrubs will give them shade and shelter for recreation and picnic grounds. A place to rest in comfort, away from the glaring artificialities of city life, is, after all, the chief end to be desired. To have this it is not necessary to build statues, ornamental fountains, bright colored flower beds or any of the artificial features of the ordinary city park. All these can be seen in city gardens, and none should be seen in public parks except they are leaders in this class of work. A "touch of nature" should be the key to all park planning and planting.

BEAUTIFYING OF TOWNS.

Necessity of Insuring Future Growth Along More Symmetrical Lines.

The "city beautiful" is receiving attention in a number of American municipalities. In the large majority of them little heed has been given to beautification. While there are many beautiful towns and cities in the United States, this is due mostly to natural location and individual effort and not to any systematic scheme of improvement. Park commissioners have done much for the appearance of many cities, but they cannot do everything that is desirable.

In New York and Chicago there are well defined movements with a view to relieving future congestion of population and making additions to the cities more attractive and harmonious. It costs a large amount of money to make a "city beautiful," as in the cases of Paris and Berlin and Washington. In all these cities untold millions have been expended for beautification. While it is not possible for many municipalities to spend such enormous amounts, all towns can and should do something to insure future growth along more symmetrical lines.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

USING A VACANT LOT.

Good Example Set by a Church in an Ohio City.

The Second church of Springfield, O., has a vacant lot in the central part of the city which it is reserving to build on a little later. But the trustees determined that it was not right to let the lot lie until it could be used for building, and so they provided that it should be fitted up as a playground for children of the neighborhood through the present summer. Flower beds were laid out and some lawn sown, but the most of the lot was given up to swings, slides and other suitable temptations to childish play.

Moreover, observing that there was no public drinking place in the neighborhood, the trustees provided a coil of water pipe running through a box to be filled with ice and thus improvised a public ice water fountain. The public has shown great appreciation of both provisions on the part of the trustees. The example may certainly be commended to other churches which are holding vacant property.

Railroad Gardening.

Nearly all of the big eastern railroads have abandoned the gaudy but meaningless and unsatisfying carpet bedding so common in the past and are substituting hardy shrubs for permanent effect and in some cases are extending this work beyond the station ground along the right of way. Such changes are very gratifying to all who make a study of and take an interest in the embellishment of our steel highways, for it is a move in the right direction and better for all, both owners and travelers.

The Builder.

This is the song of the builder:
My hammer swings and rings
In harmony with the vital key
Of the song at the heart of things.
The chord of the master builder
That sounds when the worlds have birth
Is the music sweet I seek to repeat
As I rear the temples of earth.

From rock, from mine and from forest
I shape the cities of man,
The songs that live down the ways of the years
I fashion, rejoice and plan.
The music I make a garden,
The measure I mark with steel
Till a continent wide is a few hours' ride
When spanned by the spinning wheel.

So busy am I with melding,
Constructing the good of earth,
That I cannot wait for finding fault,
But have plenty of time for mirth,
If there's joy or cheer or laughter,
I am there with all my heart,
For a right success spells happiness,
And that is the nobler part.

There is room for work and for gladness
And making the good prevail,
But there is no place for the carping race
For the spite and the weakling's wail.
There is space for the life constructive
And for helping the world along,
To create is the sign of the power divine.
This—this is the builder's song.

JAMES A. EDGERTON.

SAYS AMENDMENT PLAN IS CYNICAL FRAUD

Educational Test Preposterous and Gives Power to Registers

Dr. Fabian Franklin, a former professor at the Johns Hopkins University and editor of The News for nearly 'teen years, who leaves Baltimore is week to become associate editor of the New York Evening Post, in an interview last Thursday spoke forcefully of the viciousness of the disfranchising amendment, which he thinks the people of the State should not tolerate at the November election. Dr. Franklin dwelt especially upon the evils of the "understanding clause" of the measure. He said:

"When the Poe amendment was under discussion, there was one thing that did more than anything else to bring down on it the condemnation of independent and intelligent voters. That was the 'understanding clause'; the clause wh. h, under pretense of an educational qualification, required citizens who do not come in under the 'grandfather clause' to give to the officers of registration a 'reasonable explanation' of any section of the Constitution of the State which those officers might choose to select. This provision manifestly placed it in the power of the officers of registration to disfranchise practically anybody they chose to disfranchise who had to come up and stand the test at all. The people of Maryland were not willing to place this power of arbitrary disfranchisement into the hands of a lot of partisan officers of registration; and it was this feeling more than any other one cause that led to the defeat of the Poe amendment by 30,000 majority.

"The amendment now before the people of Maryland makes a pretense of an educational qualification which avoids the appearance of giving the registration officers arbitrary powers, but which puts precisely the same kind of tool in their hand in another way. How preposterous is the requirement that it imposes upon an applicant for registration may be judged from an incident which occurred the other day in my presence. But first let me say what the requirement is. The man who wants to register, and who doesn't come in under the 'grandfather clause' or the property qualification, is required to write, in the presence of the registration officers, an application stating 'correctly' the following things:

"His name, age, date and place of birth, residence and occupation at the time and for the two years next preceding, the name or names of his employer or employers, if any, at the time and for the two years next preceding, and whether he has previously voted, and if so, the State, county or city and district or precinct in which he voted last, and also the name in full of the President of the United States, of one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, of the Governor of Maryland, of one of the Judges of the Court of Appeals of Maryland and of the Mayor of Baltimore city (if the applicant resides in Baltimore city), or of one of the County Commissioners of the county in which the applicant resides.

"He has to state these things not on a printed blank, and not in reply to any questions that have been saked him, but out of his own head; he has got to remember just what facts are called for, and state them in his own way; among the facts are the full names of several public officers, including a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States and of a Judge of the Court of Appeals of Maryland, besides (in the case of a wage-earner) the names of all his employers for two years past. And if he omits any one of them or states any of them incorrectly the registration officers have the warrant of the Constitution for refusing him the right to vote.

"Now, the incident I have referred to is this: A small group of gentlemen were discussing this extraordinary provision of the proposed amendment, and expressing a natural indignation at its atrocious character, when one of them, a prominent and accomplished member of the Baltimore bar, said that he would be as indignant as the rest but for one thing; he did not think it was possible that the provision could be intended to mean what it seemed to mean. He did not think that any set of men could deliberately propose such a thing as the requirement of answers to such a string of questions as this without the questions being asked. The thing was, to his mind, simply incredible. It was in vain to show him the language of the law, which says that the applicant must make his statement 'in his own hand writing, with pen and ink, without any aid, suggestion or memorandum whatsoever and without any question or direction addressed to him by any of the officers of registration.' Nothing short of a reference to a high legal authority who had been connected with the framing of the amendment sufficed to satisfy this lawyer that the intent of the clause was, and its effect if enacted would be, just that preposterous and incredible thing that its words indicate.

"It would be a disgrace to Maryland to imbed in its State Constitution a provision whose outrageousness is so flagrant that a right-minded man finds it difficult to believe that it means what it says. It would be a shameful showing for the standard of the superior race if, year after year, the members of the inferior race were confronted with this cynical fraud instead of an honest educational requirement as a condition for the exercise of the right of suffrage. It is hardly worth while to go into details, but it should be noted that this feat of accurate memorizing would have to be performed again and again by the man who wishes to be a voter at every new registration, one demonstration of his 'intelligence' would not not suffice except for one registration.

"Nothing short of desperate necessity can justify or palliate resort to any such device as this. That such necessity does not exist in this State it would be a waste of words to show. How far from true it is that the negro vote in this State has been an injury to the Commonwealth may be sufficiently seen from a single circumstance. The fight for political reform in Maryland, waged for 20 years and culminating in the victory of 1895, had for its great leader a man who represented not only civic virtue but the most intense Southern sentiment; and yet the very center of the fight led by Mr. Wallis was the struggle for a fair count of the vote. Neither at that time nor at any subsequent time has any serious attempt been made to show that the negro vote has been an injury to the State. Without the incitement of necessity, it is proposed here in Maryland to do that which States farther South have felt compelled to do, and more. We are being asked to put into our State Constitution a far more palpable violation of the Fifteenth Amendment than is contained in the Constitution of any Southern State and thus to put in peril the situation which has come to be looked upon as established in the South; and this, as well as the imbedding of an offensive fraud in our Constitution, is to be done without anything approaching a reasonable excuse in the shape of a plea of necessity.

"Just a word of a personal nature may not be out of place. I am about to leave Maryland after living here 40 years, having come to Baltimore at the age of 16. My feelings as between the parties may be judged from the fact that I have voted for every Democratic candidate for the Presidency from Tilden to Parker, with the exception of Bryan, and for the Democratic candidate for Congress in my district without any exception. It has always been a satisfaction to me to feel, however, that not only was there a possibility of turning from the Democratic party to the Republican in State and city affairs, but that in national affairs Maryland was debatable ground—ground on which the questions agitating the country as a whole could be weighed and decided on their merits. It is a misfortune for the States of the 'Solid South,' and it is a misfortune for the country, that those States are given over to a single political party—that their verdict as between the two is a foregone conclusion, no matter who the candidates. I should be grieved to think of Maryland as having fallen to a lower estate; of her political opinion having ceased to be a factor to be reckoned with in the larger life of the nation. As to the dangers here at home of the one-party regime, we ought to have sufficient warning of that both from our own experience before 1895 and from Pennsylvania's history under a regime in which the protection issue has chained the state to the Republican party as it is desired here that the race issue shall chain Maryland to the Democratic party. But I trust that the people of Maryland will bring the plan to naught, as they did four years ago.—Baltimore News.

Peach Orchard Land for Sale.

I offer for sale two farms in Hampshire county, W. Va., both in the peach belt and would make fine peach orchards.

The first contains 232 acres, forty acres cleared and the remainder in timber. About 50,000 feet of saw timber; 10,000 props and a lot of locust posts. Situated 1½ miles northwest of Springfield, on the Romney Branch of the B. & O. R. R. An orchard of sixty bearing apple trees and some peach trees on the place. About thirty acres of run bottom and five acres of this in meadow. Improved by dweeling house, well, etc.

I have been advised by good authority that this farm would make a splendid peach orchard. Convenient to churches, schools, stores, etc. Price $1,500, on easy terms.

The second farm contains about 150 acres, partly cleared and part in timber and has on it a dwelling house and some other improvements. About six acres of run bottom now in meadow. Situated about one mile west of Springfield, W. Va., on the Romney Branch of the B. & O. R. R. Convenient to churches, schools, stores, etc. Price $1,200, on easy terms. ROAD OILING DEVICE,

Portable Machine to Mix and Spread at Same Time.

WILL INTEREST ENGINEERS.

Process Is Cheap, and It Is Expected to Revolutionize Work on Country Roads—Cost For Treating Highways Will Vary.

Oiling of city and country roads is rapidly becoming a recognized necessity throughout the United States, and St. Louis and St. Louis county are, as usual, in the lead. City streets have been treated for some time past, and residents of St. Louis county are planning to oil the main traveled roads.

Street Commissioner Travilla fathered oiling of streets in St. Louis and has made a careful study of the proposition with a view to perfecting the work. After months of study of conditions in St. Louis and the equipment used in other cities, particularly in Europe, he has evolved a portable oil asphalt melting and fluxing plant that will revolutionize the work. The plant is the first of its kind in the world and will attract the attention of highway engineers throughout the United States. Its cost is less than $1,200, and the process to be used has been given a thorough test.

Street Commissioner Travilla in describing the new apparatus and the progress of road oiling said:

The oil-asphalt melting and fluxing portable plant is a new departure in machinery for road treatment. After two years' experience with light and heavy oils I became satisfied there was room for improvement by adding asphalt to heavy oil for road treatment, and the result of this investigation has brought about the construction of the portable plant.

There is no subject today which is being discussed more frequently than methods of improving our highways. The oiling of roads is making considerable progress in the United States with good effect, but much better results can be obtained by the application of a layer of hot oil-asphalt compound to the road surface. In this way the road absorbs the mixture and also forms a very solid coating and a strong binder for the particles of sand and the larger stone in the macadam road, which carries the load.

The dust which usually results from the wear of the road disappears, and at the same time the natural expense of keeping up the road is diminished, which more than compensates for the cost of the process. This comes from the great reduction of expense for sprinkling a road and scraping the mud as well as from the great durability of the roadbed.

The cost per square yard for treating the road by the new process will vary from 7 cents to 14 cents, depending on the amount of sand and asphalt used. The plant consists of a melting and agitation kettle, an air pressure for furnishing compressed air for agitating the oil-asphalt and for forcing it from the kettle to a sprinkling wagon; also a steam pump as an auxiliary for pumping heavy oil from the tank car to the melting kettle and a steam boiler for furnishing steam for the operation of the air pressure and steam pump.

The kettle has a capacity of 1,350 gallons and is divided tranversely into two equal parts, one compartment being intended for melting and mixing the oil-asphalt, the other for agitating the oil-asphalt.

The method of operation is: The oil-asphalt compound is put in the kettle and the mixture melted and agitated from the low pressure reservoir to the required temperature and consistency, when it is drawn into the closed compartment and then delivered to the sprinkling wagon by means of an air pressure. In the meantime another batch is being heated and mixed in the open compartment. One hour's time is required for heating and agitating 1,350 gallons.—St. Louis Republic.

Good Road Notes.

Good roads will make the vehicles last longer.

Good drainage is absolutely necessary in building a good road.

Every man who owns an automobile, a horse or a bicycle is interested in good roads.

The highway and roadside are usually a fair index of the people living in the vicinity.

No Good There.

The road drag will do nothing to improve the highway so long as it lies unused at the side of the road.

JUDGES AND THE AMENDMENT.

The Republicans of the state should stand unqualifiedly for every move that can conceivably aid in encompassing the defeat of the franchise amendment. There should be no compromise in any direction, least of all in the selection of the judicial circuit chief judges who constitute the Court of Appeals. This is no time for any Republican to consider in the most distant manner the support of a Democrat for a chief judgeship. The crucial subject, of vast public interest, of overwhelming party importance, is the fate of the proposed suffrage amendment. Therefore, no manner of excuse could be offered for any degree of support for any man who stands with the Democratic organization. Whatever justification might under other conditions be found for leaning toward a judicial candidate of unimpeachable record though of the opposing party such considerations would be overmatched by the imperative demand of the party for every man to stand upon the guard line and let no candidate for the ermine reach that position where the Republican vote is strong enough to defeat his ambitions.

For instance, in the circuit comprised by the three far western counties the Democrats have in nomination for the chief judgeship Judge Boyd, whose re-election they advocate upon his record. Opposed to him is Judge Sloan. It is a matter of common knowledge that Judge Boyd, owing allegiance to his party and sharing its views upon the paramount issue, is alien in sympathies from the purposes and efforts of the Republican party. D. Lindley Sloan, the Republican nominee, on the other hand, stands ready, in case of his election and in case he should have to pass upon the amendment as a member of the Court of Appeals, to give its constitutional relations consideration, unaffected by the tremendous predilections which would have to be gotten rid of by Judge Boyd in order to afford the measure like unbiased consideration. Without in any wise reflecting upon anyone who wears the ermine in Maryland, the fact remains that the Republican party has one clear duty, and its members should not be found derelict in in any part of the state. That duty is to prevent the enactment into law of the suffrage amendment and to prevent the election to the chief judgeship of a circuit a man who has committed himself to the support of the amendment in advance and who, therefore, has already prejudged it. The question is now a question of duty, and the Republicans of the circuit in question, like the Republicans everywhere, should have but one mind and be actuated by one purpose.

Before the commanding importance of this issue all local adjustments become secondary. In the presence of the success, which means the preservation of the influence of the Republican party as a party with the capacity to win victories and to ably govern the state, all considerations that are not of equal breadth are unworthy of promotion. Therefore, it should be borne in, with all the weight of vitality of the issue, upon every Republican that he cannot and should not do aught that might critically contribute to the saddling of the amendment upon the people and the inauguration of the perpetual power of the Democratic party. It is obvious that under conditions as they exist there is but one course for any Republican in relation to the fortunes of one or the other candidate for the chief judgeship. A straight vote for the Republican ticket is the duty of every Republican. A square vote for the Republican judicial candidate is the imperative need of the hour. No Republican would want to cherish the reflection, in the event of the success of the amendment, that he contributed to the placing upon the bench of the Court of Appeals a man who might be expected to be controlled in his judicial action by the views he entertained upon the legality of the amendment prior to the election. The amendment has been pronounced by President Taft and the ablest lawyers of the state and country unconstitutional. Men who entertain such views are the only kind for the Republican party to regard as worthy of their support. If any Republicans have been contemplating other action, let them dismiss the suggestion and immediately place themselves squarely upon the broad issue of safeguarding the people and protecting the party.—Baltimore American.

THAT letter of Mr. Edward Margroff, published elsewhere in today's Republican, is well calculated to make the boss of the new party sigh and wonder where he is at.

COUNTRY ADVANTAGES

We boast of our coal, oil and gas. These products have enriched many of our citizens and have proven themselves powerful agencies in the worlds economy and progress, but they become exhausted and those engaged in their production must of necessity seek other fields of activity. They go to the lumber industry only to find that the timber supply, however abundant it may be, also exhausts, and the average life time is far too short for its reproduction. The soil, so far as our observation goes, is the only source of wealth that proper husbanding will save from exhaustion. Its productive properties can be saved and added to at the same time they are in active operation. Consequently those who go to it for a means of livelihood and see to its preservation, need have no fears of their occupation being destroyed in their community and having to go elsewhere to pursue it.

We mention this as an illustration that farming and kindred pursuits offer more attractive features than any other industries that have hitherto appeared to the farm youth and led him to the belief that his lot was the worst of them all. Time has demonstrated the fact that it is one of the very best callings a young man can choose and, with its diversified interests, need not become monotonous or "hum drum."

The rural district dweller of today may grow grain as his forefather did if that suits his fancy. If not he may grow live stock. If neither has the charm for him there are an infinite variety of fruits, any one of which can be grown successfully as a specialty. The same is true in the vegetable line, the poultry line, dairying, bee culture, land scaping and a number of other things. The farm certainly offers to the young man of today opportunities hard to duplicate elsewhere.

Mr. Margroff Not In Sympathy With The Movement.

The following is a copy of a letter sent the Garrett Journal for publication by Mr. Edward Margroff, of Accident, one of the dependable Republicans of the county. Mr. Margroff's language has no uncertain ring. His Republicanism was never questioned and it was a piece of presumption on the part of the boss of the People's Party to place Mr. Margroff on its executive committee. Mr. Margroff's letter follows:

ACCIDENT, Md., Oct. 4, 1909.

EDITOR OF GARRETT JOURNAL,
Oakland, Md.,

DEAR SIR:—I see by your issue of Sept. 30th that I have been appointed a member of the Executive Committee of the People's Party. Please allow me space in your paper to say that this appointment was made without my knowledge or consent, and that the first that I knew of it was the item in your paper.

I desire to say to the people of Garrett county that I AM A REPUBLICAN, and that I shall vote for the candidates of the Republican party at the coming election, and that I am not in sympathy with the independent movement in Garrett county.

Whenever I am not satisfied with the conduct of the Republican party I will make my objections inside the party—not out.

I look on the People's Party as an instrument to further the private and political spite of a certain prominent Democrat and certain corporations represented by him, and to use the People's Party to advance the cause of a certain candidate on the Democratic ticket, and I do not propose to allow my name to be used for any such purpose.

This is notice to the People's Party that I shall not accept the appointment as one of its Executive Committee, and I hereby appeal to all my old comrades who have been loyal to the party and have been instrumental in winning victory after victory, with increased majorities each year, to rally to the support of the entire ticket from top to bottom.

I am entirely satisfied with it and it is one that every Republican can conscientiously support.

The candidate for Senator is a young man of my own district. I have known him from a boy and if there is a man in Garrett county capable of representing us intelligently in the Maryland Senate it is Harvey J. Speicher, and we all should feel proud that we have a man of such high esteem to carry the Republican banner to VICTORY.

Yours truly,
EDWARD MARGROFF.

THE DEACON AND THE PEOPLE'S TICKET.

Present Day Revelations of Political Machinations.

It came to pass in the days when the bumble-bee was humming among the pumpkin vines that blossomed on the sun kissed hills of Garrett county, a great noise arose in the midst of the land which lieth on either side of the river that is called the river of Democracy, whose waters abound in great fishes that devoureth the little fishes thereof and make the waters thereof angry with the lashing of their mighty fins.

Now it chanced as the noise of the mighty conflict smote heavily upon the ears of all the people, Prince Billy, he that is called The Knight of The Silver Locks, cast his helmet and sword angrily at the feet of the lords of the land and departed hence to fish in other waters, and there arose a mighty war between the Hamillites and the Browningites so that the smoke of the battle covered all the land for many days and there was no peace among all the inhabitants thereof.

Now it so happened that the Hamillites dwelt on the shady side of the mountain that is called the Mount of Party Spoils, and the Browningites had builded a mighty city on the summit thereof, and they that dwelt therein feasted and were merry.

On the seventh day of the seventh month all the host of the Hamillites arose in a great army and beat against the walls of the city that was builded on the mount, but the walls thereof fell not, and valiant men from all the districts round about the valley of Democracy came and laid siege to the mighty city and the voice of the people was lifted up and the army smote against the walls of the city, but the walls fell not.

Then it came to pass that the Deacon, who was first in the councils of the Hamillites, was very angry, and he sat him down in his habitation and smote upon his aged breast and cried in a loud voice, saying: long and faithfully have I served thee, thou wicked and perverse Democracy; oft have I paid tribute to thee, but alas, thy service is no longer profitable and it is not meet that I render tribute to an ungrateful lord.

Behold as the Deacon's voice grew faint in the midst of his great habitation, a little imp crept out from the midst of the books of the law and sat him down on the top of an ink well; now this imp was like in size unto a grasshopper, and upon his forehead was a monogram written in bright gold with these letters, B. & O.

And as he pointed to these shining letters, he spake unto the Deacon in a still small voice, saying: seest thou not, O man, that my master has sent me and he hath commanded me to say unto thee that he hath much gold to pay them that serve him.

This message also I bring unto thee, call unto thyself an ex-captain, who hath had much to do with tickets, and take to thy bosom an old servant of my master, who knoweth well how to engineer, take ye council of him who is a good judge and with thy wits create a new third party ticket for Garrett county, remembering that there dwelleth in the land of the Republicans certain men whom thou canst use well to thy purpose.

And it came to pass when the messenger had departed the Deacon fell into a trance and after many hours he awoke and behold on his table there lay a mighty manifesto with his own signature, seal and signet attached and the names also of many lesser lords, and he commanded that heralds be sent to the uttermost parts of the land to call the people together that he of them might make great profit.

After many days there came from all parts of the land those men who had their heads annointed with healing oil, because of the soreness thereof, and those with their feelings wound about with bandages because of the hurts thereof.

And there came also men of ill repute in the regions where they dwelt, and they all with one accord obeyed the Deacon's command when he said: thou shalt every man endorse the good judge.

And when they that were antiquated in the land of the Republicans, and they that were demoralized in the land of Democracy, and they that were hopeless in the land of No Whiskey, had been given soft seats on the Hamillitish ticket, the Deacon ordered the B. & O. engineer to pull open the throttle, and with the captain to punch tickets and the Deacon for train dispatcher, the ingenuous invention is sent steaming toward an inevitable and deserving defeat.

So endeth chapter one.

Taken to Mount Hope.

Charles Browning, aged about thirty years, son of the late William Browning, was taken to Mount Hope Hospital, near Baltimore, Sunday night by Sheriff Brown, to which institution he had been committed by the county authorities for treatment. Mr. Browning went suddenly insane early last week and was at times extremely violent. A number of years ago he suffered an attack of scarlet fever since which he has at times been subject to attacks which effected his brain, eventually resulting in insanity.

Don't Want Any More.

To the Editor of The Republican:

I have just received a sample copy of the Garrett Journal and the first thing which caught my sight was a picture of Judge Boyd, and about all the reading matter it contains is relative to the Judge.

I hope the editor of the Journal will will not trouble himself by sending me any more sample copies as I am a Sloan Republican every day in the week.

Why Republicans Should Vote For Sloan.

To the Republican Voters:

We need not soil the name or detract from the record of Judge A. Hunter Boyd, by falling in with the too prevalent campaign practice of attempting to poison the minds of the people against the opposing candidate in order to create a more favorable sentiment toward our own.

If we, as voters of Garrett county, would maintain our dignity as citizens and preserve a clean conscience as men, we will out of an honest mind render unto Judge Boyd a full measure of respect for his high and noble character, a choice tribute of esteem for his skill and integrity and a word of admiration for his dignified personality, but notwithstanding the fact that our Democratic brethren would have us believe that Judge Boyd has a monopoly of all available claims to greatness, we recognize in the person of D. Lindley Sloan his full equal in height and nobility of character, skill and integrity of purpose, strength and dignity of personality and in all the other requisites which go to the making of an able and honorable judge. Judge Boyd deserves, and has the admiration of all his fellow men, but as a candidate on the Democratic ticket, as a firm believer in Democratic policies and as a pledged supporter of a restricted suffrage, as specified in the Constitutional amendment, he has no real claim to the support of any but those who stand for the principles that he advocates and can hardly be said to have a real claim on that portion of the Democratic vote in his district which is opposed to the passage of the amendment.

D. Lindley Sloan merits the admiration of all men, but as a candidate on the Republican ticket, as a fearless advocate of Republican policies and an avowed opponent of a restricted suffrage, he has no real claim to the support of any but those who believe in the principles for which he stands, and being pledged to nothing but the policies which are dear to the heart of every Republican, he has a claim to the vote of every Republican in the three counties of the Fourth Judicial Circuit.

Every Republican should know that in order to bring about Republican success they must be loyal to principle and loyalty to principle means loyalty to party and party candidates, therefore may every Republican, without one exception, be manfully loyal and cast their vote for D. Lindley Sloan, knowing that in him they have a candidate equal in every respect to the opposing candidate and even Judge Boyd bearing an honorable defeat will respect the loyalty of the Republicans who admired, but could not vote for him.

Remember, Republican voter, that the much circulated nonpartisan argument is only a nice sounding plea with absolutely no force to it. Any man who becomes a candidate on the platform of a political party is to that extent a partisan, but any man who is worthy to become a judge will be nonpartisan in the discharge of his official duty and it is absolutely certain that Mr. Sloan would be as thoroughly nonpartisan on the bench as Judge Boyd. Remember, too, that D. Lindley Sloan, as a Republican candidate and pledged to oppose the Constitutional amendment, has thereby openly declared that he believes the honest poor man to be as deserving as the man of property and wealth, while Judge Boyd, as a Democratic candidate and pledged to support the Constitutional amendment, has thereby openly declared that he considers the man with $500 worth of property to be a better and more deserving citizen than the honest poor man. No. 12.

MR. J. GRIFFIN HALL.

Mr. J. Griffin Hall, of Baltimore, who during the present week is co-operating with the Republican County Committee in a canvass of the county, is quite popular in the Monumental City and elsewhere as a public speaker, entertainer and humorist. His services are in constant demand as a lecturer and speaker at meetings, entertainments, banquets, etc., held by churches, fraternal societies, men's clubs and charitable organizations. He has delivered orations at Memorial Day services held on the battlefields of Gettysburg, Antietam and elsewhere. Mr. Hall has addressed meetings held this week at Sunnyside, Shook Shop and Swanton, and tonight he will speak at Crellin, Friday at Deer Park, Saturday at Bray School, and it is possible that the committee may be able to secure him for a number of meetings to be held in various parts of the county next week.

Mr. A. L. Sines, accompanied by his father, left Oakland last Friday for Dayton, Ohio, where they will be the guests of relatives for a short time.

Messrs. Dennis Brenneman and J. Turner Lohr, of Bittinger, were in the city yesterday making returns to the Board of Supervisors. Both gentlemen made this office visits.

Miss Orpha Ashby returned to her home from Western Maryland College a few days ago and will remain here until the beginning of the next scholastic year when she will enter the sophomore class of that institution.

Miss Irene Haulenbeek returned to Deer Park Wednesday morning from a trip to New York. She was accompanied by her father, both leaving Sunday night. Deer Park's delightful weather was experienced on the trip.

Mr. John O. Getty, cashier of the Grantsville bank, and Dr. George C. Keller, also of Grantsville, were in Oakland a day or two this week on business before Court Examiner Wm. R. Offutt, returning to their homes Tuesday night.

Rev. W. D. Reed, the recently appointed District Superintendent for Oakland District M. E. church, spent yesterday in Oakland where he met quite a number of the leading members of the local church and also members of other congregations. Mr. Reed created quite a favorable impression and we are glad to announce that he will become a resident of Oakland, having leased Dr. Ward's residence for a term of years. He to arrive here some time next week with his family.

BARN AND CONTENTS BURNED.

Large Structure on the Promised Land Farm Destroyed.

Last Wednesday evening about eight o'clock the large barn on the Promised Land Farm, owned by Mr. D. N. Sanders, was destroyed by fire of an unknown origin, along with grain, hay, farming implements, harness, wagons, and other property, entailing a loss of about four thousand dollars with insurance of about one-half of that amount.

Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Sliger will tender a reception on next Thursday, the 21st inst., in honor of the Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of Maryland, who will be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Sliger during his stay in Oakland next week.

Mrs. Charles Glotfelty, of near Oakland, went from here to Accident yesterday morning where she will visit her mother, Mrs. Catharine Turney, for a few days and also be present today at the festivities attending the eighty-third anniversary of Mrs. Turney.

Rev. J. B. Workman, who is succeeded in the pastorate of the M. E. church in Oakland by Rev. Williamson, will go to Wheeling tomorrow afternoon and preach Sunday at his new appointment, Wesley Chapel, expecting to return to Oakland Monday or Tuesday.

A "swap" social, under the auspices of the Luther League of St. Mark's church, will be conducted on Wednesday evening next at 7:30 o'clock. All members of the church as well as of other denominations are cordially invited. Please bring a little trinket or toy you are willing to "swap" with your neighbor. A silver offering will be taken at the door.

SHEEP FOR SALE—45 head of stock ewes; all young. W. McCULLOH BROWN, near Bayard, W. Va. 32-3t

Mr. E. H. Sincell and State Senator W. McCulloh Brown are in Baltimore this week engaged with Attorney General Straus making up the record to be submitted to the United States Supreme Court in the case of Maryland vs. West Virginia to settle the boundary line which has been in dispute for unnumbered years. The case will be called on Monday, the 25th inst., and will be argued by Messrs. Straus and Sincell for Maryland and by ex-State Senator Price for West Virginia.

Mr. Oliver Heyward and daughter, Miss Beatrice, both of Bond, walked from that point to Oakland yesterday, arriving here about 4:30 in the afternoon, accomplishing a feat of pedestrianism seldom equalled in this part of the country. Mr. and Miss Heyward left Bond about eight o'clock, walked to Swanton along the railroad track and from there came to Oakland by the county road. The entire distance covered was in the neighborhood of twenty-three miles and upon their arrival at their destination they were apparently less tired than many who take a stroll of a mile or two.

Oysters, solid measure, 40 cents per quart, at Creutzburg's.

The knowledge that enables a man to build a barn, build a bridge, grow a crop of potatoes, operate a flour mill or extract mineral from the earth is no less education than that which qualifies him to be a supreme judge, a college president or an astronomer. The better trained a man is to do his work thoroughly, whatever it may be, the better educated he is. That nameless something which causes many to think one uneducated who is not familiar with the technical verbage of school books is one of the worst enemies to right thinking and human progress that we have had to contend with in a long time. It is closely related to that other thing which causes so many to think that because they have had a few months schooling manual labor would lower their dignity. The truth is neither of these qualities is to be found in the truly well educated individual.

Married.

WATSON—KILDOW—At the home of the bride's parents, J. Ed. and Mrs. Kildow, Sunday morning, September, 26, 1909, by the Rev. M. D. Helmick, Roy Watson and Miss Eunice Kildow.

The bride and groom left on the 6:30 train for the home of Mr. Watson's mother, near Morgantown where they will visit for a couple of weeks, after which they will make Elkins their home.—Elkins Inter-Mountain.

SIMON—WEST—On Oct. 13th, at the home of Lieut. E. S. West, near Oakland, by Rev. John M. Davis, Mr. Winfield Scott Simon, of Philippi, and Miss A'ta West, of Troy, W. Va. The bride is a sister of Lieut. West, who with his family and three sisters, Mrs. Aaron Strader, of Buckhannon, and Misses Eva and Ella West, of Troy, and Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Wiseman, recently located in Garrett county, were present along with a number of friends. The rooms were beautifully decorated with flowers and ferns and autumn branches. Miss Eva West was bridesmaid. The bride was also attended by six little girls. The couple left on train No. 55 for Philippi, where they will reside and were followed by the well wishes and congratulations of many friends.

THE DEATH RECORD.

ERASTUS RATHBUN.

Another life has closed. On Saturday, Oct. 9 1909, Mr. Erastus Rathbun, of Loch Lynn Heights, passed quietly away to the great beyond. He was old and full of days, having been born Feb. 27, 1828, in Jamestown, N. Y., reaching the age of 81 years, 7 months and 12 days. He married Alice Ward, the daughter of Benjamin West Ward. She died in 1875. He had five children, of whom only one is living—Mrs. Mary J. Hanson, of Loch Lynn Heights. He leaves eight grandchildren and eight great grandchildren to mourn his loss. He came to Mt. Lake Park in 1886. In his early life he was antagonistic to the Christian religion, but in 1894 he was converted and became a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and for the rest of his life he served the God who had saved him. The story of his conversion is simply told: Mrs. Anna Moxey, of Washington, and another lady met him under one of the trees of Mt. Lake Park as they were on their way to the campmeeting. Believing that this was an opportunity which God had given them to lead a soul to Christ, they began to tell him the "Old, Old Story," and to sing some of the sweet song of Zion which have been the means of turning many a sinner to God. He arose from his seat and went with them to the meeting and there made a public profession of his faith in God. This was not an empty profession, but one which stood the test of time. He delighted to tell what Christ had done for him, and his friendship for the woman who led him to Christ continued to the day of his death. A large concourse of friends gathered at his home where the funeral services were conducted by C. W. Hudson, the pastor of the Baptist church, assisted by Rev. P. Z. Musgrave, the new pastor of the Methodist church. His body was laid away in the Oakland cemetery where it rests to await the resurrection of those justified through faith in Christ. May the knowledge of his faithfulness to God abide as a sweet memory with those who knew and loved him.

C. W. HUDSON.

JOHN HARNED.

Mr. John Harned, one of the best known residents of Garrett county, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs Alicia Brown, at Montezuma, Iowa, Monday night and was buried yesterday afternoon at West Liberty, Iowa. Mr. Harned went to Iowa early in the spring to visit relatives and friends, expecting to return to Oakland this fall. On Friday of last week he suffered a stroke of paralysis, followed on Sunday by a second stroke, which terminated fatally. He was born at Harnedsville, Pa., February 14th, 1828, being at the time of his death well into his eighty-fourth year. He leaves beside his wife two daughters residing in the west, and one son, Mr. Joseph E. Harned, of Oakland, who upon the receipt of the intelligence of the death of his father left immediately for West Liberty, arriving there in time for the funeral yesterday afternoon.

MRS. ANNA SCHEVEL.

The remains of Mrs. Anna Schevel, who resided for a number of years at Accident and whose death occurred near Salisbury, Md., her recent home, on last Friday, arrived here Saturday and were taken to Accident where the interment occurred the following day.

MRS. MINERVA B. MAYLE.

Mrs. Minerva B., wife of Ellsworth Mayle, was born in March, 1874, and died Oct. 9, 1909. She was buried in the Bray cemetery on Oct. 10. She leaves a husband and seven children, four girls and three boys. The cause of her death was spinal disease.

CHAPTER II.

OBJECT, MATRIMONY.

WINTER fogs in New York are never quite so intolerable as their counterparts in London, and while their frequency is a matter of complaint, their duration is seldom of any length. So by the morrow a strong wind from the west had winnowed the skies and cleared the sun. There were an exhilarating tingle of frost in the air and a visible rime on the windows. Hillard, having breakfasted lightly, was standing with his back to the grate in the cozy breakfast room. He was in boots and breeches and otherwise warmly clad and freshly shaven. He rocked on his heels and toes and ran his palm over his blue white chin in search of a possible slip of the razor.

Giovanni came in to announce that he had telephoned and that the signora's brown mare would be at the park entrance precisely at half after 8. Giovanni still marveled over this wonderful voice which came out of nowhere, but he was no longer afraid of it. The curiosity which is innate and childlike in all Latins soon overcame his dark superstitions. He was an ardent Catholic and believed that a few miracles should be left in the hands of God. The telephone had now become a kind of plaything, and Hillard often found him in front of it patiently waiting for the bell to ring.

The facility with which Giovanni had mastered English amazed his teacher and master. But now he needed no more lessons. The two when alone together spoke Giovanni's tongue, Hillard because he loved it and Giovanni because the cook spoke it badly and the English butler not at all.

"You have made up your mind to go, then, amico?" said Hillard.

"Yes, signor."

"Well, I shall miss you. To whom shall I talk the tongue I love so well when Giovanni is gone?" with a lightness which he did not feel. Hillard had grown very fond of the old Roman in these seven years.

"Whenever the signor goes to Italia he shall find me. It needs but a word to bring me to him. The signor will pardon me, but he is like—like a son."

"Thanks, Giovanni. By the way, did you hear a woman singing in the street last night?"

"Yes. At first"— Giovanni hesitated.

"Ah, but that could not be, Giovanni; that could not be."

"No, it could not be. But she sang well," the old servant ventured.

"So thought I. I even ran out into the street to find out who she was, but she vanished like the lady in the conjurer's trick. But it seemed to me that, while she sang in Italian, she herself was not wholly of that race."

"Buonissima!" Giovanni struck a noiseless bravo with his hands. "Have I not always said that the signor's ears are as sharp as my own? No; the voice was very beautiful, but it was not truly Roman. It was more like they talk in Venice. And yet the sound of the voice decided me. The hills have always been calling to me, and I must answer."

"And the unforgetting carabinieri?"

"Oh, I must take my chance," with the air of a fatalist.

"What shall you do?"

"I have my two hands, signor. Besides, the signor has said it—I am rich." Giovanni permitted a smile to stir his thin lips. "Yes, I must go back. Your people have been good to me and have legally made me one of them, but my heart is never here. It is always so cold, and every one moves so quickly. You cannot lie down in the sun. Your police, bah! They beat you on the feet. You remember when I fell asleep on the steps of the cathedral? They thought I was drunk and would have arrested me!"

"Everybody must keep moving here. It is the penalty of being rich."

"And I am lonesome for my kind. I have nothing in common with these herds of Sicilians and Neapolitans who pour into the streets from the wharfs." Giovanni spoke scornfully.

"Yet in wartime the Neapolitans sheltered your pope."

"Vanity! They wished to make an impression on the rest of the world. It is dull here besides. There is no joy in the shops. I am lost in these great palaces. The festa is ineking. Nobody bargains; nobody sees the proprietor. You find your way to the streets alone. The butcher says that his meat is so and so, and you pay. The grocer marks his tins such and such, and you do not question, and the baker says that, and you pay, pay, pay! What? I need a collar; it [illegible] quindici—fifteen you say! I offer quindici—fifteen you say! I offer quindici. I would give interest to the sale. But, no! The collar goes back into the box. I pay quindici or I go without. It is the same everywhere—very dull, dead, lifeless."

Hillard was moved to laughter. He very well understood the old man's lament. In Italy if there is one thing more than another that pleases the native it is to make believe to himself that he has got the better of a bargain. A shrewd purchase enlivens the whole day. It is talked about, laughed over and becomes the history of the day.

Hillard presently left the house and hailed a fifth avenue omnibus. He looked with negative interest at the advertisements, at the people in the streets, at his fellow travelers. One of these was hidden behind his morning paper. Personals! Hillard squirmed a little. The world never holds very much romance in the sober morning. What a stupid piece of folly! The idea of his sending that personal inquiry to the paper! Tomorrow he would see it sandwiched in between samples of shopgirl romance, questionable intrigues and divers search warrants. Ye gods! "Will the blond who smiled at gentleman in blue serge, elevated train, Tuesday, meet same in park? Object, matrimony." Hillard fidgeted. "Young man known as Adonis would adore stout elderly lady independently situated. Object, matrimony." Pish! "Girlie. Can't keep appointment tonight. Willie." Tush! "A French widow of eighteen, unincumbered," and so forth and so on. Rot, bally rot, and here he was on the way to join them! "Will the lady who sang from 'Mme. Angot' communicate with gentleman who leaned out of the window? J. H., Burgomaster Club." Positively asinine!

There was scarce one chance in a thousand of the mysterious singer's seeing the inquiry, not one in ten thousand of her answering it. And the folly of giving his club address! That would look very dignified in yonder agony column. He would cancel the thing.

He dropped from the omnibus at the park entrance, where he found his restive mare. He gave her a lump of sugar and climbed into the saddle. He directed the groom to return for the horse at 10 o'clock, then headed for the bridle path. It was heavy, but the air was so keen and bracing that neither the man nor the horse worried about the going. Only one party attracted him, a riding master and a trio of brokers who were verging on embonpoint and were desperate and looked it. Hillard went on. The park was not lovely; the trees were barren, the grass yellow and sodden.

"She is so innocent, so youthful!"

He found himself humming the refrain over and over. She had sung it with abandon, tenderness, lightness. For one glimpse of her face! He took the rise and dip that followed. Yards ahead a solitary woman cantered easily along. Hillard had not seen her before. He spurred forward, faintly curious. There was nothing familiar to his eye in her charming figure. She rode well. As he drew nearer he saw that she wore a heavy gray veil. And this veil hid everything but the single flash of a pair of eyes the color of which defied him. Then he looked at her mount. Ha! There was only one rangy black with a white throat—from the Sandford stables, he was positive. But the Sandfords were at this moment in Cairo, so it signified nothing. There is always some one ready to exercise your horses. He looked again at the rider. The flash of the eyes was not repeated, so his interest vanished, and he urged the mare into a sharp run.

So he went back to his tentative romance. She had passed his window and disappeared into the fog, and there was a reasonable doubt of her ever returning from it. The singer in the fog—thus he would write it down in his book of memories and sensibly turn the page. At length he came back to the entrance and surrendered the mare. [illegible] square when he was [illegible]

Hillard whipped up [illegible] He [illegible]

"Why, Dan, glad to see you! [illegible] you in the park!"

"Riverside—[illegible] join me in a cup of good coffee."

The two entered the cafe.

"How are you behaving yourself these days?" asked Merrihew.

"My habits are always exemplary," answered Hillard. "But yours?"

Merrihew gulped his coffee.

"Kitty Killigrew leaves in two weeks for Europe."

"And who the deuce is Kitty Killigrew?" demanded Hillard.

"What!" reproachfully. "You haven't heard of Kitty Killigrew in 'The Modern Maid?' Where have you been? Pippin! Prettiest soubrette that's hit the town in a dog's age."

"I say, Dan, don't you ever tire of that sort? I can't recall when there wasn't a Kitty Killigrew. What's the attraction?" Hillard waved aside the lit black cigar. "What's the attraction?"

"The truth is, Jack, I'm a jackass half the time. I can't get away from the glamour of the footlights. I'm no Johnny. You know that. No hanging around stage entrances and buying wine and diamonds. I might be reckless enough to buy a bunch of roses when I'm not broke. But I like 'em—the bright ones. They keep a fellow amused. Most of 'em speak good English and come from better families than you would suppose. Just good fellowship, you know. Maybe a rabbit and a bottle of beer after the performance or a little quarter limit at the apartment, singing and good stories. What you've in mind is the chorus lady. Not for mine!"

Hillard laughed, recalling his conversation with the policeman.

"Go on," he said. "Get it all out of your system now that you're started."

"And then it tickles a fellow's vanity to be seen with them at the restaurants. That's the way it begins, you know. I'll be perfectly frank with you. If it wasn't for what the other fellows say most of the chorus ladies would go hungry. And the girls like you and I know think I'm a devil of a fellow—wicked, but interesting, and all that."

Hillard's laughter broke forth again and he leaned back. Merrihew would always be twenty-six; he would always be youthful.

"And this Kitty Killigrew? I believe I've seen posters of her in the windows now that you speak of it."

"Well, Jack, I've got it bad this trip. I offered to marry her last night and was refused."

"It seems to me that your Kitty is not half bad. What would you have done had she accepted you?"

"Married her within twenty-four hours."

"Come, Dan; be sensible. You are not such an ass as all that."

"Yes, I am," moodily. "I told you that I was a jackass half the time. This is the half."

"But she won't have you?"

"Not for love or money."

"Are you sure about the money?" asked Hillard shrewdly.

"Seven hundred or seven thousand. It wouldn't matter to Kitty if she made up her mind to marry a fellow. What's the matter with me anyhow? I'm not so badly set up. I can whip any man in the club at my weight. I can tell a story well, and I'm not afraid of anything."

"Not even of the future?" added Hillard.

"Do you really think it's my money?" pathetically.

"Well, seven thousand doesn't go far and that's all you have. If it were seventy, now, I'm sure Kitty wouldn't reconsider. What's she like?" asked Hillard, with more sympathy than curiosity.

Merrihew drew out his watch and opened the case. It was a pretty face. More than that, it was a refined prettiness. The eyes were merry; the brow was intelligent; the nose and chin were good. Altogether it was the face of a merry, kindly little soul, one such as would be most likely to trap the wandering fancy of a young man like Merrihew.

"And she won't have you?" Hillard repeated, this time with more curiosity than sympathy.

"Oh, she's no fool, I suppose. And now she's going to Europe! Some manager has the idea in his head that there is money to be made in Italy and Germany during the spring and summer. American comic opera in those countries—can you imagine it? He has an angel, and I suppose money is no object."

"This angel, then, has cut out a fine time for his bank account, and he'll never get back to heaven once he gets tangled up in foreign red tape. Every large city in Italy and Germany has practically its own opera troupe. Poor

"I long to get my hands around her throat!"

angel! Tell your Kitty to strike for a return ticket to America before she leaves."

"You think it's as bad as that?"

"Look on me as a prophet of evil, if you like, but truthful."

"I'll see that Kitty gets her ticket." Merrihew snapped the case of his watch and drew his legs from under the table. "I lost a hundred last night too."

"After that I suppose nothing worse can happen," said Hillard cheerily. "You will play, for all my advice."

"It's better to give than receive—that," replied Merrihew philosophically. "I've a good mind to follow the company. I've always had a hankering to beat it up at Monte Carlo. A last throw, eh? Win or lose and quit. I might win."

"And then again you mightn't. But the next time I go to Italy I want you to go with me. You're good company, and for the pleasure of listening to your jokes I'll gladly lose the bills and you may gamble your letter of credit to your heart's content. I must be off. Who is riding the Sandfords' black?"

The flash of a pair of eyes.

"Haven't noticed. What do you think of Kitty?"

"Charming."

"And the photo isn't a marker."

"Possibly not."

"Lord, if I could only hibernate for three months like a bear! My capital might then reimburse itself if left alone that length of time."

"See you at the club tonight," laughed Hillard.

They nodded pleasantly and took their separate ways. Merrihew stood very high in Hillard's regard. He was a lovable fellow, and there was something kindred in his soul and Hillard's, possibly the spirit of romance. What drew them together perhaps more than anything else was their mutual love of outdoor pleasures. Take two men and put them on good horses, send them forth into the wilds to face all inconveniences, and if they are not fast friends at the end of the journey they never will be.

For all his aversion to cards there was a bit of the gamester in Hillard, as once in his office he decided on the fall of a coin not to withdraw his personal from the paper. He was quite positive that he would never hear that voice again; but, having thrown his dice, he would let them lie.

Now, at 11 o'clock that same morning two distinguished Italians sat down to breakfast in one of the fashionable hotels. The one nor the other had ever heard of Hillard. They did not even know that such a person existed, and yet serenely unconscious one was casting his life line, as the palmist would say, across Hillard's. The knots and tangles were to come later.

"The coffee in this country is abominable!" growled one.

The waiter smiled covertly behind his hand. These Italians and these Germans! Why, there is only one place in the world where both the aroma and the flavor of coffee are preserved, and it is not, decidedly not, in Italy or Germany. And if his tip exceeded 10 cents he would be vastly surprised. The Italian never wastes on necessities a penny which can be applied to the gaming tables. And these two were talking about Monte Carlo and Ostend.

The younger of the two was a very handsome man, tall, slender and nervous, the Venetian type, his black eyes keen and roving, suggesting a hasty temper. The mouth, partly hidden under a graceful military mustache, was thin lipped, the mouth of a man who was always master of his vices. From his right cheek bone to the corner of his mouth ran a scar, very well healed. And the American imagination might readily have pictured villas, maids in durance vile and sword thrusts under the moonlight. But the waiter, who had served his time in a foreign army, knew no foil or rapier could have made such a scar; more probably the saber.

His companion was equally picturesque. With white head and iron gray beard, he wore in his buttonhole a tiny bow of ribbon, the badge of foreign service.

"I'm afraid, Enrico, that you have brought me to America on a useless adventure," said the diplomat.

"She is here in New York, and I shall find her. I must have money—must! I owe you the incredible amount of 100,000 lire. There are millions under my hand, and I cannot touch a penny."

"Do not let your debt to me worry you."

"You are so very good, Giuseppe!"

"Have we not grown up together? Sometimes I think I am partly to blame for your extravagance. But a friend is a friend or he is not."

"But he who borrows from his friend loses him. Observe how I am placed. It is maddening. I have had a dozen opportunities to marry riches. This millstone is eternally round my neck. I have gone through my part of the fortune which was left us independently. She has all of hers, and that is why she is so strong. I am absolutely helpless."

"Poor friend! These American women! They all believe that a man must have no peccadilloes once he has signed the marriage contract. Body of Bacchus! The sacrament does not make a man less human than he was before. But this one is clever. She might be Italian born."

"Her mother was Italian. It is the schooling in this country that has made her so clever. The only thing Italian about her is her hatred. She is my countrywomen there. Without her consent I can touch nothing, and if I divorce her—poof! all goes to the state. Sometimes I long to get my two hands round her white throat. One mistake, one little mistake! I am willing to swear that she loved me in the beginning. And I was a fool not to profit by this sentiment. Give me patience, patience. If I say to her, 'So much and you may have your freedom,' there is always that cursed will. The crown of Italy will never withdraw its hand. No. With his wife's family on his hands, especially her brother, the king will never waive his rights."

"And, remember, we have but ten days."

"We shall not find time heavy. I know a few rich butchers and grocers who call themselves the aristocracy. And some of them play bridge and scarte."

The diplomat smiled in anticipation.

"I have followed her step by step to the boat at Naples. She is here. She will not be hard to find. She has wealthy friends."

"You say she is beautiful?"

"Yes, and a beautiful woman cannot hide. Think of it! Chateaux and villas and splendid rents, all waiting to be germinated by the state! Let us get out into the air before I become excited and forget where I am."

The waiter stepped forward with the coats and hats.

TO BE CONTINUED.

VOTE STRAIGHT.

No Republican, who desires the success of his party in the present campaign, can find any reasonable justification for splitting his ticket this fall, and no Democrat, who has not a strong sense of humor, can solicit his Republican neighbor's vote.

Doubtless, the gentleman named by the Democrats as candidates for county officers are honorable gentleman and good citizens, but at least as much can be said for the Republican candidates.

But this is not the main issue. Our Democratic friends tells us that the vital issue of the campaign is the Straus Suffrage Amendment. Be it so. The Republican party accepts the challenge. This is then the vital issue. The Straus Suffrage Amendment and the Democratic candidates are like the Siamese twins, they cannot be separated. What is the Straus Suffrage Amendment? A nefarious scheme to disfranchise enough Republican voters to make it folly for that party to make nominations in the future, to insure the unlimited dominion of a selfish Democratic Ring. No Republican needs any argument why he should vote against the amendment. Every reason which he should oppose it is a reason why he should vote against every Democratic candidate from comptroller to the least important office to be filled.

As Congressmn John Kronmiller said in a speech in Baltimore last week "the candidates on the Republican ticket have nothing to be ashamed of. But you may have your doubt about the Democratic candidates. THEY ARE ON THE SAME TICKET WITH THE AMENDMENT, and you know the old saying 'Show me the company you keep and I will tell you who you are.'"

CHESTNUTS ARE RIPE.

The old story of Johnny and his goat has a chestnutty flavor, but at this season of the year it will bear retelling and it was never more apropos than as applied to the Democrats in the present campaign.

"Once upon a time" there lived an aged farmer, who had three sons, and large flocks of sheep. About to die he called the boys around his bedside and gave them his blessing and a parting injunction to be very kind to his youngest and favorite son Johnny. He told them to divide the sheep in three flocks and to give Johnny first choice. Of course they promised faithfully to carry out his wishes. In this they were very like our Democratic friends, "good at promising" and still like our Democratic brothers they were not so "good at performing." After the old man died, they forgot their promises, and bethought themselves only how to fulfill their letter and at the same time get the better of Johnny.

Now Johnny had a pet "Billy" goat, that he loved dearly. So the older brothers put all the pick of the flock in two folds and the sorriest and poorest of the sheep in a third fold, and with with them Johnny's goat. Then they took Johnny out to make his choice, according to the father's will.

Johnny examined each fold, returning again and again to that which contained the goat. Finally he threw his arms around the animal's neck and thus addressed him: "Billy, you're a good goat. I've loved you, Billy. Why Billy, many a time I have shared my luncheon with you. Yes, Billy, I've loved you, but the time has come when we must part. You're a good goat, Billy, but you're in d—d bad company."

When your Democratic friend asks you to vote for him, tell him the story of the goat. On the same ticket as the amendment, he is in "d—d bad company."

And Listen to its Dictates.

EDUCATIONAL WORK.

Proposed Movement to Broaden Grange Thought.

A Maine Woman Advocates a Course of Study For Grange Members Along Chautauqua Lines, With Definite Ends in View.

There is no doubt at all that the grange is one of the greatest educational forces of the day, particularly for those residing in strictly rural districts. It has opened up new avenues of thought and study, it has developed latent talent, it has disclosed no little ability which without it might never have been revealed, and yet the educational work of the Order has lacked system. It has not been directed by any single mind and has therefore not accomplished what it might have accomplished.

One of the brightest women connected with the grange in Maine is Mrs. George E. Warren of Durham. A fine scholar herself, she is especially active in movements of an educational nature. For several years, says the Lewiston Journal, Mrs. Warren has been agitating for a movement inside the grange that would establish and direct a regular course of study. She would pattern this after the Chautauqua organization and have a course laid out by the state grange. This course of study would include history, ancient and modern, and all the philosophical and reform movements of the day. Especial attention would be given to political economy and its relation to the agricultural industry. Botany and horticulture would be included in the prescribed studies, as well as those sciences that relate to birds and their habits. It would not be compulsory for grange members to take this course unless they desired to do so. In every subordinate grange there would be some who would be delighted with the idea and who would take advantage of the opportunity. These members would form a club and receive their instruction from the state grange. From that source they would be told what to study and would be compelled to pass occasional examinations before some competent committee appointed by the state grange officials.

The great advantage to be derived from such a course of study can be seen at once. In every grange there would be certain members educated along certain lines in which they would become very proficient. Such members would be called upon now and then to write papers on their favorite studies that could be read before the grange. This would be the means of educating those members who were not taking the regular course. Mrs. Warren has carefully studied out this problem and is convinced that it is not only feasible, but extremely necessary.

DOWN IN MAINE.

Mortimer Whitehead Engaged to Speak at Grange Field Meetings In Maine.

State Master C. S. Stetson of the Maine state grange has made an elaborate series of field meetings to be held during the month of August and early September. For the principal speaker he has engaged Mortimer Whitehead of New Jersey, who will deliver at least one speech in every county of the state. This gentleman is too well known in Maine, as in other states, to need any special introduction to the Patrons of Husbandry. He was with the founders, was one of the earliest builders of the Order and is one of its ablest leaders. Mr. Whitehead has been heard many times at state and national grange meetings, and his going into New England the present season will arouse great enthusiasm among the members of the grange there.

A Live Wire Grange.

It is located at Iona, N. J. It is just commencing its work. It has a large two story building, and it proposes to do things. This is what its master, J. H. Lenard, says it proposes to do: "Our first aim is to have our building equipped with all the facilities necessary for a first class grange, such as a library, reading room, telephone, gaslight, etc. Our second aim will be to induce manufacturers to locate in the village, the advantages of which it will not be necessary to comment on. Our third aim is to insist on having good roads, which will increase the valuation of property from 100 to 300 per cent. Our fourth aim will be to advocate strenuously the most improved appliances for lightening the arduous work of our mothers, wives and sisters as well as insist on the most approved appliances for the farmer." The Iona grange board of trade is the business end of the grange.

The members of the granges in Burlington county, N. J., purchased together enough seed potatoes from other members of the organization in the state of Maine to plant this spring 3,000 acres.

Ohio has over thirty new and reorganized granges since the last meeting of the state grange in Columbus as against eighteen for the entire year of 1908.

A SECRET OF THEIR SUCCESS.

The writer returned a short time ago from a trip through a number of western states in which he investigated first hand the conditions under which fruit is grown in the famous Hood river, Rogue river and Yakima valleys. A conviction which was forced upon him was that if fruit growers in some other parts of the country, especially central and eastern states, were as well organized, cared for their orchards as scientifically and painstakingly as growers in the valleys mentioned a long step would be taken toward putting fruit production on a satisfactory and remunerative basis. It is true that soil and climatic condition especially favor the owner of the western fruit ranch, but these are only partial factors in his success, as is demonstrated by the fact that some who live in these favored districts are making little or no profit because their ranches are not being managed as they ought to be, either through lack of inclination or ability, or both. A feature which contributes much toward successful fruit growing in Oregon and Washington and some other western states is the fact that the spraying of fruit trees to keep in check insect and fungous pests is made compulsory by state laws, which empower the state fruit inspector or his assistants to spray or cut down any trees which the owner cannot or will not spray. These regulations mean a reduction of insect and fungous pests to a minimum, the benefit of which to the fruit growing interests being almost incalculable. Another respect in which the western fruit growers have an advantage is in the admirable way in which they are organized in associations whose purpose is to promote the interest of the grower in a general way and in particular to give him helpful suggestion in the growing of his crops and also in the matter of packing his fruit and finding a satisfactory and reliable market for it. In the case of the Hood River association all fruit belonging to members of the association is sold cooperatively, representatives of houses which would like to handle it being on hand to bid for it. If the prices offered are not deemed reasonable by the executive board the boxed fruit is placed in their own big cold storage warehouses to await a more favorable market. Much of their success is explained when it is said that in these sections fruit raising is the chief and primary business, and quite naturally, having their all at stake, they take sensible precautions to see that they are not defrauded or hoodwinked at any stage of the game. The care they give their trees and the pains they take in packing and marketing their fruit may well be called the premium which they pay on an insurance policy which guarantees them success, and they don't wait until their orchards are broken down and weakened by disease before they take out the policies.

SPRAYING DANDELIONS.

A number of towns in the mountain states—Denver and Colorado Springs are come to our notice particularly—ave of late been experiencing a verable pest of dandelions, this plebeian ntruder having trespassed to the point here lawns in private lots and pubc parks and boulevards have had to e stripped of sod, respaded and reseded to get rid of them. And this ocess has to be repeated at intervals, r the most carefully kept grass plots ill become fouled with the seed from joining lots. An aid in fighting this andelion pest seems to have been ound in spraying affected lawns early i the season, just as the plants are arting, with a solution of iron sulate, which has been found effective destroying a number of noxious r troublesome weeds, but does not i ure the tender grass. This plan involves some work and expense, but it s simpler than the methods previously mentioned and should be given a thorugh trial.

A REMARKABLE FACULTY.

While the reasoning faculty as usualy understood seems to be largely lacking in animals, their sense of sight, earing and smell seems to be even more acute than with human beings, as is also their sense of place and direction. Familiar instances showing this last faculty, which seems to transcend the faculties of both sight and smell, are the migratory flight of wild nimals, the everyday movement of bees applicd, the everyday movement of bees the a om field to hive, the return of the in fu ming pigeon, the ability of the The orthern seal to find the narrow openwas g of its home after going miles for first d in darkest seas under thick ice, al tes return of a cat or dog taken miles hope om home in box or sack and that unsur mmon case of the ability of the old illy horse to find the road home on It i pitch dark night when the driver is enact elessly fuddled. These dumb brutes famot are entirely subservient to man's and reason nevertheless outstrip n in this wonderful trait.

He has achieved a large measure of success as a citizen and man who has been thoughtful and considerate in his own home and a kind neighbor.

Just about as much can be expected of boys and girls as from a newly set orchard if both are started and then allowed to shift for themselves. The old story in the shape of weeds and ill manners, bitters and bad habits is sure to get them. No slipshod or abstinence oversight will give satisfactory results.

It pays an owner in dollars to give his buildings a good coat of paint and make the premises shipshape if he is contemplating selling. It will give just as large a return in chunks of solid satisfaction for himself and family if he is not thinking of selling. Especially is such improvement of the place to be commended from the standpoint of the passerby.

In most states the law as to fences requires a railroad to provide its right of way with a fence of the kind which the farmer has or may want to erect adjacent thereto. To illustrate, if a landowner wishes to fence hog tight a tract of land bordering on the right of way, the railroad would have to erect a fence of this description on the line bordering such tract.

Some ingenious poultryman has lately devised a louse proof henroost, the base of the iron castings at either end of the roost resting in a receptacle containing a strong disinfecting fluid. This would seem to be effective enough in preventing lice and vermin from crawling up the roosts to the hens, but would hardly serve to keep them from crawling from the hens on to the roosts and thus being spread.

During the recent stress of harvest time out in Nebraska many a young woman has followed the binder and helped shock the golden grain, and this was entirely to her credit, just as much so as it was to the discredit of the husky chaps who loafed around town and didn't work because, in addition to generous wages, they weren't taken to and from town every night in a leather cushioned automobile after the day's work was done.

The proper time for cutting the corn crop for fodder or ensilage is when the ear, leaves and stalk contain a maximum of nutritive value. If the corn ripens under normal conditions, this will be when the ear has begun to dent and is quite firm and if picked would make a good feed and seed ear, while the upper leaves of the plant are green, with the lower turning yellow. Cut before this time, there is a distinct loss in food value, just as there is a loss if the fodder is not cut before a frost kills the leaves.

If the little heifer has calved earlier than was good for her own development, much can be done to make amends and help her attain a normal growth by giving her a good grain ration for eight or ten months after calving, even if she is on good pasture. If she is the kind of milker she ought to be, she will only appropriate as much of this extra ration as she needs for growth and will put the rest in the pail. Handling her in this way is not coddling her, but simply an evidence of farsighted management.

If there is any one sight more than another that is calculated to arouse the wrath and disgust of a fairly industrious and respectable citizen it is during the seasons of tilling and caring for the great crops of the country, and particularly at harvest time, when labor is at a premium, to see great strapping, hulking boys and men loafing around the depots and streets in most any town, utterly indifferent to the urgency of the situation, cussing Providence and the government for their ill luck, with the chances good that they are eating three square meals a day earned by hardworking mothers and wives over washtub and sewing machine. The law doesn't reach this type of offenders against common decency, and pity 'tis that it does not.

There is probably no variety of trees grown in the warmer and arid or semi-arid portions of the great southwest which is equal to the eucalyptus in point of general usefulness. It possesses a thrifty and vigorous habit of growth, does well without irrigation and on land that is so poor and rough that it will produce almost nothing else. Realizing these good qualities, large areas in California which can never be put under ditch are being set to eucalyptus trees. Results that have already been secured show that if set close together these groves will produce long, straight trunks free from lower limbs, the wood firm and strong and useful for a great many purposes. The tree is a native of Australia, where it is highly prized and where several varieties of it are found.

The grape growers in the Chautauqua belt in York state have suffered serious loss of late as a result of the inroads of insect and fungous pests. Figures which have been published show that there has been a reduction in yield per acre from 800 baskets in 1900 to 300 baskets in 1908. So serious has the situation become that the growers are trying to secure the location of a state experiment substation in the locality with a view to having scientific methods of fighting the pests demonstrated so as to show them a way out of their troubles. Enough would seem to be at stake so that this move might well be made, as the work of the state officials would be of real value to viticulturists in other parts of the state and in other sections of the country.

It will be well to feed the hogs sparsely of the new corn, as the judicious feeding of it gets the animals' systems out of order and makes possible a whole lot of later and more serious ills, usually termed swine plague and hog cholera.

A not altogether reassuring showing of the destruction of our forest resources is given in the reports of the lumber industry for the year 1908. These indicate that during that period 31,231 sawmills in the United States turned out 33,280,397,000 feet of lumber, besides 12,103,483,000 shingles and 2,986,084,000 laths.

It is wages spent for things that are either useless or harmful more largely than the injustice of economic conditions under which men labor that are responsible for the most abject types of poverty to be found in this and other countries. And yet they are factors which the average student of our social and economic ills is wont almost entirely to overlook.

The young calf before it reaches the age of a month may be easily dehorned, prevented from having horns, by rubbing caustic potash on the skin just over the embryo horn. The hair should be removed immediately over the spot and the caustic rubbed on till the skin is pink. Care should be taken not to have the chemical come in contact with the hands, as it will burn the skin.

In central northern states the fern is, because of its beauty and rarity, very highly prized as a native woodland or ornamental plant. In the heavily wooded sections of the Pacific slope in Washington and Oregon it grows in such profusion that it is one of the worst weeds which the tiller of the soil has to contend with for two or three years after he clears up and breaks his land.

There are four states which the first of this year had more than 3,500,000 hogs, Iowa leading with 8,413,000, Illinois ranking next with 4,673,000 and Nebraska and Missouri following in the order named with 4,243,000 and 3,593,000 head, respectively. And this has been a decided prosperity factor, for there has been very little loss by disease, and good prices have prevailed for those that have been marketed.

The owner of a famous tract of virgin hemlock near Laporte, Pa., has placed a reward of $1 each on the pelts or carcasses of porcupines, which are seriously injuring and in some cases killing fine hemlock trees by gnawing and peeling the back from the limbs in search of ants, which constitute one of these queer animals' principal articles of food. The porcupine is usually classed as inoffensive, but this seems to be a blotch on his escutcheon.

A middle state farmer whose fields are becoming fouled with quack grass is this year trying the efficacy of hemp as a means of getting rid of the plague. Hemp grows to a height of six or eight feet and so completely covers and shades the ground that any other plant is smothered in the midst of it. It is thought that putting the land in hemp two years in succession will completely free the land of the grass. An advantage in this method, if it is as effective as is anticipated, would be that the hemp has a considerable commercial value, and the use of the land would not be lost in the process, as is true of some other methods which have been recommended.

It may be merely a truism to state that the fields of corn which have suffered most from drought during the past month in some sections of short rainfall have been those which were cultivated the fewest times and had the most weeds growing between the rows. There was a very good reason for this state of affairs, which was that the soil, not being stirred as frequently as it should, baked and dried out much more rapidly than would have otherwise been the case, while the weeds that were encouraged by this neglect served to still further aggravate the situation and take from the soil the little moisture which it did contain. This matter of the physical condition in the soil resulting from ample cultivation is one that is sadly ignored or completely overlooked by all too many farmers. The importance of the point can hardly be given too great emphasis.

A Nebraska town has inaugurated lately a very practical type of church union or affiliation. An enterprising lady of the Episcopal faith is the prime mover in the good work. A Roman Catholic altar, permitted by special dispensation of the pope, is fenced in at one end of the church; an Episcopal rail is at the other end, with reversible seats between in the body of the church. Besides the faiths mentioned, Congregationalists and Methodists also use the building, with seats arranged to suit the taste and with sermons delivered from the north or south end, as the case may be. This signifies considerable progress along the line of church union, but somehow or other these good people, with those of other denominations, ought to fix it up somehow so they can all face and march in the same direction. It is this facing in different directions which has been the chief weakness of religious organizations for the past 500 years. Perhaps a better time is at hand.

Fortune and A Castaway.

By Marshall Cromwell.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

Most of the passengers were at luncheon, for the steamer was still in the channel, and the choppy waves had small effect on the huge bulk of the liner.

Even when the channel should be passed and the heavy swell of the Atlantic should be encountered there would be little motion and few ill, but today every seat was taken. Mason Hawley, coming late purposely, scanned the crowd eagerly, then sank into his seat, his face clouded by disappointment.

Hawley, despite a fund of commercial common sense that had enabled him to score a business success, was superstitious in many ways. He had been a guest on a houseboat just before sailing, and a wet day had been beguiled with fortune telling and similar devices of the rain imprisoned.

The seer had been a young woman whose brunette beauty seemed to sustain her statement that the blood of the Zingari flowed in her veins.

Adroit guessing, supplemented by positive knowledge in the form of hints from the host, had enabled her to read accurately Hawley's past, so when she had reached the future he had listened open eared and believing while she predicted that on the homeward voyage he would meet his fate.

"She will be on the steamer," the girl had predicted. "You will become engaged before the steamer reaches port, and you will live happy ever after."

His reason for taking a vacation had been Betty Lippincott's treatment. After a lively pursuit all season Miss Lippincott had withdrawn the favor she had shown Hawley and had become engaged to Dudley Hodge, who had come upon the scene only a few weeks before.

Hawley had taken his rejection very much to heart and had come abroad to seek forgetfulness, with such small success that he welcomed the time of his return. At home he could at least see Betty, and he derived a mournful pleasure from that anticipation.

Now the words of the seeress brought him new hope. She had predicted that he would meet his fate on the steamer and "live happy ever after." He knew that he could not be happy except with Betty, and of course that meant that Betty would be on the homeward bound ship.

But Betty's name was not to be found on the passenger lists, nor was Betty's pretty self to be found in the dining saloon, and Hawley regarded discontentedly the usual crowd of homegoing schoolteachers and tourists who at that season were in the majority.

There were half a dozen pretty girls, girls above the average in good looks, but Hawley told himself miserably that no one who had loved Betty could ever love one of these commonplace persons.

That they were far from commonplace he could not appreciate, and he regarded with dull wonder the numerous steamer flirtations that sprang up overnight.

After that one quick scrutiny at the luncheon table he had not looked at a single woman with interest, though many of them were well worth looking at, and he asked himself with dull insistence which of these tiresome persons was written on the cards as his fate.

As the days passed and the steamer neared the home port this wonder increased to anxiety. It never occurred to Hawley to ascribe the "fortune" to the joking propensities of the black eyed girl. She was of the Zingari, and the blood of prophecy flowed in her veins.

When they had spoken the lightship and there were signs of home Hawley grew worried. He did not question the workings of fate, but he knew that only an accident would precipitate an engagement now. By the following day they should be in port, and there was no time for a conventional wooing.

He stayed on deck long after the lights were extinguished. He had made friends with the officers, and now he climbed to the bridge to share the watch.

For more than an hour he followed the faint sheen of the stars on the black green sea as the vessel plowed its way through the heavy swell.

"Must have been a heavy storm hereabout lately," commented the officer. "This ground swell argues a big blow. It must have passed to the southward, as we got none of it."

"Looks like"— began Hawley. Then he paused and gripped the officer's arm.

"There's a small boat out there," he cried, "and they are waving a signal of distress."

"Two women in a sailboat with the sail torn to rags," commented the sailor, who was more used to looking into the night. "I'm sorry we saw them, because now we'll have to stop. It will cut an hour from our record."

Hawley gasped at the frank admission and wondered if the officer would have seen the boat had there been no passengers on deck.

As it was the bridge telegraph sent its signal to the engine room, and presently the thud that for six days had sounded with steady monotony was stilled, and the huge bulk slid through the water.

Then the engines turned again as a signal was sent and the slight headway was checked as the ship came even with the cockboat, which seemed tinier than ever in comparison with the racing liner.

A sailor slipped down a rope and made it fast to the small craft. Then a second rope was lowered with a noose in the end, and presently the castaways were hoisted to the deck.

The first was an elderly woman who sank into a faint as soon as she reached the solid deck. Her younger companion showed more courage, for she did not faint—only breathed a little sigh of relief.

Then she looked about her, and as the light from one of the deck lanterns fell upon her face Hawley sprang forward to gather Miss Lippincott in his arms.

For an instant she lay passive, then she gently disengaged herself, and two red spots burned in her cheeks as she turned to thank the rescuers.

"We went for a sail and a storm caught us and blew us out to sea," she explained. "The squall took our sail, and I think this prevented our being capsized, but we had only one bottle of water and a few sandwiches. We drank the last of the water hours ago."

One of the quartermasters hurried off for water, and presently it was arranged that Hawley should surrender his room to the two women since all of the staterooms were occupied. He spent the night in a deck chair.

As Betty had given her right hand in good night greeting he had noticed that the left lacked the diamond which she had worn when he went away, and on that slight foundation he built wondrous air castles through the long, sweet summer night.

Betty did not appear until nearly noon, but when she came she verified his hope. She had become engaged to Hodge because she had been told that Hawley was to announce his engagement to a girl not of their set and she had not wished to seem deserted for another. She had later found that the story had been a ruse of Hodge's and had broken the engagement.

When they made their landing and Hawley had seen Betty to a hotel he hurried to a cable office and sent a message.

"Your skill is wonderful. Just landed and am engaged as you prophesied," read Lady Muriel d'Arcy, knitting the heavy brows that shaded flashing black eyes. "I wonder who this Hawley is!"

"He is the chap who was with the Goodingtons," reminded her companion. "Don't you remember? You told his fortune and said that he would be engaged before he left the boat. He was going back to the States."

Lady Muriel laughed.

"That rich American," she said lightly. "I remember now. Clara Vassilington was to have gone over on the same boat, and I thought it might be a good chance for her to make the rich marriage the poor child has been seeking ever since she was presented."

"And some one else captured the prize," laughed the man. "I hope that they will be happy."

"They will be," affirmed Lady Muriel positively.

And this also came true.

A Horse Trade.

A prominent English landlord was one day riding across a common adjacent to his preserves when he overtook one of his tenants, who was also mounted. After the usual salutations they rode on in silence for some minutes, when the tenant slightly spurred his horse, a balky animal, whereupon it dropped to its knees.

"What's the matter with your horse?" asked his lordship. The embarrassed tenant remarked by way of explanation that his steed always acted that way when there was game to be found.

A moment later, to the tenant's satisfaction and surprise, a frightened hare jumped out of some bushes near by.

This so impressed the landlord that he at once drove a bargain by which he secured the tenant's barebacked beast in exchange for his own fine mount, perfectly saddled. With much agility the tenant leaped to his new horse, and all went well until they came to a small stream, whereat the landlord's new nag immediately balked. A drive home with the spurs brought it again to its knees.

"Hello! What's up now? There's no game here," said his lordship.

"True, my lord," was the ready reply, "but I forgot to tell you 'oss as good for fish as 'ee is for game."

A ROAD IN PANAMA.

Features of a Highway Built by the United States Government.

Road building down on the isthmus of Panama does of necessity get its share of attention, too, but by the Americans, however, for when they find that the business of the zone can best be facilitated by the making of good roads the work is then commenced. But it must be remembered that there are no roads at all, so when they build they build good ones.

There has recently been thrown open a new road in the zone which extends from the Boulevard Fourth de Julio to the La Boca road. It comes through Ancon, canal zone, and is a sort of boundary line between the zone and Panama, Panama being on the right, while Ancon is on the left. Before this road was opened up road traffic between Ancon, canal zone, and La Boca had to travel a route about one and one-half miles longer than the present route, thus causing the consumption of much time in the zone's business traffic. The present route is what might be called a "short cut."

The road was ballasted with crushed stone on its completion and has since been reballasted, so as to stand the long rainy season. This was done by first going over it with more crushed stone, followed by a water sprinkling wagon, after which a road roller went over it. The roller may be seen in the distance. The road is now in a substantial condition.

The republic of Panama has no roads, and yet this is the one thing that will give impetus to the business of her people. It is only a matter of time when there will be roads through the zone extending from the city of Panama to that of Colon. By having these the business of the canal zone can be expedited.

Some one may ask, What does the one span bridge amount to? Well, it means much down on the isthmus.

ROAD OPENED IN ANCON AND BRIDGE ON HIGHWAY FROM ANCON TO LA BOCA.

[From Good Roads Magazine, New York.]

There are no bridges, and when it rains you must wait for the swollen streams to go down before you can cross. The illustration shows a one span iron bridge recently erected in place of an old wooden frame on the La Boca road. It has a wooden floor, upon which a concrete floor was laid. This is the road into which the new Ancon road leads. Houses in the distance are laborers' quarters. If you advance in the photo you approach La Boca docks; if you turn and come back you will enter the newly opened road.

Since this road has been open the benefit of the "short cut" has been taken by many of the general public who find the old route too far out of the way for quick travel. It may be called also a "necessity road."—C. Morton Dame in Good Roads Magazine.

A Doctor's Road Work.

Practicing his profession in the country districts of Lancaster county, Pa., oftentimes getting stuck in the mud and bumping through chuck holes, Dr. Donald McCaskey and his hired man built a drag with the help of the local blacksmith, and the doctor himself drove the drag through the spring months of 1909. He not only repaired a half mile of neglected, impassable, yellow clay road, but he made it like a race track, as smooth as a boulevard. Skeptics, knockers and "hard shell" citizens, tied to the roadmaking methods of our great-great-grandfathers' days, have had the scales dropped from their eyes and have become converted by what they have seen. The road dragging plan has since taken hold of entire Lancaster county with increasing power and benefit for good roads. Farmers all over the county are building drags and using them. The one verdict they pronounce upon the effect on dirt roads is: "Why did we not know of this drag plan before? It works a wonderful transformation."—National Stockman and Farmer.

Retired Capitalist's Mission.

Colonel Nicholas Bell, a retired capitalist and politician of St. Louis, passed through Montgomery, Mo., recently in a motorcar on the way to Seattle, Wash. He is going over the same route he traveled with an ox team forty-three years ago. He was then sixteen years old, the same age as his son Christian, who is driving the motor. Colonel Bell is telling farmers along the way of two things that will make them rich and happy—rock roads and motorcars.

cal administration and are only maintained for political serviceableness? Talk about corrupt practices. Here is one of the most subtle forms of corrupt practices—one of the most corrupting and one of the most expensive to the body of the people.

"Our platform criticises the administration of the great $5,000,000 loan for good roads. One could easily forecast what was likely to happen in the matter when the Governor insisted on putting at the head of the commission a man of no particular business training or experience, whose chief recommendation was his faithfulness to the Governor as a political lieutenant in his own county. The appointment did not augur well for the commission's future. And the augury has not been belied. The two years of the commission's existence have little to show to its credit either in work done or in administrative methods.

"And when we ask for an account of this machine's stewardship it sidesteps the whole subject and wants to get the people 'all heated up' over the disfranchisement of the 'vicious and illiterate negro.' It is not the negro that has looted the City Hall in Baltimore or run off with the people's funds at Annapolis. It is this old political ring that wants you to give it a lease on life forever because, forsooth, 'the darkie will git you if you don't look out.'

"Are the people of this state going to be hoodwinked with this kind of talk? It is time to bring on Vardaman and Stone and Heflin. The ring cannot argue its own case. Its only hope lies in the appeal to prejudice and the baser passions. Let us have the hobgoblins. Let us hear them boil and bubble and then see on November 2 whether the people of this state are to be moved from just judgment by such demagogery."

Mr. Schirm, speaking of the disfranchisement amendment, said the cry of negro domination is a false cry which has no real foundation and is used only for deception.

"The same cry," he continued, "was raised in 1895, in the vain hope of checking the avalanche of public indignation which was then rapidly sweeping down upon the Democratic ring. The very men who then cried negro domination were the same who had outraged the patience of the best men of their party and the long suffering of the people generally. The administration of Mr. Lowndes was a wholesome change from what had for many years preceded it and accomplished many reforms, the good effects of which have been felt ever since."

The closing address was delivered by General Wilmer, who presented facts and figures which shattered the "negro bugaboo" assertions of the Baltimore Sun. He spoke of the colored people of the so-called "Black Belt" in Southern Maryland, whom he declared to be neither unthrifty or vicious. He furthermore said that the white people of that section are not leaving on account of the colored people, as erroneously stated.

In speaking of the proposed disfranchisement amendment, General Wilmer contended that, if adopted, it would be declared unconstitutional by the courts upon a case properly presented.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Two deaths occurred in Loch Lynn since our last report, the first on Friday, being a son of Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Gilpin, between two and three years of age, who was struck by a train at the station the day previous, and the other Mr. Erastus Rathbun, in the 84th year of his age, who passed away on Saturday after a brief illness.

Rev. Musgrave preached here Sunday morning and evening, and will preach next Sanday evening. He will occupy the parsonage with his family the last of this week, Rev. Bolton and family going to Sutton, W. Va.

Mr. Charles W. Hopkins, property agent, sold the John H. Cuppett cottage on G street, this week, to Mr. W. H. Armstrong, of Washington city.

Mr. and Mrs. James Anderson have taken apartments in the Mt. Lake Hotel for the winter.

Rev. Mann and family have rented Briar-Bend and will shortly take possession.

Mr. Thomas Male has purchased the Charles Boughman house and is now occupying and improving it.

Mr. Gay W. Hayden is clerking in Felty & Co.'s store.

Mr. L. A. Rudisill is still confined to his home but is much improved.

Mr. Irvin Sperry arrived here from Norfolk, Va., Thursday of last week and left early this week for an extended trip in the west, going as far as Seattle. He will be absent several weeks.

Sup't. Davis returned Thursday morning from an eastern trip.

Miss Jennie Murphy leaves today for Fairmont, W. Va., to take a position in the Manly hotel.

On Thursday evening the twenty-first
You are cordially invited to Haydenhurst:
You are only asked for a penny a year
By the Ladies' Aid, but do not fear,
The secret rags will never be known,
For the Treasurer is cautioned and sworn.
Refreshments served at half past nine,
Then we'll go home all feeling just fine,
After the entertainment.

ONE WHO WAS GOLDBRICKED

A People's Party Man Sees Light As It Is.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Like a good many other citizens of Garrett county, the writer has been watching the birth and development of the People's party. We had been led to believe before the convention met that it would name some of the strong men of the county as its standard bearers, and in this way we would get a chance to support some men who are too modest to seek office, and as a consequence are always crowded to the rear by those who do not hesitate to ask for and persistently seek a nomination. But in this hope we are badly disappointed, and as predicted by a good man when the call first appeared, it has developed into a Democratic side show, for the sole benefit of the Hamill end of the organization.

With a Republican majority equal to the Democratic vote of the county, it would have seemed the part of wisdom to have named a majority of the candidates from the former party, and this was the original intention, for it is an open secret that on the day the convention was called to order the understanding among the delegates was that the Democrats were to have two nominees, the Republicans six and the Prohibitionists one, but when the ticket was finally named and announced, we find that the predominating disposition to "hog everything in sight," which is a well known characteristic of one of the would-be leaders in this movement, had prevailed, and instead of the party which is expected to furnish the votes, if any of these nominees can hope to be elected, receiving six nominees or places on the ticket, it received but three.

Then again A. Totten Matthews, a Democrat and the law partner of G. Semmes Hamill, the disposed Democratic chairman, has been designated the chairman of the committee of the People's party, and the Journal, one of the would-be organs of the Democratic party of the county, has constituted itself, with the consent of the editor's brother, the organ of the new party.

This is how the matter now stands, and we now suggest to ourselves and others who have in good faith, given countenance to the movement, in the language of the Honorable Thomas Watson, to camly inquire, "where we are at."

From a study of the situation it seems that we are only expected to furnish the votes, and they will do the rest. It is generally known and understood that the Democratic end of the People's party has ceased to be interested in any part of that ticket outside of their candidates for sheriff and surveyor, and all their efforts in the future will be to land these two candidates and carry the county for Judge Boyd.

Open your eyes and see what is going on and turn to the Journal, the self-constituted organ, and see if you do not come to the same conclusion.

Then again where do these people stand on the one overshadowing issue of this campaign, viz, the "Straus Amendment to the Constitution." Mr. G. S. Hamill, in an article appearing in the Baltimore Sun a few days ago, stated that there was "no differences between the People's party and the Democratic party." If this be true, in the name of all that is good and holy let us cut loose from this Democratic side show and stand by the nominees of the party that has always stood for fair elections and an honest count.

A GOLDBRICKED REPUBLICAN.
Grantsville, Oct. 12, 1909.

GORTNER.

Our school is progressing nicely under the efficient management of J. L. Shetler.

The farmers of this section are busy husking corn.

Geo. Schlosnagle was calling on his nephew, J. J. Schlosnagle at this place Sunday.

L. H. Killius and wife are visiting relatives at Bittinger this week.

Miss Lizzie Lichty left for Kalona, Iowa, recently where she expects to spend the winter.

J. C. Slabach and wife are on a visit to relatives near Grantsville.

George Killius was calling on relatives at Oak Grove last Sunday.

Preaching next Saturday and Sunday evenings by Rev. Ed. Miller, of Springs, Pa. Sabbath school Sunday morning at 9:30 and preaching at 10:30 by the German Baptist brethren. All are welcome.

Swanton Fair.

Remember, Oct. 30 is the date of the Swanton fair and that the best time to select your potatoes and apples for exhibition is when you are gathering them. The wheat, buckwheat and oats can be selected any time. Bring as good an all round assortment of farm products as you can for there is no entry fee and you can help the cause of the Garrett county farmer by so doing. Both Senator Brown and Director Patterson have promised to deliver addresses. The fair is a good place for you and your family to have an all round visit with everybody.

FAIR COMMITTEE.

GRANTSVILLE.

The long dry spell was broken by a heavy rain Sunday night and Monday.

Mr. John O. Getty and Dr. G. C. Keller made a business trip to Oakland Monday.

Mr. C. M. Livengood has been confined to his bed the past week with rheumatism.

Mr. Arthur Durst is recovering from an attack of typhoid fever.

We understand that two children of Mr. C. P. Miller are suffering from typhoid fever.

Some excitement was created in our quiet village on last Friday by the appearance on our streets of two traveling preachers from Benton Harbor, Mich. They had long hair and beards, wore white suits that came almost to the ground and called themselves Israelites. They traveled on bicycles, announced their coming with a bugle, spoke on the street in front of C. D. Hershberger's store, distributed literature announcing the near approach of the end of time, sold postal cards and left for Frostburg.

Mrs. George A. Royer and daughter, of Loysville, Pa., have returned home after spending the last two months with Mr. J. L. Augustine.

Miss Minnie Boing, of this place, and Miss Effie Bittinger, of Bittinger, have been taken to Johns Hopkins Hospital by Dr. Robinson to be treated for appendicitis and at last account, were doing well.

The plasterers are at work on Bert Swanger's new house.

The People's ticket which was to have caused such great dismay in the old parties seems to be a disappointment. The farmers and working men generally know that corporations and predatory wealth do not lay awake at night or shed tears for the dear people of Garrett county. A party that has no standing any place or with anybody could do nothing at Annapolis if sent there by a party composed of malcontents and headed by big corporations.

OCCASIONAL.

McHENRY.

Miss Esther Hinebaugh was a pleasant caller on Mrs. Hattie Glotfelty last Wednesday.

Our school is progressing nicely under the management of Miss Grayce Browning.

Mr. and Mrs. Jonas Glotfelty made a business trip to Oakland one day last week.

Miss Florence Bittinger, who has been spending several weeks at the home of Ralph Brenneman, returned to her home at Springs, Pa., last Saturday.

Mr. N. F. Pysell made a business trip to Oakland one day last week.

Prof. E. A. Browning passed through this section last week and paid our school a short visit.

Messrs. Brison Glotfelty and Claude Lowdermilk spent last Sunday evening at the home of Madison Friend.

Mrs. Mahlon Glotfelty spent one day last week with Mrs. Noah Pysell.

Mr. and Mrs. Lemuel Savage spent a day last week with their daughter, Mrs. Walter DeWitt.

Mr. John Long and family have gone to Mt. Lake Park where they expect to spend the winter.

Mrs. Cora Glotfelty made a business trip to Mt. Lake Park last week.

Quite a number of young people were entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. McLean last Thursday evening, it being the occasion of the twenty-first birthday of their daughter, Miss Fannie, who received a number of valuable and highly appreciated presents. A number of interesting games were played, after which the guests were invited to the dining room where there was spread before them a feast of delicacies, which was much enjoyed by all.

Miss Eleanor Hinebaugh has gone to Oakland where she expects to remain for a while with her aunt, Mrs. John Robinson.

Mrs. Lou Lowdermilk and daughter, Anna, spent Sunday at the home of Alvin Friend at Sang Run.

Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus Stark spent last Sunday with with their daughter, Mrs. Henry Glotfelty.

Misses Georgia Lowdermilk and Dorla Glotfelty spent last Saturday and Sunday with Miss Ethel Glotfelty.

We are delighted to learn that we have some very fine artists in McHenry at this time.

RUFUS

STOYER.

We have been enjoying the beautiful autumn days very much. A refreshing rain fell Sunday night which was appreciated by all.

Mr. McHenry and his men are hauling a saw mill to rebuild the one that burned a week ago.

Messrs. John and James Spence were visiting at W. T. Stoyer's last Sunday.

Capt. and Mrs. White were visiting their daughter, Mrs. King, at Chaffee Saturday and Sunday, returning home with their grand daughter, Myrtle Wilson, who has been spending a few days as the guest of Miss Velda King.

Mr. Bob Brown, of Dill, was the guest of J. T. Stoyer one day last week.

Some ladies from Gorman were seen on our streets Sunday.

Messrs. Harrison Stoyer and Chas. Kidd were calling on friends near Oakland Sunday.

Mr. Jack Wilson was in town Sunday last.

Misses Grace Riley, Nina Stoyer and Ida Harvey were the guests of the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Elisha Harvey, last Sunday.

Misses Ruth Stoyer and Elizabeth Melvin were visiting at W. T. Stoyer's Sunday.

Mrs. John McIntyre was calling in town last Friday.

Mr. Thomas Melvin is on a business trip to Williamsport, Pa.

Mr. Geo. Michaels spent Sunday at Bayard.

Among those who took in the fair at Cumberland last week from this place were Messrs. Albert and Harrison Stoyer, Alex Harvey, Chas. Kidd and Thos. Melvin, Misses Ida Harvey and Grace Riley. All report having a very enjoyable time.

Virgil Stoyer, the expert trapper of this place, caught a fine black coon the other night, also a musk rat or two.

Some of our boys and girls are roaming the chestnuts orchards and forests for chestnuts and other goodies such as black walnuts, butter nuts and hickory nuts.

IOLA

BITTINGER.

A large number of fine lambs were driven out of this settlement last week by sheep dealers. The price paid was 6 cents per pound.

Mr. and Mrs. Jonas Bittinger were shopping in Grantsville one day last week.

Lumber is on the ground and preparations are being made to build a stable on the parsonage grounds in this village.

Rev. Lawrence Ries, of the Eastern Shore of Maryland, and Miss Mineh, of Chicago, are visiting Rev. and Mrs. Alvin Yugel.

Charles Stark, of Chaffee, W. Va., was at his home in this village on last Saturday and Sunday.

Master Paul Davis, who has been with C. E. Ellithorp, a merchant of this place, is preparing to return to his home near Markleysburg, Pa.

Miss Fannie Wiley, of Waterloo, Iowa, who has been visiting her parents at this place for two weeks, left Saturday for a few days' visit to Philadelphia and West Chester, Pa.

Amos Reckner and family, of North Glade, spent last Sunday with relatives here.

H. J. Speicher, Republican nominee for State Senator, passed through this village on Thursday of last week.

The drouth in this section continues unabated, wells are going dry and fall pasture is getting short.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS FOR GARRETT CO.,
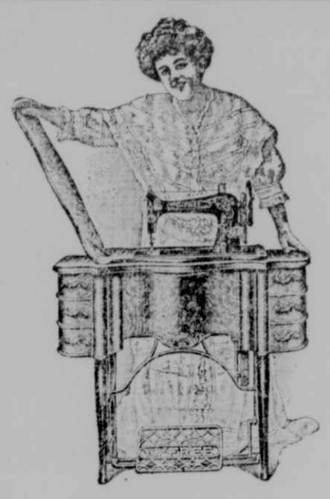
OAKLAND, MD., October 14, 1909.



The County Commissioners for Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland on Wednesday Nov. 3, 1909, to transact all routine business.

By order of the Board,
A. G. ROSS, Clerk.

Have you read the platform written by the old boss of the new party.

The FREE Slogans

The FREE runs lighter than any other

The FREE lasts longer than any other.

The FREE is more beautiful than any other.

The FREE has less vibration than any other.

The FREE is easier to operate than any other.

The FREE makes a more perfect stitch than any other.

The FREE is the best of all combined in one.

TO THE PUBLIC:

Sewing machines, like watches, can be bought at almost any price, and while you can buy machines at very low prices, we desire to say that we have sold machines for years as low as $10.00, $15.00 and $18.00, thus meeting the demand for cheap machines and foreign competition. The public is becoming better educated as to the fact that machines, like everything else, are only bought and sold according to their value, and many who buy cheap machines are inclined to exchange them for a high grade machine.

In taking the agency for the FREE machine we were led to do so on account of its many and valuable features, unlike any other machine, and for the high quality of its construction and quality of material used. While the price is the same as all high grade machines, by contracting for a quantity, selling direct to the consumer without any expense, especially for cash, we are able to offer this high grade machine for $35.00. We sold two lately to dressmakers, who claim they excel any machine they ever used. We also had an expert machinist to examine, try and test the machine in every way possible. He was unlimited in his report as to its high standing of mechanical construction and material used, its light running, the great variety of work and the satisfactory way all the attachments furnished could be used. It has unlimited guarantee for life time. What more can you ask? We invite one and all to examine the FREE machine now on exhibition at our store.

VOLUME 33. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1909. NUMBER 34

WHITE MEN FEAR THE PROPOSED AMENDMENT

Its Operations Will Disqualify 75 Per Cent. of Garrett County's Voters.

To the Voters of Garrett County:

Notwithstanding the soothing assurances given by the supports of the Straus Amendment, to the effect that no white voters would suffer from the adoption of the measure, the honest white voter is beginning to look with distrust upon the proposition, and to realize that there is a hidden and deadly poison in it.

The statement that were the amendment to become a law, it would not disfranchise a single white voter, even though it comes from a high and reputable legal source, may reasonably be doubted when it can be unquestionably proven that there are several classes of white voters in the State of Maryland who could not be registered under the restricting provisions of the Amendment.

In order to discover who would be affected by the Amendment, should it be ratified by the vote of the people at the approaching November election, it is necessary first to carefully consider the provisions of the Amendment and then to apply them to the several classes of voters in the State.

The Amendment's first condition for qualification as a voter is that no man can be registered as a qualified voter until he has been a resident of the state for two years and of the county in which he wishes to vote for one year. The second condition admits to registration all male citizens 21 years of age, who voted, or had the right to vote before January 1st, 1869, and the descendants of such citizens. This condition is said, by the coachers of the Amendment, to be broad enough to admit every white voter in the state, but then if the English language expresses anything, that provision is narrow enough to exclude every white man in the state who can produce no evidence that his father, or his grandfather actually was a qualified voter prior to January 1st, 1869. Hardly more than 5 per cent of the voters in Garrett county voted before 1869, and not more than 20 per cent. of the registered voters are men who could produce evideuce that their ancesters voted before that date. The remaining 75 per cent. would therefore be excluded from suffrage by this provision, a few of whom might still retain their sovereign right by complying with the property qualification, but many could not and those who would be obliged to submit to the memory and educational test would turn away in disgust from a rigid task, the successful accomplishment of which any, but the most thoroughly educated, would dispair of. Men may console themselves with the idea that they could commit to memory and write out the answers to the long list of questions as required by the specifications of the Amendment, but they should remember that it would not be sufficient to merely write out their application but according to the explicit language of the Amendment, it must be done correctly. If the English language expresses anything, correctly means nothing short of absolute correctness, therefore, the misspelling of a word, the omission of a letter or in fact the ignorance of or disregard of any of the laws of correct writing or correct phraseology in writing out the application would rendered the application void of effect. Who then could hope to write without guide of any sort such an intricate list from memory and do it correctly. One would think that the above strenuous test of skill technical knowledge and strength of memory would be sufficient burden for any honest man, but consider also that it would be required that you write the names of the national, state and county officials in full, not merely William Taft, but William Howard Taft in full.

As an example of how an applicant could unknowingly commit an error sufficient to disqualify him, we will suppose that a citizen of Baltimore county writes out an application for registration and writes Barry Mahool, Mayor of Baltimore. That is the name by which Mr. Mahool is known to the public and perhaps few but those of his family and intimate friends know that his full name is J. Barry Mahool, and yet the application could be rejected because the applicant had not written the name in full as required by the law.

Thus it is clear that the voter who was debarred from registrating, by the first provision of the Amendment, and hopes to squeeze in under the educational test would find it a stupenduous and unsurmountable obstacle in his way.

It is therefore self evident that the enactment and enforcement of the infamous Amendment would disfranchise hundreds of Garrett county's best citizens.

We will point out a few of the many many cases in which the Amendment would disfranchise desirable citizens: For the first illustration let us consider the case of the young man who has served all his early years on the home farm. He reaches the voting age of 21 years and is facing life for himself with a clean character and habits of industry, he applies for registration and cannot comply with the educational test and he has had no opportunity to accummulate $500 worth of property, hence he is denied the right to vote. There is also the case of a worthy young man of Garrett county who attains his majority this year, and as a reward for his faithful service at home his father presents him with a farm worth $3000. He cannot stand the educational test and because he has not owned the farm in question for two years he is disfranchised.

It is estimated that in 1908 more than 5000 German and other foreign citizens settled in Maryland. Were the Amendment to become a law on November 2nd and these foreign citizens became naturalized they could not register and vote, because it is not probable that they would have been the owners of the required amount of property for two years preceeding their naturalization and it would be impossible for them to have acquired sufficient English education to stand the required test.

The above examples are but parallels of many cases that actually exist in Garrett county, and many others could be cited, but this is sufficient to prove that the statements that the white voters are not affected by the Amendment are false and to be distrusted, and every honest fair-minded man will withhold his support from this proposition and let well enough alone, until an honorable proposition is submitted that will really and truly reform Maryland politics.

PARSONS CONDEMN THE PROPOSED AMENDMENT

Un-American. Undemocratic. Unwise and Unjust. Say Methodists.

"The proposed suffrage amendment is not only un-American and undemocartic but it is also unwise and unjust."

This is the opinion of the Methodist Episcopal ministers of Baltimore city and vicinity on the proposed Straus suffrage amendment to be voted upon in November, and resolutions condemning the amendment were adopted last Monday afternoon by the Baltimore Preachers' Meeting, the official body of preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The meeting was a spirited one and was carried on nearly two hours after the regular hour of adjournment. There were about 75 ministers present, and each of them was loud in condemning the proposed amendment.

The resolution adopted at the meeting follows:

"While we do not presume to dictate to our voting constituency concerning questions purely political, nevertheless, upon grave moral issues, we feel it our duty to press our convictions. In our judgment the proposed amendment to be submitted to the voters of Maryland in November is largely a moral question and is not only un-American and undemocratic but is also unwise and unjust.

"Therefore, we, as citizens and members of the Baltimore Preachers' Meeting of the Methodist Episcopal Church, hereby express our most earnest opposition to the proposed measure and the hope that it will be overwhelmingly rejected by the people."

K. of P. District Convention.

A meeting of representatives from the different lodges of Knights of Pythias of Allegany and Garrett counties, which comprises the first district of Maryland, was held at the Tri-State Business College, Cumberland, and arrangements made for the district convention to be held in Oakland Nov. 26.

An afternoon and evening session will be devoted to addresses by prominent members of the order. The evening session will be given over to the conferring of degrees and exemplification of the secret work. The degree team of Cumberland City Lodge will be given the honor of conferring the degrees. The Uniform Rank will be given an invitation to attend. Mr. A. Totten Matthews, of Garrett Lodge, has been appointed District Deputy Grand Councilor and has the different committees appointed.

The lodges represented were: Cumberland City, No. 60, of Cumberland, B. F. Shaffer; Frostburg City No. 88, Daniel J. Williams; Monterey No. 90, Barton, Nicholson Eilbeck; Garrett No. 113, of Oakland, C. J. Newman; Queen City, No. 136 of Cumberland, Nelson W. Russler.

GARRETT HAS A HOT CAMPAIGN.

Republicans and Democrats Very Busy —Much Bitterness Aroused By Hamill Insurgent Ticket.

One Man Named on Executive Committee Sent in Stinging Rebuke—A Glance at the Leader's Record in Garrett County's Politics.

The following special telegram from Oakland appeared in the Baltimore American this morning:

Since the Democrats and the Republicans opened the campaign in this county by holding large mass meetings in the Oakland Opera House, politics have taken on new life. Of the two vacancies on the regular Democratic ticket in this county, caused by candidates declining to accept the nominations, one for Clerk to the County Commissioners, and the other a County Commissioner, the latter has been filled by the committee naming Mr. Daniel Yommer, of Grantsville district. Mr. Yommer is an extensive land owner, farmer and a lumber manufacturer, and is extremely popular. The other vacancy may be filled this week.

Since the nomination of the so-called People's ticket, but locally known as the Hamill insurgent ticket, much bitterness is expressed by many who formerly sympathized with the movement. One of its strongest advocates from the beginning, who wanted a place on the ticket, has published a letter over his signature denouncing the entire proceeding as a conspiracy planned in the office of a certain corporation attorney, who wrote the platform, and selected the names of a few of his special friends, one a relative, to make up the ticket.

A STINGING REBUKE.

The ticket has been placed upon the official ballot by petition, but many who signed the petition have already stated that they will not support the ticket. The executive committee to have charge of the campaign has been appointed, not elected. The chairman is Mr. Tott Matthews, an insurgent Democrat and a law partner of the son of Mr. G. S. Hamill, the insurgent leader of the People's party. In naming the executive committee it seems they "reckoned without their host," as Mr. Edward Margroff, one of the members named, and a prominent Republican in the northern end of the county, wrote a stinging letter to the county papers, in part as follows:

* * * * "I look upon the People's party as an instrument to further the private and political spite of a certain prominent Democrat and certain corporations represented by him, and to use the People's party to advance the cause of a certain candidate on the Democratic ticket, and I do not propose to allow my name to be used for any such purpose." * * * *

Mr. C. A. Deffinbaugh, President of the Garrett County School Board, and editor of the Mountain Democrat here, has been appointed a member of the Democratic State Central Committee, in place of Mr. G. S. Hamill, Jr., resigned. This gives the regulars all three members of the committee.

MR. HAMILL'S RECORD.

The article which appear in a Baltimore paper some days ago, signed by Mr. G. S. Hamill, has caused him to be criticised more severely by the regular Democrats than anything he has said or done heretofore. They not only accuse him of nominating the Democratic insurgent ticket, called the Peoples ticket, and thereby disrupting their party, but they take exceptions to a number of statements made in his letter, especially that part wherein he states that "it is true that on two or three occasions the party leaders requested the writer to stand as a candidate again." They say that he has been the absolute boss and dictator of the Democratic party in Garrett county for nearly forty years, and as a proof of his many times candidacy they furnish the following records:

He was a candidate at the first election held in Garrett County on January 7, 1873. At the next election, in November, 1873, he was a candidate for State's Attorney and received 476 votes. His opponent on this occasion was not a lawyer by profession, but in the face of that was elected, and after his election the court was obliged to appoint another member of the bar to prosecute criminal cases. At the next election, in 1879, he was again a candidate, and also a candidate in each of the following years 1891, 1895, 1899, 1900, 1903 and 1907.

MAY HURT JUDGE BOYD.

It will be seen from the above that Mr. G. S. Hamill, the B. & O. Attorney at this place, has been a candidate for office nine times and defeated eight times. At the first election he was a candidate on the People's ticket, receiving but 450 votes, and on all other occasions he was the nominee of the regular Democratic party. He has also been the Democratic nominee for municipal offices in Oakland, but in every instance was defeated. They further state they have conferred upon him political honors on numerous occasions, sending him last year as a delecate from Maryland to the Democratic National Convention to help nominate a candidate for President.

He is looked upon here as Judge Boyd's political agent for Garrett county. It is believed by the regulars that this will lose Judge Boyd many votes in this county.

FOREST FIRE QUESTION.

State Forester Besley Gives Some Excellent Advice.

The forest fire question in Garrett county is more serious than in any other county of the State. Last year it is estimated that at least 35,000 acres of woodland were burned over, together with fences and buildings, amounting to a loss of $120,000. Yet, notwithstanding this tremendous loss, there is a general feeling of indifference or helplessness in regard to forest fires.

Our forest fire laws are sufficiently severe to meet the situation, and the only reason that fires exist at all is that public sentiment is not sufficiently aroused against this annual depredation of one of the greatest resources that the county possesses.

When the landowners and people generally realize the value of timber, the absolute need of protecting the young growth, if the forest is ever to be renewed, this will cease just as other preventable evils will vanish under an aroused public protest.

To be sure there would be an occasional fire started by some careless person, but it would be so quickly checked that the damage would be slight.

Of the forty or more fires reported in the county last year, it was impossible to secure in a single case sufficient evidence to fix the responsibility where it belonged and punish the guilty parties. Therefore, while we have the machinery for handling forest fires after they occur, the administration of the fire protection system is thwarted in not being able to reach the person responsible for the fire, and thereby exercise greater preventive measures. Most of the land owners realize that if fires are checked a new growth of timber will rapidly cover the cut-over lands and insure a new crop. There are abundant evidences of this along the road sides where fires have been checked for a number of years and the young growth has been permitted to develop without injury.

There is no county in the State where the proportion of valuable species in the forests is so largely represented as in Garrett county, and, furthermore, even on mountain slopes and ridges the timber growth is rapid. There can be no doubt that if fires are checked the forests of Garrett county will respond quickly and insure for the years to come a good supply of timber, a commodity that is becoming so scarce as to command a price that will make it pay better than any other crop on mountain lands.

Under present conditions, where a fire is likely to sweep over the forest and kill all of the young growth that has started there is little inducement to encourage a second growth and the lands consequently are worthless, so far as production is concerned, and it is the hope of the landowner that a purchaser may come along to take them off his hands.

That the railroads and logging companies can set fire to the woods with impunity is because the landowners do not assert their rights under the forest laws and require them to give reasonable protection.

"That every individual or corporation that carelessly, negligently or willfully, maliciously, sets on fire or causes to set on fire any woods, brush, etc., not his own shall be guilty of a misdemeanor," and subject to a fine and imprisonment and also for the damage caused by the fire. If such persons were held strictly accountable for the damage that they cause in a careless way, they would at once remove the cause of danger as far as possible.

The State Forester is anxious to have the laws enforced but must have the assistance and co-operation of the landowners to secure their enforcement. He is at all times ready to act upon authoritative information concerning fires and urges every landowner to acquaint himself with the forest laws and to protect his property against this enormous loss.

State Forester.

WILL GET PRIZES IF THEY MEET EDUCATIONAL TEST

Prominent Democrats Get Challenge From The Anti-Amendment Camp.

$500 to Ex-Governor Edwin Warfield if he can "deliver the goods."

$500 to Senator and Ex-Governor John Walter Smith.

$100 to Attorney General Isaac Lobe Straus.

$100 to Senator and former Attorney General Isidor Rayner.

$100 to former Attorney General William Shepard Bryan, Jr.

Archibald H. Taylor, who has succeeded Douglas M. Wylie (who has gone abroad) as chairman of the Democratic Association Opposed to the Suffrage Amendment, has arranged a nice little purse to be presented to five advocates of the amendment provided each will write out in the presence of impartial judges to be named by themselves the full text and answers required of a person to register under the proposed amendment plan.

"The Democratic organization," said Mr. Taylor this afternoon, "in its zeal to shut out negroes from voting, has submitted a test that the leaders in the party could not themselves comply with. When Mr. Wylie went abroad I accepted the chairmanship of our Association. As a proof of my good faith I intend to offer a prize of $100 to Attorney General Straus and a prize of a like amount to Senator Isidor Rayner and William Shepard Bryan, both of whom have been Attorney Generals of Maryland, if they will put down in writing the information required for one to register under the proposed amendment, provided the voter was not friendly to the organization. I will further offer a prize of $500 each to two former Governors of Maryland—Edwin Warfield and John Walter Smith—provided they will meet the requirements.

"No conditions whatever are attached to the distribution of this prize money, except that the contestants shall appear in public, at a meeting arranged under Democratic organization auspices, if they prefer, and write down the information before impartial judges, whom the contestants are at liberty to select, to pass upon the information submitted. This offer to Messrs. Warfield, Smith, Rayner, Straus and Bryan is open from this time on until election day."—Baltimore News.

Not Caught Napping.

Before commencing his address at the meeting held at the school house at Crellin last week, Mr. J. Griffin Hall, of Baltimore, delivered a brief address to the girls and boys present, taking for his subject the beautiful and appropriate extract from the "The Psalm of Life"—

"Lives of great men oft remind us
We can make our own sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time."

After quoting the above he asked "Where did I get that from? who is the author?" "Longfellow," quickly replied one of the youthful audience, amid laughter and applause, in which Mr. Hall heartily joined. The address, while containing much excellent advice, also had enough dash of humor in it to keep all in a good humor. He told the boys that possibly he was speaking to a future president of the United States, and turning to the girls, he said: "I am afraid that woman's suffrage will not make sufficient advancement in the near future to make it possible for any of you young ladies to attain that high position, but you need not despair, for we are told that 'The hand that rocks the cradle sways the world.' Some of you may become the wife of a President."

H. G. Davis Offers $25,000.

At a meeting of the executive and advisory committee of the State Board of the Young Men's Christian Association at Parkersburg steps were taken to secure an endowment of $100,000 sought by the state organization. Hon. Henry Gassaway Davis has promised to give $25,000, providing $75,000 can be raised by January 1, 1910. The following committee was appointed to begin a campaign for raising this fund: Ex-Gov. George W. Atkinson, Washington; Ex-Gov. A. B. White, John M. Crawford, E. L. Davidson and H. H. Dills, of Parkersburg. It was decided to hold a banquet in the near future at Washington, D. C.

The West Virginia Young Men's Christian Association was organized at Morgantown last March, when that state broke away from District of Columbia, Maryland and Kentucky.

THE DEACON IN POLITICS.

Second Chapter of Present Day Political Machinations.

Now it came to pass when the Deacon had performed all the things that had been commanded of him by the mouth of the imp that was like in size unto a grasshopper, he sat him down in the midst of his habitation and sang with great rejoicing in his heart.

And behold a messenger, having his body clad about with corporation armor, appeared before the Deacon and said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant, verily thou hast compassed the defeat of thine enemies and hast served well my master and great shall be thy reward.

So sayeth my corporate lord: take ye now this 25 cent cigar, the smoke whereof will bring peace to thy soul and the fragrance whereof will go up before thee like incense.

And when he had thus spake the messenger departed from the presence of the great Deacon.

Now when the Deacon had tasted of the sweetness of the cigar and the smoke thereof had filled the halls of his habitation, it came to pass that he fell into a deep sleep and in the midst of his sleep he dreamed a dream and the dream that he dreamed was like unto this:

A great plank was let down from the clouds and a voice came out of the midst of the clouds saying, Arise, O Deacon, and get into thy automobile and come up hither.

The Deacon speedily obeyed the voice and behold when he came unto the strange land he found a great multitude of his political enemies were also there and there was great rejoicing in their midst.

Now it so happened when they were all gathered together in a great hall of the city, a spirit came and gave into the hand of every man a golden harp, but to the Deacon he gave no harp.

And when they were weary of the golden harps the spirit came again and received the harps and gave them each a silver trumpet, but to the Deacon gave he no trumpet.

And when one among them, who was tender of heart, saw the sad look that dwelt upon the countenance of the Deacon, he asked the spirit, saying, Wherefore gavest thou no trumpet unto the Deacon?

And the spirit answering said unto him, Knoweth thou not that the Deacon blew himself out on earth? Wherefore hath he need of a horn?

Now when the Deacon awoke he was exceeding angry because of the dream and when the even was come he went up to the house top.

And it came to pass a great light shone round about him, and there was unrolled before his face a scroll, the length whereof was four cubits and the breadth whereof was two cubits, and a mighty voice like unto the voice of thunder spake unto him, saying:

Behold with thine eyes, O man, and read thy record; verily since thy youth up hast thou concerned thyself with politics, yea eight times hast thou sought office at the hands of thy countrymen and seven times hast thou been defeated.

Four and thirty years ago thou didst run for office on the People's ticket, but alas, O Deacon, thou wert left and in anger did turn away from the people and did all these years consort with the Democrats and many times on their ticket didst win naught but defeat and now when thou has no longer any hope for thyself and canst no longer sit in the soft seat of Democratic party boss, thou hast again created a People's ticket that thou mayest fool the people and make for thyself a new job of bossing.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, by thy record thou shalt be judged, turn now to thy sack cloth and ashes for thou wert born under an evil political star.

Be ye not deceived, for the people perceiveth thy purpose and have hardened their hearts against thee.

And when the voice had thus spoken the Deacon beheld and lo, upon the scroll was written a record of all things that had been performed by him in politics, and when the scroll was received up again he fell upon his face and wept very great tears and his anger was kindled against them that published the report of his doing throughout all the land.

And it came to pass after many days, that messengers from all the country round about came unto the Deacon, saying, Good master, thy People's ticket findeth no favor in the land of Common Sense, neither is it received in the district of Reason, neither do they that dwell in the kingdom of Honest Politics hearken unto thy voice, and the hot air thereof goeth in at one ear and out at the other; therefore the good captain hath ordered us to say unto thee that without more steam the good judge cannot be delivered in season for the banquet.

Thus endeth chapter two.

The Lure of the Mask

CHAPTER III.

MME. ANGOT.

THREE nights later, as Hillard and Merrihew were dining together at the club, the steward came into the grill room and swept his placid eye over the groups of diners. Singling out Hillard, he came solemnly down to the corner table and laid a blue letter at the side of Hillard's plate.

"I did not see you when you came in, sir," said the steward, his voice as solemn as his step. "The letter arrived yesterday."

"Thank you, Thomas." With no small difficulty Hillard composed his face and repressed the eagerness in his eyes. She had seen; she had written: the letter lay under his hand! Who said that romance had taken flight? True, the reading of the letter might disillusion him, but always would there be that vision and the voice coming out of the fog. Nonchalantly he turned the letter face downward and went on with the meal.

He sat there staring.

"I did not know that your mail came to the club," said Merrihew.

"It doesn't. Only rarely a letter drifts this way."

"Well, go on and read it. Don't let me keep you from it. Some charmer, I'll wager. Here I pour all my adventures into your ear, and I on my side never so much as get a hint of yours. Go on, read it."

"Adventures, fiddlesticks! The letter can wait. It is probably a bill."

"A bill in a fashionable envelope like that?"

Hillard only smiled, tipped the cradle and refilled Merrihew's glass with some excellent Romanee Conti. "When does Kitty sail?" he asked after a while of silence.

"A week from this Saturday, Feb. 2. What the deuce did you bring up that for? I've been trying to forget it."

"Where do they land?"

"Naples. They open in Rome the first week in March. All the arrangements are complete." After coffee Merrihew pushed back his chair. "I'll reserve a table in the billiard room while you read your letter."

"I'll be with you shortly," gratefully.

So with the inevitable black cigar between his teeth Merrihew sauntered off toward the billiard room, while Hillard picked up his letter and studied it. His fingers trembled slightly as he tore open the envelope. The handwriting, the paper, the modest size, all these pointed to a woman of culture and refinement. But a subtle spirit of irony pervaded it all. She would never have answered his printed inquiry had she not laughed over it, for pinned to the top of the letter was the clipping, the stupid, banal clipping: "Will the lady who sang from 'Mme. Angot' communicate with gentleman who leaned out of the window? J. H., Burgomaster club.' There was neither a formal beginning nor a formal ending, only four crisp lines. But these implied one thing and distinctly—the writer had no desire for further communication "with gentleman who leaned out of the window." He read and reread slowly:

I am sorry to learn that my singing disturbed you. There was a reason. At that particular moment I was happy.

That was all. It was enough. She had laughed. She was a lady humorously inclined, not to say mischievous. A comic opera star would have sent her press agent round to see what advertising could be got out of the incident; a prima donna would have appealed to her primo tenor for the same purpose. A gentlewoman surely; moreover, she lived within the radius, the official radius, of the Madison square branch of the postoffice, for such was the postmark. Common sense urged him to dismiss the whole affair and laugh over it as "the lady in the fog" had done. But common sense often goes about with a pedant's strut and is something to avoid on occasions. Here was a harmless pastime to pursue, common sense notwithstanding. The vein of romance in him was strong, and all the commercial blood of his father could not subjugate it. He rang for paper and a messenger and wrote: "Mme. Angot—There is a letter for you in the mail department of this office." This time his initials were not necessary. Once the message was on its way he sought Merrihew, whom he found knocking the balls about in a spiritless manner.

"A hundred to seventy-five, Dan."

"For what?"

"For the mere fun of the game, of course."

"Make it cigars, just to add interest."

"Cigars, then."

But they both played a very indifferent game. At 10:30 Merrihew's eyes began to haunt the clock, and Hillard grew merciful for various reasons.

"What time does the performance end?" he asked.

"At 10:50, but it takes about twenty minutes to scrape off the makeup."

Merrihew put his cue in the rack. He made off for the coat room.

Hillard laughed and went up to the writing room to fulfill a part of his destiny. He took the letter out and read it again. He replaced the letter in its blue covering, and then for the first time his eye met the superscription. Like a man entranced he sat there staring. The steward had brought the letter to him, and in his first excitement this had made no impression upon his mind. He had seen nothing peculiar nor strange. And here it was, not his initials, but his name in full.

She knew who he was!

In a fashionable quarter of the city there stood a brownstone house, with grotesque turrets, winding steps and glaring polished red tiles. There was a touch of the gothic, of the renaissance, of the old English manor; just a touch, however, a kind of blind man's buff of a house. A very rich man lived here, but for ten months in the year he and his family fluttered about the social centers of the world. And, with a house like this on his hands, one could scarce blame him. Twice a week during this absence a caretaker came in, flourished a feather duster and went away again. Society reporters always referred to this house as "the palatial residence."

This morning a woman stood in the alcove window and looked down into the glistening street. The venetian red of her hair trapped the reflected sunlight from the opposite windows and two little points of silver danced in her blue eyes. Ah, but her eyes were blue—blue as spring water in the morning, blue as the summer sky seen through a cleft in the mountains, blue as lapis lazuli, with the same fibers of gold. And every feature and contour of the face harmonized with the marvelous hair and the wonderful eyes; a beautiful face, warm, dreamy, engaging, mobile. It was not the face of a worldly woman; neither was it the face of a girl. It was too emotional for the second, and there was not enough control for the first.

But the prophecy of laughter did not come to pass. The little wrinkles faded, the mouth grew sad, and the silver points no longer danced in her eyes. The pain in her heart was always shadowing. She had seen her fairest dream beaten and crumpled upon the reef of disillusion.

Yet again the smile renewed itself. She was a creature of varying moods. She twisted and untwisted the newspaper. Should she? Ought she? Had she not always regretted these singular impulses? And yet what harm to read this letter and return it to the sender? She was so lonely here. It was like being among a strange people so long ago was it that her foot had touched this soil. Was it possible that she was twenty-five? Was there not some miscount, and was it not fifteen instead? Would not this war of wisdom and folly be decided ere long?

She opened the paper and smoothed out the folds. "Mme. Angot—There is a letter for you in the mail department of this office." It was so droll. It was unlike anything she had ever heard of—a personal inquiry column, where Cupids and Psyches billed and cooed. The merest chance had thrown the original inquiry under her notice. Her answer was an impulse to which she had given no second thought till too late. She ought to have ignored it. But she was lonely; the people she knew were out of town, and the jest might amuse her.

This man was in all probability a gentleman, since he was a member of a gentlemen's club. But second thought convinced her that this proved nothing. Men are often called gentlemen out of compliment to their ancestors. Still, if this man only saw the affair from her angle of vision, the grotesque humor of it and not the common vulgar intrigue! She hesitated, as well she might. Supposing that eventually he found out who she was? That would never, never do. No one must know that she was in America, about to step into the wildest of wild adventures. No; she must not be found out. The king, who had been kind to her, and the court must never know. From their viewpoint they would have declared that she was about to tarnish a distinguished name, to outrage the oldest aristocracy in Europe, the court of Italy. But she had her own opinion; what she proposed to do was in itself harmless and innocent. But this gentleman who leaned out of the window? She had seen the match flare in the young man's face. Was it the face she had seen in that flash of light that interested her sufficiently to risk the note? Against the dark of the night it had appeared for an instant, clean, crisp, ruddy as a cameo. The face warranted confidence.

She had sung because she had been happy, happy with that transient happiness which at times was her portion. Could she ever judge another man by his looks? She believed not. How she had run! The man, bareheaded, giving chase and the burly policeman across the street!

She stepped down from the alcove, wound the gray veil round the riding crop and tossed them into a corner. Somehow in the daylight the magic was gone from his face, for she had recognized him that first day in the park. He rode well. She touched a bell. A maid appeared.

"Bettina, you will go to the office of this newspaper and inquire for a letter addressed to Mme. Angot. And be quick, for I may change my mind."

The maid was back in a half hour.

"There was a letter, then?" The points were dancing again in the blue eyes.

"You may go. Perhaps," and Bettina's mistress smiled—"perhaps I may let you read it and answer it after I am done with it. That would be rather neat."

The slight nod was a dismissal, and the maid went about her duties, which were not many in this house.

Meanwhile the lady with the venetian hair toyed with the letter. Club paper! Evidently he was not afraid to trust her. But would he amuse her? The contents gave her a genuine surprise. She ran to the window. Italian! It was written in Italian, with all the flourishes of an Italian born. She turned to the signature—Hillard. So he had signed his name in full? She ruminated. How came such a name to belong to a man who wrote Italian so beautifully? She looked at the signature again. John—Giovanni. She would call him Giovanni. She had been rather clever. To have had the wit to look in the library for the blue book and the club list—not every woman would have thought of that. Then a new inspiration came to her. She sent Bettina for the card basket. She scattered the contents upon the floor and sat down Turkish-wise. She sorted the cards carefully, and, lo, she was presently rewarded. She held up the card in triumph. He had called at this house on Thanksgiving day. He was known, then, to the master and mistress. Very good. She now gave her full attention to the letter, which she had not yet perused:

To the Lady in the Fog:

To begin with, let me say that I, too, have laughed. But there was some degree of chagrin in my laughter. On my word of honor, it was a distinct shock to my sense of dignity when I saw that idiotic personal of mine in the paper. It is my first offense of the kind, and I am really ashamed. But the situation was not ordinary. Ordinary women do not sing in the streets after midnight. As you could not possibly be ordinary, my offense has greater magnitude. To indite a personal to a gentlewoman! A thousand pardons! I doubted that it would come under your notice, and, even if it did, I was sure that you would ignore it. To find a woman with an appreciable sense of humor is rare. To find one who couples this with initiation is rarer still. How you found out my name confuses me.

"Indeed!" murmured the lady.

Doubtless you have the club list in your house. Do you know, when the letter was brought me I saw nothing unusual about the address. It was only when I began this letter that I comprehended how clever you were. There are half a dozen J. H.'s at the club. I tell you truthfully over my own name that your voice startled me.

I was startled because my thoughts were far away. I was dreaming of Italy, where I was born, though there is no more Italian blood in my veins than there is in yours.

"What made him think that, I wonder?"

I therefore write this in a language familiar to us both, certain you could not sing Lecocq's songs in Italian if you did not speak and understand it thoroughly. Signora or signorina, whichever it may be, have we no mutual friends? Are you not known to some one who knows me—some one who will speak for me, my character, my habits?

"It is rather a dull letter so far," said the lady.

You say you sang because at that moment you were happy. This implies that you are not always so. Surely with a voice like yours one cannot possibly be unhappy. If only I might meet you! Will you not do me that honor? Isn't there just a little pure, healthy romance waiting to be given life? Your voice haunts me. Out of every silence it comes to me—"She is so innocent, so youthful!"

JOHN HILLARD.

She held up the card in triumph.

The letter fluttered into her lap. She leaned on her elbows. It was not a bad letter, and she rather liked the boyish tone of it. Nothing vulgar peered out from between the lines. Did he really love music? He must, for it was not every young man who could pick out the melody of an old, forgotten opera. Rather than tempt fate she decided not to answer this letter. It would be neither wise nor useful.

Romance! The word came back to her. With an unmusical laugh she stood up, shaking the letter to the floor. Romance! She was no longer a girl. She was a woman of five and twenty, and what should a woman know of romance? Ah, there had been a time when all the world was romance—romance; when the night breeze had whispered it under her casement window, when the lattice climbing roses had breathed it, when the moon and the stars had spelled it. Romance! She hated the word not less than she hated the Italian language, the Italian people, the country itself. She spurned the letter with her foot and fed the newspaper to the fire.

She went downstairs to the piano and played with strong feeling. Presently she began to sing a haunting, melancholy song by Abt. She was mistress of every tone, every shade, every expression.

The door opened gradually. Crash! The music was over.

"Bettina? Bettina, are you listening?"

"I am always listening." Bettina squeezed into the room. "It is beautiful, beautiful! To sing like that! There will be kings and dukes at your feet!"

"Enough!"

"Pardon, signora, I forgot. But listen. I bring a message. A boy came to say that the rehearsal will be at 4 this afternoon. It is now after 12."

"So late? We must be off."

"And the letter upstairs on the floor?"

"Some day, Bettina, you will enter the forbidden chamber, and I shall have to play Bluebeard. This time, however, I do not mind. Leave it there or burn it," indifferently.

Bettina knew her mistress. She thought best to leave the letter where it lay, forgotten for the time being.

CHAPTER IV.

BLINDFOLDED.

FOR two days the club steward only nodded when Hillard came in. He had no letters to present.

"I am thirty-three years old," Hillard mused as he sought the reading room. "Downtown I am looked upon as a man of affairs, a business man, with the care of half a dozen fortunes on my hands. Now, what's the matter with me? I begin to tremble when I look that sober old steward in the face. If he had handed me a letter tonight I should have had to lean against the wall for support. This will never do at all. I have not seen her face; I do not know her name. For all I know she may be this Leddy Lightfinger. No; that would be impossible. Leddy Lightfinger would have made an appointment. What possesses me to dwell in this realm of fancy, which is less tangible than a cloud of smoke?" He smoked thoughtfully. "Or am I romantic? To create romance out of nothing—I used to do that when I was a boy. But I'm a boy no longer. Or am I a boy thirty-three years old? She does not answer my letter. Sensible woman. Well, well," reaching for the London Illustrated News, "let's see what the society folks have been doing."

He dropped the paper. There was really nothing new in the world. If Giovanni returned to Italy in the spring he was of a mind to go with him. He looked up and was glad to see Merrihew in the doorway.

"Been looking for you, Jack. Want your company tonight. Kitty Killigrew is giving a little bite to eat after the performance and has asked me to bring you along. Will you come?"

"With pleasure, Dan. Are you dining with any one tonight?" Hillard was lonesome.

"Yes. A little bridge till 11."

"You're hopeless. I can see you in limbo, matching coffin plates with Charon. I'll hunt you up at 11."

"Heard the talk?"

"About what?"

"Why, some one in the club has been using the agony column. The J. H.'s are being guyed unmercifully, and you'll come in for it presently. It's a case of wine on the man who did it."

Hillard felt of his collar and drew down his cuffs. "Probably some joke," he ventured tentatively.

"If it isn't the man who would stoop to such tommyrot and tack the name of his club to it must be an ass."

"No doubt about that. Odd that this is the first time I have heard about it." But silently Hillard was swearing at his folly.

"I may depend upon you tonight, then?" said Merrihew.

"I shall be pleased to meet Miss Killigrew," which was a white one. Hillard would have paid court to a laundress rather than offended Merrihew.

And promptly at 11 he went up to the card room and dragged Merrihew away. Merrihew gave up his chair reluctantly. He was winning. The amateur gambler never wants to stop.

On the way to the Killigrew apartment Merrihew's moods varied. At one moment he was on the heights, at the next in the depths. He simply could not live without Kitty. Perhaps if this trip abroad turned out badly she might change her mind. Seven thousand could be made to muster. Twice Hillard came very near making his friend a confidant of his own affair, but he realized that, while Merrihew was to be trusted in all things, it was not yet time.

He found a pleasing and diverting company. There was Mere Killigrew, a quaint little old lady who deplored her daughter's occupation, but admitted that without her success heaven only knew how they would have got along. There was the genial Thomas O'Mally, a low comedian of genuine ability, whom Hillard knew casually; Smith, a light comedian, and Worth, a moderately successful baritone, to whom Hillard took one of those instant and unaccountable dislikes. These three and Kitty were going abroad.

Kitty fancied Hillard from the start, and he on his side found her well educated, witty and unaffected. She was even prettier than her photograph. Merrihew's face beamed upon them both in a kind of benediction. He had known all along that once Jack saw Kitty he would become a good ally in fighting down her objections.

"Think of singing in Italy!" cried Kitty. "Isn't it just wonderful?"

"And has Merrihew told you to get a return ticket before you sail?" with half a jest.

"Don't you think it will be successful?" a shade of disappointment. "There will be thousands of lonesome Americans over there. Out of patriotism, if for nothing else, they ought to come to see us."

"They certainly ought to. But I'm an old kill-joy."

"No, no; go on and tell me all your doubts. You have been over there so many times."

"Well, supposing your tourists are tired after having walked all day through the churches and galleries, they may want to go to bed early. But you never can tell till you try. You may become the rage on the continent. Yet you go into the enemy's country. It isn't the same as going to London, among tolerant cousins. In

She was prettier than her photograph.

Italy and in Germany there is always so much red tape—blundering, confusing red tape, custom duties, excessive charges. But your manager must know what he is doing."

"He has everything in black and white, I believe. But your advice is sensible."

"Do you know anything about Italy or Germany?"

"Only what I learned in my geographies," laughing—"Rome, Florence, Genoa, Venice, Nice, Milan, Strassburg, Cologne and on to Berlin. It is like a fairy story come true."

"Who is your prima donna?" he asked.

Peach Orchard Land for Sale.

I offer for sale two farms in Hampshire county, W. Va., both in the peach belt and would make fine peach orchards.

The first contains 232 acres, forty acres cleared and the remainder in timber. About 50,000 feet of saw timber; 10,000 props and a lot of locust posts. Situated 1½ miles northwest of Springfield, on the Romney Branch of the B. & O. R. R. An orchard of sixty bearing apple trees and some peach trees on the place. About thirty acres of run bottom and five acres of this in meadow. Improved by dweeling house, well, etc.

I have been advised by good authority that this farm would make a splendid peach orchard. Convenient to churches, schools, stores, etc. Price $1,500, on easy terms.

The second farm contains about 150 acres, partly cleared and part in timber and has on it a dwelling house and some other improvements. About six acres of run bottom now in meadow. Situated about one mile west of Springfield, W. Va., on the Romney Branch of the B. & O. R. R. Convenient to churches, schools, stores, etc. Price $1,200, on easy terms. Lesson IV.—Fourth Quarter, For Oct. 24, 1909.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Acts xxvi, 2. Memory Verses, 27-29—Golden Text, II Tim. i, 12—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

After being two years or more a prisoner at Caesarea, Festus being governor instead of Felix and having gone up to Jerusalem, the high priest and chief of the Jews inform him against Paul and desire him to bring Paul to Jerusalem, intending, if he consented, to lay in wait for him and kill him. Festus replied that they must come to Caesarea and there appear against him. This they did; but, as before, it was simply a case of complaints which they could not prove. In reply to Festus' question, "Wilt thou go up to Jerusalem and there be judged?" he appealed to Caesar. King Agrippa having come to visit Festus, the case is brought to his attention as one of Jewish superstition concerning one Jesus who was dead, but whom Paul affirmed to be alive (xxv, 19). The world cares just about as much today about Him of whom they spake as "one Jesus," and the church does not commend Him to the world much more, if any, than the Jews did their God, of whom they cried, "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord" (Deut. vi, 4).

Agrippa and Bernice having entered the place of hearing with great pomp, accompanied by the chief captains and principal men of the city, Paul is brought before them, and, after a brief statement by Festus, Paul is permitted to speak for himself. He told of his early life as a Pharisee and his zeal against the followers of Jesus until the risen and ascended Christ met him on the way to Damascus, saved him and made him His messenger to the gentiles to turn them from darkness to light and from the power of Satan unto God, that they might receive forgiveness of sins and inheritance among them are sanctified by faith in Christ. He told how, in obedience to the vision from heaven, he had at Damascus, Jerusalem, throughout Judea and to the gentiles preached that they should repent and turn to God and prove the reality of it in their lives; that all their prophets had testified that the Messiah of Israel should suffer and die and rise from the dead and that He should through Israel, the twelve tribes, give light to the gentiles after the resurrection at the second coming of Christ. Along this line of truth to the teaching of the prophets and the fulfillment of their predictions both Peter and Stephen and our Lord Himself, in Luke xxiv, all taught. It is the one story which the Scriptures tell and authorize us to tell, that Israel's Messiah shall bless the world through Israel.

On the way to Damascus Jesus had revealed Himself to Saul as truly the Messiah, but had also at some time taught him a mystery not revealed in the prophets—that during Israel's rejection because of their rejection of their Messiah He would gather from all nations a people called the church, His body, who should by discipline here be fitted to come with Christ in His glory and reign with Him in His kingdom, when Jerusalem shall be the throne of the Lord and Israel a righteous nation. It is our privilege, as it was Paul's, to go into all the world with the glad tidings of forgiveness of sins for all who will receive the Lord Jesus because of His suffering for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God. And all who in this age truly receive Him shall be manifested with Him when Israel shall see Him coming in the clouds with power and glory and shall say, "This is our God; we have waited for Him, and He will save us" (Isa. xxv, 9). As to the mystery of this age specially revealed to Paul, see Rom. xi, 25-27; xvi, 25, 26; Eph. iii, etc. We may be quite sure that that company of earth's great ones never heard a story like this before, and we do not wonder that Festus said with a loud voice, "Paul, thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad" (24). There are very few companies of the Lord's people (so called) who today know the story as Paul set it forth that day, and where there is a preacher who thus believes and teaches he is not apt to be counted a man of much learning, but, rather, an unlearned man, weakminded, mentally unbalanced. We can reply, as Paul did, "We are not mad, but speak forth the words of truth and soberness" (25). The test question is that which Paul addressed to Agrippa, "Believest thou the prophets?" for "surely the Lord God will do nothing, but He revealeth His secret unto His servants the prophets" (Amos iii, 7).

In Agrippa's reply there are three words which are specially full of significance, "almost a Christian." Let us think of another, "not far from the kingdom of God," but we remember that all who were not actually in the ark with Noah perished, and then those startling words, "He that hath not the Son of God hath not life;" "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him" (I John v, 12; John iii, 36). So that "almost a Christian" simply means "lost," but who can tell the meaning of that word? May none who read ever know the doom of the lost. With a burning heart and with burning words Paul declared his longing that not only Agrippa, but all who heard him that day, might stand in Christ as he did.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

CHAPTER 26.

AN ACT to amend Section one of Article one, title, "Elective Franchise," of the Constitution of this State, and to provide for the submission of said Amendment to the qualified voters of this State for adoption or rejection.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, three-fifths of all the members of each of the two Houses concurring, That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to Section one of Article one, title, "Elective Franchise," of the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, as herein provided, it shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of Section one of said Article one.

SEC. 1. All elections shall be by ballot, and every male citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years or upwards, who has been a resident of the State for two years and of the Legislative District of Baltimore City or of the county in which he may offer to vote for one year next preceding the election, and who, moreover, is duly registered as a qualified voter as provided in this Article, shall be entitled to vote, in the ward or election district in which he resides, at all elections hereafter to be held in this State, and in case any county or city shall be so divided as to form portions of different electoral districts for the election of Representatives in Congress, Senators, Delegates, or other officers, then to entitle a person to vote for such officer, he must have been a resident of that part of the county or city which shall form a part of the electoral district in which he offers to vote, for one year next preceding the election; but a person who shall have acquired a residence in such county or city, entitling him to vote at any such election, shall be entitled to vote in the election district from which he removed, until he shall have acquired a residence in the part of the county or city to which he has removed.

Every male citizen of the United States having the above prescribed qualifications of age and residence shall be entitled to be registered so as to become a qualified voter if he be, first: a person who, on the first day of January, in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, or prior thereto, was entitled to vote under the laws of this State, or of any other State of the United States, wherein he then resided; or second: a male descendant of such last mentioned person; or third: a foreign-born citizen of the United States naturalized between the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine and the date of the adoption of this section of this Article; or fourth: a male descendant of such last mentioned person; or fifth: a person who, in the presence of the officers of registration, shall, in his own hand-writing, with pen and ink, without any aid, suggestion or memorandum whatsoever, and without any question or direction addressed to him by any of the officers of registration, make application to register correctly, stating in such application his name, age, date and place of birth, residence and occupation at the time and for the two years next preceding, the name or names of his employer or employers, if any, at the time and for the two years next preceding, and whether he has previously voted, and if so, the State, county or city and district or precinct in which he voted last, and also the name in full of the President of the United States, of one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, of the Governor of Maryland, of one of the Judges of the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and of the Mayor of Baltimore City, if the applicant resides in Baltimore City, or of one of the County Commissioners of the county in which the applicant resides; and any person who is unable to comply with the aforegoing requirements as to making application for registration in his own hand-writing, solely because he is physically disabled from so doing; or sixth: a person, or the husband of a person, who at the time of his application for registration, is a bona-fide owner of real or personal property in an amount of not less than five hundred dollars, is assessed therefor on the tax-books of the City of Baltimore or of one of the counties of this State, has been such owner and so assessed for two years next preceding his application for registration; shall have paid and shall produce receipts for the taxes on said property for said two years and shall at the time of his application make affidavit before the officers of registration that he is, or that he is the husband of the person who is the bona fide owner of the property so assessed to him or her, as the case may be, and that he or she has been such owner for two years next preceding his application.

No person not qualified under some one of the above clauses shall be entitled to be registered as a qualified voter or be entitled to vote. Every written application to be registered, presented to the officers of registration by any person applying to be registered under the above fifth clause, shall be carefully preserved by said officers of registration and shall be produced in any Court, if required, as hereinafter provided.

The affidavit of any applidant for registration, duly made to the officers of registration or in Court, that he, the applicant, is a person who was entitled to vote on or before the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, as aforesaid, or that he has become a naturalized citizen of the United States between the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine and the date of the adoption of this section of this Article, as aforesaid, or his affidavit upon information or belief that he is a descendant of a person who was entitled to vote on or before the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, or that he is a descendant of a person who who has become a naturalized citizen of the United States between the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine and the date of the adoption of this section of this Article, shall be prima facie evidence of any of said facts so sworn to.

A wilfully false statement upon the part of any applicant for registration in relation to any of the matters aforesaid shall be perjury, and punishable as perjury is punished by the laws of this State.

Any person who feels aggrieved by the action of any board of officers of registration in refusing to register him as a qualified voter, or in registering any disqualified person, may at any time, either before or after the last session of the board of officers of registration, but not later than the Tuesday next preceding the election, file a petition, verified by affidavit, in the Circuit Court of the county in which the cause of complaint arises, or, if the cause of complaint arises in Baltimore City, in any court of common law jurisdiction in said city, setting forth the grounds of his application and asking to have the action of the board of officers of registration corrected. The court shall forthwith set the petition for hearing and direct summons to be issued requiring the board of officers of registration complained against in said petition to attend at the hearing in person or by counsel, and where the object of the petition is to strike off the name of any person summons shall also be issued for such person, which shall be served by the sheriff within the time therein designated; and said several courts shall have full jurisdiction and power to review the action of any board of officers of registration and to grant or withhold, as it may deem lawful and proper, the relief prayed for in the premises.

In determining whether any person who applied to be registered under the above fifth clause of this section was or was not entitled to be registered under said fifth clause, the court shall require the board of officers of registration complained against to produce the written application prepared and submitted by such person at the time he presented himself for registration to said board of officers of registrarion, and upon said written application the court shall determine whether or not said person, when he presented himself for registration, complied with the requirements of said fifth clause, and that said person was not disqualified under any other provision of this Article of the Constitution to be registered upon the books of registry in question, the court shall order said person to be registered as a qualified [illegible] the court shall determine that said written application of said p[illegible] to comply

TRAVELING ON SLEEPING CARS

How to Prepare For a Journey and Be Comfortable.

Preparations for a night's journey differ much from those for a day's trip, because the same articles are not required; hence the selection for the former must include comfort, and to secure this one must have personal experience or suggestions from some traveler.

A long dressing gown—a thin one in summer and a warm one in winter—is better than a night robe for sleeping. It is a mistake not to remove all the clothing when going to bed, but at the same time one should be in condition to go to the dressing room if necessary, so a wrapper fills the bill completely and is incidentally comfortable.

Toilet articles resolve themselves into a box of cold cream; also either some toilet water or saturated solution of borax. The water to be found in sleeping car toilet rooms is not only lacking in qualities for cleansing, but the basins are so abused by careless travelers that a very neat woman will not care to use them. So with her own cleansing agents she is independent. A box of toilet powder, a nail brush and soap and a brush and comb, with toothbrush, complete this outfit. She must carry her own soap. There is no greater danger of contracting skin trouble than by using soap that has been applied by others. For use on trains a pair of big soft gloves is necessary to traveling comfort and cleanliness. Wear these through the night, because the grime and dinginess that are rubbed into the hands through long hours of travel and from contact with the berth blankets are such that often takes time to get them white again.

In the morning undergarments are put on in the berth, and then, drawing on the dressing gown and taking the hand bag and frock, the journey is made to the dressing room, where there is a reasonable amount of room to finish the toilet properly. Instead of wetting the face with water, it and the ears and neck should be smeared with cold cream. This must be wiped off with a fresh towel. Another portion of the towel must then be wet with either toilet water or borax solution and the greasy surface cleansed. This application removes all trace of cream and dust. If the hands have been protected at night by gloves they will not need washing, and one is saved putting them into a basin that looks unattractive. On completion of the toilet a woman may look as fresh as though dressed in her own room.

How to Use Crude Oil on the Scalp.

The use of coal oil on the scalp is quite common, but not every one who knows the value of petroleum realizes that crude oil is even better. The former, being not so heavy as the crude product, works farther into the scalp and may affect the color glands.

In using either the crude oil or petroleum it is much better to have some one else apply it. It is almost impossible to put it on so it does not get on the long hair, giving it a sticky, ugly look.

Crude oil should be applied at least a day before the hair is to be shampooed. Instruct whoever makes the application to get the oil on the scalp only, working it in well with the tips of the fingers. If this is done the hair is much improved; otherwise it is a dust collector and does more harm than good.

Be sure after applying crude oil that the shampooer uses hot enough water to remove it. If it appears to stick, rub a little pure white soap over the head to assist the removal of the grease.

How to Make Bib Aprons.

An excellent way of making children's bib aprons is by using the regular yoke pattern, cutting the back deep enough so that a narrow piece of the goods comes under the arm. Instead of the same depth yoke in front, cut the material as long as the child's dress, rounding the goods at the side if you prefer. Join the back yoke to the front piece; cut the sleeves and sew in; face the yoke, neck and sides with bias strips of the material. Two buttons will be sufficient for the back. When finished you will have a bib that not only entirely covers the front of the child's dress, but also protects the sleeves.

SWEET SCENTED PILLOWS.

How to Prepare the Stuffing and Select the Covers.

In order to make sweet scented pillows first of all the pillow stuffing must be well dried. Lay the leaves of flowers in an airy shaded room and toss them about gently every day, that they shall not collect moisture and mold. When they are quite dry you are ready to stuff the pillow. Take enough raw cotton to fill one-half of the pillow, tear it in small pieces and lay it in a big pan and dry it out well in the oven. This makes a fluffy filling. Now mix the cotton with the dried flowers and leaves, fill up the cushion of ticking and sew it firmly. It is ready for the outer covering.

Of course, if you prefer it, you may make a pillow of hops or rose leaves or lavender alone, but it will not be so comfortable as the pillow that is partly baked cotton, and, since you want to put your head on it, why not make it comfortable? Hops must be used by themselves, and so must lavender. But one may make truly delicious blends by mixing dried lemon verbena, rose geranium, rose petals and clove pinks. Choose your rose petals from the old fashioned flat double pink roses; they are the sweetest sort.

Pine pillows have a refreshing woodsy perfume, and fern leaves dried have a delightful mysterious odor that makes one remember the belief of childhood that one could put fern seed in one's eyes and ever afterward would be able to see fairies. Clover makes sweet pillows, too, redolent of new mown hay. The common pink clover makes the sweetest sort, though white clover may be used.

As for the covers, choose something distinctive and individual. A little pillow of rose leaves and lemon verbena, covered with rose colored linen with a little rosebud stenciled on it, is most unusual and charming.

For a hop pillow choose a linen cover of dull green and embroider your monogram in mercerized cotton exactly the same tone in one corner.

The cover for a pine pillow might well be of rough tan crash or linen with a stenciled pattern of green and brown on it, or else with a smart monogram—block letters—embroidered in brown in one corner.

Fern leaf pillows should be covered with creamy linen, rather heavy in quality, with green fern leaves embroidered or stenciled upon it. Make the cover in the form of two squares, considerably larger than the pillow, and work long buttonholed eyelets through both, lacing them together over the pillow with a ribbon of dull green. At the corner where the ribbon ties slip two or three big green beads on loops and ends.

To cover pillows a cover of the popular Russian crash in cool gray would be appropriate, and if it is stenciled lightly with butterflies or dragon flies it will add to its daintiness, or it might be embroidered in small, flat squares in rose colored cotton.

The flower perfumed pillows will be found useful for the afternoon on lounges in the hammock. Slip them under your head, and they will perfume your hair with just a touch of delicate fragrance.

If you are troubled with insomnia try the hop or the pine pillow—they will help you to sleep if nothing else will.

How to Preserve Eggs.

When eggs are only required to be preserved for two or three months they keep very well packed in dry salt or bran. The meat of the egg may shrink and rattle within the shell when shaken, but its edibility is not impaired. Coating the egg with vaseline or butter will also keep it for a short time, or any application which effectively seals the pores of the shell and excludes air will prolong the freshness of eggs. If the egg is even momentarily submerged in boiling water the albumen thereby becomes sufficiently coagulated to prevent the entrance of air. In some of the rural districts in England and Scotland eggs for home consumption are smutted over with a mixture of sulphur and lampblack, a cheap and effective preservative. But the limewater mixture is best for general purposes.

VALUE OF SCHOOL GARDENS.

Important Factor In Developing Character and Educating the Young.

While the school garden as an education proposition is in a general sense in its infancy, its effect on public school children who have come under its influence has been quite marked and most encouraging. The efforts of the department of agriculture to add inspiration to the cause by providing garden facilities for the Washington scholars have shown that not only does the prescribed work in actual gardening tend to broaden their intellectual capacity, but it also develops refinement in a greater or less degree and, above all, improves the moral tone. This would go to show that the government might well exercise itself in the direction of educating school garden teachers to the end of developing good citizens in their future pupils.

At a meeting of school superintendents in Washington great interest was manifested in this work, and the results so far accomplished and on record served to show that the school garden can be made, in fact is, a decidedly important factor in the development of character and the general education of the young for the benefit of any community. Looked upon as an important, legitimate function of the government to promote such a phase of public education, it is to be expected that some available scheme involving government aid may be presented to congress and receive its sanction and support.—Los Angeles Times.

Incentive to Trade.

Keep track of your sales each day. It will be a help to you later on.

At the close of each day's business enter in your personal memorandum book your total sales for the day; also make totals for each week and each month. For the first year you can make weekly and monthly comparisons, and after a year you can compare your sales each day. These comparisons will serve to act as an incentive in your work, for you will find yourself trying to beat your previous records. You will find that it is interesting to do this. It is a good thing for the store, so it cannot help but be a good thing for you also.

UPBUILDING HINTS.

How to Keep Your Own Town Before the Public.

It is up to the citizens of every town, be it large or small, to keep it prominently before the public as an enterprising, hustling town, one where good people would not object to living and raising their children. We don't believe in trying to make of every town and village a manufacturing center and one destined to become a city in a comparatively short time. All such statements are vain and misleading. But there is scarcely a town which by co-operation of its citizens may not be kept alive and made attractive. By the organization of the business men in all lines, and every town should have such an organization, a great deal may be accomplished toward its prosperity. Some organizations undertake too much at the beginning, and, failing, their members become discouraged and give up in despair, when if, on the other hand, they had only undertaken one or two things at a time and laid their plans well and worked to them they would have made a success of the venture.

Good roads are one thing needed in a number of places, and one good road leading to and through a town will contribute very considerably to its well being. A good place where farmers can hitch their teams and where they can be provided with water, etc., is an attraction worth all it costs. A rest room, provided each store has none, where the wives and daughters of the visiting customers may find such comforts as they usually require on such occasions is also an item not to be overlooked.

When a few conservative business men get to working together for the advancement and upbuilding of their local interests ideas of value will suggest themselves and they will always find something worthy of consideration.

Good schools, attractive church buildings and such things will attract worthy citizens.—Retail Merchant.

"I WANT all my loyal Rapublican friends in Garrett county to support the entire Republican ticket from Mr. Williams, the candidate for Comptroller, down to James A. Sincell, for County Surveyor. Defeat the Amendment and vote for D. Lindley Sloan for Judge of the Fourth Judicial Circuit."—Congressman Geo. A. Pearre, at Deer Park, October 15.

"IT SHALL be my highest aim to carry out the wishes of the people in every particular. I know no bosses or dictation except the sovereign will of the people. If there is an element of strength in my character it is that of independence, freedom of thought and action, but at the same time I believe in party organization. Upon organization rests the foundation of the Republic and all successful enterprises."—Extract from a speech of Harvey J. Speicher, Republican candidate for State Senate.

ELECT THE TICKET.

With proper effort a great victory will be won by the Republican party in the coming election. It will be beyond question the most important election which has confronted our party in Maryland since the days of the Civil War. It will be the second election day on which the life of the Republican party in the State has been threatened by a disfranchising amendment proposed by the Democracy in order to perpetuate its power. The first time was in 1905. The last time should and will be November 2, 1909, if Republicans will but do their duty.

It is to be hoped that the individual Republican will not consider a complete performance of his duty embraced in merely voting on election day. Much more is hoped and expected of him than this. Between now and the time of the election he should preach the doctrines of Republicanism wherever he has a chance, and should make his influence felt against the Straus disfranchising amendment and in behalf of the whole ticket, State, judicial and county, whenever and wherever he has the opportunity. And if such occasions do not present themselves, he should endeavor to create them, if possible.

It is the great desire and present policy of the Republican party in Maryland to teach the Democracy a lasting lesson in every county of the State. One way to do this is by the overwhelming defeat of the Straus amendment. Another way is the defeat the Democratic State, judicial and county ticket in its entirety. And in any event and in every case the majorities must be decisive.

Of vital importance is the Republican senatorial and legislative ticket. We need each and every one of the Republican nominees on the senatorial and legislative ticket, and they must each and everyone be elected by majorities which will reflect the full voting strength of the party. We need these men in the Legislature for two great and paramount purposes,—first, to prevent by their votes and influence there the proposal by the Democratic party of another disfranchisement amendment in future; and, second, we need them there to prevent by their votes and influence in that body, if possible, the reelection to the United States Senate of Isidor Rayner, the man who has attacked the Constitution of his country and villified the administration of our own great Republican governor, and the State's foremost citizen, the lamented Lloyd Lowndes. No Republican who takes a real pride in the name can afford to think of voting against a single one of his party's nominees who, if elected, will sit in the next Legislature, and any one of whom might have it in his individual power as a member of that body to bring about the election of a Republican United United States Senator or the rejection of some new Democratic proposition of disfranchisement.

And by overwhelming majorities, also, must be elected the entire Republican ticket, judicial and county, from sheriff to surveyor, one and all. All these men are stalwart upstanding Republicans,—intelligent, cleancut, competent, practical and reliable. Each of them is an ideal man for the place to which he aspires and for which the Republican party has named him. Each working hard for the defeat of the Straus amendment and for the success of his fellow-members on the ticket. All this is as it should be and is contributing in eminent degree to the splendid victory that awaits the entire ticket on election day.

A NONPARTISAN JUDICIARY.

The Republican party, under proper conditions and at proper times and places, has always stood for the principle of a nonpartisan judiciary. Its attitude on this subject was effectively shown when the late Governor Lowndes appointed Democrats to succeed deceased Democratic judges, and when he designated the late James McSherry, Democrat, to succeed another Democrat as chief justice of the Maryland Court of Appeals.

But the nonpartisan judiciary principle is not to be considered a one-sided proposition. It pre-eminently calls for reciprocity. It must be a case of give as well as take. It must be subject to mutuality. It does not mean that the Democratic party shall arrogate to itself a practical monopoly of the bench of the State and deny to members of the Republican party, otherwise competent, participation in the judicial function merely by reason of the fact that they are members or nominees of the Republican party.

It may be suggested that so long as we have good judges, their political faith should be a matter of indifference. This is quite true, and under proper circumstances might be adopted as a principle of action. But the political faith of the members of the judiciary does not seem to be a matter of indifference to the Democratic party in this State if we are to judge by the wholesale extent to which that party has succeeded in electing its members to the bench. Under the circumstances, therefore, it is but right and proper that the Republican party should nominate duly qualified men and seek adequate representation upon the bench of the State and particularly upon that of the Court of Appeals.

In no case has a Democratic governor of Maryland appointed a Republican to succeed either a Republican or Democratic judge. In a number of cases Democratic governors have appointed Democrats to succeed Republican judges elected by the people. These facts, to say the least, must be considered significant, and to the Republicans they certainly are significant. The instances in which the Democracy have formally joined in the re-election of Republican judges are so isolated as to be almost negligible, and have as a rule occurred under the pressure of obvious political necessity. But however this may be, such cases are more than equaled by the occasions on which the Republican party has formally joined in the re-election of Democratic judges. These facts would not seem to indicate that the nonpartisan judiciary principle is a cardinal doctrine of the Maryland Democracy.

It is also so evident as to be almost unworthy of comment that the partisanship of the Democratic party is not confined to matters connected with the election or appointment of members of the judiciary. The Democratic party, by means of its disfranchising amendment, is engaged in a work of the most bitter, unrelenting and reprehensible partisanship, and which, if successful, involves fatality for the Republican party of Maryland and means nullification and neutralization of the influence of the independent vote of the State.

It would hardly seem timely, appropriate or consistent for the Democratic party, under the circumstances, to invoke the aid of Republican voters in the election of Democratic nominees for the bench or other offices. The party of disfranchisement should be satisfied with such assistance as it can procure from its own members and sympathizers. Republicans should now find in this, the second, attempt of the Democracy by means of the Straus amendment to destroy the Republican party, their full right, franchise and justification for supporting every nominee on the Republican ticket, state, judicial and county, in every part of the State. There is no excuse in any case to lend aid or comfort to an enemy which would destroy the Republican party if it could, and which is perpetually seeking the power to destroy it. The Republican nominees for the bench of the Court of Appeals are particularly worthy of support. Mr. Sloan, in the Fourth Judicial Circuit, and Mr. Urner, in the Sixth Judicial Circuit, are lawyers of great ability, of demonstrated integrity and of the widest kind of legal experience. They deserve the support not only of Republicans, but of men of independent thought as well, and if members of the Republican party are to be granted that participation in the functions of the Court of Appeals to which they are equally entitled with members of the Democratic party, and for which, to say the least, they are equally qualified with members of the Democratic party, then it follows as a matter of course that these Republican nominees for the bench of the State's highest court should be elected. Their election would blaze the way for a nonpartisan judiciary in fact as well as in name.

"UPON all subjects presented to the legislature for its deliberation I propose to give my utmost, careful, earnest and conscientious consideration, and I shall vote, as I believe, will be for the best interest of the people of our State and for our County."—Harvey J. Speicher, candidate for State Senate, at Crellin.

Republican Candidate for House of Delegates.

MR. J. E. CHAPPELL.

Mr. J. E. Chappell, one of the candidates for the House of Delegates, was born 1874. He is a son of Rev. Abner M. Chappell, a prominent minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who has filled many important charges for more than 25 years throughout the southern counties of Virginia, and in Greenbriar and Monroe Counties of West Virginia.

Mr. J. E. Chappell was educated in the U. S. Grant University, Athens and Chattanooga. After leaving college he taught in the public schools for several years with marked success. For the past fifteen years he has been engaged in business in Kitzmiller, and for four years postmaster at that place.

Mr. Chappell was married in 1897 to Miss Lillian Rafter, a daughter of John H. Rafter, and four children bless their happy home. Mr. John H. Rafter is one of the pioneers and well known business men of Garrett County, being extensively interested in valuable coal properties, real estate and other enterprises in Kitzmiller and vicinity.

Mr. Chappell in religion is of the Methodist faith, a man of temperance habits, as well as an advocate of the temperance cause, and possessed of a character of sterling worth.

In politics he has always been a strong advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, always voting the straight Republican ticket since he attained his majority. He is held in high esteem by all who know him. His fitness for the office is undisputed and if elected he will ably represent the people of Garrett County during the coming session of the General Assembly.

Voters you will make no mistake in working and casting your ballots for Mr. Chappell on Tuesday, November 2nd.

Why All Republicans Should Support the Candidacy of D. Lindley Sloan for Chief Judge of the Fourth Judicial Circuit.

I. He is a man of good moral character.

II. He belongs to a family of people who are broadminded and liberal in their views to all their fellowmen.

III. He is a loyal and consistent Republican.

IV. He has never been an office holder.

V. He is not now and never has been a corporation lawyer.

VI. As the nominee of his party he is opposed to his fellowmen losing the sacred rights of liberty.

VII. He does not belong to the silk stocking aristocracy.

VIII. He would make a fair and impartial judge.

IX. He could serve his fifteen years upon the bench without being retired upon a pension of two hundred dollars a month of the taxpayers money.

X. And last—but not least all the working men, farmers and the common people should support him for this reason, if no other: the great railroad corporations are opposed to him.

Republican Standard Bearers Meeting With Encouragement.

SWANTON STIRRED.

The Republican meeting held at Swanton on last Wednesday evening was a grand success. The candidates, accompanied by Mr. J. Griffin Hall, of Baltimore, went down from Oakland early in the afternoon and personally met a number of the residents of the neighborhood. When Mr. Samuel Lawton called the meeting to order the hall was filled to overflowing, and it was said that it was the largest gathering of the kind held in that vicinity for years. The officers of the meeting were: Mr. L. H. Friend, president; Mr. J. W. McRobie, secretary, and Messrs. Wm. Junkins, W. B. Sweet, Jerry Mankis, Geo. Friend, Milford Glass, Truman Switzer and M. C. George.

D. E. Bolden and J. E. Chappel, candidates for House of Delegates, were the first speakers, and were followed by Andrew Shartzer, candidate for sheriff, and D. M. Dixon, candidate for County Commissioner, all of whom made brief and interesting speeches.

Mr. Harvey J. Speicher, candidate for the State Senate, was next introduced and was greeted with much applause. Mr. Speicher was at his best and made an address that stirred the entire audience, and at the close of the meeting was warmly congratulated and received many assurances of support from voters of various political affiliations. Everybody put on a Speicher button.

Mr. Hall was the last speaker and after prefacing his remarks with a number of jokes and witticisms, which put everybody in a good humor, he delivered a strong, logical and convincing address upon the issues of the campaign. His appeal for the defeat of the amendment, and for the election of Frank E. Williams, for comptroller, D. Lindley Sloan, for judge, and the entire local ticket, was warmly applauded, and his sallies of wit at the so-called "People's Party" provoked much laughter and merriment.

The Deer Park Band, to which Mr. Hall claims to belong (they saw him first), gave an unusually fine program of selections.

So far all these meetings have been very largely attended and very enthusiastic, and upon every side there is unmistakable evidences of a complete victory for the entire ticket.

SPLENDID MEETING AT CRELLIN.

On Thursday evening of last week the Republicans held a very large, interesting and enthusiastic meeting in the school house at Crellin. The candidates, speakers and the members of the Deer Park Band went over from Oakland early in the evening and took supper, and a very pleasant and sociable time was had prior to the meeting.

The large and comfortable school house was filled to its utmost capacity, and everybody seemed to enter in the spirit of the meeting. Every point made by the speakers was greeted with loud applause.

Mr. J. C. Renninger, state's attorney, made the opening address, and was followed in turn by Messrs. Geo. W. Legge, Jr., of the Oakland bar; Harvey J. Speicher, candidate for the State Senate; D. E. Bolden and J. Elbert Chappell, candidates for House of Delegates; D. M. Dixon, candidate for County Commissioner; Robert L. Fries, candidate for County Treasurer; Andrew Shartzer, candidate for Sheriff, and J. Griffin Hall, of Baltimore. County Chairman Austin Brown called the meeting to order. Mr. Chas. Edwards was president and Raymond M. Saucer, secretary.

BIG MEETING AT DEER PARK.

The large hall at Deer Park was crowded to its utmost capacity last Friday night, notwithstanding the very unpleasant weather.

Congressman Geo. A. Pearre and the other speakers and candidates went down from Oakland on the 4:40 p. m. train and took supper at the home of Hon. Chas. Ashby, where a very delightful social time was had.

Dr. J. W. Laughlin was chairman of the meeting with Mr. A. M. Jefferies as secretary. Hon. Geo. A. Pearre was the first speaker, and for two hours held the close attention of all while he delivered a stirring, eloquent and convincing address urging the defeat of the Straus amendment and the election of the entire Republican ticket. He asked all his loyal Republican friends to support the local candidates and made personal reference to each of them.

Mr. Harvey J. Speicher, candidate for State Senate, spoke next and clearly demonstrated, as he has been doing at all these meetings, that he will be one of the most fearless and capable representatives in the next Senate of Maryland. All present realized that he will be fully able to take the floor to defend and support any measure that he may champion.

Mr. J. Griffin Hall, of Baltimore, and Geo. W. Legge, Jr., of Oakland, also made brief and interesting addresses. Mr. Hall spoke very complimentary of the Deer Park Band, which with the Mountain City Band, of Oakland, furnished the music.

BIG TURN OUT AT BRAY.

Last Saturday evening when Mr Samuel Lawton called the Republican meeting to order, at Bray school house, it was literally packed to the doors. It was conceded by all present to have been the largest of the kind ever held in that neighborhood. It was indeed a fitting close of the first week of one of the most active and aggresive campaigns ever waged in Garrett county.

The Mountain City Band enlivened the occasion with well rendered selections of popular airs, and addresses were delivered by State's Attorney J. C. Renninger, Harvey J. Speicher, D. M. Dixon, Andrew Shartzer and J. Griffin Hall, of Baltimore. Mr. Renninger, in the course of his address, made a very feeling reference to that old sterling and loyal Republican, Mr. John Garrett, who was not able to be present on account of illness. The meeting closed about 10:30 o'clock, and everybody left feeling that they had been not only instructed as well by the addresses delivered. Mr. Hall's funny stories and illustrations were especially well received.

ACCIDENT AROUSED.

ACCIDENT, Oct. 18.—The Republican meeting held here this evening was a very large and enthusiastic one.

The school house was crowded to the doors, and many were compelled to stand.

Mr. Samuel Lawton called the meeting to order. Mr. C. C. Speicher was the president and Mr. A. C. Guthrie secretary.

Mr. George W. Legge, Jr., was the first speaker, and he delivered a very interesting and forcible address. Mr. Harvey J. Speicher was next introduced and made a speech which was received with applause.

D. E. Bolden, J. M. Lowdermilk, candidate for County Commissioner, and Andrew Shartzer followed with brief addresses. Mr. J. B. Emory came next and held the close attention of all while he delivered an excellent address upon the issues of the campaign. Mr. J. Griffin Hall was the last speaker.

The Mountain City Band furnished the music. They also stopped at Ho[illegible] on the way down and played a number of fine selections for the entertainment of the school children and others.

TWO TRACKMEN STRUCK BY TRAIN NO. 14.

At Bond Junction Monday Afternoon—One Killed and the Other Maimed.

Monday afternoon train No. 14, the Cincinnati-New York mail and express, which passes Oakland at 4.17 o'clock, struck two trackmen at Bond Junction, a station on the Seventeen Mile Grade where the railroad of DuBois & Bond Bros., connects with the B. & O., instantly killing one of the men and maiming the other for life provided he recovers from the terrible injuries he sustained.

The man killed outright was named Tulius Bohmlefink, of Baltimore, where he leaves a wife and six small children, and the other was Charles Warnick, of this county, who resides near the point where he received his injuries. The two men had been to Piedmont during the day and had returned to Bond Junction where they were standing on the track when train No. 14 bore down upon them. A freight train was approaching from the east and it is presumed the noise of the latter train drowned that of the passenger, which train struck the men, throwing Warnick beneath the wheels of the freight which severed both his legs and otherwise injuring him, while his companion was killed outright by the passenger train.

The engineer of train 14 stopped his engine as quickly as he could and when it was found that Warnick was still living he was taken to the Hoffman Hospital in Keyser where both his lower limbs were amputated and his other injuries attended to.

Warnick was recently tried before the Garrett county Circuit Court on the charge of theft and wrs paroled by Judge Henderson for a term of three years.

The "swap" social conducted last night by the members of the Luther League in the supper room of the Lutheran church was largely attended and a very social evening was spent by those present.

Mrs. D. E. Offutt went to Baltimore last Friday morning to visit her daughter Miss Nell, who has been in that city several weeks receiving medical treatment. Miss Offutt's condition on Friday was such as to give her friends some concern, hence the visit to Baltimore of her mother.

Rev. E. Manges and Mr. James A. Sincell, delegates from the Oakland Lutheran church to the Maryland Synod of that denomination now being held in Dr. Dunbar's church in Baltimore, left for that city yesterday morning. The Synod will be in session several days, and a large attendance is expected.

Mr. Joseph E. Harned returned to Oakland last Saturday from West Liberty, Iowa, to which place he was called a few days preceding owing to the sudden death of his father, the late John Harned, whose funeral took place there last Thursday. He was accompanied to Oakland by Mrs. Harned, who will reside with her sister at Terra Alta.

Rev. G. R. Williamson, the recently appointed pastor of St. Paul's M. E. church in Oakland, preached his initial sermon last Sunday morning to a large and attentive congregation. Many, or we may say, all, of his auditors were extremely gratified with his address which bespeaks for him a successful pastorate of the Oakland church.

Mr. A. W. Killius, of near Sunnyside, left Oakland yesterday morning for Kalona, Iowa, where he expects to spend the winter with relatives. There are located in and about Kalona quite a colony of Garrett countians, among them being Mr. W. J. Kitzmiller and brother, formerly of McHenry, and a member of the Lichty family formerly of Grantsville.

Dr. and Mrs. R. B. Ward, their son LaMark and Miss Tecla Johnson, will leave Oakland today for Cameron, W. Va., where Dr. Ward was recently appointed as minister by the Conference held at Mannington, W. Va. Dr. Ward has promised his many friends to pay them periodical visits during the remaining fall months and drop in to see us occasionally during the winter. His successor, as District Superintendent, Dr. Reed, has arrived in Oakland with his family and will occupy the Ward residence during his stay in Oakland. While the many friends of Dr. Ward and his family regret to have them depart they at the same time extend a cordial welcome to his successor.

Rev. J. B. Workman and family will leave Oakland today for Wheeling, where Mr. Workman goes as pastor of Wesley Chapel. The great success attending his pastorate in Oakland where he more than doubled the membership of St. Paul's church, his many friends here and elsewhere expect to see him repeat in his new work where the field is larger and where he will have a greater opportunity to expend his energies in the great work in which he is engaged. Mr. Workman as well as Mrs. Workman and their interesting family, have made hundreds of friends in Oakland and the community surrounding, all of whom regret their departure. May success attend them wherever they may roside.

Mr. Ellithorp Continues His Interesting Letters.

To the Editor of THE REPUBLICAN:

The weather has been dry and the roads are very dusty. Stubble plowing is about all done: sod plowing is delayed until it rains. Threshing is in full blast. Grain is turning out well and the quality is good, with price high. Stock is also high: live hogs $7 25 per hundred; cattle $4.25 per hundred, and calves from $12 to $15 per head.

There are some farms changing hands at from $55 to $100 per acre. Corn will soon be fit to husk. They do not cut and shock corn here as we do in Maryland. They just husk it and leave the stalks standing: but they sow some corn and that they cut with a machine and and feed in the shock.

The death of Governor Johnson of this State is mourned by all, not only in Minnesota but all over the land. All realize that Minnesota has lost a good governor and the nation an able statesman.

We have been fishing some since we came back from Pine county. We spent three days in the town of Granger and engaged in boat fishing in the Iowa river. As usual, I did the fishing and my wife did the catching. She got one two inches long and several smaller ones.

We have visited one of our cousins who farms on a pretty extensive scale. He has just finished threshing 3700 bu. of grain and has seventy-five acres of corn. He has 140 head of hogs and a lot of cattle and horses.

One of my uncles gave us a goose roast Sunday, Oct, 3rd, as that was my birthday.

The man Who Makes

A STUDY OF HIS APPEARANCE

Is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we mould into the garments give them a character that finishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the owner complete.

All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city of several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator s still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

MYSTERIOUS MISS ASTOR.

The Finishing Touch to Her Castle In the Air.

By WILLIAM D. WHITE.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

Whence she had come no one knew. The guests at the hotel had spent days trying to solve this mystery, for every one knew there was a mystery—every one, from the round faced bellboy to the rheumatic old millionaire who smilingly nodded from his seat in the sunlight whenever she passed by.

The girl wore plain clothes, but they were so dainty, so well worn and so tastefully chosen that no one guessed that she possessed a single evening gown. She was retiring, almost shy, and seemed to be herself only when with children. The presence of strangers seemed to render her most unhappy.

She had rented a large front room and had sought a tiny table in the dining room away from the others. She had registered as Margarette Astor in a firm hand, and many of the guests had looked more than once upon the signature as if therein might lie the key to the mystery.

The feminine guests who were wont to sit on the veranda rocking their chairs from the first of June until the middle of September, discussing social events and comparing husbands and incomes, now had a new theme. Who might Miss Astor be? What was her past? Why did she so pointedly avoid the Monday night card party and shun their sacred circle?

"Any one can see," said Miss Herrelia Morton, a person of doubtful age, whose family consisted of two brindle bulldogs, "that she has plenty of money and—and that she's very young to be traveling alone."

But Miss Astor continued to keep to herself, in spite of her intuitive knowledge that she was doing herself no good in the eyes of the porch brigade by doing so. She slept late the first morning, climbed a nearby mountain at sunrise the second, and on the third day she set out in search of blueberries.

It was on the fourth morning of her stay that Harry Davis, a young and wealthy lumberman, was strolling through a lonely lane not far from the hotel. All at once he heard a shrill cry, and at the same moment he noticed a riderless horse leap over the fence.

Rushing quickly to the spot whence the sound had come, he beheld a somewhat frightened, dust begrimed young woman. She had been picking berries when the runaway horse dashed through the bushes and frightened her.

She gave vent to a little cry at the sight of Davis, and as he offered her his strong arm to assist her she looked into his eyes. She murmured her thanks and wondered at the fluttering of her usually well behaved heart.

Much as Davis disliked the average wealthy girl and the summer resort type of young womanhood, he became greatly interested in Miss Astor. Though he had intended to spend only a day or two in the country, he found himself postponing his return indefinitely. There seemed to be so much to talk about, there were so many places round about the hotel that Miss Astor never had seen, and, altogether, he found the time passing far too quickly.

The tongues on the veranda began to wag vociferously. Fond mothers who yearly spent small fortunes at summer resorts trying to find eligible partners for their daughters longingly wished that these same daughters had golden hair and appealing blue eyes. While their daughters sat in dejected twos and threes wishing vainly that they might travel alone, Miss Astor and Harry Davis wandered here and there in utter oblivion to it all.

On the very day on which Davis had decided in his own heart that he loved Margarette Astor and could not be happy without her he received a telegram urging his immediate return to the office. Business that could not be transacted by his subordinates called him home.

He sought the girl and told her what had happened, asking her at the same time to go for a last walk with him.

In her simple white frock and with her shining golden hair coiled softly about her head she waited for him under the great tree in front of the hotel. She was hatless, but she carried a parasol dotted with tiny silk rosebuds. Even in their envy of her the members of the rocking chair fleet could not help the admiration that forced itself into their glances as they beheld her. She was indeed pretty.

Davis and Margarette strolled along the country road listening to the birds and to the steady click-click of a mowing machine in a field near by. For a time they walked in silence, neither one finding words to fit into the exquisite tranquillity of the scene.

At length they came to a running brook and halted by its side. They stood on the bank gazing into the mirror-like water. As Davis studied the reflection of the girl in the brook he fancied he saw her brush away a tear.

He turned suddenly toward her to make sure. He sought her eyes and saw within them unshed tears. With a fervent cry, he stepped toward her.

Margarette shrank back nervously, hysterically. "I—I can't," she said, looking into his outstretched arms. "I—I—I have deceived you. I am nothing but an impostor! I am not at all what you think I am. I"— But she could say no more. She burst into sobs and covered her face with her hands.

Davis, abashed, drew back for a moment. Only the girl's sobbing and the whispering of the wind to the leaves all about them broke the silence.

"Tell me," said the man very softly at last.

"You see," said the girl, her face turned from him, "I am not Margarette Astor at all—I'm only Mabel Arndt—and I work—for a living. I haven't always had to work, but—but those days were long ago, so long that no one remembers them, no one whom I know now," she said wearily.

The man waited for her to go on.

"Each year, instead of taking the vacation that was due me, I have saved my money until I could accumulate enough to spend a short time in the way that I used to live—the way I always dream of living again. Perhaps you think I'm foolish, but I've pinched and saved and waited and managed—and dreamed. I've saved even car fares to have these few days of ideal living, free from work and care and worry. I—I even changed my name so as to make my castle more nearly real." She paused, breathless, and a weary little sigh escaped her.

"What else?" asked the man.

"There isn't anything else—only I—I'm not the girl you believed me to be."

The man put his hand beneath her chin and raised her face to his own. "Would you commercialize love?" he asked earnestly. "Would you care less for a man who was poor?"

"No—but"—

He drew her to himself and kissed her. And only a tiny frolicking squirrel perched high on a nearby pine saw what followed.

Sickroom Visitors.

Three days after the operation the doctor told the patient that she could have company. "Not too many at first, you know," he said, "but two or three visitors a day."

"But I don't want company," the patient surprised him by saying.

"Don't want company? Well, you're the first person I've heard say that."

"Very little, I mean, doctor. I don't want to see many of my friends. Didn't you ever notice the mannerisms that everybody has? It's just the little habits that people get into that are most wearing when you are sick, and I'm always inclined to tell persons right out that they're annoying me. Then, of course, if I do they're hurt. You know the sort of little characteristics that are often noted in the courtroom, how the judge swings his glasses and the lawyer twists his hair and the prisoner swings his foot back and forth. When I am sick there's nothing more annoying than those little habits. I don't know a soul who hasn't got some few habits that are very unpleasant when I am sick, and I think everybody will agree with me. People are not good in a sickroom, as a rule, just because they have some harmless little habit like rocking violently in a chair or beating a tattoo on the table or fiddling with something in the hands."—New York Press.

Six Dollars For a Cent.

"'A penny saved is a penny earned' may be a good maxim," said the occupant of bachelor apartment No. 807, "but it doesn't always apply. Economy means bankruptcy sometimes."

"How do you figure that?" asked the occupant of apartment No. 809.

"I tried to save a penny this morning," said 807, "with disastrous and expensive results. I had opened my hall door to pick up my morning paper. As I stooped a cent dropped from my trousers pocket and began to roll down the hallway. I ignored the paper and made a snatch at the cent, which, however, eluded my grasp. The sudden exertion and strain caused my eyeglasses to fall from my nose, both lenses being broken, of course. Just then a gust of wind from the open windows of my apartment caused the door to close behind me, and there I stood in my shirt sleeves in the hall, my penny gone, my glasses gone and my newspapers, too, for that had in the meantime blown down the hall and out of the window. In addition, my rear suspender buttons were torn off by my sudden lurch at the penny, and incidentally I crushed a half dollar's worth of cigars in my vest pocket. Altogether I calculate that that cent cost me just $6."—New York Tribune.

The Exception.

"How about the opposite side of the street?" asked the demoralizer.—Judge.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

IT is wise to note that after experiencing drowning the most enthusiastic swimmer no longer enjoys the sport.

Probably the reason why most of us don't do better is simple enough. We don't know how, but don't like to own it.

It pays to be honest, but sometimes the pay is slow.

We are constantly getting pointers from all sorts of sources. The trouble with them, however, is that they aren't sharp enough to stick.

There may be more than one way of skinning a cat, but there is only one way after the cat is skinned for it to be dead.

Being able to know more than the rest of your fellows is often a mere matter of keeping still and listening.

A dollar doesn't care who owns it; a man does.

High minded people don't need a balloon to prove it.

In Prospect.

In seventy years or maybe less
The oil will be exhausted.
With crude petroleum no more
The Standard will get frosted.
The pipe lines lying in the ground
Will moldy be and rusted,
And folks may hear as a result
That one great trust is busted.

A hardship it will truly be,
For nothing could be tougher.
Some people now who roll in wealth
Perhaps will have to suffer.
The world may have to pass the hat
And take up a collection
When crude petroleum no more
With pine lines makes connection.

For oil and water will not mix
When in the tank together.
So how could Joan lay something by
For wet and stormy weather?
And it would certainly be rough
On Mr. Rockefeller
If he were caught out in the rain
Without a big umbrellar.

Let us rejoice we do not have
Our wealth in oil invested.
So when the crude supply runs low
We will not be molested.
The dividends look mighty nice.
But they at length must dwindle
When hired girls have only wood
With which the fires to kindle.

He Had Evoluted.

"I could a tail unfold"— began the newly fledged frog.

Then he paused and seemed to be wrapped in meditation.

"But," he concluded, "that is a thing of the past. I'm no longer a tadpole."

Saving Trouble.

"Did he leave a will?"
"Yes."
"How did he dispose of his money?"
"Left it all to the lawyers."
"What was his idea?"
"Thought it would simplify matters."

Sounded That Way.

"How is his courtship coming on?"
"He is on his second lap."
"What! Got two girls?"

Nothing Doing.

"She is pretty."
"Yes, but rather vain."
"And that's not all."
"Why?"
"Because her prettiness and her vanity are all in vain."

No, Indeed.

"The sun is mighty scorching these days, but"—
"But what?"
"I notice women still hate to be thrown into the shade."

Lasting Impression.

"I haven't any appetite."
"Any ailment?"
"Yes."
"What is it?"
"Last night's banquet."

Hence the Name.

"What kind of trees do tree toads grow on?"
"They grow on a bush."
"Is that so?"
"Yes—the hop."

Always Flashing It.

"Isn't May the lucky girl?"
"Yes. She's got an engagement ring."
"Yes, and, what's more, she's left handed."

Brave.

Swinging in a hammock
With a lovely maid,
Evening almost chilly,
Just to order made,
Who would be so silly
As to be afraid?

KODAK SAFETY FILM

RAYNER ATTACKS THE CONSTITUTION.

A Democratic United States Senator from Maryland, the Hon. Isidor Rayner, makes bold, we regret to say, to attack the Constitution of his country. In his speech at Broadway Hall, Baltimore city, Friday night, he used the following language:

"The Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States was forced upon the people of the South by the most iniquitous system of tyranny and corruption that was ever perpetrated in the annals of any free people and nothwithstanding the clamorous protest that comes from the Republican party of Maryland, we, the people of the South, shall use every effort in our power to sustain the Straus amendment, and, if it violates the Fifteenth Amendment, to have the Fifteenth Amendment rejected and set aside by the courts. And if this be perfidy or treason, make the most of it."

Then, again, in his speech at Elkton, Cecil county, last week, Mr. Rayner used the following language, reproduced below verbatim:

"We (the Democratic party) intend to come as near as we can to violating the Constitution of the United States, without actually violating it."

Again, referring to the Straus disfranchising amendment in connection with the courts of the State, which, and especially the Court of Appeals, are overwhelmingly Democratic, Mr. Rayner said:

"We (the Democratic party) are not afraid of the courts. If the courts hold the amendment unconstitutional that is the end of it. But, as I have predicted on every hustings that I have appeared on in Maryland, the courts will never take this step."

Exception is very properly taken to Mr. Rayner's use of the phrase, "we, the people of the South," in the first paragraph from his speech quoted above. Maryland is not a Southern State, and her people are not among those who sought to destroy the Union at the cannon's mouth. For the absolute truth of this assertion we refer Senator Rayner to the message of President Lincoln to the second session of the Thirty-seventh Congress in December, 1861, in which the immortal Republican president used the following language:

"Noble little Delaware led off in defence of the Union right from the first, and Maryland, which had been made to seem against the Union, has given seven regiments to the loyal cause, and none to the enemy, and her people, at a regular election, have sustained the Union by a larger majority and a larger aggregate vote than they ever before gave to any candidate on any question."

Senator Rayner's attempt to have Maryland considered "a Southern State" and her people "Southern people," is at once contrary to the facts of history and offensive to Republicans and all other loyal citizens of the State. Whatever Mr. Rayner and the Democratic party may think on the subject, the words of the sainted Lincoln, given above, is good enough for Republicans and should settle the question for all time.

Let us now consider Mr. Rayner's statement that "the Democratic party intends to come as near as it can to violating the Constitution of the United States without actually violating it."

This statement of Mr. Rayner refers to the Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. What is the Fifteenth Amendment and how does it read?

The Fifteenth Amendment reads in exact words as follows:

"The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude."

The gradual progress of public opinion in the United States on questions relating to slavery and the personal and political rights of the colored race may be clearly traced in the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution.

The Thirteenth Amendment, proposed by Congress while the war was yet flagrant, simply declared that neither slavery nor involuntary servitude should exist in the United States or in any place subject to national jurisdiction.

The Fourteenth Amendment advanced the negro to the status of a citizen, but did nothing affirmatively to confer the right of suffrage upon him.

The Fifteenth Amendment, set out verbatim above, was imperatively necessary to protect the freedman in the exercise of the rights of personal and civil liberty conferred upon him by the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments. These latter two Amendments for all substantial purposes, would have been void and without effect, but for the adoption of the Fifteenth Amendment.

Mr. Rayner's attack on the Constitution of his country and his threats against the Fifteenth Amendment can not but re-act to the personal discredit of himself as a statesman and to the confusion of the party which he represents. The Constitutional Amendments were proposed and adopted under the belief that they would be honorably observed and enforced in all the States, North and South, alike. The presumption is certainly in favor of loyal obedience to the organic law of the Republic, without which anarchy has already begun its evil work. If, however, by reason of infidelity to Constitutional provisions in some sections, if by violence in resisting them in others, such as Mr. Rayner preaches, it be suggested that they should have been drawn with greater circumspection, with a broader comprehension of all the contingencies of the future, the fact yet remains that they are of priceless value to the Government and to the people. The Republican party could not free the negro on the battlefield and then desert him in the hour of his need to persecutions worse than slavery. The three Constitutional Amendments have added largely to the muniments of personal liberty; they have immeasurably increased the just power of the National Government; they have exerted a constantly growing force against the spirit that organized the Rebellion; they have strengthened the bonds of the Union against every form of danger which it has hitherto encountered.

Without the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments, the latter of which Mr. Rayner attacks, the Thirteenth Amendment, which abolished slavery, would have proved of little value to the oppressed race which it declared to be free. In every step taken after the simple article of emancipation was decreed, the Republican party which controlled the Government met with obstacles from without and within. There were many within its own ranks who did not want the negro advanced to citizenship; there were those who were unwilling to see him advanced to the elective franchise. But, happily, there were hundreds of thousands who plainly saw that without the rights of citizenship his freedom could be maintained only in name, and that without the elective franchise his citizenship would have no legitimate or substantial protection.

Mr. Isidor Rayner's attacks on the Constitution of his country, and his threats to substitute the Straus disfranchising measure for the Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States is an insult to the brave men, most of whom have now passed beyond with the illustrious Lincoln, who led the Republican party to its duty and its mission, who overcame the forces of the Rebellion and the numbers of the opposition, who lifted their associates from the slough of prejudice and led them out of the darkness of tradition into the sunlight of human liberty. To the great men of the great Republican party let there be all honor and praise, in spite of the villifications of Mr. Rayner. They gave hope to the hopeless, help to the helpless, and freedom to the downtrodden. They did more: they elevated the character and enlightened the conscience of the oppressing race. Mr. Rayner's threats indicate that the struggle is not yet ended, the final battle is not fought; but complete victory sooner or later is assured. The three great Amendments to the Constitution were bought with a great price—even the blood of the slain—and they will assuredly in their letter and spirit be vindicated and enforced. Abraham Lincoln taught his countrymen the lesson that he who would be no slave must be content to have no slave. The Democratic party in Maryland and all its nominees, State, judicial and county, must be taught with equal emphasis that he who would preserve his own right to suffrage must never aid in depriving another citizen, however humble, of the same great boon. In moral as in physical conflicts it may be easy to determine who strikes the first blow, but it is difficult to foresee who may strike the last.

As to Mr. Rayner's boast that "the Democratic party is not afraid of the courts" in connection with the Straus amendment, this utterance like his prediction that the Maryland courts will uphold the Straus amendment in the teeth of the Constitution of the United States, is an insult to every decent and law-abiding citizen in the State. Mr. Rayner evidently makes this prediction in view of the fact that the courts of Maryland, and especially the Court of Appeals, are overwhelmingly Democratic—the latter tritunal containing only one Republican. It is well that Mr. Rayner serves this warning of what he expects the Democratic courts to do. It simply furnishes an additional reason, if any were necessary, why the Republican party must and will have adequate representation on the bench of the Court of Appeals, and holds forth an unanswerable argument for the defeat of every nominee on the Democratic ticket who fails to declare himself against the Straus amendment.

For the Constitutional Amendment, Against the Constitutional Amendment, said proposed amendment to the Constution of the State of Maryland being as follows:

CHAPTER 28.

AN ACT to amend Section one of Article one, title, "Elective Franchise," of the Constitution of this State, and to provide for the submission of said amendment to the qualified voters of this State for adoption or rejection.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, three-fifths of all the members of each of the two Houses concurring, that the following section be and same is hereby proposed as an amendment to Section one of Article one, title "Elective Franchise," of the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, as herein provided, it shall supersede and stand in place and stead of Section one of said Article one.

SECTION 1. All elections shall be by ballot, and every male citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years or upward, who has been a resident of the State for two years and of the Legislative District of Baltimore City or of the county in which he may offer to vote, for one year next preceding the election, and who, moreover, is duly registered as a qualified voter as provided in this Article, shall be entitled to vote, in the ward or election district in which he resides, at all elections hereafter to be held in this State, and in case any county or city shall be so divided as to form, sections of it into different electoral districts for the election of Representatives in Congress, Senators, Delegates or other officers, then to entitle a person to vote for such officer, he must have been a resident of that part of the county or city which shall form a part of the electoral district in which he offers to vote, for one year next preceding the election; but a person who shall have acquired a residence in such county or city, entitling him to vote at any such election, shall be entitled to vote in the election district from which he removed, until he shall have acquired a residence in the part of the county or city to which he has removed.

Every male citizen of the United States having the above prescribed qualifications of age and residence shall be entitled to be registered so as to become a qualified voter if he be first: a person who, on the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, or prior thereto, was entitled to vote under the laws of this State, or of any other State in the United States, wherein he then resided; or second: a male descendant of such last mentioned person; or third: a foreign born citizen of the United States naturalized between the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine and the date of the adoption of this section of this Article; or fourth: a male descendant of such last mentioned person; or fifth: a person who, in the presence of the officers of registration, shall in his own handwriting, with pen and ink, without any aid, suggestion or memorandum whatsoever, and without any question or direction addressed to him by any of the officers of registration, make application to register correctly, stating in such application his name, age, date and place of birth, residence, and occupation at the time and for the two years next preceding, the name or names of his employer or employers, if any, at the time and for the next two years preceding, and whether he has previously voted, and if so, the State, county or city district in which he voted last, and also the name in full of the President of the United States, of one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, of the Governor of Maryland, of one of the Judges of the Court of Appeals of Maryland and of the Mayor of Baltimore City, if the applicant resides in Baltimore City, or of one of the County Commissioners of the county in which the applicant resides; and any person who is unable to comply with the aforegoing requirements as to making application for registration in his own handwriting, solely because he is physically disabled from so doing; or sixth: a person, or the husband of a person, who at the time of his application for registration, is a bona fide owner of real or personal property in an amount of not less than five hundred dollars, is assessed therefor on the taxbooks of Baltimore City or of one of the counties of this State, has been such owner and so assessed for two years next preceding his application for registration; shall have paid and shall produce receipts for the taxes on said property for said two years and shall at the time of his application make affidavit before the officers of registration that he is, or that he is the husband of the person who is the bona fide owner of the property so assessed to him or to her, as the case may be, and that he or she has been such owner for two years next preceding his application.

No person not qualified under some one of the above clauses shall be entitled to be registered as a qualified voter or be entitled to vote. Every written application to be registered, presented to the officer of registration by any person applying to be registered under the above fifth clause, shall be carefully preserved by said officers of registration and shall be produced in any court, if required, as hereinafter provided.

The affidavit of any applicant for registration, duly made to the officer of registration or in court, that he, the applicant, is a person who was entitled to vote on or before the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, as aforesaid, or that he has become a naturalized citizen of the United states between the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine and the date of the adoption of this section of this article, as aforesaid, or his affidavit upon information and belief that he is a descendant of a person who was entitled to vote on or before the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, or that he is a descendant of a person who has become a naturalized citizen of the United States between the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine and the date of the adoption of this section of this Article, shall be prima facie evidence of any of said facts so sworn to.

A wilfully false statement upon the part of any applicant for registration in relation to any of the matters aforesaid shall be perjury, and punishable as perjury is punished by the laws of the State.

Any person who feels aggrieved by the action of any board of officers of registration in refusing to register him as a qualified voter, or in registering any disqualified person may at any time, either before or after the last session of the board of officers of registration, but not later than the Tuesday next preceding the election, file a petition, verified by affidavit, in the Circuit Court for the county in which the cause of complaint arises, or, if the cause of complaint arises in Baltimore City, in any court of common law jurisdiction in said city, setting forth the grounds of his application and asking to have the action of the board of officers of registration corrected, and the court shall forthwith set the petition for hearing and direct summons to be issued requiring the board of officers of registration complained against in said petition to attend at the hearing in person or by counsel, and where the object of the petition is to strike off the name of any person, summons shall also be issued for such person, which shall be served by the sheriff within the time therein designated; and said several courts shall have full jurisdiction and power to review the action of any board of officers of registration and to grant or refuse, as they may deem lawful and proper, the relief prayed for in the premises.

In determining whether any person who applied to be registered under the above fifth clause of this section was or was not entitled to be registered under said fifth clause, the court shall require the board of officers of registration complained against to produce the written application prepared and submitted by such person at the time he presented himself for registration to said board of officers of registration, and upon said written application the court shall determine whether or not said person, when he presented himself for registration, complied with the requirements of said fifth clause; and if the court shall determine that said written application, so prepared and submitted by said person, complied with the requirements of said fifth clause, and that said person was not disqualified under any other provision of this Article of the Constitution to be registered upon the books of registry in question, then the Court shall order said person to be registered as a qualified voter; but if the court shall determine that said written application of said person failed to comply with the requirements of said fifth clause, or that said person was in any other respect under this Article of the Constitution disqualified to be registered upon the books of registry in question, then the court shall order that said person shall not be registered upon said books of registry.

The court may enforce any order by attachment for contempt in said cause; neither party shall have any right of removal; exception may be taken to any ruling of the court at the hearing of said cases and an appeal shall be allowed to the Court of Appeals as in other cases; all such appeals shall be taken within five days from the date of the decision complained of, and shall be heard and decided by the Court of Appeals upon the original papers, or otherwise, as the Court of Appeals may by rule prescribe, as soon as may be practicable.

The General Assembly shall have power to provide more fully by legislation not inconsistent with this section of this Article for the hearing and determination of all such cases.

SECTION 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the aforegoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State shall be at the next General Election for members of the General Assembly to be held in this State, submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article XIV of the Constitution of this State, and at said general election the vote on the said proposed amendment shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be printed the words "For the Constitutional Amendment" and "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as now prescribed by law, and immediately after said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Article XIV of the Constitution.

Approved February 25, 1908.

In accordance with a certificate filed with us by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, Maryland, stating that in accordance with Chapter 591, Section 206E, Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, 1908, stating that a petition signed by more than fifty voters and taxpayers in Election District No. 8 of Garrett county, Maryland, there will appear on the official ballot for said district No. 8, a proposition for an additional levy of ten cents on each one hundred dollars upon the total taxable basis of said District No. 8, for the repair and improvements of the roads in said District No. 8.

The polls of said election will be opened in each and every Election District of said Garrett county, at the usual places of holding the polls, at 8 o'clock A. M., and will be closed at 6 o'clock P. M., when the ballots shall be counted according to law.

For the information of all persons concerned the following Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed March 24, 1865, is published:

CHAPTER 161.

AN ACT prohibiting the sale of spirituous or fermented liquors in the several counties of the State on the day of Election.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That it shall not be lawful for the keeper of any hotel, tavern, store, drinking establishment, or any other place where liquors are sold, or for any persons, directly or indirectly, to sell, barter, give or dispose of any spirituous or fermented liquors, ale, beer or intoxicating drinks of any kind, on the day of election hereafter to be held in the several counties of the State.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be liable to indictment by the Grand Jury of the county where the offense is committed, and shall, upon conviction by a Judge of any Circuit Court of the State, be fined a sum not less than fifty dollars nor more than one hundred dollars for each and every offense—one-half the fine shall be paid the informer, the other half to the County Commissioners for the use of the public roads.

And the places of election in the several Election Districts of said Garrett county will be as follows:

The FREE Sewing Machine

The FREE Sewing Machine Head Showing the Ball-Bearing Rotascillo Movement.

TO THE PUBLIC:—

Sewing machines, like watches, can be bought at almost any price, and while you can buy machines at very low prices, we desire to say that we have sold machines for years as low as $10.00, $15.00 and $18.00, thus meeting the demand for cheap machines and foreign competition. The public is becoming better educated as to the fact that machines, like everything else, are only bought and sold according to their valne, and many who buy cheap machines are inclined to exchange them for a high grade machine.

In taking the agency for the FREE machine we were led to do so on account of its many and valuable features, unlike any other machine, and for the high quality of its construction and quality of material used. While the price is the same as all high-grade machines, by contracting for a quantity, selling direct to the consumer without any expense, especially for cash, we are able to offer this high-grade machine for $35.00. We sold two lately to dressmakers, who claim they excel any machine they ever used. We also had an expert machinist to examine, try and test the machine in every way possible. He was unlimited in his report as to its high standing of mechanical construction and material used, its light running, the great variety of work and the satisfactory way all the attachments furnished could be used. It has unlimited guarantee for life time. What more can you ask? We invite one and all to examine the FREE machine now on exhibition at our store.

BITTINGER.

Rain, snow, wind, ice and wretchedly cold weather was our experience all of last week.

A few apples were gathered in this section last week, but the crop was so small as to almost be considered a failure.

Rev. Lawaence Ries, of Cordova, Md., preached from the Lutheran pulpit in this village last Sunday evening.

Miss Laura Fazenbaker left here last Thursday for Grafton, W. Va., where she will be employed.

Rev. J. B. Shoup, who is spending the fall season in this village, was called to Frostburg last Sunday to occupy the pulpit in Rev. Wagner's church at that place.

Resh Boucher, of Rockwood, Pa., is visiting relatives in this settlement this week.

Mrs. Elizabeth Harmon, died at the home of her son, John B. Harmon, near this village, on Thursday of last week, at the advanced age of 84 years, 5 months and 6 days, after more than a year's suffering from a stroke of paralysis. The funeral took place from the Lutheran church in this village on last Sunday morning in the presence of a host of friends and relatives.

Farm for Sale.

I offer my farm in District No. 4 for sale. It contains 172 acres, one-third under fence and about forty acres cleared. About 250 bearing apple trees and 10 pear trees are on the place. Well watered and is two and a-half miles from the B. & O. R. R. About 200,000 feet of oak timber and 1,000 ties may be cut from the woodland Terms will be made to suit purchaser.

On Thursday evening the twenty-first
You are cordially invited to Haydenhurst:
You are only asked for a penny a year
By the Ladies' Aid, but do not fear,
The secret ages will never be known,
For the Treasurer is cautioned and sworn.
Refreshments served at half past nine.
Then we'll go home all feeling just fine.
After the entertainment.

Street Superintendent Echard has a stone crusher in operation in front of the Mt. Lake Park hotel, and with a force of men and teams is macadamizing the drive from the intersection of L street and will continue the work from year to year through the Park to the Oakland road.

Mrs. Bolton and children, who had been the guests of Mr. and Mrs E. E. Friend for several days, left yesterday morning for their new home in Sutton, W Va.

Rev. P. Z. Musgrave and family are now at home in the parsonage.

We understand that Mr. L. T. Yoder will soon erect near the planing mill a bottling establishment and will ship water from Crystal Spring to Pittsburg and other cities.

A steam saw mill will be put in near the ice plant in the near future for the manufacture of lumber from the northeast section of the grounds. It is expected to obtain about 400,000 feet of first class oak lumber from this section without detracting from the beauty of the grounds. The young timber will be left standing.

Mrs. John Michael and children are visiting relatives near Norfolk, Va. Mr. Michael will follow about the holidays and they may make their future home in the south.

Dr. and Mrs. W. W. Davis entertained a few friends as their home on Friday.

DEER PARK MEETING A REMARKABLE ONE.

Abuse, Villification and Untruthful Statements At People's Gathering.

The meeting held last Saturday night at Deer Park by the so-called "People's Party," was a remarkable one in some respects. The manager of the "show" must evidently believe with the lawyer who, when asked by a young member of the bar what he should do when he had a "bad case," promptly replied, "Abuse the other side." The meeting was well attended by ladies and children, and there was also a large delegation from Oakland and Mt. Lake Park present. Judging from the expressions and manifestations it was very evident that the major portion of those present were not in sympathy with the movement.

Mr. A. T. Matthews called the meeting to order and Mr. W. B. Miller was made the chairman. Mr. Miller in his remarks made many false statements concerning the candidates of the other parties, and in speaking of one of the tickets, declared that "it was the most d—— one ever placed before the people of Garrett county." His address was remarkable for the abuse and utter disregard for the truth in his reference to the candidates of the opposing tickets, and in introducing Mr. Wm. Speicher, the candidate for county treasurer, he indulged in some very unkind remarks concerning the misfortune and affliction of Mr. Speicher's Republican opponent. It was plain that these remarks were not received with much favor. Next came Mr. Thomas Browning, who used his powers of oratory in abusing the Democratic party, and he was followed by Mr. William Hennen, who was introduced as a "B. & O." man, and this gentleman, catching the spirit of the the meeting, tried to excel Mr. Browning in the general abuse of many of his former associates and friends. Wm. D. Hoye was next introduced as "the meanest Democrat in district No. 10," and as that gentleman did not make any denial of this "compliment" it is safe to assume that it was a just and well deserved one. "Rev." H. A. Hardesty came next and in the course of his "sermon" made the remarkable statement that he had heard that Mr. Michael, the candidate of the People's party, had been seen to take a drin of whisky in a certain saloon in Oakland. After Mr. Wm. King, of Oakland, candidate for clerk to the county commissioners, had been introduced and indulged in some general abuse, a gentleman in the audience sent a written request to the chairman to have Mr. Michael explain the charges mentioned by Rev. Hardesty. After a consultation with the "manager" (behind the curtain) Mr. Michael denied the charge and said that he had also been accused of drinking whisky with one of the candidates and a speaker in a saloon in Oakland. Next came the "manager," Mr. G. S. Hamill, who was introduced as a "B & O. attorney." It was quite evident that he was not going to be outdone by the rest and he at once began a tirade of abuse and villification which many of the audience promptly resented with hisses, and which caused the "orator" to make the rather remarkable statement that he had heard "geese whistle before, and that he did not want any interruption." In order to show that he was the "whole show', he said he had "a fine plan under construction," in his office, whereby he would "build a road, under the Shoemaker law, from Oakland to Mt. Lake Park, and as "we" have a man there (Gov. Crothers) who will cooperate with "our" (he meant "my") commissioners, when elected, this road can be extended to Deer Park." The "manager" in holding out this "lump of sugar" failed to inform the audience that the expense of building "my" road would have to be paid by the taxpayers of the entire county. He forgot that. He also spoke of the extravagance of the election laws, etc., which were enacted by the party which he and his henchmen had supported and advocated since 1873, when the "manager" (not Ike) was defeated as a "People's" candidate. In making comparison with the election laws of Mineral county, W. Va., the "manager" failed to state that Mineral county was under a Republican administration. He also forgot that. At the conclusion of this "remarkable" meeting there were heard on all sides expressions of condemnation and disgust, and one was heard to exclaim, "No People's party for mine; I shall vote my party ticket straight," and the "show" moved on to the next stop—"Salt Creek."

HIS TEMPERANCE RECORD.

What the Leader of the Peoples Party Has Done For Temperance.

Summit of the Great Backbone where Rain Drops Divide and One-half Flow into the Chesapeake and the Other into the Gulf of Mexico.

To the Editor of THE REPUBLICAN:

As a supporter of temperance, and a temperance worker, I would like to say a few words regarding the position taken by some of our leading temperance people on the so called People's party ticket.

To begin with, there has been a great deal said about one of its candidates from the Prohibition party joining hands with our people has always been an enemy to temperance, and in his defence I claim it is a case where his fore sight has failed him, for I cannot see any excuse for him accepting a place on a ticket fostered by one who has always been in sympathy and defended the saloon keepers of our County.

I ask the question, who called the people of our County together and told them they were being mistreated, boss ridden and shamefully abused? Was he not a man that has been before the people of our county as a candidate oftener than any other man in the county? Has he not been accused of swapping and bartering votes every time he was a candidate until his own party had almost termed him a political gypsy.

Is he a temperance man? One who always stood up in its defence and stayed by the people he is now trying to "lead? Let us turn to the records of our Courts and look the gentleman up. Here we find him way back in the nineties in Deer Park district fighting one of the first temperance measures ever passed in our County and for the sake of a few dollars put the obnoxious saloons back in the district.

Next we find him in 1898 in Friendsville district battling against the temperance people with his writs of mandamus.

We follow on down, and again we find him in 1902 with more writs of Mandamus fighting the good people of Hutton and Crellin to reinstate the two saloons which had been triumphantly ousted by an act of the Legislature.

Follow him on down to 1906 and here we find him in the halls of our legislature and before the then good Governor of our state fighting in the defence of two of the worst dives that ever existed in our county—one run by a notorious colored man when his own state would not legalize his business but he was good enough to be dumped on the people of District No. 8 without any protection, in the eyes of the so-called leader of the Peoples party. But thanks be to our representatives in the legislature at that time for through their skill he was overwhelmingly defeated in his nefarious scheme.

Next we find him with the same old chestnut; his writs of mandamus before the courts, but they quickly decide in our favor. Then by some ruse or other he discovered there were a little more elasticy in the Negro's leg and he advised him to carry his case to the Court of Appeals and was likewise defeated there.

I tell you voters of Garrett County, that one of the candidates for a place on the People's party ticket sounded no false alarm when he said that blood was thicker than water and there was a political snake in the grass.

While in conversation the other day with one of the state leaders of the Prohibition party the subject was brought up about one of our prominent men joining hands with the enemy and he said he did it without consulting the state organization and they intended to let him fight his own battle since he had acted so indiscreetly in cutting loose from their party and casting his lot with people that had always caused them trouble.

I admonish all fairminded temperance men, on the second of November when you come to the polls to cast your ballot, not to deliver yourself into the hands of your enemy for there are good temperance men on both the Democrat and Republican tickets to make your selection from.

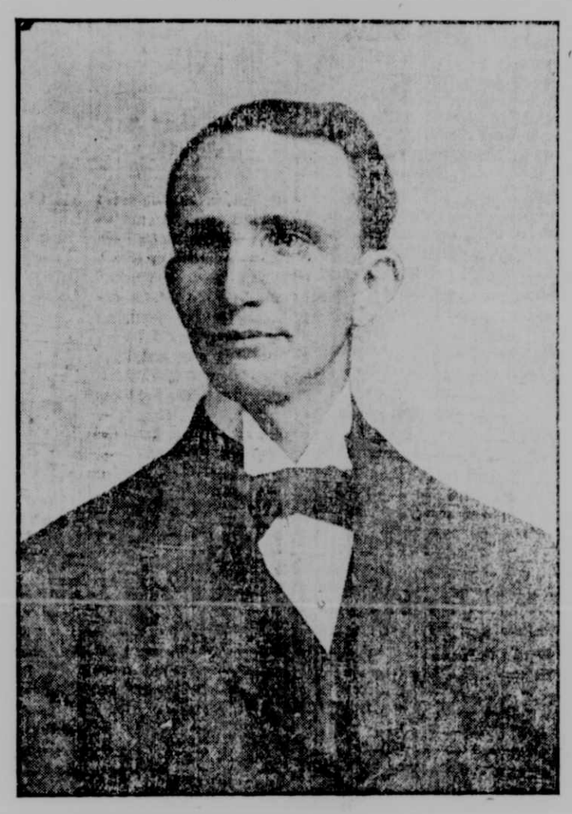
GAS EXPLODED YESTERDAY



And Painfully Burned Miss Ellen Connell's Face and Hands.

Yesterday about noon gas which had accumulated in the oven of the range in Miss Ellen Concell's home on Second street, exploded as that lady attempted to ignite it with a match, with the result that she was painfully burned about her face, her hair was singed off and she suffered some minor burns on her hands.

A physician was called as soon as possible and Miss Connell's suffering were alleviated to a great extent.

D. LINDLEY SLOAN.

THOROUGHLY DISGUSTED

Was Mr. Abel DeWitt With the People's Meeting at Deer Park.

To the Editor of The Republican:

In justice to myself as well as the gentleman that accompanied me to Baltimore when we went before the Good Roads Commission of Maryland seeking to have a change made in the present location of the new state road, I desire that you publish the following:

Mr. G. S. Hamill in his speech (if he terms it as such) at the People's party meeting at Deer Park on last Saturday evening, said that it was through him that the people of Garrett county had secured the building of the new state road which is now being constructed from Oakland along Hooppole Road, and that the other people that accompanied him to Baltimore got lost and never appeared before the Commission.

In the first place I wish to inform Mr. Hamill, as well as the public generally, that we did not accompany him and his candidate for sheriff, Mr. John O. Thayer. We did not even go on the same train, for we were already confident in our own minds that Mr. Hamill had played Benedict Arnold with us and had gone back on the proposition that he had drafted for us, and not only promised to sustain, but had given his personal endorsement. If any of my friends believes the statement of Mr. Hamill or that of his candidate for sheriff, that Mr. Ashby and myself did not appear before the honorable Road Commission, we refer them not only to the Commission but also to their attorney, Mr. Carville D. Benson. The Commission promised us that if the bids for the construction of the road were too high they would give us another hearing and reconsider the present location. Upon our arrival in Baltimore we called up the Commission as any other intelligent individual would do, and they set the hour for our hearing and when it arrived we appeared before them and they received us very courteously, when we stated our case.

So far as getting lost from Mr. Hamill and his candidate for sheriff we did not consider that they did then or do they now have any claim upon us.

On Saturday night I went to the meeting at Deer Park, in company with a number of others, fully in smypathy with some of the candidates on the People's party ticket, for the purpose of hearing the issues of the campaign discussed, but I must confess that I was sorely disappointed, for not a single issue of the campaign was discussed, and not a single issue was presented by any of the nine or ten speakers that took the platform. There was absolutely nothing but a tirade of abuse, false statements and statements without foundation of facts or reason of their former political friends and neighbors. It was thoroughly disgusting to one who has any sense of fairness or of fair-play. The abusive language of some of some of the speakers, was the worst I ever heard. One of the speakers, who is blacklisted in the saloons of Oakland, made an effort to abuse and malign some of the candidates on the opposing ticket, which, to say the least, is discreditable.

While Mr. Hamill was speaking a gentleman in the audience asked the question, "to what political party does Mr. Hamill belong?" and another gentleman standing by his side said he guessed "he is what the little boy termed a flopper." That remark brought to my mind the story of the old maiden lady who was down on her knees in the still small hours of the night under a maple tree praying for the good Lord to send her a husband. An old owl perched upon a bough above her was disturbed by her lamentations and cried in a low voice, "who-o-o, who-o-o," and the old sister, believing her prayer was being answered, cried in a loud voice, "Oh Lord, anybody." In my opinion that is the way with Mr. Hamill, Oh, Lord, any party to carry my point.

Very respectfully,
ABEL DEWITT.

Deer Park, Oct. 27, 1909.

MR. DIXON AS COMMISSIONER

He Promises, If Elected, To Have An Eye Single to Taxpayers' Interests.

To the Voters of Garrett County:

I have been nominated for the office of County Commissioner, and I appreciate the honor my party has given me, and, if elected, I promise the people of Garrett county I will do my very best to administer the affairs of the county in the interest of all the tax-payers.

I believe in economy and will insist at all times in getting full value of every dollar of the people's money which may be expended. I further assure you I will have no favorite section, but will work for the interest of the whole county. The other districts of the county will receive at my hands the same treatment which I would accord to my own district. It shall be my constant aim to act for the best interests of the tax-payers of the whole county.

To my mind one of the all-important problems that will confront the Board of commissioners will be to better the conditions of the county roads. This I hope to accomplish with the co-operation of the other members of the board and progressive citizens of the county. Good roads is a subject that is engaging the attention of the people all over the country.

It is a matter of vital importance to the farmers of this county. Our present road law is not working out to the satisfaction of our people and radical changes should be made.

I have lived in the county all my life, have owned and worked on the farm, and I know the needs of the county, and shall, if I am elected, strive to that which is for the best interest of all the people of the county and with the help of the people make it the best county in the State. Very respectfully,

DARIUS M. DIXON.

October 26, 1909.

TAKE NOTICE?

In the face of political unjustice it has been reported that I have withdrawn as Candidate for Sheriff from the Democratic ticket, which I brand as being basely untrue. I received the nomination at the hands of my friends, and as yet stand firm as the Democratic candidate for Sheriff and appeal to my friends for their loyal support.

Respectfully,
JOHN T. BROWNING.

MR. D. LINDLEY SLOAN HELD IN HIGH REGARD

Candidate for Judge in Western Maryland.

A special from a staff correspondent, dated at Cumberland, October 19, to the Baltimore American says:

Interesting and very significant is the contest in the Fourth Judicial Circuit between Mr. D. Lindley Sloan and Judge A. Hunter Boyd. Judge Boyd, who is the presiding judge of the Court of Appeals, is seeking re-election. He is a Democrats and is relying upon the Democratic party for his re-election. It should be stated parenthetically that in the circuit, which comprises Washington, Allegany and Garrett counties, Republicans are in the majority by at least 2,000.

In other words, the Republicans of mountainous Maryland are in the majority in voting strength, and naturally are anxious to elect Mr. Sloan to the bench.

This is a Republican community, a rock-ribbed Republican community. When John Walter Smith was governor he was called upon to fill two vacancies on the bench that were caused by deaths. He appointed two Democrats, Judges Ferdinand Witliams and W. J. Witzenbacher. Both were defeated at the subsequent election. Their defeat demonstrated that Western Maryland, while demanding a divorce of politics from the bench, at the same time demands that Republican principles and Republican ability be recognized.

The eyes of all Maryland are centered upon the contest in this circuit. There is reason for this state-wide interest. The judge who will be elected will serve for 15 years as the chief of the circuit and will be a member of the Court of Appeals. It is a peculiar fact that while the circuit has a preponderance of Republicans it has been represented in the Court of Appeals by a Democrat who was elected 16 years ago under peculiar conditions.

Other conditions exist today. Republican policies have become better known here and are better established. The policy of the Republicans in continuing a tariff on coal has meant the development of the resources in this section and has added largely to its population by attracting strangers in quest of employment and investment.

In Garrett county, for illustration, thousands upon thousands of dollars have found profitable investment, while hundreds of men have found renumerative employment in the mines and mills. Twenty years ago Garrett county was undeveloped territory; it was Democratic in its tendency. Since the influx of thrifty and industrious men and their families from Pennsylvania and the north, who have transformed the county into a garden spot, it has displayed its appreciation of Republican policies by identifying itself with the Republican party. The normal Republican majority in the county is about 1,000, and Mr. Sloan will receive the united support of the Republican party in the county.

Mr. Sloan was the unanimous choice of Allegany county Republicans for judge. He was the choice of Republican members of the Allegany county bar.

The fact should be stated that Mr. Sloan is being supported by leading Republican lawyers of Allegany, Garrett and Washington counties. There are some members of the bar of Allegany county who for reasons satisfactory to themselves prefer Judge Boyd's re-election. They are, however, exceptions rather than the rule.

Members of the bar of this and other counties of the circuit fully appreciate Mr. Sloan's qualifications for the bench. He is one of the best educated men of Western Maryland. His father, Hon. James Muir Sloan, who was formerly a member of the State Senate and United States sub-treasurer at Baltimore, was deprived of educational advantages in his youth. When he was only 11 years old he had to go into the coal mines as a bread-winner for his mother and for his younger brothers and sisters. He has made good. He has two stores, which keep him busy. Incidentally, they are sources of profit. In addition to being a merchant, Mr. Sloan is also a banker, being president of the Lonaconing Savings Bank.

While deprived of the advantages of an education in his youth, Mr. Sloan determined to fit himself for a higher life. He attended a night school and employed a tutor to aid him in his efforts to secure an education. In these efforts he was highly successful. He ranks today as the most cultured man of Western Maryland.

Mr. Sloan made up his mind that his children should enjoy all the educational advantages within his reach. Those children have had every opportunity for an education that an indulgent father could give them.

Mr. D. Lindley Sloan, the candidate for judge, received his primary training in the public schools of Allegany county. He was only 17 years old when he entered the Washington and Jefferson College. There he was a close and diligent student. Upon his graduation he took up the study of law. He is recognized as one of the leaders of the Allegany county bar. To him has fallen the task of framing the local bills which will be transformed into laws by the General Assembly. Everybody does not know this. It is, however, a fact.

Clean-cut and clear is Mr. Sloan's face. It is a judicial face. Whether successful or otherwise in the judicial contest, and his success seems to be assured, Mr. Sloan is destined to play an important part in public life. He is one of those men who cannot be suppressed. He will arise to the top.

Mr. Sloan is no accident in politics. He had opposition, lots of opposition, before he was named for chief judge. This much may be said of him in Allegany county. He was the choice of the Republicans of this county for chief judge. This is saying a great deal, for there are some most estimable Republican lawyers here who would have appreciated the honor of the nomination. Not only was he the choice of Allegany county, but he was also the choice of the Garrett county bar. Washington county lawyers had a preference, but when Mr. Sloan was named as the candidate of the circuit, Washington county lawyers were prompt to recognize his ability and his worth and enthusiastically indorse him.

According to reports received here from Garrett and Washington counties, Mr. Sloan is in the lead and his election seems to be assured.

SENATOR RAYNER'S CHANGE OF HEART.

Senator Isidor Raynor is having a hard time trying to reconcile his opposition to the Maryland suffrage amendment of 1909. He helped to defeat the former because, as he truly said, it discriminated against the naturalized voter, putting all foreign-born citizens acquiring the right to vote later than 1869 and their descendants in a special inferior category and subjecting them to tests not imposed on the native-born, with special patients of "ancestry" or on the foreign-born whose naturalization antedated 1869. In an eloquen address to the people of Maryland in October, 1905, Senator Rayner said:

"I am utterly opposed to this amendment, with the strongest convictions of my life against the principles that it embodies, and I believe that its adoption would bind the chains of political slavery around this state, would sound the death knell of our political hopes and aspirations in Maryland and would be as great a calamity as could possibly be inflicted upon our people."

What were the "principles" which the amendment embodied to which the amendment embodied to which the Senator so strongly objected, asks the New York Tribune. Primarily he condemned it because it discriminated against the naturalized white voters of Baltimore. He had then, as he has now no objection to the disfranchisement of negro voters. He refused to assent to the Poe-Gorman scheme because it put the stamp of inferiority on at least 30,000 foreign-born electors in his home city.

Mr. Rayner protests that he is now, as he was in 1905, opposed to Know-nothingism. He still professes great concern for the naturalized citizen, but he is giving his aid to a scheme which will put on aliens naturalized after 1909 burdens which he formerly declared to be cruel and outrageous when put on persons naturalized after 1869. He is supporting the amendment on grounds of expediency and to argue that the number of whites injuriously affected by it will be small in comparison with the whole white electorate.

POOR POLICY

Maryland spends $10,000 annually through its Immigration Bureau, to tell the world of the attractiveness and desirability of all sections of Maryland. In a pamphlet published by the Bureau the "good order," genial climate, fertile soil and generally attractive conditions on the Eastern and Western shores and Southern Maryland are dwelt upon at length. Yet around election times the Amendment schemers aided by the Baltimore Sun traduce that section of the State and falsely hold it up to the world as negro ridden. Pretty small business. The people pay to build up, while scheming politicians for selfish partisan advantage, pay to tear down.

THE PLAIN TRUTH ABOUT THE AMENDMENT.

There is a great deal being said about the disfranchising amendment which does not go to the vital point. Few of the advocates get down to "brass tracks." They are appealing to the independent vote to give the Democratic party an overwhelming majority in the State and in the city. The question the independent voter must ask himself is, Why should he do so in the face of these indisputable facts?

1. The State of Maryland is now safely Democratic as long as the Democratic party gives good government.

2. The city of Baltimore is safely Democratic as long as the Democratic party gives good government.

3. In order to give the Republicans control of the State or city, that party must gain the vote of a large number of voters who ordinarily vote with the Democrats. This is not the negro vote. It is the independent vote. The white Republicans and the negroes combined cannot capture either the city or the State without the aid of the independent vote.

4. There are but six counties in the State in which the white vote does not outnumber the negro vote two to one. In one of these counties this ratio almost prevails. In two others the growth of the white vote is so much more rapid than the black that the ratio will soon be reached.

5. There has been no proof worth while adduced to show that it is the possession of the ballot by the negro which is responsible for the evils laid at his door.

6. There has been no proof worth while adduced to show that if the ballot is taken from the negro conditions in the "black belt" —which are painted a great deal worse, of course, than they actually are—will be changed for the better.

7. To believe the argument advanced to the effect that, if the negro is disfranchised, a large number of men who now vote with the Democratic party will vote with the Republican party and thus make the State close, we must believe that the shrewd politicians of the State who were responsible for the Poe amendment and who will stand for any other amendment which will get the negro vote out of the way are animated by a desire to put their own party's control of the State in jeopardy. Every act of their political lives shows that such an assumption is absurd.

8. Passage of the amendment will not serve the purpose of getting the negro "out of politics." Negroes born out of the State will be permitted to vote as readily as white men. All who come in after the adoption of the amendment, with their descendants, will constitute a privileged class with hereditary right to vote. There will be enough of these to serve as an excuse for shouting "negro rule" with those who want to use that cry.

9. While the opponents of the amendment are exaggerating the effect of the amendment on the white vote, it will, in all likelihood affect many persons who do not anticipate that their right to vote will be called into question.

10. Again and again the determining factor in the passage of bills at the Legislature and the nomination of candidates in State and city conventions has been the belief of the political leaders of the dominant party that the independent vote would make its strength felt at the polls unless its wishes were respected. This fear will be removed by the overwhelming majority given the party by the elimnation of the negro vote. What a machine can and will do, when it does not fear public sentiment, has been demonstrated in striking fashion in both State and city government.

If these things are true, as The News believes they are, what is offered the independent voter for helping to carry out this program? —Baltimore News.

Swanton Fair.

Remember, Oct. 30 is the date of the Swanton fair and that the best time to select your potatoes and apples for exhibition is when you are gathering them. The wheat, buckwheat and oats can be selected any time. Bring as good an all round assortment of farm products as you can for there is no entry fee and you can help the cause of the Garrett county farmer by so doing. Both Senator Brown and Director Patterson have promised to deliver addresses. The fair is a good place for you and your family to have an all round visit with everybody.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city of several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

THEIR WAR-CRY.

"Boyd and the Straus Amendment"

SLOGAN OF DEMOCRACY.

A Few Facts for Republicans to Consider.

On Saturday, Oct. 9, 1909, the Evening Times, of Cumberland, the Democratic organ used the following language in an editorial, given below word for word:

"Should the Straus disfranchising amendment ever come before the Court of Appeals no man can know and least of all Judge Boyd himself how he would decide as to its constitutionality."

In the following week, Isidor Rayner, Democratic United States Senator and chief platform advocates of the Straus disfranchising amendment—who has publicly endorsed A. Hunter Boyd in writing over his own signature, delivered the following utterance at Elkton, Cecil county, Md. Mr. Rayner said.

"We, the Democratic party, are not afraid of the courts. If the courts should hold the Straus amendment unconstitutional, that would be the end of it. But as I have predicted on every hustings that I have appeared on in Maryland, the Courts will never take this step."

Who is right, the Evening Times, or Isidor Rayner, the man who uttered the above language, the man who has endorsed Boyd for election to the Court of Appeals?

When Mr. John Prentiss Poe, Democrat, and author of the Poe disfranchising amendment, endorsed A. Hunter Boyd in writing over his own signature, what idea did Mr. Poe have reference to A. Hunter Boyd's views on the constitutionality of the Straus amendment?

When Isaac Lobe Straus, Democrat, and author of the Straus disfranchising amendment, publicly endorsed A. Hunter Boyd in writing over his own signature, what idea did Mr. Straus entertain of the views of A. Hunter Boyd on the constitutionality of the Straus amendment?

The intelligent Republicans of Allegany county can answer these questions for themselves, and will answer them with their votes on election day.

And when the Republicans of this county have answered the above questions to their own satisfaction, they may rest secure in the knowledge that their judgment is affirmed and vindicated by the State organ of the Republican party in Maryland, the Baltimore American, which, on Oct. 5, said to the voters of the State as follows:

"The Republicans of the State should stand unqualifiedly for every move that can conceivably aid in encompassing the defeat of the Straus disfranchising amendment. There should be no compromise in any direction, least of all in the selection of the judicial circuit chief judges who constitute the Courts of Appeals. This is no time for any Republican to consider even in the most distant manner the support of a Democrat for a judgeship. Whatever justification might under other conditions be found for leaning toward a judicial candidate of the opposing party such considerations are now overmatched by the imperative demand of the party for every man to stand upon the guard line and let no candidate for the bench reach that position where the Republican vote is strong enough to defeat his ambitions. In the Fourth Judicial Circuit, it is a matter of common knowledge that Judge Boyd owing allegiance to his party and sharing its views on the paramount issue, the Straus disfranchising amendment, is alien in sympathy from the purposes and efforts of the Republican party. It is obvious that under such conditions there is but one course for any Republican in relation to the fortunes of one or the other candidate for the chief judgeship. A straight vote for the Republican ticket is the duty of every Republican. A square vote for the Republican judicial candidate is the imperative need of the hour. No Republican would want to cherish the reflection in the event of the success of the disfranchising amendment, that he contributed to placing upon the bench of the Courts of Appeals a man who might be expected to be controlled in his judicial action by the views he entertained upon the legality of the Straus amendment prior to the election. The Straus disfranchising amendment has been pronounced by President Taft and the ablest lawyers of the State and country to be unconstitutional. Men who entertain such views are the only kind for the Republican party to regard as worthy of its support. If any Republicans have been considering other action, let them dismiss the suggestion and immediately place themselves upon the broad issue of safeguarding the people and protecting the party."

CALLS PROPOSED AMENDMENT A SELFISH SCHEME

Major W. E. Stewart Says the Proposed Law Is "Obfuscating."

Back of the proposed amendment is a scheme devised by the leaders of the Democratic party for selfish purposes, and the agitation about good government and the betterment of the State is a pretense. It hides selfish ambitions that are ready to seek refuge in motives higher than those which really prompted it, and should it ever be allowed to pass THERE WOULD BE COMPARATIVELY FEW MEN IN THE CITY OF BALTIMORE WHO COULD HONESTLY REGISTER UNDER ITS PROVISIONS.

This is what Major W. E. Stewart, of Easton, Md., an old-line Democrat, who was once a citizen of Baltimore, thinks of the Straus disfranchising amendment which the Democratic bosses are trying to inflict upon the people of the State. In a second letter to The News Major Stewart says.

"Dr. Hering, in accepting the nomination for Comptroller, said: 'Our party has conducted the affairs of our good old Commonwealth for nearly 40 years, and every Marylander can point with pride to the excellent government under which we have lived in these years.' To this sentiment the Governor and all our soi-disant leaders say amen; and negroes have been voting here for nearly 40 years, and the ratio between the whites and blacks has but slightly varied. Why then this hullabaloo and clamoring for a radical change in our Constitution?

Four years ago these same men told us that the Poe amendment was essential to our prosperity. Now we are informed by them that it was a mere jumble and speakers and papers are exposing its defects. The advocates of the Straus amendment have 'boxed the compass;' the legal lights have shown to their own satisfaction, the unconstitutiona ity of the Constitution of the United States; we have been informed that all white men, native and foreign-born, could vote under the grandfather and naturalization clauses, and that negroes could vote only under the educational or property qualifications; then we are shown that all white men cannot vote, and that negroes from other States can vote; but the native-born Maryland negroes cannot vote; to disfranchise the negroes from other States, they say, would be in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, but to disfranchise the home-born negroes on account of color would not be unconstitutional. Two very wise leaders for the amendment publicly assert that the educational test is so simple that the most ignorant negro could soon learn to vote under it; whereas, every one save themselves knows it to be a jumble, a chinese puzzle, and that there are not a thousand men in the city of Baltimore today that could honestly register under its provisions.

"Is it right for a man to vote for an amendment to the Constitution imposing qualifications on another which he does not possess and which it would be impossible for him to acquire? Is not this an immoral act?

"The advocates of the amendment tell us that it makes no distinction between native and foreign-born white voters, yet we know after this year no foreign-born white citizens or their descendants can vote except under the educational and property tests, and that this does not at all apply to native-born white citizens, and we know that citizens naturalized prior to 1869 who did not vote until after that date, and their descendants, cannot vote; nor can the descendants of an unnaturalized person vote, and there are thousands of them in this State.

"But this obfuscating amendment is very clear in regard to a class of citizens which its advocates have not memtioned.

"This is the mulatto—half and half. All he has to do is to make affidavit 'on information and belief,' that he is a descendant of a man who was entitled to vote in this or some other State prior to 1869. Under the grandfather clause every mulatto—and there are thousands of them here—it matters not wheresoever or howsoever born in the United States, can vote here. Ye champions of the amendment, you who want moral government, who so dislike the ignorant, immoral negro, welcome the mulatto, mayhaps 10,000 strong. For him the grandfather clause has no terrors; it fits him as though made for him. Armed with his 'best information and belief' and clad chiefly in his complexion, this wise child (who more often than not knows his father) will come trooping through the Attorney General's open door and raise a domestic cyclone clear across the continent.

The politicasters in favor of the amendment may say that these are far-fetched illustrations, but they are just what the drawers of the amendment have deemed worthy to be made the organic law of this State.

"Hundreds of good men think that there is some sinister motive back of what is written; that the amendment is a scheme devised for selfish purposes, and that the agitation about good government and the betterment of the State is a pretense. We all know that selfish ambition is ever ready to seek refuge in motives higher than those which really prompted it. When St. Paul was preaching at Ephesus and many were converted, the sale of silver shrines of the Goddess Diana was greatly diminished; Demetrius and his fellow-craftsmen who were shrine makers did not publicly say that they were losing their wealth, but covering their deeper reason for their action—the loss of trade—they cried out 'Great is Diana of the Ephesians!' Republican Ticket.

For Comptroller of the State Treasury,
FRANK E. WILLIAMS. of Cecil County.

For Judge of the Fourth Judicial District of Allegany County.
D. LINDLEY SLOAN

For State Senator,
HARVEY J. SPEICHER.

For House of Delegates,
D. E. BOLDEN,
J. ELBERT CHAPPELL.

For Sheriff,
ANDREW SHARTZER.

For County Treasurer,
ROBERT LINCOLN FRIES.

For County Commissioners,
DARIUS M. DIXON,
WALTER M. LOWDERMILK.

For Clerk to County Commissioners,
ALBERT G. ROSS.

For County Surveyor,
JAMES A. SINCELL.

IF THE people of this county want a live man, who will do his duty fearlessly and without favor, let them vote for Andrew Shartzer for Sheriff.

A VOTE for Robt. L. Fries for County Treasurer will be a vote for a deserving citizen of our county and a man who will look after every interest of the County.

READ the ballot carefully, and then read it over again. It may be your last chance to vote, therefore make no mistake. See that you understand it. Take no chances.

THE EDITOR of this paper during the campaign which is now drawing to a close, has had occasion to criticise and not unjustly or too harshly, a number of people who are opposing the ticket named by the Republican party at the convention held in Oakland. Among the number thus criticised was Mr. Gilmor S. Hamill, lawyer and leading spirit in the People's party movement.

Usually we are too busy with the cares that go to make up the life of the average country newspaper editor to notice criticism meant to be destructive and which clearly bears the imprint of jealously, hatred and a desire to see none prosper except those who can be used for a purpose. Fighting from the last ditch of defeat, Mr. Gilmor S. Hamill, lawyer and legal advisor of the B. & O. Railroad company in this community, exploded what he considered "hot shot" against the editor of this paper in a speech made at Deer Park last Saturday night. It was but a feeble attempt, however, on the part of Mr. Hamill, who has discredited himself with the Democratic party and is now endeavoring to bring about the defeat of the Republican candidates by his use of campaign methods of abuse and slander, which evaporated into thin air. Whenever an explosive is to be set off effectively it must be securely tamped or otherwise held in place, so that its rending force may be fully applied, but whenever a scandalous, unfounded and grossly exaggerated accusation is made against an individual, a city or newspaper, its damaging effects is very largely conditioned by the actions of the intended victims. But if the attacked, conscious of their own rectitude of purpose, go serenely on their way and trust to time and their own good works, rather than hot, hasty, harsh speech to plead for them, such charges explode harmlessly, with much noise and smoke, perhaps, but with no damage to any but the would-be blasters. Election day will tell the tale, after which Mr. Hamill will lose all asperity of temper and become himself again.

DO YOU want the affairs of the County Commissioners' Office conducted in a judicious and business like manner? Then vote for D. M. Dixon and Walter M. Lowdermilk, both men of ability and good judgment.

VOTE the straight Republican ticket, from top to bottom, and against the Straus amendment.

GARRETT COUNTY needs active, intelligent and able representatives in the General Assembly—vote for Harvey J. Speicher, for State Senate: D. E. Bolden and J. E. Chappell for House of Delegates.

DON'T fail to vote for James A. Sincell, for Surveyor, and Albert G. Ross, for Clerk to County Commissioners. You know that they both have made good and efficient officers.

GIVE the young man a chance. Vote for D. Lindley Sloan, for judge. When his term shall have expired he will be yet ten years younger than his opponent is now. He will make a good judge.

THE MOST SINISTER DEVELOPMENT OF THE CAMPAIGN.

The decision of Judge Pearce in the matter of the trick ballots in the Queen Anne's case brings to the attention of the voters of the State one of the most important, if not the most important, and certainly one of the most sinister developments of the campaign. It is made evident that the Democratic State machine can force through the Legislature an election law which may be used to disfranchise any voter and that even the courts cannot prevent such fraud and chicanery. It should be borne in mind that the Judge passed only on the legal points in the case. As to the moral question involved, he said:

> So far as the moral aspect of the case is concerned, the court has no power. This is a matter which the voters can deal with and should deal with in the approaching election.

Using the negro for an excuse, the Eastern Shore politicians have prepared ballots which permit the illiterate white Democrat to vote with a minimum of danger of losing his ballot, while making the Republican—white or black, literate or illiterate—run a gauntlet of trick ballots and "fake" names. The utter unfairness of the proceeding must excite the indignation of every honest man.

We call the attention of those people who think it is a regenerated machine which is now trying to impose its rule on the city and State to the fact that these very State leaders indorse and approve this scandalous proceeding. If white men on the Eastern Shore can be disfranchised by this most flagrant scheme, what is to prevent men in any part of the State being subjected to the same treatment as soon as the machine feels strong enough to do it?

Had the court interfered to protect the public from this manipulation of the ballot by those unscrupulous tricksters—who make it as easy as possible for the followers of one party and as difficul as possible for the followers of another to cast their ballots—we could have said that, while a Legislature might pass an election law which could be prostituted to such base ends, the courts could protect us from the men who sought to do it. But when an honest Judge finds himself helpless to extend relief, the situation appears vastly more sinister and significant.

There could not be more emphatic warning of what we may expect in the event the Democratic State machine succeeds in its effort to make this a one-party State.

LET US CRUSH THE AMENDMENT.

It is practically conceded by the Democratic leaders that the Straus disfranchising amendment will be defeated in Allegany county by a majority of not less than 2,000 votes. Those in close touch with the sentiment of the people on this subject believe the Democratic estimate to be too conservative. They point out that in 1905 the Poe disfranchising amendment was defeated in this county by a majority of 1893 votes, and they are confident in the belief that the popular vote against the present effort of the Democratic party to perpetuate its power, destroy the Republican party and rob the people of the elective franchise will be even more emphatic and overwhelming than that registered in 1905. They look for a majority of not less than 2,500 against the Straus amendment.

The point is that every person who votes against the Straus amendment should vote the entire Republican State, judicial and county ticket. The personality of each individual nominee on the Republican ticket is such as to insure its complete success at the polls, and the Republican party is therefore renewing and redoubling its efforts for the triumph of all its candidates with all the prestige and encouragement of conceded victory.

What the Republican party wants at the present moment, however, in addition to the election of its whole ticket is great majorities for every man on it. Not for mere vulgar display, nor for the personal discomfiture of any Democrat, but because there is a great moral issue involved. The Democratic party of Allegany county must accept its proper share of the responsibility for the efforts of the Democratic State organization to pass disfranchising amendments in order to destroy the Republican party in Maryland. It is folly for the Democrats to attempt to justify their partisan measures of disfranchisement on the silly plea of "negro domination." During the 40 years preceding the administration of Governor Lowndes when the Democratic party was in absolute power in this State, and when during the whole of that period there were far more negroes in Maryland than there are today, the Democratic party made not a whisper about "negro domination." It was only when they found the Republican party had become a power in the State and that it was able to elect a great Republican governor, as it did in 1895, when it elected Hon. Lloyd Lowndes, that the Democratic party became greatly concerned about the intelligence of the common people and their right to vote.

We say that the Democratic party of Allegany county must accept their full share of the responsibility for the iniquitous disfranchisement measures of the Democratic State organization. Why? Because the Democracy of Allegany county do themselves stand for disfranchisement. They have their representatives on the Democratic State Central Committee, they send their delegates to the Democratic State Conventions, and the representatives of the Democracy of Allegany county stand hand in glove with the Democratic State organization in its effort to pass measures of disfranchisement for the destruction of the Republican party in Maryland. Mr. DeWarren H. Reynolds, of Cumberland, was on the Committee on Resolutions of the last Democratic State Convention, which Committee presented to the Convention a resolution which was made a part of the present Democratic State platform, upon which each and every State, judicial and county nominee of that party now stands, and which resolution declares that the Straus disfranchising amendment is the "paramount issue" of the campaign, and must be adopted. Why did not Mr. Reynolds protest against this crime against the people of Maryland and against the Republican party? No one knows why, and yet he did not, and every nominee of the Democratic party, State, judicial and county, stands upon the platform which Mr. Reynolds, the representative of the Allegany Democracy, helped to make, and which calls for the destruction of the Republican party and the perpetuation of Democratic ring rule by the adoption of the Straus disfranchising amendment. Certainly the Democrats of Allegany county, through the instrumentality of their representative, Mr. Reynolds, have attempted to force disfranchisement and political destruction upon the party of their Republican fellow-citizens—a party which has done much good and no harm. The Republican party, therefore, in all kindness, but none the less firmly, says that a lasting lesson must be taught the Democracy and that the Straus disfranchisement amendment must be defeated by overwhelming majorities, and that along with it the nominees, all of them, of the party which is responsible for it, the Democratic party, must be repudiated by majorities equally great and such as will teach them that in the future they must cast their influence against the iniquitous disfranchisement measures of the Democratic organization, if they are to hope for any encouragement or support for their nominees in Allegany county.—Cumberland News.

FORTY-TWO YEARS OF DEMOCRATIC "NONPARTISANSHIP."

In the past forty-two years there have been 106 judges on the bench of the various courts of Maryland. This is the total number, and includes the membership of the Court of Appeals, all of the Circuit Courts of the State, and all of the courts of Baltimore city, for the number of years stated. Of these 106 judges who have occupied the bench of Maryland in the past 42 years

84 Have Been Democrats.
Only 22 Have Been Republicans and of the 22 Republicans who have sat on the bench of Maryland courts in 42 long years, 11 were replaced with Democrats, as will appear from the facts of the Democratic record, as set out below. In all that time, the Republican party has had but two judges of the Maryland Court of Appeals, and at the present moment has only one, seven out of the eight judges of that tribunal being Democrats. And yet they ask us to elect another Democrat to the Court of Appeals. If they will read the facts of the record below the Democratic party ought to hide its head in shame.

REPUBLICAN RECORD.

In the year 1896 Governor Lowndes, Republican, designated the Hon. James McSherry, Democrat, to succeed a deceased Democrat as Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals, when he might have designated a Republican.

In 1899, Governor Lowndes appointed Hon. J. A. C. Bond, Democrat, to succeed a deceased Democratic judge of the Court of Appeals, when he might have appointed a Republican.

In 1897, the Republican party of the Fifth Judicial Circuit endorsed for re-election Hon. I. Thomas Jones, Democrat, making no nomination against him, although it might have done so.

In 1897, the Republican party endorsed for re-election Hon. Charles E. Phelps, Democrat, to the Supreme Bench of Baltimore city, making no nomination against him, although it might have done so.

In 1903, the Republican party endorsed for re-election to the Supreme Bench of Baltimore city, the Hon. J. Upshur Dennis, Democrat, making no nomination against him, although it might have done so.

In 1905, the Republican party endorsed for re-election to the Supreme Bench of Baltimore city the Hon. Henry D. Harlan, Democrat, making no nomination against him, although it might have done so.

In 1905, the Republican party of the Third Judicial Circuit endorsed for re-election the Hon. N. Charles Burke, Democratic nominee for the bench, making no nomination against him, although it might have done so.

HAVE THE BROAD AND NONPARTISAN GENEROSITY OF A REPUBLICAN GOVERNOR AND REPUBLICAN ELECTORATES BEEN APPRECIATED BY THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY? HAS THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY SHOWN ANY SUBSTANTIAL GRATITUDE OR WILLINGNESS TO RECIPROCATE? Let the Republicans of the Fourth Judicial Circuit judge of this by the FACTS OF THE DEMOCRATIC RECORD.

On March 16, 1881, a Democratic governor appointed to the Circuit Court of the Sixth Circuit the Hon. John Ritchie, Democrat, in succession to Judge Richard Johns Bowie, a Republican who had been elected by the people of Frederick and Montgomery counties.

On July 26, 1883, a Democratic governor appointed to the bench of the Fourth Judicial Circuit the Hon. Josiah H. Gordon, a Democrat, to succeed Hon. George A. Pearre, a Republican who had been elected by the people of Allegany, Garrett and Washington counties.

On Feb. 10, 1890, a Democratic governor appointed to the Circuit Court of the Seventh Judicial Circuit the Hon. John Parran Briscoe, a Democrat, in succession to Judge Frederick Stone who had been chosen by the people of Southern Maryland as a Republican.

On July 5, 1892, a Democratic governor appointed to the Supreme Bench of Baltimore city the Hon. Pere L. Wickes, Democrat, in succession to Judge Edward Duffy, Republican, who had been elected by the people of Baltimore city.

On Jan. 21, 1895, a Democratic governor appointed to the bench of the Sixth Judicial Circuit the Hon. James B. Henderson, Democrat, in succession to Judge John T. Vinson, Republican, who had been elected by the people of Frederick and Montgomery counties.

On Aug. 29, 1902, a Democratic governor appointed to the bench of the Fourth Judicial Circuit the Hon. Ferdinand Williams, Democrat, in succession to Judge David W. Sloan, Republican, who had been elected by the people of Allegany, Garrett and Washington counties.

On Feb. 9, 1903, a Democratic governor appointed to the bench of the Fourth Judicial Circuit the Hon. William J. Witzenbacher, Democrat, in succession to Judge Edward Stake, Republican, who had been elected by the people of Garrett, Allegany and Washington counties.

On Aug. 6, 1908, the present Democratic governor, Austin L. Crothers, appointed to the bench of the Seventh Judicial Circuit the Hon. B. Harris Camiller, Democrat, in succession to Judge James Farran Crane, Republican, who had been elected by the people of Southern Maryland.

On April 24, 1909, the present Democratic governor appointed to the bench of the Seventh Judicial Circuit the Hon. T. Van Claggett, Democrat, in succession to Judge George C. Merrick, Republican, who had been chosen by the people of Southern Maryland.

In 1908, the present Democratic governor, in disregard of the enormous Republican vote in Baltimore city, filled two vacant places on the Supreme Bench there by the simultaneous selection of two Democrats, and on Sept. 8, 1909, one of his appointees having died in the meanwhile, he filled the vacant place by appointing another Democrat. The Democratic party has refused to recede from the partisan attitude assumed by the executive, although a distribution of judicial offices between the two political parties would have divided the bench of Baltimore city equally on political lines and would have constituted a sincere declaration in favor of a bipartisan judiciary.

COMPARE THE RECORD OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY ON THE SUBJECT OF A NONPARTISAN JUDICIARY WITH THAT OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY. A comparison shows facts that will not down. The argument is all one way. The Democratic party is determined to monopolize the bench of Maryland, if permitted to do so. The attitude of the Democratic party in regard to the Republican party and its relation to the judiciary was well expressed by the Democratic organ, the Evening Times, of Cumberland, when, in discussing the matter of a successor to the late Judge Sloan, it published in its columns on August 14, 1902, TWO DAYS AFTER JUDGE SLOAN'S BURIAL, the following:

"WOULD NOT THE APPOINTMENT OF A REPUBLICAN BE AN INSULT TO THE DEMOCRACY OF THE STATE GENERALLY, AND TO THE BAR OF THIS JUDICIAL CIRCUIT PARTICULARLY?"

REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE FOR STATE SENATE.

HARVEY J. SPEICHER.

Mr. Harvey J. Speicher, the Republican party's candidate for the State Senate, was born in Accident district, this county, November 21, 1873. He is a son of Mr. John P. Speicher, one of the most successful farmers and respected citizens of the county, who was also born and reared in Garrett county. His grandparents were among its early pioneer settlers. Mr. Harvey J. Speicher is one of a family of six brothers and one sister. Four of the brothers are now living in the vicinity of Accident, where they are known for their industry and thrift and numbered among the best citizens. The early years of his life were spent on his father's farm, attending the public school during the winter months after he reached the school age. Afterwards he attended the Normal school of the county and later became one of Garrett's most successful teachers for a period of five years. After this Mr. Speicher turned his attention to farming and stock raising with great success, now owning one of the best farms in Accident district. He is aggressive and progressive in all his undertakings. He believes in method and industry. His uprightness and straightforward dealings with his fellowmen has won for him a large circle of friends, especially in Maryland, where he has dealt more extensively than in any other State.

On June 12, 1897, Miss Emma Gnegy, a daughter of Rev. Gnegy, of Meyersdale, Pa., became his wife, and five children bless a happy union in one of Accident's prettiest homes.

Combined with his experience as a successful teacher, farmer and business man, his close observation of State and county affairs and his touch with its most important enterprises, public school system, public highways, and especially the county road system of Garrett.

It is believed by his friends that Mr. Speicher is peculiarly well endowed and fitted to represent the people of this county in the Maryland Senate, with the assurance that they will have competent, effective and honorable service. As a citizen he has always taken a conspicuous part in enterprises that had for their object the better development of the resources of the community in which he lives and he will ably represent every interest of the county in the State Senate. He is a member of one of the leading churches of the county and has been and is yet a strong advocate of temperance and has lent his assistance to temperance legislation.

The voters of Garrett will find that they have chosen wisely when they send men like Mr. Speicher to look after matters of legislation at the State Capital.

IF THE SUFFRAGE AMENDMENT SHOULD BE ADOPTED

It would tend to suppress independent political thinking.

It would entrench corruption and give immunity to misrule.

It would unfavorably affect the commercial interests of the state.

It would make a victory of the people, like that of 1895, practically impossible.

It would enable the dominant party to pass any other severer amendment at will.

It would minimize activity and interest in public affairs by destroying hope of victory over the dominant party.

It would make it practically impossible to hold the party in power to account for its conduct of public affairs.

It would make discriminations among our citizens, but none in favor of the soldier or sailor who has served his country in time of war.

It would give preference to the illegitimate, mixed blooded descendants of a white man who had the right to vote before 1869, over the legitimate native-born descendants of unnaturalized citizens as well as over the legitimate descendants of native-born white citizens who had not acquired the right to vote before 1869.

It is a snare, a delusion, a trick, a trap, a pretense; it is a false prophet, a slayer of human rights, an enslaver of the people, a blood-sucking vampire, a selfish scheme, a pious fraud, an evil inspiration; it is full of wrongs, full of inequalities, full of doubts, full of snakes; it was fathered by greed and mothered by tyranny; it was conceived in iniquity, born in dishonor and is doomed to die in infamy.

DOUBLE DEALING

The Honorable Murray Vandiver and his confederates in the scheme to fasten the control of the Ring on Maryland for keeps by means of the disfranchising amendment, at one time urged as a reason for disfranchising colored voters, that Maryland was being over-run with them from the Southern States. In a signed, paid advertisement in the Baltimore papers he says that under his pet scheme negroes from five Southern Sates will be able to register under the Grandfather Clause! Native born negroes are shut out and the objectionable Southern negroes are let in. This is a sample of the hypocrisy and injustice of the Straus Amendment. Governor Crothers now admits that some white voters will be disfranchised. The more one understands the scheme the more obnoxious it becomes.

MR. DECOURSEY E. BOLDEN.

Mr. DeCoursey E. Bolden, one of the Republican candidates for House of Delegates from Garrett county, was born in Oakland on October 12th, 1859, and has resided here ever since, a period covering half a century. He is the son of the late Charles W. Bolden, who was also born and raised in this county, his home being at Grantsville. Mr. Bolden, Sr., served in the Union army with credit. Mr. D. E. Bolden is engaged in the furniture and undertaking business in Oakland and is quite popular with all the people of his acquaintance. He is a member of the Oakland Lutheran church, where he is a regular attendant. Mr. Bolden is now serving his sixth term as a member of the City Council of Oakland. Being of a very sociable and genial disposition it can truthfully be said that Mr. Bolden is entirely without enemies and will doubtless receive many votes outside of his own party.

He has always taken an active interest in affairs calculated to benefit his town and county, and if elected to the House of Delegates he will doubtless serve the people of the whole county faithfully and well.

In 1880 Mr. Bolden was married to Miss Sarah Roth of Oakland, and to this union five children were born, four of them daughters and one son.

Dr. W. W. Davis spent last Saturday in Clarksburg, where he was called on business.

Mr. J. B. Lipscomp, of near Deer Park, was a business caller at this office Monday.

Mr. M. W. Layman, of Jennings, was in Oakland Monday when he made this office a visit.

The first snow of any consequence for the present winter fell last night and this morning the ground is coated with whiteness.

Mr. D. E. Offutt, Jr., drove his automobile through to Keyser, West Va., Tuesday morning, being accompanied by Mr. Mr. H. C. Sincell.

Dr. and Mrs. Henry W. McComas, who were on an extended visit to relatives in Baltimore, returned to their home in Oakland Sunday morning.

Mr. Philip T Peddicord of the Mountain State Business College, Parkersburg, W. Va., spent Sunday in Oakland with his parents and other friends.

Mrs. Mary Lowenstein was in Grafton last Monday where she attended the funeral of the late Capt Dennis A. Litzinger, father of Mr. James M. Litzinger, formerly of the Mountain Democrat.

Mrs. G. A. Fraley, who was a patient for several weeks in Dr. Jones' hospital in Wheeling, returned to her home in Oakland Tuesday afternoon, very much improved in health.

Mrs. Luther J. Brown and Mrs. Louis Walters, of Oakland, who were visiting relatives in Benwood and Wheeling, W. Va., for a week or more, returned to Oakland Tuesday afternoon.

Don't forget the fair at Swanton on Saturday of this week, and bring fruit, grain, potatoes or anything else you have to show. Good speaking, good music and a good time to see your friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Parlev DeBerry, of Terra Alta, spent Sunday in Oakland as the guest of Miss Ellen Connell and her mother, who arrived here Friday from Terra Alta, and who will reside here with her daughter.

Mr. Stewart F. Hamill, accompanied by Mr. William Byrd, left Oakland Tuesday morning for York, Pa., in the former's automobile, which will be repaired in the factory in that city during the coming winter. Dr. W. W. Grant accompanied Mr. Hamill as far as Keyser, returning home the same evening.

Messrs. D. E. Offutt and Scott T. Jones went to Cumberland Monday morning where they became the guests of Mr. J. Wilson Humbird in an automobile tour through West Virginia, returning to Oakland last night.

Tuesday night was quite an enjoyable occasion among the Masonic fraternity when Dr. Goodwin delivered a lecture on Masonic principles at the lodge room after which the ancient brethren adjourned to the Hinebaugh dining rooms where a collation of considerable proportions was served and which was discussed heartily by the assembled guests and members of the Oakland lodge. A number of Masons from other lodges were present.

A party of prominent ladies and gentlemen from Pittsburg who were on their way to Grantsville to spend a week or more in the pretty little Maryland village were registered at the Colonial Monday on their way to their destination. The party consisted of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Carson, Mr. and Mrs. John Currie, Mrs. Allen Gailey, Miss Nellie Schrack, Mr. W. J. Franks-town and Mr. W. S. Gibson.—Meyersdale Commercial.

Mr. J. Arthur White, son of Mr. James W. White, of Oakland, returned to his home here from Pittsburg, last Sunday afternoon and on Monday morning entered the employ of Messrs. Dixon & Kelso as clerk, taking the place which will be made vacant this week by the resignation of Mr. Carl B. White, who goes from here to Uniontown, Pa., next week, where he will enter the hardware business with his uncle, Mr. R. S. McCrum, the mayor of that city. While the patrons of the Dixon store will miss the geniality of the retiring clerk they will nevertheless be pleased with the treatment they receive from the one taking his place. The many friends of both young men wish them success.

The big mill of the Croft Lumber Co. at Alexander, W. Va., was started last week. It is the largest lumber concern in Upshur county, W. Va. Messrs. S. A. Kendall, of Meyersdale; J. H. Henderson, of Pittsburg; J. Gibson MacIlvane, of Philadelphia, principal stockholders and owners, together with Mr. N. U. Bond, of Bond, Md., general manager and designer of the plant, witnessed the trial test of the machinery and were well pleased with the first day's operations. The mill makes a cut of 7000 feet per hour and when fully limbered up is expected to exceed its contract capacity of 70,000 feet per day. During the afternoon the visitors were taken on an excursion over the Alexander and Rich Mountain railroad, twenty miles into the heart of the extensive timber tract of the company, and closed the day of sight-seeing and inspection by a sumptuous banquet served in the large dining room of the company's boarding house.—Meyersdale Republican.

THE DEATH RECORD.

MRS. CATHLRINE SNIDER

Mrs. Catharine Snider, the wife of Mr. John Snider of Deer Park, who has been in feeble health for some years on last Tuesday evening, Oct. 20, was stricken with paralysis. After much suffering she passed quietly away on Saturday morning. She was born Feb. 9, 1833, and was a daughter of John W. Wolff. She was married to Mr. John Snider, Jan. 1, 1853. She was converted at an early age and united with the Baptist church in 1858; she remained a consistent member until her death, setting us all an example of constancy and devotion. She leaves behind an aged husband, on whom the parting is specially severe, for they never had any children to bless their home. Our hearts go one in sympathy to him and other relatives who mourn her departure. May God comfort their hearts with the assurance that in the home beyond the skies all shall meet again. C. W. H.

JOHN C. FIKE.

A Pittsburg paper of the 14th inst. contained the following notice of the death of a former Garrett countian, whose funeral took place at his old home at Selbysport the following Monday morning:

After a prolonged illness John C. Fike, a prominent merchandise broker, of 330 Hallman street, East End, is dead at his home. He had grown steadily worse during the past two months and the end was not unexpected. He was surrounded by his relatives and friends when death came. Mr. Fike returned to his home two weeks ago, after a short stay at his former home in Selbysport, where he had gone in an effort to regain his health.

Mr. Fike was engaged in business in the Schmidt building and was well known among the wholesale grocers of the city and county. He was also prominent in the Woodmen of the World.

Funeral services were held at his late residence last evening, Rev. John Royal Harris, of the Cumberland Presbyterian church, of which the deceased was a member, officiating. The remains were taken to Selbysport, and will be interred at Frazee's Ridge.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Pearl Reynolds Fike; two children, Lois and Raymond; his mother, Mrs. Jean Francis Fike, of Selbysport; three brothers, Jackson, of the North Side; James, of Selbysport; Joseph, of Watson, Pa., and two sisters, Mrs. H. K. Friend, of Crellin, and Mrs. F. S. Raybeck, of Kendall.

CAPT. D. A. LITZINGER.

Capt. D. A. Litzinger, one of the oldest life-long residents of Grafton, W. Va., died Friday, aged 87 years. He was a veteran of both the Civil and Mexican wars, having served in the Union army in the former. He was the father of J. M. Litzinger, editor of the Grafton Leader, and former editor of the Mountain Democrat, Oakland. At one time Capt. Litzinger was a merchant at Piedmont.

The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Copyright, 1908, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

"Ah!" Kitty's face became eager with excitement. "Now you have put your finger on the mystery that is bothering us all. Not one of us has seen her or knows her name. She has not rehearsed with us and will not till we reach Naples, where we rest a week. When we speak of her the manager smiles and says nothing, and as none of us has seen the backer Mr. Worth thinks that she herself is the prima donna and backer in one. We think that she is some rich young woman who wishes to exploit her voice. There's a lot of them in the world. I wish I knew her. Little has been said about the venture in the papers, and I'm glad. We may prove a perfect fizzle, and the less said the better. As we can't walk back, I must learn to swim. Lunch is ready, every one!"

The mummers and the outsiders flocked into the small dining room. There was plenty to eat; beer, soda, whisky and two magnums of champagne, Merrihew's contribution to the feast. Hillard listened with increasing amusement to the shop talk. It was after 1 when they returned to the sitting room, where the piano stood. The wine was now opened, and toasts were drunk. O'Mally told inimitable stories. There was something exceedingly droll in that expressive Irish face of his.

Worth did not drink, but Hillard did not like his handsome face any the more for this virtue. He sang remarkably well, however, and with a willingness Hillard had not believed he possessed. He wondered vaguely why he disliked the man. Otherwise Hillard enjoyed himself vastly.

"Mr. Merrihew has been telling me all about you," said Kitty.

"You mean, of course, my good qualities," replied Hillard.

"To hear him talk one would think that you possessed nothing else. But I am sure that you have glaring faults such as a man might pass over and a woman go round."

"I believed that Merrihew had a serious fault till tonight," he said.

She looked at him quickly and colored.

"Has the foolish boy been telling you that I refused to marry him? I like him very much," she added gravely, "but I shall never marry any man till I have ceased to love the stage. I am not a whit less extravagant than he is. How could the two of us live on an income which he himself admits that he cannot live within? A month after I am gone he will forget all about me."

"Merrihew is the most loyal man I know," Hillard declared.

"Of course he is loyal! And he is always in earnest—for the moment."

And then they both laughed.

It was outrageously late, nearly 4, when the revelers took leave. Merrihew was happy with that evanescent happiness which goes hand in glove with late suppers and magnums.

"Isn't she a little wonder, Jack?"

"Yes, she is, Dan. It might be a good thing for you to marry a sensible little woman like that. But she won't have you."

"No, she won't." Merrihew reached for his watch. "Four a. m."

"Say, what do you think of that man Worth?"

"Very good voice, but he's too handsome."

"Oh, go on! You're as fine a looking chap as there is in New York. But this man Worth has the looks of a lady killer. He's been eying Kitty, but it doesn't go. Hang it, I can't see why she won't marry me now."

"You must have patience."

"Or more money. Can't O'Mally tell a good story, though?"

"Yes, but I should hate to turn him loose in my wine cellars. I imagine he will praise anything good to drink but water."

Merrihew roared.

"Well, here's your station, Dan. Shall I see you tomorrow?"

"Eight-thirty in the park. Nothing like a horse for a headache."

Hillard arrived home tired and sleepy, but as he saw a letter on the stand in the hall his drowsiness passed quickly. There was no other blue envelope like it. She now had his house address; she was interested enough to look it up. She did not follow his lead and write in Italian; she wrote in English—crisp English too. Again there was neither beginning nor ending. But this was a letter. There was something here of the woman, something to read and read again:

I had told the maid to burn your letter, but she left it on the floor where I had thrown it, and I came across it this morning. It looked rather pathetic. So I am writing you against my better judgment. Yes, I know your name. I find that I am well acquainted with people you know. I am a woman who often surrenders to the impulse of the moment. I may or may not answer any future letter from you. You write very good Italian, but it will surprise you to learn that I detest all things that are Italian. Once I loved them well. Why should you wish to know me? Our ways are as divergent as the two poles. Happy because I sing. There are some things over which we can sing or laugh, but of which we cannot speak without crying. Happy or unhappy, what can this matter to you? To you I shall always remain the lady in the fog. Are you rich, young, talented? I care not in the least. Perhaps it amuses me to add to your confusion. Find me if you think not. Misguided energy!

Hillard put the letter away, extinguished the lights and passed up to his room. This was a direct challenge. He would accept it. This time he would use no personal to tell her that a letter awaited her. She should make the inquiries herself. And from the mail clerk he would obtain a description of the elusive Mme. Angot. Next morning he rode in the park with Merrihew. Again he saw the veiled lady on the Sandford black. Out of normal curiosity he telephoned the stables and made inquiries. The reply was short. No one at the stables knew the lady, but she rode the horse on proper authority.

That night he wrote:

I shall keep on writing till you cease to reply. Let me be frank with you. I am bored. So are you. The pleasure you derive in keeping up this mystery engages you. You bid me to find you. I accept the challenge. You must understand at once that it is the mystery that interests me. It is the unknown that attracts me. I am mentally painting you in all sorts of radiant colors. You defy me to find you. There is nothing so reliable as the unexpected, nothing so desperately uncertain as a thing assured. I warn you that I shall lay all manner of traps, waylay your messengers, bribe them. I shall find out where you live. The rest will be simple.

She replied:

I have no desire to alleviate your confessed boredom. Your persistence would be praiseworthy if well directed. Waters wear away stone, the wind crumbles the marble, but a woman is not moved till she wishes to be. I never thought that I should dabble in an intrigue of this sort, and I am surprised at the amusement it affords me. I really owe you some gratitude. The few I have met who know you tell me that you are a "nice young man."

Every man has some portion of self love. So his next effort was a passionate denial that he was "nice." When should he meet her? The postman brought him a letter which contained one word—Nimmer! He sent her four pages, a frank and witty description of himself and his friends.

On the day she received this letter a cablegram came to her from the far Mediterranean. Whatever it contained had the effect to cause all restraint to disappear from the tone of her letters. They became charming, and more and more Hillard found himself loving a voice. All his watching, all his traps, came to no successful end. She was too clever for him. He sought the mail department of the great newspaper; the clerk couldn't remember, there were so many calling for mail. Letters passed to and fro daily now, but always she declared that it was impossible for them to meet. No, it was out of the question to dine with him in a restaurant. It was equally out of the question to cook a dinner where she lived, as she and her maid dined at a small restaurant near by. Finally he proposed to bring the dinner all cooked from the club. Two days went by without a sign; then the blue letter came.

I surrender. The most fatal thing in life is curiosity. It has the power to lead us into all manner of trouble. And I have my share of curiosity. Remember, you never would have found me. I may dwell in a garret; I may be hideous; perhaps nothing remains to me but my voice. And now the terms. And if you do not follow them confidently and blindly your dinner will grow cold in the carriage. Dinner will be at 8, Feb. 1. At 7 a carriage will call for you. The messenger will blindfold you. He will then proceed to the club and take the dinner and bring you here. Be warned: if you so much as lift the corner of the bandage, the romance will end then and there. I realize that I am doing something very foolish and unwise, but, as you say, I am a woman who has seen much of the world. Thus I have no worldly side. I shall use it as a buffer.

"Blindfolded!" Hillard scrubbed his chin. All these precautions. Who was she? What was she? Since there was no escape, blindfolded he would go.

At half after 6 on the night of the 1st of February, then, he began to dress. It was some time since he had taken such particular care.

"The signor seems in high spirits tonight," observed Giovanni as he laid out the linen.

"Man, I'm happy and greatly excited. Do you recollect the lady who sang under my window? I am going to meet her tonight. The mystery will be a mystery no longer."

"Ah!" Giovanni stroked his lips doubtfully. "It is not like the signor to plunge blindly into adventures like this."

"The very word, blindly. I go blindfolded, amico. What do you think of that?"

"Blindfolded?" Giovanni was horrified. "It is a trap!" he cried. "They will assassinate you! No; you shall not go! In Rome, at the carnivals, it is an old game. They will rob you."

"Take the number of the cab as I get in. If anything should happen, give the number to the police."

Giovanni, with a sharp movement of the hands, expressed his resignation to the worst. He knew the futility of arguing with his master. But he followed him down to the hall and tied on the bandage himself. He was honest about it, too, for Hillard could see nothing. Then the messenger boy took him by the hand and led him to the carriage. As the two were climbing in Giovanni spoke rapidly in his native tongue.

"There is no number on the carriage!"

"Too late to bother now."

The carriage rolled off toward the club, where the dinner, hot and smoking, was taken on.

CHAPTER V.

THE MASK.

"JOININ' th' Elks?" asked the boy when Hillard was well under way once more.

"No; it's a seance. They are going to call up my fate round a table."

"Ugh! Aw, go-wan! Dey don't call up no ghosts wit' French cider and hot boids." The boy relapsed into silence.

By and by the carriage stopped.

"Dis is where we alights, me lord!" the boy jeered. "An' no lookin', mind."

Hillard found the carriage steps and landed safely. He stood for a moment, listening. They were in a quiet part of the city; no elevated or surface cars were near. He was assured that the location was exclusive. Garrets are not to be found in quiet places.

"Look out fer th' steps," said the boy, again taking Hillard by the hand.

"And you be careful of that basket."

"I ain't lettin' it drop any."

Winding steps, thought the blindfolded man. He could recollect none. It seemed to him that they stood there five minutes before the door opened. When it did, the boy passed in the basket and resolutely pushed Hillard into the hall. The door closed gently, and the adventure was begun. Whither would it lead him?

"Take off the bandage the signor may now," said a voice in broken English.

"Thanks!" He tore the handkerchief from his eyes and blinked. The hall was so dimly lighted that he could see nothing distinctly.

"The signor's coat and hat."

He passed over these articles, shook the wrinkles from his trousers, smoothed his chin and stood at attention. The maid eyed him with abundant approval, then knocked timidly on the door leading to the drawing room.

She was masked!

"Avanti!" called a soft voice.

Hillard gathered in his courage, opened the door and stepped inside. On a divan near a lamp sat a woman in black. Only a patch of white throat could be seen, for her shoulders were not bare and her arms only to the elbows. Her back was turned squarely. But what a head! He caught his breath. It glowed like a copper beech in the sunshine.

"Madam?" he faltered. He spoke English and not very firmly.

The woman turned. Hillard took a step backward and blundered against a pedestal.

She was masked!

Masked! Only her mouth and chin were visible, and several little pieces of court plaster effectually disguised these. There was a mystery. He to come blindfolded and she to wear a mask—extraordinary!

"And this," she said ironically, "is the gentleman who leaned out of the window."

He brought all his faculties together, for he knew he would need them in this encounter. "Supposing I had fallen out of it—well, it could not have mattered. I should not have been more at your feet than I am now." This was very good, considering how dry his tongue was.

Hillard reached a chair successfully enough, but he never could recollect how. He sat down as a bashful man sits down in a crowded ballroom, with his knees drawn in tightly and his feet at sympathetic angles.

Presently she laughed with malice.

"You are not comfortable in that chair."

"That is true, and yet it is soft and roomy. I am uneasy. Perhaps you recall to my subconsciousness a period in my former existence on earth, or, if you will, one of my ancestors."

"I fail to understand."

"Well, a Hillard 200 years ago had his head cut off by an ax. His executioner wore a mask."

"A mistake. Your ancestor should have been hanged."

"And I along with him, you would imply?"

"Are you not Irish? I have known Irishmen of the name of Hillard."

"They were in disguise. But I have a genereus strain of Irish blood in me; otherwise I shouldn't have had the courage to follow up an adventure like this."

"Thanks. The compliment is rather ambiguous."

"My compliments cannot possibly be more ambiguous than your appearance. Surely there will be an hour for unmasking."

"It has already begun, Mr. Hillard."

"So I am the one who is to be unmasked? Well, I have only the mask nature gave to me. I wish she had been more liberal. But I shall see what can be done with it."

He took note of her teeth and felt a sudden tinge of regret. One may disguise the face and hair, but the teeth are always the same. Two lower teeth on the right side appeared to be gone; the others were firm and glistening white. It was a pity, for a woman's teeth are as much her glory as her hair.

Silence. The ruddy light on her hair fascinated him.

"What is it?" she demanded.

"Your hair," with a simplicity which silenced her. "You have the most beautiful hair I have ever seen."

"Thank you. And yet, for all you know, it may be a fine wig."

"If it is I shall never be sure of anything again. Am I in prosaic New York? Have you not by some carpet magic transported me to old Europe? If a dozen conspirators came in in cowls to render me the oath I should not be at all surprised."

"There is no magic, only a mask."

"And there is no way of seeing behind that?"

"None—absolutely none. I am told that you are a gentleman, so I am confident that you will not stoop to use force."

"Only the force of eloquence, if ever I may lay claim to that again."

"You are beginning well, for I tell you, Mr. Hillard, I shall expect but the most brilliant wit from you tonight. As for me, I shall only interpolate occasionally. Now, begin."

"I am not used to dancing without the pole."

"You must learn. Dance!"

"Upon what—nothing? And how shall I know that my dancing pleases you?"

"I agree to tell you. I wear this mask tonight because I am taking a surreptitious leaf out of my book of cares."

"You are, then, seeking a diversion?"

"Nothing more or less. Do not flatter yourself that there is anything personal or romantic on my side. I am bored."

"I am wholly in your hands," he said, "and they are very beautiful hands."

"Is there anything more beautiful than a cat's paw when the claws are hidden? Never judge a woman by her hands." Nevertheless she buried her hands in the depths of a down pillow. She had forgotten her rings. She slipped them off and managed to hide them.

"I promise to remember. Your letters"—he began diffidently. Where the deuce was his tongue? Was he to be tongued tied all the evening before this Columbine, who, with the aid of her mask, was covertly laughing at his awkwardness?

"My letters? A woman often writes what she will not say and says what she will not write. Did you not ask me to disillusion you?"

"Yes, but softly, softly. I begin to believe one thing—you brought me here to teach me a lesson. Gentlemen should never use the personal column."

"Nor should ladies read it. I am not saving any mercy for myself!" with laughter.

"Shall I begin with my past?"

"Something less horrifying, if you please!"

"I object to the word nice," he said. "I should have preferred milksop! Hadn't you better try some new kind of torture?"

This time her laughter was relaxed and joyful. And somehow Hillard felt more at ease. He was growing accustomed to the mask. He stretched his legs and fingered his nether lip.

"Have you not somewhere an invisible cloak?"

"I had one that night, which nature lent me," she answered readily. "I was so invisible to you that I heard the policeman call out your name. I thank you for insisting that I was not a chorus lady."

Here was a revelation which accounted for many things. "I haven't been very fortunate so far in this adventure."

"That is rank ingratitude. I am of the opinion that fortune has highly favored you."

"But the mask—the mask! If you heard the policeman call my name you must have heard him speak of one Leddy Lightfinger."

"I did, indeed. And is it not possible that I am that very person?"

Hillard dropped his hand toward his watch. "Why do you hate Italy?"

She sat straight, and what little he could see of her mouth had hardened.

"There will be no retrospection this evening, if you please," her voice rather metallic.

AMENDMENT A DRAG ON THE DEMOCRATS

Candidates Weighted Down By Measure On Which Party Is Divided.

When the Democratic bosses thrust the amendment on the party the claim was made by a number of the leaders that the advocacy of or opposition to the measure would not be regarded as an indication of party loyalty. This apparently is not the case.

There is a tendency in many quarters to hold up to ridicule Democrats opposed to the amendment on the score that they are "not Democrats." In some instances the rank partisans of the amendment will doubtless by their zeal drive into the Republican camp men whose original intention was to vote the Democratic ticket.

The amendment question is embarrassing to the Democratic candidates, who first of all are anxious to be elected, regardless of whether the amendment is adopted or defeated. This applies to men running for every office. It is not the candidates who charge other Democrats with "not being Democrats" because they are anxious to get the votes. The gentlemen who set themselves up as judges of the status of one's Democracy are those who go along like sheep with the party "organization" or expect something from it.

Some of the candidates—and those aspiring to the highest and most important offices—have pleaded with their friends not to come out openly against the amendment on the score that public opposition to the measure would injure the Democratic ticket. Especially in the case of Democrats of independent proclivities and who are supposed to have influence in the community are these pleadings made by the men aspiring to office. A number of independent Democrats who usually come out in the open in a political campaign are keeping quiet this fall regarding the amendment. "I am opposed to it," they will say, "but I want to see So and So elected on the Democratic ticket, and I decided not to come out publicly against the measure."

When Senator Smith and some of the other leaders insisted upon making the amendment an issue there was a protest in the party. The candidates for the offices have the real burden to bear. There is probably not one of them that has the slightest idea the amendment will pass, while all of them, in Baltimore city at least, are weighted down with the measure as a handicap. The amendment is at least embarassing to the city candidates and a load for them to carry.

RAYNER SLANDERS THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

The latest slander from Isidor Rayner, Democratic United States Senator and advocate-in-chief of the Straus disfranchising amendment, is to accuse the great Republican party of "Knownothingism" in 1856, the year of its birth as a factor in national politics. Emphasis is not always desirable, but when Mr. Isidor Rayner, the Baltimore Sun, and the hired spellbinders of the Democratic State machine charge the infant Republican party with the crime of "Knownothingism" they are all falsifiers of purest ray serene and the facts of history prove it. On June 17, 1856, the first national convention of the Republican party met in the City of Philadelphia and as its nominee for President of the United States named John C. Fremont, the great Indian fighter and romantic Pathfinder of the Rocky Mountains. In the same year the national convention of the so-called "Knownothing" party met and nominated an entirely separate and distinct candidate for the presidency,—Millard Fillmore, of New York. This was the last nomination ever to be made by the "Knownothing" party, which thereupon passed from the stage of human events. What right then, has Isidor Rayner or anyone else to charge the Republican party with "Knownothingism?" In very truth, Mr. Rayner might as well accuse the party of Lincoln, Grant and McKinley of being the inventor of original sin.

But Mr. Rayner pilots the rakish craft of the Democratic franchise pirates over the perilous waters of a mined harbor when he reverses the flight of time and appeals to the records of history, for this task, commenced by Rayner, the Republican party will finish. In its cradle in 1856 and defeated in that year's election four years later the Republican party, grown to a giant of huge proportions, swept the country from coast to coast and elected Abraham Lincoln president of the United States. It became the shield and buckler of the Federal Union, to defend which from the attacks of traitors it placed in the field 2,672,336 men, who did the glorious work of heroes on countless bloody battlefields,—Shiloh, Cold Harbor, Chickamauga, Seven Oaks, the Wilderness, Antietam, Gettysburg, —and a host of others from Manassas to Appomattox. The millions of brave men who answered the call of a Republican president for troops to stamp out rebellion are swiftly passing on to their eternal rest and the bivouac of the dead but their souls are marching on, and though driven out of the South the Republican party still lives.

We have said that the Republican party stood for the Union, fought for the Union and saved the Union. But Mr. Isidor Rayner thinks this was a slight and trivial thing. He disposes of it by charging the great Republican party with "Knownothingism". To support his baseless accusations he goes to history, and we are right there with him to assist him, in our poor weak way, in his historical investigation and research. Now that you have gone back to war times, tell us Mr. Rayner, what was the attitude of the Democratic party toward the preservation of the Union? What did the national Democratic party want to do while the great rebellion still raged in all its fury? We do not believe that Mr. Rayner will care to answer this question, and we will therefore do him the kindness to answer it for him by handing him a plank from the national platform of the Democratic party adopted by it in the dark days of the Civil War. The Democratic National Convention met in Chicago on Aug. 29, 1864, and proclaimed its cardinal plank to the people in the following language:

"That this Democratic national convention does explicitly declare as the sense of the American people that after four year of failure to restore the Union by the experiment of war, the public welfare demands that immediate efforts be made for a cessation of hostilities."

Thus the Democratic party was willing to desert the nation in the hour of its need. And in the meantime the mighty hosts of Republicanism were singing the songs of victory and freedom by a million campfires and demanding at the point of the bayonet the "unconditional surrender" of their country's enemies.

Since Mr. Rayner, in the perfection of his folly and the quintessence of his asininity, sees fit to go back to the days of the rebellion the keepers of the Republican faith will go back with him and guide his footsteps and see that he does not lose the trail in his oratorical wanderings in the misty past. There may be balm in Gilead, but there is none in the history of their country for the Democratic party. What would have become of the country if the national Democracy had had its way in 1864? What will become of the State of Maryland and the Republican party if the Democracy has its way today and succeeds in passing the Straus amendment? Answer these questions for yourselves, Republican voters. You can do it as well as we can. As to the iniquitous Straus disfranchising amendment, defeat it, and again defeat it, and along with it make the lesson certain, sweeping and unforgettable by defeating every nominee on the Democratic ticket. This way and this way only does safety lie.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

CHAPTER 26.

AN ACT to amend Section one of Article one, title, "Elective Franchise," of the Constitution of this State, and to provide for the submission of said Amendment to the qualified voters of this State for adoption or rejection.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, three-fifths of all the members of each of the two Houses concurring, That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to Section one of Article one, title, "Elective Franchise," of the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, as herein provided, it shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of Section one of said Article one.

SEC. 1. All elections shall be by ballot, and every male citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years or upwards, who has been a resident of the State for two years and of the Legislative District of Baltimore City or of the county in which he may offer to vote for one year next preceding the election, and who, moreover, is duly registered as a qualified voter as provided in this Article, shall be entitled to vote, in the ward or election district in which he resides, at all elections hereafter to be held in this State, and in case any county or city shall be so divided as to form portions of different electoral districts for the election of Representatives in Congress, Senators, Delegates, or other officers, then to entitle a person to vote for such officer, he must have been a resident of that part of the county or city which shall form a part of the electoral district in which he offers to vote, for one year next preceding the election; but a person who shall have acquired a residence in such county or city, entitling him to vote at any such election, shall be entitled to vote in the election district from which he removed, until he shall have acquired a residence in the part of the county or city to which he has removed.

Every male citizen of the United States having the above prescribed qualifications of age and residence shall be entitled to be registered so as to become a qualified voter if he be, first: a person who, on the first day of January, in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, or prior thereto, was entitled to vote under the laws of this State, or of any other State of the United States, wherein he then resided; or second: a male descendant of such last mentioned person; or third: a foreign-born citizen of the United States naturalized between the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine and the date of the adoption of this section of this Article; or fourth: a male descendant of such last mentioned person; or fifth: a person who, in the presence of the officers of registration, shall, in his own hand-writing, with pen and ink, without any aid, suggestion or memorandum whatsoever, and without any question or direction addressed to him by any of the officers of registration, make application to register correctly, stating in such application his name, age, date and place of birth, residence and occupation at the time and for the two years next preceding, the name or names of his employer or employers, if any, at the time and for the two years next preceding, and whether he has previously voted, and if so, the State, county or city and district or precinct in which he voted last, and also the name in full of the President of the United States, of one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, of the Governor of Maryland, of one of the Judges of the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and of the Mayor of Baltimore City, if the applicant resides in Baltimore City, or of one of the County Commissioners of the county in which the applicant resides; and any person who is unable to comply with the aforegoing requirements as to making application for registration in his own hand-writing, solely because he is physically disabled from so doing; or sixth: a person, or the husband of a person, who at the time of his application for registration, is a bona fide owner of real or personal property in an amount of not less than five hundred dollars, is assessed therefor on the tax-books of the City of Baltimore or of one of the counties of this State, has been such owner and so assessed for two years next preceding his application for registration; shall have paid and shall produce receipts for the taxes on said property for said two years and shall at the time of his application make affidavit before the officers of registration that he is, or that he is the husband of the person who is the bona fide owner of the property so assessed to him or her, as the case may be, and that he or she has been such owner for two years next preceding his application.

No person not qualified under some one of the above clauses shall be entitled to be registered as a qualified voter or be entitled to vote. Every written application to be registered, presented to the officers of registration by any person applying to be registered under the above fifth clause, shall be carefully preserved by said officers of registration and shall be produced in any Court, if required, as hereinafter provided.

The affidavit of any applidant for registration, duly made to the officers of registration or in Court, that he, the applicant, is a person who was entitled to vote on or before the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, as aforesaid, or that he has become a naturalized citizen of the United States between the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine and the date of the adoption of this section of this Article, as aforesaid, or his affidavit upon information or belief that he is a descendant of a person who was entitled to vote on or before the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, or that he is a descendant of a person who who has become a naturalized citizen of the United States between the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine and the date of the adoption of this section of this Article, shall be prima facie evidence of any of said facts so sworn to.

A wilfully false statement upon the part of any applicant for registration in relation to any of the matters aforesaid shall be perjury, and punishable as perjury is punished by the laws of this State.

Any person who feels aggrieved by the action of any board of officers of registration in refusing to register him as a qualified voter, or in registering any disqualified person, may at any time, either before or after the last session of the board of officers of registration, but not later than the Tuesday next preceding the election, file a petition, verified by affidavit, in the Circuit Court of the county in which the cause of complaint arises, or, if the cause of complaint arises in Baltimore City, in any court of common law jurisdiction in said city, setting forth the grounds of his application and asking to have the action of the board of officers of registration corrected. The court shall forthwith set the petition for hearing and direct summons to be issued requiring the board of officers of registration complained against in said petition to attend at the hearing in person or by counsel, and where the object of the petition is to strike off the name of any person summons shall also be issued for such person, which shall be served by the sheriff within the time therein designated; and said several courts shall have full jurisdiction and power to review the action of any board of officers of registration and to grant or withhold, as it may deem lawful and proper, the relief prayed for in the premises.

In determining whether any person who applied to be registered under the above fifth clause of this section was or was not entitled to be registered under said fifth clause, the court shall require the board of officers of registration complained against to produce the written application prepared and submitted by such person at the time he presented himself for registration to said board of officers of registrarion, and upon said written application the court shall determine whether or not said person, when he presented himself for registration, complied with the requirements of said fifth clause, and that said person was not disqualified under any other provision of this Article of the Constitution to be registered upon the books of registry in question, then the court shall order said person to be registered as a qualified voter, but if the court shall determine that said written application of said person failed to comply with the requirements of said fifth clause, or that he was in any other respect under this Article of the Constitution disqualified to be registered upon

For the Constitutional Amendment, Against the Constitutional Amendment, said proposed amendment to the Constution of the State of Maryland being as follows:

CHAPTER 26.

AN ACT to amend Section one of Article one, title, "Elective Franchise," of the Constitution of this State, and to provide for the submission of said amendment to the qualified voters of this State for adoption or rejection.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, three-fifths of all the members of each of the two Houses concurring, that the following section be and same is hereby proposed as an amendment to Section one of Article one, title "Elective Franchise," of the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, as herein provided, it shall supersede and stand in place and stead of Section one of said Article one.

SECTION 1. All elections shall be by ballot, and every male citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years or upward, who has been a resident of the State for two years and of the Legislative District of Baltimore City or of the county in which he may offer to vote, for one year next preceding the election, and who, moreover, is duly registered as a qualified voter as provided in this Article, shall be entitled to vote, in the ward or election district in which he resides, at all elections hereafter to be held in this State, and in case any county or city shall be so divided as to form portions of different electoral districts for the election of Representatives in Congress, Senators, Delegates or other officers, then to entitle a person to vote for such officer, he must have been a resident of that part of the county or city which shall form a part of the electoral district in which he offers to vote, for one year next preceding the election; but a person who shall have acquired a residence in such county or city, entitling him to vote at any such election, shall be entitled to vote in the election district from which he removed, until he shall have acquired a residence in the part of the county or city to which he has removed.

Every male citizen of the United States having the above prescribed qualifications of age and residence shall be entitled to be registered so as to become a qualified voter if he be first: a person who, on the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, or prior thereto, was entitled to vote under the laws of this State, or of any other State in the United States, wherein he then resided; or second: a male descendant of such last mentioned person; or third: a foreign born citizen of the United States naturalized between the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine and the date of the adoption of this section of this Article; or fourth: a male descendant of such last mentioned person; or fifth: a person who, in the presence of the officers of registration, shall in his own handwriting, with pen and ink, without any aid, suggestion or memorandum whatsoever, and without any question or direction addressed to him by any of the officers of registration, make application to register correctly, stating in such application his name, age, date and place of birth, residence and occupation at the time and for the two years next preceding, the name or names of his employer or employers, if any, at the time and for the next two years preceding, and whether he has previously voted, and if so, the State, county or city district in which he voted last, and also the name in full of the President of the United States, of one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, of the Governor of Maryland, of one of the Judges of the Court of Appeals of Maryland and of the Mayor of Baltimore City, if the applicant resides in Baltimore City, or of one of the County Commissioners of the county in which the applicant resides; and any person who is unable to comply with the aforegoing requirements as to making application for registration in his own handwriting, solely because he is physically disabled from so doing; or sixth: a person, or the husband of a person, who at the time of his application for registration, is a bona fide owner of real or personal property in an amount of not less than five hundred dollars, is assessed therefor on the taxbooks of Baltimore City or of one of the counties of this State, has been such owner and so assessed for two years next preceding his application for registration; shall have paid and shall produce receipts for the taxes on said property for said two years and shall at the time of his application make affidavit before the officers of registration that he is, or that he is the husband of the person who is the bona fide owner of the property so assessed to him or to her, as the case may be, and that he or she has been such owner for two years next preceding his application.

No person not qualified under some one of the above clauses shall be entitled to be registered as a qualified voter or be entitled to vote. Every written application to be registered, presented to the officer of registration by any person applying to be registered under the fifth clause, shall be carefully preserved by said officers of registration and shall be produced in any court, if required, as hereinafter provided.

The affidavit of any applicant for registration, duly made to the officer of registration or in court, that he, the applicant, is a person who was entitled to vote on or before the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, as aforesaid, or that he has become a naturalized citizen of the United States between the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine and the date of the adoption of this section of this article, as aforesaid, or his affidavit upon information and belief that he is a descendant of a person who was entitled to vote on or before the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, or that he is a descendant of a person who has become a naturalized citizen of the United States between the first day of January in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine and the date of the adoption of this section of this Article, shall be prima facie evidence of any of said facts so sworn to.

A wilfully false statement upon the part of any applicant for registration in relation to any of the matters aforesaid shall be perjury, and punishable as perjury is punished by the laws of the State.

Any person who feels aggrieved by the action of any board of officers of registration in refusing to register him as a qualified voter, or in registering any disqualified person may at any time, either before or after the last session of the board of officers of registration, but not later than the Tuesday next preceding the election, file a petition, verified by affidavit, in the Circuit Court for the county in which the cause of complaint arises, or, if the cause of complaint arises in Baltimore City, in any court of common law jurisdiction in said city, setting forth the grounds of his application and asking to have the action of the board of officers of registration corrected. The court shall forthwith set the petition for hearing and direct summons to be issued requiring the board of officers of registration complained against in said petition to attend at the hearing in person or by counsel, and where the object of the petition is to strike off the name of any person, summons shall also be issued for such person, which shall be served by the sheriff within the time therein designated; and said several courts shall have full jurisdiction and power to review the action of any board of officers of registration and to grant or withhold, as it may deem lawful and proper, the relief prayed for in the premises.

In determining whether any person who applied to be registered under the above fifth clause of this section was or was not entitled to be registered under said fifth clause, the court shall require the board of officers of registration complained against to produce the written application prepared and submitted by such person at the time he presented himself for registration to said board of officers of registration, and upon said written application the court shall determine whether or not said person, when he presented himself for registration, complied with the requirements of said fifth clause; and if the court shall determine that said written application, so prepared and submitted by said person, complied with the requirements of said fifth clause, and that said person was not disqualified under any other provision of this Article of the Constitution to be registered upon the books of registry in question, then the Court shall order said person to be registered as a qualified voter but if the court shall determine that said written application of said person failed to comply with the requirements of said fifth clause, or that said person was in any other respect under this Article of the Constitution disqualified to be registered upon the books of registry in question, then the court shall order that said person shall not be registered upon said books of registry.

The court may enforce any order by attachment for contempt in said cause; neither party shall have any right of removal; exception may be taken to any ruling of the court at the hearing of said cases and an appeal shall be allowed to the Court of Appeals as in other cases; all such appeals shall be taken within five days from the date of the decision complained of, and shall be heard and decided by the Court of Appeals upon the original papers, or otherwise, as the Court of Appeals may by rule prescribe, as soon as may be practicable.

The General Assembly shall have power to provide more fully by legislation not inconsistent with this section of this Article for the hearing and determination of all such cases.

SECTION 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the aforegoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State shall be at the next General Election for members of the General Assembly to be held in this State, submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article XIV of the Constitution of this State, and at said general election the vote on the said proposed amendment shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be printed the words "For the Constitutional Amendment" and "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as now prescribed by law, and immediately after said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Article XIV of the Constitution.

Approved February 25, 1908.

In accordance with a certificate filed with us by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, Maryland, stating that in accordance with Chapter 281, Section 206E, Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, 1908, stating that a petition signed by more than fifty voters and taxpayers in Election District No. 8 of Garrett county, Maryland, there will appear on the official ballot for said District No. 8, a proposition for an additional levy of ten cents on each one hundred dollars upon the total taxable basis of said District No. 8, for the repair and improvements of the roads in said District No. 8.

The polls of said election will be opened in each and every Election District of said Garrett county, at the usual places of holding the polls, at 8 o'clock A. M., and will be closed at 6 o'clock P. M., when the ballots shall be counted according to law.

AMENDMENT HAS NOT ONE GOOD FEATURE

Why Leading Citizens Oppose the Proposition.

From the Baltimore American:

As the election draws near the sentiment against the proposed disfranchisement amendment becomes more pronounced and leading citizens who are not allied with any political party become most impressed with the necessity of exposing its outrageous provisions.

Dr. Nathan Herman analyzes the measure and finds that the third and fourth clauses admit foreign-born citizens to a limited extent, excluding the greater portion of that class.

Rev. P. A. Heilman holds that as long as this country has an unrestricted ballot, every citizen should be entitled to the privilege of voting.

Mr. Frank G. Boyd declares that the Democratic managers in their zeal to deprive the negro of his vote, have drawn up a law that will effect 25 per cent. of the whites as well.

Rev. Dr. Adolph Guttmacher says it is a hopeful sign for popular government that men of all classes and conditions are opposed to the measure which bears upon its face the stamp of narrow politics.

Mr. Wm. A. Buckingham believes that the Democratic machine is striking at the franchise rights of many good citizens in their endeavor to prevent the black man from voting.

Mr. Tanchum Siberman considered it an insult to his intelligence when asked whether he favored the amendment.

Mr. Bernard Cline said he knew a number of foreigners who would be desirable citizens and who in the event of the passage of this amendment would be disfranchised.

Dr. Nathan Herman, the specialist and a well known physician, denounces the amendment in unmeasured terms. Said he:

"The proposed amendmen' to the Constitution of the State relating to the suffrage deserves a most emphatic rejection at the hands of the voters. It possesses not one redeeming feature. Designed for the sole purpose of fastening the rule of the notorious ring of Democratic politicians upon the state, it teems with inhuman and un-American features and would commit the state to such a policy in respect to suffrage qualifications as to place it behind all others in the United States and in the world. Its arrogant and tyrannical sponsors pretend that they could bulldoze the Supreme Court of the country to believe that it does not violate the Fifteenth Amendment, in that it is not aimed at the negro, while at the present time they vainly try to explain, though of course this is an impossible feat, that it would accomplish exclusively this very thing. Surely they are entitled to membership in the Ananias Club unless possibly their seemingly unconscious and childlike hypocrisy would not exclude them from an organization of such comparatively honorable people.

"The first and second clauses would raise up and foster a pr vileged class, ignorant and presumptive, who would be insufferably arrogant and presumably proud of their ignorance.

"The third and fourth clauses would admit foreign-born citizens to the suffrage to a very limited extent and exclude the greater portion of that useful element in the councils and progress of the state. I wish to state right here that it is mostly to this element and its civic virtues and activities in the past that much of the progress of the state and its present enlightenment is due, that enlightenment which will surely encompass not only the defeat of the proposed amendment, but also the retirement of all who have had anything to do with it.

"The fifth is the so-called educational test, which is no educational test at all, and even if it were it would be impossible, because it is not intended to be applied to all and would assist, if it were really an educational test, in promoting and fostering, the ignorance of those whom it is proposed to exempt from its operation.

"But not being a test of education does not serve to make it any the less objectionable, even if it were applied to all candidates for the suffrage. It is only a detestable trick, conforming in this respect to the rest of the proposal. Its requirements are beyond the capabilities of even the most erudite of the amendment's advocates, and this is not intended as a reflection on their erudition. The only way they can retain their right to vote is by being exempt from its operation, according to one or more of the first four provisions, or by acquiring the suffrage under the last or property qualification.

"This last is at least as bad as any of the others, if not worse. Every resident is naturally and of necessity a contributor to the state's income. When he pays rent he pays taxes. When he buys any article in a store he pays rent and consequently taxes. He would be a wise one indeed if he could live in a community and escape paying his share of the public burden. What the wife's property qualification means I confess that I am unable to guess, unless it is meant to foster matrimonial adventure, which may be a very entertaining and diverting feature and may relieve the dead level of a tyrannized and brutalized community, which this would certainly become if we are foolish enough to accept such an amendment."

"Why am I opposed to the Straus amendment?" said Rev. P. A. Heilman, of St. Paul's Lutheran Church, when asked for his reasons for opposing the measure. "Because," he continued, "it is unconstitutional, un-American and unreasonable. Every citizen of the United States is entitled to a vote, no matter what his ancestry, color or previous condition. That is the unalienable right of every American citizen. He must, of course, be registered and pay his taxes, then he is entitled to the suffrage.

"As long as this country has an unrestricted ballot, right and justice demand that every citizen have the privilege of voting.

"I am in favor of a limited suffrage on general principles, one not aimed at any class but the unworthy. Every man or woman who pays tax ought to have the right to say who shall expend that money and how. Taxation without representation was the cause of the greatest war this nation ever had.

"Until the nation has a universal restricted ballot it is unfair for any state to forbid any qualified voter the right of suffrage. We glory in our freedom; that any man may do what he pleases in this land as long as he pleases to do right. To vote is one of the sweetest privileges of an American, and no man or party has a right to bar any man entitled to a vote by the national Constitution from this privilege."

Rev. Dr. Adolph Guttmacher, rabbi of the Madison Avenue Hebrew Temple, made a vigorous denouncement of the proposed constitutional amendment, which he believes will be overwhelmingly defeated. "That the voice of the people is the voice of God," said Dr. Guttmacher, "will be clearly proven by the overwhelming defeat of the disfranchising amendment. It is a hopeful sign for popular government that men of all classes and conditions, native as well as foreign-born, are bitterly opposed to the measure, which bears upon its surface the stamp of narrow party politics. Maryland, one of the first colonies to declare for equal rights, dare not be faithless to her glorious past by discriminating against any class, as would be the case if the amendment passed."

Frank G. Boyd, secretary of the Interstate Builders and Traders' Association of Maryland and the District of Columbia, denounces the proposed Straus amendment as a measure that will deprive at least 25 per cent. of the white voters of their right of franchise. Speaking of it several days ago he said: "The Straus amendment is an iniquitous measure and ought by all means to be defeated. In fact, I hope that it will be beaten by at least 50,000 majority, so it will be dead for all time. In their zeal to try and deprive the negro of his right to vote the Democratic managers have drawn up a law that will affect about 25 per cent. of the white voters as well. The memory or educational test, as it is called, can scarcely be complied with by the average voter, as has been shown on different occasions by intelligent and learned men. The measure gives entirely too much authority to the election officials and should be killed."

Mr. William A. Buckingham, president of the Buckingham Brothers Cigar Company, 405 West Baltimore street, expressed himself as being unalterably against the proposed Straus suffrage amendment. Mr. Buckingham said: "I take every opportunity of expressing myself as being heartily opposed to the proposed suffrage amendment. I am working for its defeat with every spare moment of my time; not at public meetings with a brass band, but quietly among my friends and acquaintances. I have gone so far as to ask my traveling men, who are on the road, to arrange their routes so that they may be in Baltimore on election day to vote against the proposed amendment as a personal favor to me.

"The amendment is an iniquitous measure, and although I have never been active in politics I will do anything in my power to aid those fighting against the measure. I do not believe that it is directed against the black man alone, but think it is a subterfuge behind which politicians are hiding and by which they intend to disfranchise many good citizens who are entitled to their right of suffrage. I am unalterably opposed to the measure, not only on some of its clauses, but in its entirety. I think its principle is wholly wrong and my efforts will be against it."

Mr. Tanchum Sibermen, of Siberman & Todes, wholesale dealers in dry goods and notions, Hanover and German streets, when asked whether or not he had formed an opinion on the amendment, said: "I certainly have, and will speak on that measure on next Sunday afternoon."

Upon being asked: "Will you speak for or against the amendment?" his reply was: "When you ask me if I am going to speak for the amendment you insult my intelligence." Mr. Siberman said that he was working for the defeat of the amendment, and that on Sunday next he would talk against its adoption at the meeting in the Princess Theater, on East Baltimore street, which will be held under the auspices of the Jewish Nonpartisan Anti-Amendment League.

Mr. Bernhard Cline, a lawyer, with offices in the Heffman Building on East Lexington street, who is known as an independent voter, and who has supported the Democratic ticket on several occasions, said: "I have a number of reasons for opposing the proposed suffrage amendment. I am a believer in universal suffrage. If passed, the amendment will create a one-party government in the state, a party whose control would be undisputed. I believe that when one party comes into absolute control, it is bound to become corcupt.

"If carried, the measure would create aristocracy. I am opposed to any qualification being put on the right to vote unless it is applied to all classes, and the proposed amendment does not carry out this idea. I am opposed to it because those foreigners who were not naturalized before the passage of such a measure, would be put in a class separate from others. I know a large number of foreigners who have come here within the past four or five years, who would make desirable citizens, and who, in case of the passage of such an amendment, would be jeopardized and their right to vote questioned.

"I do know and always have opposed any property qualification. Under such a qualification many honest citizens may be deprived of their vote, while rascals and drunkards, who may happen to be assessed $500 would have the unquestioned right of franchise.

"The general tendency throughout the world today is to extend, rather than to confine suffrage, and this feeling is exactly opposite to the desire of the framers of the amendment. In any real free country suffrage must be universal."

Obituary.

Mr. John Harned, of Oakland, Md., was born in Harnedsville, Somerset county, Pa., February 14, 1825, and died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. John H. Porter, at Montezuma, Iowa, October 11, 1909, at the age of 83 years, 7 months and 28 days.

He was of a family of seven children, three sisters and four brothers, one sister and two brothers living. He was married three times and was the father of six children, five by the first union and one by the second. Those living are Mrs. John H. Porter, Montezuma, Iowa; Mrs. H. P. Brown, Davenport, Iowa; Chas. Harned, Norfolk, Neb.; J. E. Harned, Oakland, Md.

In 1864 Mr. Harned moved to West Liberty, Iowa, where he resided for a number of years and where his first wife died and was buried. After this he moved to Maryland where he had resided since. A few months ago he with his wife came to Iowa for his health and for a time was benefitted, and they came to Montezuma on a visit where, on October 1st, he was stricken with paralysis which terminated his life. He was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal church for over seventy years and died believing that the faithful receive their reward in the life to come.

Funeral services were held at the J. H. Porter home at 7:30 this evening, conducted by the Rev. H. F. Gilbert, pastor of the M. E. church of this place.

At his request the remains will be taken to West Liberty, Iowa, where he will be laid to rest by the side of his first wife. Relatives present at the funeral and attending the remains to West Liberty were: Mrs. John Harned, Mrs. H. P. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Porter. Other relatives are expected to join them at West Liberty.—Montezuma Republican, Oct. 15.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mrs. Pierce has purchased the Mulford cottage, next to the Romney cottage, and is making extensive improvements thereon. Mr. M. M. Schrock has charge of the work.

Supt. and Mrs. Davis will leave the Park Saturday evening for Baltimore where the Doctor goes to vote and Mrs. Davis will remain there during the winter.

Mrs. Annan and daughter, of St. Louis, are still with us, enjoying the splendid fall weather on the mountain.

The glade front west of the board walk has been ditched and is now being plowed preparatory to seeding to oats and grass.

Rathbun Sons are complimented for the improved appearance of their office building.

They also have under advisement the erection of a number of neat cottages in Loch Lynn to meet the demands of that thriving town caused by the introduction of natural gas.

Preaching in the M. E. church Sunday evening at 7.30 by the pastor.

Rev. H. E. Friend was a visitor here this week.

Miss Dillie Hagans left this morning for Morgantown. She expects to return to the Park about the holidays.

Mrs. Hutchinson left for her winter home in Parkersbgrg this morning.

Two horses, buggy and cart for sale at once at a bargain; one black horse, one a bay, the latter a perfectly safe animal for ladies or children to drive; a good leader and will work any place.

CALLS AMENDMENT PERJURY INCENTIVE

Dr. Morgan Denounces It at Methodist Preachers' Meeting.

That the grandfather clause of the proposed Straus suffrage amendment is a premium on perjury was declared last Thursday by Dr. J. O. Spencer, president of Morgan College, in an address to the Baltimore Preachers' Meeting in Eutaw Street Methodist Episcopal Church.

"The Moral Aspects of the Proposed Disfranchisement" was the topic of Dr. Morgan's address. The Preachers' Meeting is composed of all the Methodist ministers of the city. Rev. B. F. Devries presided Thursday.

"Political powers," said Dr. Morgan, "must act in harmony with God's moral law. Christ Himself included all human relations in "Do unto others as ye would that they should do to you." I propose to measure this amendment by the Christian standard; by this standard which Christ set up anew, but which God had already set up in the hearts of men.

"You know only too well the terms of the amendment. Is there any trace of the Golden Rule in it? What rule of right is there in allowing a man to vote just because his father or his grandfather had a right to vote on a fixed date—January 1, 1869? How do you know and can you prove that your father or grandfather had such a right. You must swear that he had this right at a certain fixed time. Is this not a premium on perjury?

"Then, too, many of our colored friends of mixed blood might be able to make affidavit that their white fathers had a right to vote on January 1, 1869. What will be done with this class?

"As to the naturalization clause, there is no provision in that clause for those who will become naturalized after November 2, 1909. They will be obliged to take the educational test. Is this fair and just?

"The terms of the educational test are well known to you. Not one man in a hundred could pass it. But there is a loophole. Those physically disabled may be excused from the writing test. The candidate for voting may say 'I left my spectacles at home and cannot see to write.' He may be excused for physical disability though the most powerful spectacles would not enable him to write because he could not. Another candidate not so friendly with the registration officials may not be excused. Is this moral, safe and fair?

"But all this fraud and trickery would be put in the Constitution to debauch the political life of the people for generations. If successful in getting rid of the negro vote now, what is to prevent the getting rid of any vote in the path of the gang?

"Today disfranchise for color; tomorrow for creed; next day for cash or lack of cash. Do this and you will create a political oligarchy based on hereditary voting privilege, stifle criticism, destroy the power of the independent voter; then goodby to our representative form of government. Yet this is morality."

MERRILL.

The barn dance given at David Warnick's Saturday evening, was quite a success, there being fourteen couples present. Games and dancing were the features of the evening. Mr. George McIntyre and Miss Clara Michael took the prize, a fine cake, which they shared with their less fortunate companions. A bounteous supper was served at 12 o'clock, after which the merry-makers departed for their homes.

Mr. Max Broadwater, while returning from Peter Bittinger's, near Avilton, Saturday night, was slightly injured. His horse became frightened at an automobile standing at the residence of Samuel Wiland and ran away, throwing him out of his buggy and breaking three ribs. Dr. Bowen, of Grantsville, was summoned and rendered aid.

Burkhart Bros., of New York, presented their new play, "Wild Fire," to a large and appreciative audience in the Merrill Opera House, Wednesday evening. There will be another production next Saturday, Oct. 30, entitled "The Runaway."

A quiet and pretty wedding took place at the home of the bride's parents, Pine Swamp, last Sunday evening. The principals were Mr. Milton Railey, of Bittinger, and Miss Effie Warnick. They immediately left for Piedmont, where they took train No. 3 Monday morning for Chicago, where they will visit relatives. They expect to make their home in Lonaconing.

Mr. Gustell Duckworth was in this place last week repairing telephones.

Alon Broadwater and wife are visiting relatives in Lonaconing.

FIRE BURNED HOME

That of Mrs. Gideon J. Ferguson at Elder Destroyed.

Fire on Tuesday, which had its origin from a defective flue, set on fire and completely destroyed the home of Mrs. Gideon J. Ferguson, widow of the late Rev. G. J. Ferguson, of Elder, this county.

The fire had gained such headway when it was discovered that it was impossible to save the building and the rapidity with which it was consumed prevented saving but few articles in the building. The loss is seriously felt by Mrs. Ferguson.

The FREE Sewing Machine

The FREE Sewing Machine Head Showing the Ball-Bearing Rotascillo Movement.

TO THE PUBLIC:—

Sewing machines, like watches, can be bought at almost any price, and while you can buy machines at very low prices, we desire to say that we have sold machines for years as low as $10.00, $15.00 and $18.00, thus meeting the demand for cheap machines and foreign competition. The public is becoming better educated as to the fact that machines, like everything else, are only bought and sold according to their value, and many who buy cheap machines are inclined to exchange them for a high grade machine.

In taking the agency for the FREE machine we were led to do so on account of its many and valuable features, unlike any other machine, and for the high quality of its construction and quality of material used. While the price is the same as all high-grade machines, by contracting for a quantity, selling direct to the consumer without any expense, especially for cash, we are able to offer this high-grade machine for $25.00. We sold two lately to dressmakers, who claim they excel any machine they ever used. We also had an expert machinist to examine, try and test the machine in every way possible. He was unlimited in his report as to its high standing of mechanical construction and material used, its light running, the great variety of work and the satisfactory way all the attachments furnished could be used. It has unlimited guarantee for life time. What more can you ask? We invite one and all to examine the FREE machine now on exhibition at our store.

SUPREME COURT TO END DISPUTE

Boundary Question Comes Down from Colonies.

Before the United States Supreme Court in Washington this week will be argued a case in which is involved jurisdiction over 600 square acres. The territory in dispute is claimed, respectively, by Maryland and West Virginia, the latter inheriting the claim from Virginia. For a century the famous boundary dispute has existed. For over half a century it has been before the courts.

The case will be argued for Maryland by Attorney General Isaac Lobe Straus; Mr. Edward H. Sincell, of Oakland, and Mr. William L. Rawls, of Baltimore. The testimony in the case covers 1,000 typewritten pages.

West Virginia, which is the defendant, will be represented by the attorney general of that State and by Mr. James E. Price, former speaker of the House of Delegates of the State.

The boundary dispute turns on the words, "ad verum meridianum prind fontis fluminis de Patowomack," meaning to the "true meridian of the first fountain of the Potomac river," which is the western boundary of the grant made by King Charles to the settlers of the Province of Maryland. The boundaries of the remaining three sides of the province have never been in doubt, but to this day the headwaters of the Potomac have been a disputed matter, and now the Supreme Court of the United States is called upon to decide it. In 1649 Charles II, then a fugitive in Holland, granted to Sir Thomas Culpepper and other gentlemen a vast tract of land lying between the Potomac and the Rappahannock rivers. King Charles at that time might as well have granted Lord Culpepper the whole American continent, for he was in exile and it was easy to give away what he did not own. None of the gentlemen upon whom he bestowed the grant seemed to have taken it very seriously, and in the course of time the whole title became vested in Lord Culpepper, and the grant was ratified by James II.

It descended finally to Lord Fairfax, and one of his descendants finally took sufficient interest in the matter in 1745 to come to America and have his grant surveyed. The surveyors marked the northwestern limit of his grant, namely, what they claimed to be the headwaters of the Potomac, with the famous Fairfax stone, and from the Fairfax stone the line was run. As soon as Lord Baltimore heard that Lord Fairfax had made his survey and was selling land he called up his governor, Horatio Sharpe, to protest against Lord Fairfax's encroachment, and from that day to this the controversy has raged. Governor Sharpe laid the matter before the Maryland Council, and also wrote to Lord Fairfax, suggesting a new survey, but Lord Fairfax frankly declined, stating that the survey already made suited him perfectly. Governor Sharpe then dispatched a worthy man, Col. Thomas Cresap, a settler in the extreme west of the province, who knew the country well, and he made a sketch of the territory, showing that Lord Fairfax was encroaching on Maryland soil.

At the outbreak of the Revolutionary war the question was still unsettled, and then followed the endless interchange of letters between the Commonwealth of Virginia and the Commonwealth of Maryland over the true definition and location of the headwaters of the Potomac. Virginia always insisted that all surveys and measurements of the boundary line must start from the Fairfax stone. Maryland could never concede this point, and so negotiations were invariably broken off.

In 1834 Maryland's patience was exhausted, and the attorney general of the State was directed to institute proceedings in the Supreme Court of the United States unless, pending the decision by that tribunal, Virginia would accept the suggestion made two years before for a joint commission. Virginia cleverly met this move by declaring that Maryland totally misunderstood the attitude of Virginia in 1832 if it believed that the State was unwilling to agree to a commission, and accordingly Maryland, being unwilling to let "any strained punctilio stand in the way of an amicable settlement," directed the attorney general to withdraw the suit. Once the suit was withdrawn Virginia's interest in the affair again lapsed. In 1852 Maryland, anxious to have a fixed boundary, offered to Virginia the appointment of commissioners to run a line due north from Fairfax stone, which line, when ratified by both legislatures, should be the boundary line. This was practically giving up the whole matter in controversy, and it seemed as if the contention was about to be settled at last.

By application to the federal government Lieut. N. Michler, an experienced engineer officer, ran a line from the Fairfax stone north to the Pennsylvania line. This line, when ratified by both legislatures, was to be the boundary. Maryland ratified the Michler line in March, 1860, but Virginia again dallied. The Assembly passed two resolutions, one providing for the erection of suitable monuments to mark the Michler line and another authorized the governor to send an agent to England to collect records and documentary evidence "tending to ascertain and establish the true lines of boundary between Virginia and the State of North Carolina, Tennessee and Maryland," indicating, apparently, that, although the Michler line had been run, Virginia still regarded the question of the boundary as unsettled. Certain it is that the Virginia Assembly never passed the act of ratification, and so Maryland was once more remitted to her original rights.

Then came the war of the Rebellion, the Wheeling convention and the birth of the new State of West Virginia. West Virginia is now included in the disputed territory, which is about 54 square miles in the present county of Preston. Again there followed a long series of correspondence between the governors and resolutions for the appointment of commissions, always unsatisfactory, until in 1892 the legislature of Maryland again instructed its attorney general to bring the matter before the Supreme Court of the United States for final adjustment. There it is today.

Straus Amendment Defeated By More Than 14,000

The Supervisors of Elections for Garrett County, which is the canvassing board to go over and tabulate the returns of the election held in the county on Tuesday of this week, will meet at noon today and it will require several hours to go over the returns officially. The Republican has received sufficient figures, however, to prove beyond a doubt that the entire Republican ticket, with the exception of the candidate for County Surveyor, has been elected by majorities ranging from 168 to 775.

The county gives Mr. Frank E. Williams, Republican candidate for State Comptroller, more than 800 majority and recorded its condemnation of of the Straus amendment by a majority of 1000 or more against the measure. In the State the amendment was defeated by more than 14,000 add as the Republicans will have sufficient votes in the legislature this winter to prevent the enactment of another suffrage amendment the voters will not be compelled to again fight for their rights in 1911.

In the Judical District Judge Boyd, of Cumberland, was elected over D. Lindley Sloan by a majority of 472. Garrett county gave Sloan a majority of 154; Washington county gave Judge Boyd a majority of 689 and Allegany county contributed but 63 majority for Sloan.

The following majorities for the Republican candidates over those of the People's party are made from unofficial figures:

H. J. Speicher, for State Senate	409
J. E. Chappell, for House of Delegates	168
D. E. Bolden, for House of Delegates	461
Andrew Shartzer, Sheriff	254
Robert M. Friese, County Treasurer	714
D. M. Dixon, County Commissioner	597
W. M. Lowdermilk, County Commissioner	591
A. G. Ross, Clerk to Commissioners	775
Alex. C. Mason, People's party, for Surveyor	65

Maryland C. E. Union.

The twentieth Annual Convention of the Maryland Christian Endeavor Union which is to be held in Baltimore, November 9, 10, 11, at Northminister Presbyterian Church promises to be the largest attended Convention of this orginization ever held. Delegates from the counties are sending in their names the free homes offer closes on November first.

Special attention is being paid to the music, and on Wednesday evening, November 10, a Praise Service of Nations will be given by the great chorus under the leadership of Mr. Richard A. Harris. This will include the National music of the great Nations, China and Japan, along with the greater countries. Mr. F. H. Jacobs, of New York, a singer of international reputation will be present at all the sessions and will sing several solos.

The program committee are arranging for a feast of good things and expect to have the finest array of speakers that ever attended a local gathering.

MY FIRST IMPRESSION OF TEXAS

What Mr. G. N. Steyer Thinks of the Great Texan Empire.

The following is an extract from an address delivered last Friday by Prof. Steyer, of the Training School, when called up on the above subject at a joint meeting of the literary societies:

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 14, about one hour before train time, I broke the news to my people, that I would start on the next train for the distant "land of the Sunny South." My baggage was quickly thrown together and tagged for Blooming Grove, Texas. After receiving a firm handclasp from my father and each of my brothers and a loving kiss and fond embrace from mother and sisters I boarded the west bound train.

As the train sped along the Potomac, in whose crystal waters and along whose vineclad shores I had spent so many happy hours, I cast just one glance back toward the old plantation. There among the spreading beeches stood the house, and on the front porch my people were watching the fast disappearing train. Just bevond were the old garden, the fruit laden orchard, and the green meadow. The long sloping pasture as it lay in the morning blaze of the autumn sun was gorgeously decorated with majestic goldenrod and purple asters which seemed to nod and bend and smile as they bade me a silent farewell. Farther still, reaching from the river's brim to the mountain steep, was the big forest, a relic of the primeval ages. I remembered how often I had chased the flying rabbit, wily fox, and the clumsy woodchuck through its shady depths; and how I had chopped the giant oak in whose hollow the wild bees had stored the nectar gathered from ten thousand honey yielding blossoms.

The little willow-fringed lake lay peaceably beside the roadway. This, the work of the long-departed beavers, but now inhabited by countless water reptiles, muskrats and cunning otters, had been the zoological gardens of my youth, and its fern plumed and moss carpeted shores had furnished me with sweet violets, fragrant lilies and countless other varieties of the choicest woodland flowers.

The train swept around a curve and I lost the fair picture, save in memory. As we passed from the open country into the rockribbed canyon region of the upper Potomac where nothing was visible except the vaulted sky, the foaming stream and the hemlock covered cliffs, I heaved a sigh, not of relief, for none of us leave the familiar scenes of our childhood days without feeling that we are going to miss them; nor was it of regret, for I knew that I was just leaving the flower-decked "hanging gardens" of the middle Atlantic States to come to the "oasis" of the great State of Texas, the Eden of America, so far as are concerned the beauty of the landscape, the productiveness of the soil, the healthiness of the climate and the congeniality of the people.

With the exception of one day's stopover at my old Alma Mater, the West Virginia Wesleyan, where I was greeted by a hundred warm friends, I made no stops of more than just a few minutes. We swept around, darted through and climbed over a thousand West Virginia hills; we crossed the beautiful plains of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri and passed slowly but safely through the wilds of the notorious Arkansas. And finally, just at the dawning of the fourth day, we were ushered into the eastern sand fields of the land of Texas. To me this kind of sand was a new variety. It floated around in the parched air as readily as a swarm of mountain mosquitos. It found lodgment in my eyes, nose, throat and lungs, much to my discomfort. If I were to recite to you my estimation of Texas at that time, you would all petition the next legislature to change the name of the State to Arkansas No. 2. But as I came southward, things began to look better, and by the time I reached the cotton belt proper, I was reconvinced, and more, I was sure that I was entering the agricultural garden spot of the world. And while covering the last fifteen miles of my journey, notwithstanding the discomfort that comes from being heavy laden inside and out with coal dirt, sand and Corsicana black soil dust, I could scarcely remain in my seat as the last rays of the sinking sun revealed to me the grandeur of the endless prairie with its alternate fields of corn and cotton. The next morning when I got my bearings and had viewed the situation over carefully, I found an ideal school town with an ideal school. Three days later I publicly declared (in your presence) that I believed that we had an ideal student body and excluding the male members an ideal faculty.

I feel very much at home here now, just as much so as though I had always lived here. I confess that at first I found it difficult to enjoy some of the Texas luxuries; for instance, to substitutd a thin pale solution of salts and lime for sparkling mountain water, screaming mosquitos for the wild birds' vesper hymn and knee deep sand for the lightly driven snow. But now all these things have taken on different and less dreadful dimensions. Already they form a part of the things that contribute most to my comfort and happiness I have learned that in spite of its temperature, taste, odor and color artesian well water is wholesome and healthy. I cannot close my eyes in peaceful slumbers until lulled to sleep by a long billed mosquito. Indeed each evening I "dope" my face and hands in anti-mosquito juice to encourage those sweet throated reptiles to sing rather than eat.

In all seriousness, I must say that my first impressions of Texas and especially of Blooming Grove, are most favorable. The people here possess some royal characteristics, the equal to which I have noticed in no other community in any state. Without exception, I find the people generous, intelligent and interesting in conversation and always with a cordial greeting whenever met, either on the street or in the public gatherings. The idea of work is the best founded here of any place of which I know. It was marvelous the other Saturday, when the president announced that there was work for any of the young men who wished to spend their holiday in that way, to see every male student come out and engage in honest toil. A great future is in store for a school and a State with such loyal and manly constituents.

The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Copyright, 1908, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

The mystery lifted its head again. One does not hate a country without a strong and vital reason. Was Giovanni partly right, after all? Was this a kind of trap—a play to gain his interest? Was her singing under his window purely accidental?

"Will you not sing?" he asked. This was an inspiration. Music might assist in melting her new reserve.

"You recollect, then, that I possess a voice?"

"It is all I have to recollect. Tell me, whither is all this to lead?"

"To the door and into the fog again."

"On my word, I'm half inclined to believe you to be an anarchist or a red or something on that order."

"Put yourself at ease. I am neither Leddy Lightfinger nor a Socialist. There are no dynamite bombs in this house."

Her severity, her irony and her apparent lack of warmth were mere matters of calculation. Her plan was to inspire him with trepidation, to keep him always at arm's length, for his own safety as well as hers. She knew something of men. She was secretly

"The song you sang under my window."

pleased with his strong face and shapely head. The chin was square, but not heavy; the mouth humorous, kindly and firm; the nose bridged, and the brown eyes, sleepy, yet with latent fires, were really handsome. She was not afraid to be alone with him, nor was it really necessary to wear a mask. But the romance in her heart that she believed to be dead was not dead, only waiting to be rekindled.

"I will sing!"

"That is more than I dared to hope."

"What shall it be?" she asked.

"The song you sang under my window."

"But that is for the male voice!"

"You sang it very well nevertheless. I have a good memory too." He leaned forward, his arms crossed on his knees. Was there ever in all the world such an Arabian night?

She sang, but without that buoyant note of the first night. One after another he called out the popular airs of the old light operas. She had them all on her tongue's end.

Where had he seen that copy of Botticelli before? If only there was a little more light!

"Pardon me," he said. "You asked"—

She repeated her question, wondering what had drawn his attention.

"I like my grand opera after dinner. After dinner I shall want Verdi, Berlioz, Gounod."

"But after dinner I may not care to sing." She spoke in German.

He was not expecting this tongue. Besides, his German had never been a finished product. For all that, he made a passable reply.

"You speak as many languages as a Swiss hotel concierge."

"I wish I did. My mother had one idea in regard to my youth—I should speak four languages and eventually become a great diplomat. My mother had one of the loveliest voices. It was a joy to hear her speak, now Italian, now German, now French. We were great comrades. It was rare fun to go with her on an antique hunting expedition. They never fooled her nor got the better of her in a bargain."

She liked the way he spoke of his mother.

"But you," he said—"you are not Italian?"

She smiled.

Her fingers stirred over the keys again, and Grieg's "Papilion" fluttered softly from flower to flower.

after time she touched him, but with all his skill he could not break through her guard.

"And that interesting dissertation on the American gentleman?" she said icily.

"That's the trouble with posing as a moralist. One must live up to the precepts. Would you believe me if I told you that at the age of three and thirty I am still heart whole?"

She deliberately drew a line across the center of the table.

She parried, "I trust you will not spoil that excellent record by making love to me." She reached for the matches, touched off one, watched it burn for a moment, extinguished it and then deliberately drew a line across the center of the tablecloth.

"Now, what might that represent?" he asked curiously.

"A line, Mr. Hillard. The moment you cross that line that moment you leave this house. On guard!"

"Come, that is not brave. You can retreat till your shoulders touch the mat, but I must stand this side of the line, unable to reach you. And you have the advantage of the mask besides. You are not a fair fencer."

"The odds should be in my favor. I am a woman. My wrist is not so strong as yours."

"Physically, of course, I may pass the line, to reach the salt, for instance. Will that be against the rules? You have put temptation in my path."

"Bid Satan get behind thee."

"I wish I knew the color of your eyes. Behind those holes I see nothing but points of fire, no color."

"They are blue. But supposing I wear this mask because my face is dreadfully scarred?"

"Vanity, yes; but scars, never. At least never so deep as you yourself can make. You wear that mask but out of mercy to me."

Once she rose and approached the window, slyly raising the mask and breathing deeply of the cold air which rushed in through the crevices. When she turned she found that he, too, had risen. He was looking at the steins, one of which he held in his hand. Moreover, he returned and set the stein down beside his plate.

"Tell me, why do you do that?" There was an anxious note in her voice.

"I have an idea. But let us proceed with the dinner. This salad"—

"I am more interested in the idea." She pushed aside the salad and took a sip of the ruby burgundy. Had he discovered something?

"May I smoke?" he asked.

"By all means."

He lighted a cigarette and put the case near the line.

"Do you enjoy a cigarette?"

"Sometimes," she answered. "But the idea"—

"Will you not have one?" He moved the case still nearer to the line.

She reached out a firm round white arm.

"One moment," he said. "Let us understand each other thoroughly."

"What do you mean?" her arm poised in midair.

"To touch a cigarette you must cross the line to this side."

She withdrew her arm slowly.

"I shall not smoke. If I crossed the line I should establish a dangerous precedent. And I must have that idea."

"The mirror over the piano confused me. I have seen it somewhere before. Then there is that old copy of Botticelli. The frame is familiar, but I could not place it. This stein, however!" He laughed. The laughter was boyish, even triumphant.

"Well, that stein?" She was now leaning across the table, her fingers tense on the cloth.

"I bought that stein two seasons ago. This is the Sandfords' place, and you are the veiled lady who has been riding Mrs. Sandford's favorite hunter in the park."

They stood up simultaneously. In a matter of this sort he was by far the quicker. In an instant he had caught her by the wrist, at the same time drawing her irresistibly round the table toward him.

"I must see your face. I shall never be at peace if I do not."

"Certainly you will never know any peace if you do. Be careful."

His free hand stole toward the strings of her mask. She moved not. His face was very close to hers now. If only she would struggle! He released her wrist.

"No; I haven't the courage. If I take that mask from your face it will be the end. And I do not want this ever to end. If you will not let me see your face of your own free will, so be it. I shall see it some day, mark me. Fate does not cross two paths in this manner without a purpose." He stepped back slowly. "You do not understand the lure of that mask."

"Perhaps I do. I am beginning to admire your self control, Mr. Hillard. But I am tired now, and I must ask you to go."

"Once more, will you let me see your face?"

"No. If, as you say, fate intends for us to meet again you will see it. But I have my doubts. So it is my will to pass out of your life as completely as though I had never entered it—from one fog into another. No, I am not a happy woman. I am not happy in my friendships. Listen to me," and her voice grew low and sweet. "Let me appeal to your imagination. This light adventure shall be a souvenir for your old age. One night romance stepped into your life and out of it. Think. There will always be the same charm, the same mystery, the same enchantment. I shall always be Cinderella or the sleeping beauty or what your fancy wills. Do you understand me?

"Nothing," she proceeded, "nothing lasts so long in the recollection as a pleasant mystery—in other days, in other times. Well, on my side I shall recall this night pleasantly. Without knowing it you have given me a new foothold in life. I did not believe that there lived a single man who could keep to the letter of his bargain. Good night! And do not lean out of any more windows," she added lightly.

"You are right," he said reluctantly, "something to dream over in my old age. And certainly I shall dream of it—a flash of sunlight in the window."

Then slowly he reached down toward her wineglass. She understood his purpose and essayed to stop him.

"Do not deny me this little thing," he said.

She let her hand fall. He took the glass, held it against the light to see where her lips had touched it. Carefully he poured out the wine from the opposite side and kissed the rim.

"I shall keep this glass. I must have some visible object to make sure that this hasn't been a dream."

"You may kiss my hand, Mr. Hillard.

He bent quickly and kissed not the hand, but the wrist where the marks of his fingers still remained faintly. He squared himself and gazed long and steadfastly into her eyes. There was a flutter in her heart that she was unable to define. On his part he realized the sooner he was gone the better. There was a limit to his self control. He gained the street somehow. There he stopped and turned. Did the curtain move? He wasn't sure, but he raised his hat, settled it firmly on his head and walked rapidly away.

There was little sleep for him that night, and in the morning the first thing he did was to pick up the wineglass. It was all true. And then his good resolutions melted and vanished. He must have one more word with her, happen what might. So at 10 o'clock he called a cab and drove rapidly to the Sandford place. Snow had fallen during the night, and many of the steps were still spotless white. Impossible! He leaned from the cab and rubbed his eyes. Absolutely impossible! For what did he see? Wooden shutters over all the lower windows and the iron gates closed before the doors! And not a footprint anywhere. This was extraordinary. He jumped from the cab, ran up the steps and rang the bell—rang it ten times with minute intervals. And no one answered. Then he heard a call from across the street. A man stood in one of the areaways.

"Be careful!"

"Nobody home!" he shouted. "Gone to Egypt."

"But there was some one here last night," Hillard shouted back.

"Dreaming. That house has been empty since November. I happen to be the caretaker."

Hillard went back to his cab dazed. No one there last night? Come, come; there was a mistake somewhere. He would soon find out whether or not he had dined there the night before.

"A cable office!" he cried to the cabby. "Hurry!"

Once there he telephoned downtown and secured Sandford's cable address. Then he filled out a blank, which cost him $10. Late that night at the club he received his reply. It was terse—

You are crazy. House absolutely empty.

Lesson V.—Fourth Quarter, For Oct. 31, 1909.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Acts xxvii, 13-26. Memory Verses, 22-24—Golden Text, Ps. xxxvii, 5—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

As we hear Agrippa say privately to Festus, "This man might have been set at liberty if he had not appealed unto Caesar" (xxvi, 31), we are tempted to feel a pang of regret that Paul had thus appealed, but when we remember that his liberty would probably have meant his death because of the Jews, who were watching their opportunity to kill him, we are glad that his life is still protected. Paul and other prisoners were committed to the care of Julius, a Roman centurion, and set sail for Italy. Aristarchus of Macedonia (xix, 29) being one of the company. We have no account of farewells, as at other places, though we cannot imagine that such were lacking, but we have quite a detailed account of the voyage. We note, with gratitude to God, the centurion's courteous treatment of Paul and that when they touched at Sidon he was allowed to go unto his friends to refresh himself (verse 2). We cannot but hope that this centurion ere he parted company with Paul had received Jesus as the Christ and thus become an heir of the inheritance and a joint heir with Christ Himself.

After sailing by Crete they met the storm, as Paul had feared, and for two weeks they were exceedingly tossed by the tempest, saw neither sun nor stars in many days, and all hope that they should be saved was taken away. A glance at the map will show that they had completed about half the voyage from Syria to Italy before they ran into this storm. I remember thinking much about it as one beautiful day in the fall of 1897 we sailed across from Port Said, in Egypt, to Brindisi, in Italy, and we passed close by Crete. I can never forget that most refreshing sail across the Mediterranean after the heat of China and India and tropical seas and, last of all, the blue Red sea, which, the captain said, may have been called red because it was so often red hot. We met no euroclydon, and, though I have been in some storms, yet never have I known anything like this that Paul passed through. Thank God for all who know in storm and fair weather the refuge and rest there are in the Lord Himself and in the consciousness of His presence and care. He is indeed our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble, a refuge from the storm (Ps. xlvi, 1; Isa. xxv, 4). He was watching over his servant in all this storm and probably comforted him with the assurance, "The Lord on high is mightier than the noise of many waters—yea, than the mighty waves of the sea" (Ps. xciii, 4). No doubt the assurance in chapter xxiii, 11, "Thou must bear witness also at Rome," rested Paul and made him believe that there was some way out of this, although the others had given up all hope. Well, there came a day when Paul stood forth in the midst of them and, with a word about the mistake they had made in loosing from Crete, told them how a messenger from God had come to him the night before and had assured him that, while the ship would be lost by being wrecked upon some island, there would be no loss of any man's life, and he added in the words of the proverbial saying, "There shall not an hair fall from the head of any of you." Compare I Sam. xiv, 45; II Sam. xiv, 11; I Kings i, 52; Matt. x, 30; Luke xii, 7; xxi, 18. He exhorted them to "be of good cheer" (22, 25, 36), and he was successful, for as he took bread and gave thanks to God in the presence of them all and began to eat they also ate enough to strengthen them and were all of good cheer.

Thus one man helped 275 others by his confidence in God (verses 34-37). What a beautiful illustration of "In quietness and in confidence shall be your strength" (Isa. xxx, 15). They were of good cheer not because the storm had ceased, but because they had words from heaven on which to rest. No words of earth or of man's wisdom can give rest in time of real trouble, but we can rest quietly and unwaveringly on the words of Him who died for us and rose again and who has all power in heaven and on earth. Whether this was another appearance of the Lord Jesus Himself, as on three previous occasions (ix, 17; xviii, 9; xxiii, 11), or a messenger such as Gabriel, it was certainly a message straight from heaven reminding Paul that he must be brought before Caesar and that he must not be afraid (verse 24). Then there was added, "And, lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee."

How grand are Paul's words concerning his relationship to the Lord, "Whose I am and whom I serve" (23), the property of no earthly master, under no man's thumb, however great, but able to say with Elijah and Elisha, "The Lord of Hosts liveth, before whom I stand." We know that one of his great principles was "not as pleasing men, but God, who trieth our hearts" (I Thess. ii, 4). Then his words of simple confidence in God, "I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me" (25)—what a motto for a lifetime! Let us say it concerning every promise and prediction in all the book; let us be fully persuaded that what God has promised He will perform (Rom. iv, 21), and let us see "Jesus only."

WHAT ONE COMMUNITY DID.

Result of Road Dragging by the Farmers at Cameron, Mo.

In view of the general awakening for good roads I will tell the farmers who are interested of the wonderful improvement that has been brought about in dirt roads by persistent use of the road drag. In 1902 the writer conceived the idea that the farmers in the vicinity of Cameron, Mo., should have the benefit of rural free delivery. The idea was ridiculed, but persisted won. The first carrier that left t, Cameron postoffice was accompanied by a brass band over the entire route, and every farmer that had prepared his mail box for the free delivery was "serenaded." This created an interest. But our roads were in a miserable condition, full of mudholes and deep ruts.

At the suggestion of Postmaster Ellson we held a "good roads" picnic in Cameron for the purpose of emphasizing the necessity of good roads in order to secure the rural free delivery. The meeting was addressed by D. Ward King, the "evangel of good roads in Missouri," who explained the value of the King drag, and other speakers. Of the thousands who attended the picnic many pledged themselves to a constant use of the drag. As a result we have now in place of mudholes and ruts well rounded, level, solid roads in all this vicinity. We have eight rural carriers out of Cameron instead of the one we escorted with a brass band, and since that event land values have more than doubled in this locality. Now even the renters have caught the spirit of the good roads movement, and there is no doubt that the voluntary dragging of the roads will be kept up.—James Williams in Kansas City Star.

ROCK ROADS AND FARMS.

Missouri Farmer Tells of the Advantages of Macadam Highways.

Elijah Carel, who owns farms in Jackson and Clay counties, Mo., is very much in favor of rock roads. He lives three miles west of Blue Springs on a macadam highway and says it is hard to estimate their value to farmers.

"If I were going to buy another farm in Clay county I would pay $20 an acre more for the same land on a rock road than away from that kind of a road," Mr. Carel said. "If Clay county farmers once lived on a rock road and realized its worth to them they would not hesitate to pay $10 an acre for the improvement. Over in Jackson county we can haul big loads to market at any time when the markets are the highest and when we could not get there at all on dirt roads. It is a great satisfaction and a pleasure, too, to know that we can get over the roads well at any time we may desire to go. When the Clay county farmers get rock roads their only regret will be that they didn't get them sooner."

Mr. Carel paid $80 an acre for his farm of 100 acres in Jackson county five years ago and has refused $125 an acre several times for it since. He believes it is easily worth $150 an acre because of the rock road. All of which is some different from $100 in Clay county—the same distance from Kansas City.

State Experimental Station.

The passage of a law in the state of North Dakota establishing a good roads experimental station is a movement in the right direction. The experimental roads are not to be great in extent, one running from the capitol building at Bismarck to Fort Lincoln and the other from the state penitentiary to the Missouri river, but they are long enough and in sufficiently close proximity to the capitol to be object lessons to the members of the next legislature. North Dakota's entrance into the list of state aid states may be confidently looked for two years hence.

Road Building In Missouri.

Missouri now has 800 miles of macadam roads, 15 per cent of which was added during the past year. The mileage of gravel road was increased during the same season by 300 miles, making a total of 4,600 miles.

A Good Roads Movement.

We've had a good roads movement down to Pohick, on the crick.
We raised some ready cash fur what we couldn't get on tick.
An', bein' a partic'lar job, we thought it would be wise
To get some men of probity to come an' supervise.
An' as a further guarantee 'gainst chances of neglect
We took another set of men an' told 'em to inspect.
An' these arrangements didn't seem jes' what they ought to be Till we'd secured some talent competent to oversee.

There arose misunderstandin's 'bout emoluments and rank,
But the payroll checks kep' comin' very regular to the bank.
Somehow the highways didn't seem to lose their ruts an' lumps,
An' every time we went to town we had to bump the bumps.
We found it hard to comprehend what such delay could mean
In work so well inspected, supervised an' overseen.
The only manual labor on this job that seemed so slow
Was done with great reluctance by a small boy with a hoe.

The situation naturally shocked our civic pride.
We called some meetin's, an' the proper people testified.
We got the overseers to tell exactly what they knew
An' heard from the inspectors an' the supervisors too.
Then we drew up resolutions an' delivered an address
To vindicate our efforts to uplift an' to progress.
We have solved the difficulty, an' our hearts are full of joy
At seein' discipline maintained. We fired that no 'count boy.

MANAGING A TOWN.

Novel Experiment of an Editor to Improve Conditions.

ACTS AS BUSINESS DICTATOR.

How He Hopes to Make Dexter, Ia. Larger and Better, Increase Its Trade and Double the Profits of Its Merchants—Loafers Cleaned Out.

A town near Des Moines, Ia., has been making a novel experiment. It has been allowing the editor to run things—not the local editor, mind you, but an editor from Des Moines. The editor is not running things in person, but has appointed an assistant who is a thoroughgoing business man. So far the experiment seems to have been a pronounced success. The merchants are making more money, the collections are better, the streets are cleaner and there is improvement in many lines.

The town that is being experimented on is Dexter, which is thirty-five miles from Des Moines and has about 850 inhabitants. The editor is W. J. Pilkington of the Merchants' Trade Journal of Des Moines. His assistant is Guy C. Pogue. Pilkington had a theory that the methods found so successful in the department stores and retail establishments of the large cities could be tried as effectually in the small towns. He told the merchants of Dexter that he could make more money for them, the bankers that he could increase their deposits, and joyously informed the mayor that his government was on the blink and if he—the editor—could do a little governing he would make things hum and add to the population.

To Pilkington's joyous surprise, Dexter took him at his word. The merchants wanted more profits, the bankers were looking for larger deposits, and, as for his honor the mayor, he concluded that if anybody could run that town better than he was doing it the other chap was welcome to the job. That is the kind of a mayor to have. No dog-in-the-manger spirit about him! He was thinking of the good of his town and did not give a hang for his own dignity.

I do not know that mayor's name, and I am sorry, for it ought to be published to the ends of the earth as an example to a lot of officials in other communities who do nothing themselves and let nobody else do anything.

To return to the experiment. Pilkington sent Pogue, and Pogue got busy. The new departure started June 1 and is to run seven months. Mr. Pogue obtained complete reports from each store and bank and began introducing up to date business methods. He took a complete invoice of stock and accounts. He got sales slips at the end of each day so that he knew what every store and every department was doing. He directed the window displays, the arrangement of goods, the prices and the conduct of the clerks. He must be a wonder, for anybody who can regulate the conduct of the average clerk is surely a master of men—and women. Pogue does it, or so it is reported. I am not anxious for his job.

One of the best things the new general manager of Dexter is doing is to write the advertisements for the local papers and to change copy with every issue. Even better, he has graded and cleaned the streets and put down sidewalks. He moved the loafers off the dry goods boxes and moved the boxes to the rear. Again, I do not envy him his job, but once more I must admit that he is a marvelous man. Anybody that can make a loafer move is a benefactor as well as a wonder worker.

Pogue has put in new street lights and caused these and the ones already in existence to burn later at night. He has organized a baseball club and a band. The farmers have awakened to the fact that something is astir in Dexter, and as they want to find out what it is they are going to Dexter to trade. The merchants are pleased. They call the Pilkington-Pogue idea the booster plan and are rapidly being converted to join the boosters' club. Money is being saved in buying and in bad accounts.

The first month's report showed increases in the leading stores, one establishment running as high as $775 increase in business and one or two others reaching nearly the $500 mark. In Dexter, as elsewhere, improvement pays, business methods win, enterprise, cleanliness and printer's ink spell prosperity.

Here is Mr. Pilkington's own statement of his reason for undertaking the novel experiment:

I expect to disprove the theory that a certain kind of business may succeed in one town and fail in another. My contention is that any store with up to date business methods can succeed, no matter where its location is. For this reason I selected Dexter.

On every side there is strong competition, and if I succeed I will have shown to the business men there that I have pulled trade from the territory in which Des Moines and Stuart have been the favorites. It is a small town and is a hotbed for the mail order business, and I feel that I have chosen a town where it will be the hardest kind of work to succeed. Reports so far are very encouraging.

It is a great idea, and everybody will watch with interest the new combination of Pilkington, Pogue, push and pluck. If it succeeds, the editor may be given the job of running other towns. A good many editors might throw up their hands and say it is all they can do to run their papers, but others will be ready to clean the streets, clean out the loafers, get the right sort of publicity and put things on a business basis.

JAMES A. EDGERTON.

DISTINGUISHING SNAKES.

How to Tell Dangerous Ones From the Harmless.

The arrival of vacation time and the consequent excursions into meadow and mountain land give timely interest to a small pamphlet written by Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of reptiles in the New York zoological park, entitled "Poisonous Snakes of the United States—How to Distinguish Them."

"It is not generally appreciated," says Mr. Ditmars in this pamphlet, "that inhabiting the United States are some of the most deadly known species of snakes, and these fairly teem in some parts of the country. Even in the east—in the immediate vicinity of well known summering places—poisonous snakes are abundant. It is well to know how to distinguish them from the many harmless and really beneficial reptiles.

"As will presently be explained, the North American dangerous snakes may be easily distinguished, except two, and these are the coral snakes, having a slender body and a head not at all distinct from the neck—in fact, looking precisely like the harmless reptiles. And they actually belong to the same family as the innocuous serpents—the colubridae. This family is divided into a number of subfamilies. The cobras and their deadly allies of the old world and the coral snakes of the new world form one of these subfamilies—the elapinae. From the typical harmless snakes they differ only in the possession of a very short, fixed pair of venom conducting teeth in the forward part of the upper jaw and by the absence of a small scale on each side of the head (the loreal plate), between the eye and the nostril. Fortunately, such deceptive looking reptiles are limited to two species in the United States. As they are peculiarly colored they may be recognized with little difficulty.

"Both of the species of the elaps inhabit the southern part of the country. The common coral snake or harlequin snake occurs from southern North Carolina to Florida and westward to Texas. It is most abundant in Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Louisiana. The Sonoran coral snake is restricted to Arizona, New Mexico and northern Mexico. Both of the species are vividly ringed with scarlet, yellow and black—the red and black rings the broadest.

"Described in detail, the pattern of the coral snakes may be given as broad, alternating rings of red and black, the latter bordered with very narrow rings of yellow. And here we encounter a difficulty, for several harmless snakes 'mimic' these species in displaying exactly the same colors and arranged in ringlike fashion. Yet there is one unvarying difference that will always distinguish the dangerous reptiles from their innocuous 'imitators,' as the yellow rings of the poisonous snakes always border the black rings, while among the non-venomous snakes there are pairs of black rings bordering a yellow one.

"The crotaline snakes, the rattlesnakes, copperhead and the moccasin may be easily told. We may dispose of the rattlesnakes with a simple suggestion, and that is to look for the rattle, a prominent and an absolutely unique organ among snakes. Its presence immediately brands the owner as a dangerous reptile.

"Thus we understand how to recognize all of the North American poisonous snakes except the moccasins—two species."

How to Remove Grease From Soup.

"You never can use that broth today," said an old housekeeper who was making a rich lamb broth for an invalid. "It will be so greasy no digestion could stand it."

"Watch me," laughed the girl, "and your experience may gain a lesson from a novice."

She cut half dozen squares of brown paper that fitted easily over the top of the soup kettle and put a layer over the floating grease on top of the liquid. In a short time the paper was soaked with grease and was removed and thrown into the stove. The other pieces of paper in turn were used in the same way until the broth was freer from grease than if it had been stood on the ice for a day to form a solid cake.

How to Brighten Gold Ornaments.

Even a gold hatpin will grow tarnished, and the best in this condition is anything but ornamental. When the workmanship is such that the usual brushing process is out of the question put the pin heads in a tumbler of ammonia in which two tablespoonfuls of some powder cleaner is placed. This settles to the bottom, and the pin can be churned back and forth on the substance and cleaned. This is an excellent method for cleaning hatpins containing small jewels. Any soap powder can be added to the ammonia. Belt pins and buckles can be cleaned in the same manner.

How to Take Grease From Carpets.

An excellent paste for getting grease from carpets is made by mixing fuller's earth with ammonia and water. Apply the mixture thick, let it remain overnight, then remove with a stiff brush. The ammonia may be omitted if the colors in the carpet are delicate. After the grease is out the colors may be freshened by sweeping with moist salt.

How to Get an Insect Out of the Ear.

An insect in the ear may be destroyed by pouring a teaspoonful of warm olive oil or camphorated oil into the ear and keeping it there for some time, holding the head in a position to retain the oil, which will afterward come away with the dead insect.

CO-OPERATIVE SELLING.

How the Long Island Potato Exchange Gets Rid of Its Tubers.

Although the Long Island potato exchange is not a grange organization, it is doing some things that the grange might profit by. It has a paid up capital of only about $9,000, half of which is available for use. The association did a business of over $50,000 last year. Commenting on the work of this exchange, the New York Fruitman's Guide has this to say:

In the face of adverse conditions the exchange handled practically a half million bushels of potatoes for the year, 252 barrels of onions and 3,715 bushels of carrots, or a total of 634 carloads of produce. "We expect to handle three times as many potatoes this year," said the manager. All dealers together in this county sent to market a little less than 3,000,000 bushels of potatoes last year from about 17,000 acres.

The association sold over 1,500 tons of fertilizer, besides 22,764 bushels of seed potatoes and a quantity of other farmers' goods, making a profit of over $2,000 on such things combined.

The exchange started out with everybody against it. It had no standing. It lacked the confidence of all people everywhere, both farmers and sellers, including the local loaders at stations. It has overcome the enmity of all classes to such an extent that dealers are clamoring for admission into its fold.

UPPER TOWNSHIP GRANGE HALL, TUCKAHOE, N. J.

GEORGE W. PIERCE.

Death of a Past Master of Vermont State Grange.

George Warren Pierce of Brattleboro, Vt., a past master of the state grange, died recently from an affection of the heart. His grange career began thirty years ago, and he was a most active and influential member of the Order during all these years. For three years he was master of Protective grange, in Brattleboro, and during that time 176 members were added. He was lecturer and overseer of the state grange and was a Mason, being a member of Beauseant commandery of Knights Templars. For many years he served as trustee of the First Universalist church, of which he was a member. In December, 1906, he was master of the state grange and declined re-election last December. He was a member of the special tax commission appointed by Governor Prouty last year, and he was president of the Windham County Good Roads association for four or five years. Mr. Pierce organized the Windham County Fish and Game Protective association and was its president for six years. He was secretary of the Vermont Dairymen's association for six years and president one year. In his death the state and the grange lose a loyal and useful representative. He was fifty-five years of age.

FAVORS PARCELS POST.

State Master Godfrey of New York Sees Good In the Proposition.

[Special Correspondence.]

The great argument in favor of parcels post is that it would be of as great benefit to the people as the postal service. It would break up one of the great monopolies of the country and save the people millions of dollars annually, besides being a great source of revenue to the government. It would be of fully as great benefit to the farmers as rural delivery of mails and, I believe, a source of profit to the government as well. I believe it would be a great benefit to the retail merchants in that those living in the country could order small packages of goods by telephone, having them sent out by rural delivery, thereby increasing the number of small orders and these orders going to the home dealers instead of to the distant mail order houses. The lessened expense of transportation would enable the retailer to sell goods at a lower price, thereby having an advantage not now obtained.

A NEW GUN.

It Doesn't Recoil, and It Will Fire 1,125 Shots an Hour.

Ever since men began to kill each other, which was very soon after selfish interests began to clash, a good share of their leisure time has been devoted to the elevating pursuit of inventing instruments for that killing. From the time when the early prowler in the primeval forest discovered that by tying to the end of a stick the stone destined to crack the skull of his enemy he could make the crack more surely deadly his inventive genius, sign, as it is, of his high rank among the creatures, has been busy over this problem. How to strike with fatal effect upon his foe and with safety to himself has been his study, and he has given birth to many an idea tending more and more from age to age to enable him to do this work by mechanical contrivance.

It is curious that crudities still appear in the weapons which the geniuses of centuries have labored to perfect and that our eye should be opened at this late day to almost ludicrous imperfections in our most cherished killing machine—the rifle. Yet it is only a few years since the smoke of black powder was done away with and comparatively a matter of days since young Mr. Maxim produced his sound choking, flame suppressing device. And now comes news from Sweden that an inventor there has found means at last to stop the kick which has made sore shoulders from the time the first blunderbuss was discharged and has constructed a weapon that will drop men so fast that a single marksman may dispose of a regiment in an hour.

Eleven hundred and twenty-five shots to the hour from a gun that is carried in the hand and fired from the shoulder is a high record. If that gun is smokeless and kickless it is convenient to handle and but little trouble to operate. Swedish Mr. Sjogren has made a distinct subtraction from the demerits of the rifle from the standpoint of the user for his new gun has made this record and has the new feature. And the weapon has already taken rank with the most approved and will doubtless become a part of the armament of many of the world's armies.—Technical World.

"The Limit's" Limit.

"Since the word 'limit' became popular slang I have heard many things called the limit, but not one of them was it," said the young woman. "It remained for me to run the real bona fide limit to earth. I found it last Monday. I called on a woman who I had heard wanted some one to come in twice a day and play the piano half an hour at luncheon and dinner. I agreed to come, for I naturally supposed the music was wanted as an accompaniment to her own meals or her children's meals or the meals of some other human beings. But that wasn't what she meant at all. I was taken up into a kind of luxurious kennels on the third floor and asked to play softly while half a dozen dogs of high degree lapped up their food. The dogs liked music, their mistress said, and enjoyed their meals more when they had it to eat by. Limit! Well, rather! I like dogs, and I like music, and I like money, but the combination formed a limit that I just couldn't face, so I gave up the job."—New York Sun.

Money In Rats.

The only good rats are dead rats. Alive, the rat carries disease. Dead, it may have a commercial value. The skin is fine material for book covers and for making purses and photograph frames. It may also be used in the manufacture of gloves for women, and in several of the great cities the rat killing industry is assuming proportions. The rat in Scandinavia, as well as the species known as the Norwegian, a big, bothersome rodent because of its fighting proclivities, is particularly valuable for the purposes named. The bodies can be converted into fertilizing material. Thus in many commercial centers abroad is the rat being killed by the many thousands, not because it is a menace to public safety, but because uses have been found for the heretofore worthless hide. The time may come when the rat will be hunted assiduously in this country, not only because of the money that's in it, but because it is our enemy.—Indianapolis News.

A Real Old Timer.

Chief Spencer, aged 110 years, a Klickitat, recently died on the reservation at Fort Simcoe. In 1843 he saw whites come to the coast across country as settlers. In 1856 he was a guide and scout for Colonel Wright and Major Raines. He had always been faithful to the whites in spite of the fact that volunteers in 1850 killed every member of his family, who were going down the Columbia river near the Cascades in canoes. Children of Chief Spencer's second family are Wilber and Lancaster Spencer of Toppenish, prominent business men of that town.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

A Long Pipe.

The longest pipe in the world is that which extends from the Oklahoma oil wells to New York harbor. At the present time the oil field of Oklahoma is the most active in the United States. It is not likely that the line will be put to immediate use for conveying oil over the whole distance. The completion of the system is regarded rather as a provision for emergency and to meet the future conditions, when the Pennsylvania and West Virginia fields shall have been depleted.—Scientific American.

VALUE OF NEATNESS.

Good Way to Help a Store to Attract Trade.

CLEAN UP OUTSIDE GROUNDS.

How a Small Grocery Storekeeper Made His Back and Front Yards Attractive and Kept the Cream of the Trade In His Town.

During the summer months especially a grocery store keeper cannot be too particular as to the outside condition of his store and the grounds immediately surrounding him. If he allows fruits and vegetable matter to remain along the sidewalk and in the back part of his lot an unhealthy and disagreeable condition will necessarily result. Even though it may not be bad enough to draw the attention of the board of health officers it is bad enough to drive away customers. No one likes to go to a store where one must pass by disagreeable odors and refuse matter.

Even though the storekeeper may keep the inside of his store and his fruit and vegetables therein in a perfectly sanitary condition, complying with all the requirements of the various pure food laws, he cannot be too particular with the condition of the premises surrounding his store. If you want to attract trade, make everything in connection with the store attractive as possible. The majority of the grocery buyers are women, and they probably are more particular in this respect than men. If you have a little room at the side or in the back of your store, keep the grass well cut, make it look clean and attractive; if possible plant a few flower beds so that it will be a pleasure for one to approach your store and not a disagreeable necessity.

One of the most attractive country stores that the writer ever saw was a little grocery store in a small town of about 1,500 inhabitants. This enterprising grocer had a lot of about 50 by 150 feet. His store was very unpretentious and set about twenty-five feet back from the street. This front twenty-five feet of the lot was seeded to grass and always kept well cut and green. Flowers were planted along the walk which led to the main entrance, and in the back was a very clean, attractive looking vegetable and flower garden. He disposed of his old boxes and crates in such a careful manner that no one ever realized that he had any. It is unnecessary to state that this man had and kept the cream of the trade in his town. It certainly paid him to go to a little extra pains to make it attractive for people to come into his store. If that will pay in one town, it will pay in every town. Just try it and see if a larger trade does not result from increased cleanness and neatness about the outside of your store.—Agricultural Southwest.

LOCATION OF CEMETERIES.

Factors to Be Considered When Selecting Sites In Growing Towns.

The location of projected cemeteries in relation to growing towns is a matter for very serious consideration. The mere question of location is a study in itself, for the future of the cemetery may depend in considerable measure on two factors at least—a desirable and satisfactory site and the selection of that site in regard to the direction of growth of the adjacent town and the quality of that growth. While distance from the town limits should be reasonable from many points of view, at the same time an important fact must not be overlooked, that of permanence. Experience teaches us that no cemetery can lay valid claims to permanence that may finally find itself within the town limits. A few there may be that thrive under the prospect of such a privilege, but it rests in the long run upon a very uncertain tenure. Beauty of site and quality of improvements should at any time offset the slight inconvenience of a longer journey, and it would seem a matter of but common business to present in attractive form available arguments to induce fair patronage to any cemetery situated a few miles outside the limits of one of our phenomenally growing cities or towns. No cemetery organization should despair under such a condition, provided its business is conducted on progressive lines. The rest and peace of the country so eminently harmonize with the spirit of the cemetery that distance is no disadvantage where proper transportation facilities exist to minimize the objection.

An Aid to Outdoor Improvements.

Announcement is made of the formation of the Illinois Outdoor Improvement association at Urbana at the suggestion of President Edmund J. James of the University of Illinois. This association is now in temporary form. A committee upon organization has been named, with President James as chairman, that will submit to a general state meeting in the fall a plan for work. The purpose of this association is primarily to gather and distribute facts which will help owners and municaplities in a more artistic improvement of their properties, this distribution to be accomplished by literature and lectures. Incidentally the officers of the association would like to be of personal use to local improvement organizations. The association will also take a lively interest in the preservation and development of any beautiful or historical landscape.

THE WINNING PLAY.

IF when you are busted
And down at the heel
You just make a noise like success,
Then things will be coming
In bundles and bales
And marked to your private address.
Prosperity's signboard
Is all that you need
To fool and confound the elect.
A front that is haughty
Will make them sit up
And notice the splendid effect.

'Tis not to possession
That come the rewards,
Though ownership isn't so bad.
It's making the rabble
Believe you are there
With every old thing to be had.
Though it may resemble
A confidence game,
It wins at the drop of the hat.
Pretense is a winner,
And nothing there is
That's quite so successful as that.

There's nothing succeeds like
Success, so they say,
But that is a little mistake.
A good imitation,
You'll very soon find,
Of all of the parts will partake.
It's pleasant to know that
Your little account
Is full to the brim with the stuff,
But if it is lacking
You need not despair,
Rely on the power of the bluff.

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1909.

HIS LAST EFFUSION.

In last week's issue of the Garrett Journal, Mr. G. S. Hamill occupied almost the entire back page with an effusion directed against the editor of THE REPUBLICAN and members of the Sincell family generally. If Mr. Hamill desires to go into the private history of the Sincell family and compare records with that of the Hamill family we are entirely agreed. We put the matter up to Mr. Hamill for his decision.

If we were so minded we could with propriety, in face of what Mr. Hamill has said of us, fill a page or two of this paper with facts concerning the private and professional acts of Mr. Hamill's life, but we shall not at this time get down to Mr. Hamill's level. All we have to say is that Mr. Hamill is a gentleman and a scholar, for does not his language, his base insults and baser insinuations stamp him as a well bred man? and does not the even flow of language at once convey to the mind of all respectable, well thinking and enlightened individuals that he is a scholar who should be at the head of one of the nation's universities instead of practicing law in a community of this size where his abilities are limited to calling names and endeavoring to besmirch the characters of his superiors in more ways than one?

Yes, Mr. Hamill is a gentleman; he is also a scholar!

WHY IT WAS BEATEN.

For the second time a disfranchising scheme by which the rights of the voters of the State were threatened has been defeated by the voters at the polls. If one were to philosophize upon the defeat of the Democratic proposition, he would find ample reason in the fact that it was utterly uncalled for. The people saw no merit in it, for they realized that although many of the Northern States have property or educational tests, or both, these tests are applied impartially to all persons. The voters regarded the proposed use of such tests in this State with amazement and disgust, because the purpose was not to raise the level of citizenship, but to demoralize it by destroying its power to punish an administration for misdeeds by turning it out of office.

The South did not want it, for the States having disfranchisement of the colored voters say very clearly should the Maryland amendment pass and be carried to the Supreme Court, as it would have been if adopted, the entire class of similar legislation in avoidance of the federal constitution would be passed upon, and the probability of all such practices would receive a death blow. Thus the Meryland amendment found no degree of toleration in the sentiments of the people either to the north or to the south of the State. A thing that fulfills no purpose that can elicit the commendation of any section of the country or class of the population, is certainly something that is neither political fish, flesh or fowl.

The amendment was beaten because in addition to the element of the population directly aimed at, as well as the foreign born voters, who voted against it almost to a man, and in addition to the denouncement it received by various organizations and church bodies, the amendment was most unpopular in Democratic circles. Outside the ring circles of that party, the Democratic following was afraid of the measure. The Democrats, who were divided into factions, were either openly or in secret fuming at the folly of the party in espousing the measure. They voted against it upon the principle of political self-preservation. They knew what to expect in the way of political opportunities and benefits; they did not know that they would have a chance to gain any advantage whatever with a certain clique entrenched in power and with the whip stinging the back of any who did not shout for it.

The amendment thus had no settled support, it had no class or condition of the voting population to count upon. The measure had no sure support save that of the Democratic bosses and their henchmen. Some others, it is true, voted for it as there are always persons who are impervious to the dictates of reason, upon whom political habit has its grip. But, all in all, it has been proven that the voters of the State do not want such a measure as the Democratic party endeavored to thrust down their throats at the election. As in 1895, there was a political revolution which clarified the moral atmosphere and lifted the electoral system of the State, for a time, from scheming trickery and fraudulent practices, as in 1905 the disfranchising scheme which was submitted to the people was defeated by a majority of over 30,000, so did the the people decide at Tuesday's election, when hurling back the base disfranchisement amendment upon its promoters with scorn and indignation, they defeated the measure which is now one of the worst beaten projects in a generation.—Cumberland News.

FINDS SOIL PROVES MORE PRODUCTIVE

Expert Proves Fallacy of Popular Idea Concerning the Country's Farms

The soils of the United States are not wearing out, and crop yields are increasing rather than decreasing. These facts are demonstrated in a bulletin shortly to be issued by the Bureau of Soils of the Agricultural Department, prepared by Prof. Milton Whitney, chief of the Bureau. The bulletin deals exhaustively with the yields of crops from 1867 to 1906, inclusive.

"A careful study of the data which have been presented appears to justify two conclusions," says Professer Whitney: "First, that the productivity of the newer agricultural soils of the United States and of the older agricultural soils of Europe, taken as a whole and for the nation, are not declining, as is popularly supposed. Individual farming deteriorates and soils wear out, as they have always done, but as a whole it seems probable that we are producing more crops per acre than formerly. This is undoubtedly due to many factors—to better and more intelligent cultivation, more and better systems of rotation of crops, and, in later years, to the intelligent use of fertilizers through measures of control in the hands of every individual farmer.

"In addition we must recognize the increase in farm animals and stock, the improvement in seed by selection and breeding, and increased density of population, which is forcing attention to more intensive methods. Second, that so far as our information goes there is apparently no significant difference at the present time between the composition of the old agricultural soils of Europe and the newer agricultural soils of the United States with respect to potash, phosphoric acid, lime and magnesia."

The bulletin shows an increase in all cereal crops throughout the United States for the last three or four decades. The wheat yield per acre in Russia from 1883 to 1905, according to the bulletin, varied several bushels per acre. In the latter year it was 9.4 bushels.

In Ireland the yield of wheat per acre in 1883 was 25.5 bushels, and there was a constant increase in every year up to 1906, when it reached the yield of 34.8 bushels per acre.

In Great Britan the yield of wheat in 1884 was 30.9 bushels per acre, and there was a slight variation of increase up to 1906, which brought the yield to 34.7 bushels.

The wheat yield of Germany was 18.2 bushels in 1883, with a gradual increase to 1906, bringing the yield then to 30.3 bushels.

Maryland Conference of Charities and Correction Exhibit.

Mr. Ernest P. Bicknell, National Director of the American Red Cross, who for many years was secretary of the Board of State Charities of Indiana and afterward general superintendent of the Chicago Bureau of Charities, will address a special section meeting of the State Conference of Charities and Correction in Baltimore, at 3 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, November 10th, on the subject of "Almshouse Management." This special section meeting has been arranged for the benefit of county commissioners, trustees, superintendents and matrons of almshouses throughout the state, a large number of whom have signified their intention of attending the conference.

Another matter of vital interest to county people to be discussed at the general session of the conference on Tuesday evening will be the plan proposed by the committee on the Care of Offenders, to have the jail physicians in the counties made deputies of the State Lunacy Commission, for the purpose of examining the mental condition of all persons arrested and charged with crime, before their arraignment. This plan, if adopted, would necessitate many changes in criminal procedure and it should be widely discussed before the meeting of the legislature.

A very remarkable exhibit of many kinds of charitable and correctional work will be held in connection with the conference and will occupy the entire basement of the new library of the State Medical and Chirurgical Faculy, 1211 Cathedral Street, Baltimore, where the conference will be held.

One of the most interesting exhibits thus far arranged for will be made by the police department of Baltimore City and will be in charge of Lieut. J. A. Casey, officer in charge of the Bertillion Bureau, who will demonstrate methods used in the identification of habitual criminals. Other exhibits are being arranged by the State Board of Health, City Department of Health, Maryland School for Boys, Instructive Visiting Nurse Association, Jewish Home for Consumptives, Association for the Prevention of Blindness, New Jersey Training School and the Supervisors of City Charities.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT TELLS OF EXPERIENCES

Describes the Killing of a Tremendous Lion Which Was About to Charge Upon Him.

Theodore Roosevelt, writing in the November number of Scribner's Magazine, gives his impressions and experiences on an East African ranch which reminds him of early days on the plains of the great west, and then plunges directly into an account of his first encounters with big African game.

"The dangerous game of Africa," he says, "are the lion, buffalo, elephant, rhinoceros and leopard. The hunter who follows any of the animals always does so at a certain risk of life or limb, a risk which it is his business to minimize by caution, good judgment and straight shooting. The leopard is in point of pluck and ferocity more than the equal of the other four, but his small size always renders it likely that he will merely maul, and not kill a man.

"My friend, Carl Akely, of Chicago, actually killed bare-handed a leopard which sprang on him. He had already wounded the beast twice, crippling it in one front and one hind paw, whereupon it charged, followed him as he tried to dodge the charge, and struck him full as he turned. It bit him in one arm, biting again and again as it worked up the arm from the wrist to the elbow, but Akely threw it, holding its throat with the other hand and flinging it's body to one side. It luckily fell on its side with its two wounded legs uppermost, so that it could not tear him. He fell forward with it and crushed in its chest with his knees until he distinctly felt one of its ribs crack; this, said Akely, was the first moment when he felt he might conquer. Redoubling his efforts, with knees and hands, he actually choked and crushed the life out of it, although his arm was badly bitten."

Mr. Roosevelt devotes considerable space to telling how he brought to bay and killed a lion. The description begins at a point where he is considering what he shall do if the lion charges and cannot be stopped by a well directed shot. The writer continues:

"Now, an elderly man, with a varied past, which includes rheumatics, does not vault lightly into the saddle as his sons, for instance, can, and I had already made up my mind that in event of the lion's charging it would be wise for me to trust to straight powder rather than to try to scramble into the saddle and get under way in time.

"I could still not see the lion when I knelt, but he was standing up, looking first at one group of horses and then at the other, his tail lashing to and fro, his head held low and his lips dropped over his mouth in peculiar fashion, while his harsh and savage growling rolled thunderously over the plain.

"Seeing Simba and me on foot, he turned toward us, his tail lashing quicker and quicker.

"Resting my elbow on Simba's bent shoulder, I took steady aim and pressed the trigger. The bullet went in between the neck and shoulder, and the lion fell over on his side, one foreleg in the air. He recovered in a moment and stood up, evidently very sick, and once more faced me, growling hoarsely.

"I think he was on the eve of charging. I fired at once, and this bullet broke his back just behind the shoulders and with the next I killed him outright, after we had gathered round him."

GRANTSVILLE.

Married.

MASON—BAKER.—Alfred A. Mason, of Jennings, and Effie Jane Baker, of Grantsville, were quietly married in the parlor of the Geissman hotel at Oakland, by Rev. W. H. Clary, of Deer Park. The bride was becomingly attired. Those present were Mr. Jonas Baker, of Williamsburg, Pa., and Mrs. F. L. Grant, of Sunny Bank, Va. The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Buckner Mason, of Swanton, and is a partner of the firm of Mason Bros., of Jennings, and is highly respected by all his acquaintances. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Baker, of Grantsville, and is quite popular. They returned to the home of the groom on Thursday. There is nothing definite as to where they will make their permanent home.

BITTINGER.

This week began with most favorable weather conditions and the farmers are making use of the sunny days to finish digging their late potatoes.

The new stable on the parsonage lot in this village is rapidly nearing completion.

Amos Bittinger and family, of Crellin, passed through here last Sunday afternoon in an automobile.

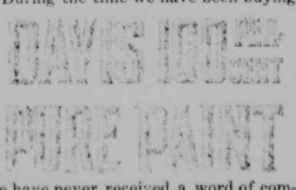
G. W. Engle, of Baltimore, spent last week with his parents at this place, returning to the city early this week.

Constable W. A. Maffett, of Oakland, was attending to some official business in this neighborhood last week.

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Ellithorp, who spent the past four months with friends and relatives in various parts of the west, returned to their home in this village last week.

Miss Fannie Wiley returned to her home here last Thursday, after a short visit to Philadelphia and West Chester, Pa., and will leave this week for Waterloo, Iowa, where she has an extensive practice as a professional nurse.

Rev. J. B. Shoup returned last week from a week's visit to friends in Frostburg.



Miss Nettie Brininger, of Sunnyside, is the guest of her sister, Mrs. J. T. Lohr, near here this week.

A Tongue Twister.

Esau Wood sawed wood. Esau Wood would saw wood. All the wood Esau Wood saw Esau Wood would saw. In other words, all the wood Esau saw to saw Esau sought to saw. Oh, the wood Wood would saw! and oh, the woodsaw with which Wood would saw wood! But one day Wood's woodsaw would saw no wood, and thus the wood sawed was not the wood Wood would saw if Wood's woodsaw would saw wood. Now, Wood would saw wood with a woodsaw that would saw wood, so Esau sought a saw that would saw wood. One day Esau saw a saw saw wood as no other woodsaw Wood saw would saw wood. In fact, of all the woodsaws Wood ever saw saw wood, Wood never saw a woodsaw that would saw wood as the woodsaw Wood saw saw wood would saw wood, and I never saw a woodsaw that would saw wood as the woodsaw Wood saw would saw until I saw Esau Wood saw wood with the woodsaw Wood saw saw wood. Now Wood saws wood with the woodsaw Esau Wood saw saw wood.

Methuselah Only 79.

Methuselah loses his famous record, for his 969 reputed years are whittled down to seventy-eight and three-fourth. Thus says the Jewish World in a discussion of Jewish characteristics.

There has always existed a certain amount of doubt even among believers in the literal truth of the Bible concerning the great age to which the Jewish patriarchs are recorded as having lived. Some of the theories evolved to reduce the Biblical records of this kind to something near the allotted span of man are dealt with in the article.

It is surmised, the Jewish World says, that in the earliest times the month, the period of a moon cycle was called a year. Thus Adam's 930 years of life, calculating at twenty-nine and one-half days, the period of lunation, works out to seventy-five and one-fourth years. After the month year there came a five month year, the limit of five being derived from the fingers on one hand, it being remembered that primitive people always used the fingers for counting purposes. Then came the twelve month year.

Excuse for this rearrangement is found in the Psalmist's limit of life o three score and ten years, and it is maintained that between the times of Noah and David no such extraordinary change could have taken place as to reduce the life of man by eleven-twelfths. On the five month year basis Abraham's 175 years work out at seventy-two and Isaac's 180 at seventy-four.

Perhaps, too, there intervened a six month year, discovered by Jacob while watching Laban's flocks. Thus Jacob's 147 years work out seventy-three. The twelve month year began with the Egyptians, who say that a complete period is made up of two "years," in one of which the days were longer th the nights and in the other the ni longer than the days.

The Christian and the Jewish year, concludes the Jewish World, will not forever be separated, "for," it says, "in due course Rosh Hashona will fall at Christmas time and then catch up the Christian year. This, however, will not happen for 30,000 years, and no doubt this is the reason why nobody worries about it."

In our extremely humble opinion the sooner those Methuselah and Jonah stories are explained in plain United States the better it will be for the Christian religion.

COME IN AND GET ACQUAINTED

THE DEATH RECORD.

MRS. CHISTINE HARMON.

Mrs. Christine Harmon died at the home of her son, near Bittinger, October 14th. She was born in 1825 in Somerset county, Pa., and was the mother of ten children, of whom death claimed two in the prime of their lives. Of her grandchildren fifty-two are living and five are dead, and of her great grandchildren forty-six are living and five are dead. The deceased was a good and well beloved mother, a kind neighbor and a life-long member of the church of Christ. Her remains were buried in the Bittinger cemetery the following Sunday after services conducted at the home and in the church by Rev. Alvin Yugel. The funeral sermon was preached before a large number of friends and relatives.

MRS. JEFFERSON VANSICKEL.

Mrs. Mary Alvira Frazee VanSickel, wife of Jefferson VanSickel died Tuesday morning, October 19th, at her late residence, Frazee Ridge, Garrett County, Md., of typhoid fever aged 29 years and 6 months.

Mrs. VanSickel had been sick about three weeks.

The deceased lady was the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Frazee who survive her. She was married June 25, 1904, to Jefferson VanSickel who with two little girls survive. Mrs. VanSickel was a lady of sterling character, a devoted wife, mother and daughter and her loss is severely felt by these surviving ones who idolized her.

The funeral took place Thursday at 2 o'clock in the afternoon from the Frazee Ridge Baptist church in Garrett county.

Rev. G. W. Ringer assisted by her brother in law, Rev. N. H. Sanner, officiating. Interment in the cemetery belonging to the above church. The funeral was largely attended. Among the sorrowing relatives from a distance who were present were Rev. and Mrs. N. H. Sanner, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. VanSickel, Mrs. Isaac VanSickel, Harry Collins and W. E. B. Benford, Ursina, and Mrs. Sue Collins of Tarentum, Pa.

The bereaved husband, children and parents have the sincere sympathy of their large circle of friends and acquaintances in their sad bereavement.

Miss Ethyl Hutson, of near Sunnyside, spent several days last week at Clarksburg, W. Va., where she visited her sister, Miss Stella, returning to her home Saturday evening.

Mrs. D. E. Offutt, who went to Baltimore two weeks ago to visit her daughter, Miss Nell Offutt, who was suffering with an attack of pneumonia, has returned to her home in Oakland.

The monthly tea under the auspices of the Ladies' Guild of St. Matthew's church, will be given at the residence of Mrs. E. Fundenberg Friday afternoon of this week, when tea will be served from three until five o'clock. All are cordially invited.

The Cumberland Daily News of Monday says: Business out of Cumberland on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad was so heavy yesterday that the railroad management was compelled to borrow six engines from the Cumberland and Pennsylvania Railroad Company and ten from the Western Maryland Railroad to help move the cars. This is the first congestion of freight of any extent in this vicinity since prior to the late dull times.

Mr. Urias McKenzie, of District No. 9, was in Oakland last Saturday on his way to the fair at Swanton, having with him a number of specimens of potatoes known as the rural New Yorker, and the prediction is made here that if Mr. McKenzie did not carry off the first prize at the fair then Garrett county should put her potatoes against the world with a show of winning against all comers. Mr. McKenzie had eight of the potatoes which weighed 14 pounds and ten ounces. The four largest weighed 8 pounds, four ounces. The crop gathered by Mr. McKenzie was eighty-five bushels from about three-eights of an acres and he states that the average weight of the potatoes was one pound each.

It is all very well, when you have nothing to do but kill time, to talk about keeping the boys on the farm, but you might as well spend your time spitting at a crack. Boys will stay on a farm as well as anywhere, if they receive decent treatment at home. The boy who is yanked out of bed by the hair, kicked out to milk and cuffed in to breakfast, as a preliminay to being popped through in the field all day, is not likely to be consumed by his love for the glories of agriculture—nor for his sire. Give the boy a fair show, and he'll stay with you till the cows come home. If you are so mean he can't stay at home, don't you go to your neighbors with a hypocritical snuffle and tell about your boy's ingratitude after you have raised him.

WEATHER FOR NOVEMBER.

Month Will Have Plenty of Cold, With Snow and Sleet.

The outlook for November, as forecasted by Peter R. Smith, is not encouraging to those who like summer weather. His predictions follow:

November is likely to be a very spasmodic month. The disturbing elements which then are present will keep the meteorolgy excited and fitful most of the time. Several cold snaps are quite sure to show up, and much cloudy weather will prevail. The exciting forces denote thundershowers about the 12th and again about the 18th or 20th.

A storm wave will be on passage across the country as October passes over to November. On the 1st and 2nd the temperature will grow much warmer and cloudiness will continue to thicken and spread, resulting in rain at many places. Cold northwesterly winds will follow the disturbance and a change to much cooler weather will follow.

From the 4th or 5th to the 8th or 9th denote an active storm period, which will in some form of disturbance reach all sections of the country. The wave will discharge much rain at some places and southward the rain and electric action will be intense. On the northern border of the country sleet and snow will show up, with dangerous gales over the lake territory. The period is likely to be prolonged beyond the usual time for the passage of a wave.

A period of stormy weather will be in progress on or touching the 12th, 13th and 14th. The disturbing elements which will be present denote a high temperature for the season and stormy, disagreeable weather. The western flank of the storm will be wrought up by northwestern gales about the 14th or 15th, bringing very chilly weather.

A storm period is central on the 17th or 18th of the month. Then several storm elements will unite their forces, causing a period of storm probabilities generally, and especially on the ocean and northern lakes. Old Boreas will make more than a faint skirmish for domination between the 17th and 20th in northern and central parts of the country. An early blizzard may be encountered in northern parts, which may push unusual cold for the season far south.

On the 23d, 24th and 25th the weather will be spasmodic—snow squalls and cold winds causing unpleasant weather for Thanksgiving.

A renewal of storms will be passing east on the 27th or 28th, which may continue to the close of the month in the different climatic sections. Autumnal storms of rain, wind and sleet turning to snow flurries will close the month.

The party consisted of M. and Allen Miller, John and Joseph Hutzell, Al. Rodamer, Jonas Keim and Mr. Livengood. They started on Tuesday a week ago in Mr. Miller's auto. Everything went lovely until they struck Blue Ridge Mountain—then the trouble began. They walked and they carried rock, and they camped half the night along the road with the auto in the [illegible] they had broken slides, gasoline trouble and everything else on the auto calendar. They got within 15 miles of Gordonville then they gave it up and headed for Washington. Here they spent Tuesday recuperating. On Wednesday they started back and everything went lovely until they reached Sheridan. There they busted things up right, ending with a broken wheel. This proved too much for the crowd and deserting the auto they took the train for home arriving here Wednesday. AN ADJUSTMENT OF NATURE.

Theory of an Artist and How It Finally Worked Out.

By O. HENRY.

[Copyright, 1906, by McClure, Phillips & Co.]

In an art exhibition the other day I saw a painting that had been sold for $5,000. The painter was a young scrub out of the west named Kraft, who had a favorite food and a pet theory. His pabulum was an unquenchable belief in the unerring artistic adjustment of nature. His theory was fixed around corned beef hash with poached egg. There was a story behind the picture, so I went home and let it drip out of a fountain pen. The idea of Kraft—But that is not the beginning of the story.

Three years ago Kraft, Bill Judkins (a poet) and I took our meals at Cypher's, on Eighth avenue. I say "took." When we had money Cypher got it "off of" us, as he expressed it. We had not credit. We went in, called for food and ate it. We paid or we did not pay. We had confidence in Cypher's sullenness and smoldering ferocity. Deep down in his sunless soul he was either a prince, a fool or an artist. He sat at a worm eaten desk, covered with files of waiters' checks so old that I was sure the bottomest one was for clams that Henry Hudson had eaten and paid for. Cypher had the power, in common with Napoleon III. and the goggle eyed perch, of throwing a film over his eyes, rendering opaque the windows of his soul. Once when we left him unpaid, with egregious excuses, I looked back and saw him shaking with inaudible laughter behind his film. Now and then we paid up back scores.

But the chief thing at Cypher's was Milly. Milly was a waitress. She was a grand example of Kraft's theory of the artistic adjustment of nature. She belonged largely to waiting, as Minerva did to the art of scrapping or Venus to the science of serious flirtation. Pedestaled and in bronze she might have stood with the noblest of her heroic sisters as "Liver and Bacon Enlivening the World." She belonged to Cypher's. You expected to see her colossal figure loom through that reeking blue cloud of smoke from frying fat just as you expect the Palisades to appear through a drifting Hudson river fog. There, amid the steam of vegetables and the vapors of acres of "ham and," the crash of crockery, the clatter of steel, the screaming of "short orders," the cries of the hungering and all the horrid tumult of feeding man, surrounded by swarms of the buzzing winged beasts bequeathed us by Pharaoh, Milly steered her magnificent way like some great liner cleaving among the canoes of howling savages.

Our goddess of grub was built on lines so majestic that they could be followed only with awe. Her sleeves were always rolled above her elbows. She could have taken us three musketeers in her two hands and dropped us out of the window. She had seen fewer years than any of us, but she was of such superb Evehood and simplicity that she mothered us from the beginning. Cypher's store of eatables she poured out upon us with royal indifference to price and quantity, as from a cornucopia that knew no exhaustion. Her voice rang like a great silver bell; her smile was many toothed and frequent. She seemed like a yellow sunrise on mountain tops. I never saw her but I thought of the Yosemite. And yet somehow I could never think of her as existing outside of Cypher's. There nature had placed her, and she had taken root and grown mightily. She seemed happy and took her few poor dollars on Saturday nights with the flushed pleasure of a child that receives an unexpected donation.

It was Kraft who first voiced the fear that each of us must have held latently. It came up apropos, of course, of certain questions of art at which we were hammering. One of us compared the harmony existing between a Haydn symphony and pistache ice cream to the exquisite congruity between Milly and Cypher's.

"There is a certain fate hanging over Milly," said Kraft, "and if it overtakes her she is lost to Cypher's and to us."

"She will grow fat?" asked Judkins fearsomely.

"She will go to night school and become refined?" I ventured anxiously.

"It is this," said Kraft, punctuating in a puddle of spilled coffee with a stiff forefinger. "Caesar had his Brutus, the cotton has its bollworm, the chorus girl has her Pittsburger, the summer boarder has his poison ivy, the hero has his Carnegie medal, art has its Morgan, the rose has its"—

"Speak," I interrupted, much perturbed. "You do not think that Milly will begin to lace?"

"One day," concluded Kraft solemnly, "there will come to Cypher's for a plate of beans a millionaire lumberman from Wisconsin, and he will marry Milly."

"Never!" exclaimed Judkins and I in horror.

"A lumberman!" repeated Kraft hoarsely.

"And a millionaire lumberman!" I sighed despairingly.

"From Wisconsin!" groaned Judkins.

We agreed that the awful fate seemed to menace her. Few things were less improbable. Milly, like some vast virgin stretch of pine woods, was made to catch the lumberman's eye. And well we knew the habits of the Badgers once fortune smiled upon them. Straight to New York they hie and lay their goods at the feet of the girl who serves them beans in a beanery. Why, the alphabet itself connives. The Sunday newspaper's headliner's work is cut for him.

"Winsome Waitress Wins Wealthy Wisconsin Woodsman."

For awhile we felt that Milly was on the verge of being lost to us.

It was our love of the unerring artistic adjustment of nature that inspired us. We could not give her over to a lumberman doubly accursed by wealth and provincialism. We shuddered to think of Milly, with her voice modulated and her elbows covered, pouring tea in the marble tepee of a tree murderer. No! In Cypher's she belonged—in the bacon smoke, the cabbage perfume, the grand Wagnerian chorus of hurled ironstone china and rattling casters.

Our fears must have been prophetic, for on that same evening the wildwood discharged upon us Milly's preordained confiscator—our fee to adjustment and order. But Alaska and not Wisconsin bore the burden of the visitation.

We were at our supper of beef stew and dried apples when he trotted in as if on the heels of a dog team and made one of the mess at our table. With the freedom of the camps he assaulted our ears and claimed the fellowship of men lost in the wilds of a hash house. We embraced him as a specimen, and in three minutes we had all but died for one another as friends.

He was rugged and bearded and wind dried. He had just come off the "trail," he said, at one of the North river ferries. I fancied I could see the snow dust of Chilcoot yet powdering his shoulders. And then he strewed the table with the nuggets, stuffed ptarmigans, beadwork and seal pelts of the returned Klondiker and began to prate to us of his millions.

"Bank drafts for two millions," was his summing up, "and a thousand a day piling up from my claims. And now I want some beef stew and canned peaches. I never got off the train since I mushed out of Seattle, and I'm hungry. The stuff the niggers feed you on Pullmans doesn't count. You gentlemen order what you want."

And then Milly loomed up with a thousand dishes on her bare arm—loomed up big and white and pink and awful as Mount St. Elias—with a smile like day breaking in a gulch. And the Klondiker threw down his pelts and nuggets as dross and let his jaw fall halfway and stared at her. You could almost see the diamond tiaras on Milly's brow and the hand embroidered silk Paris gowns that he meant to buy for her.

At last the bollworm had attacked the cotton. The poison ivy was reaching out its tendrils to intwine the summer boarder. The millionaire lumberman, thinly disguised as the Alaskan miner, was about to engulf our Milly and upset nature's adjustment.

Kraft was the first to act. He leaped up and pounded the Klondiker's back. "Come out and drink," he shouted—"drink first and eat afterward!" Judkins seized one arm and I the other. Gayly, roaringly, irresistibly, in jolly good fellow style we dragged him from the restaurant to a cafe, stuffing his pockets with his embalmed birds and indigestible nuggets.

There he rumbled a roughly good humored protest. "That's the girl for my money!" he declared. "She can eat out of my skillet the rest of her life. Why, I never see such a fine girl! I'm going back there and ask her to marry me. I guess she won't want to sling hash any more when she sees the pile of dust I've got."

"You'll take another whisky and milk now," Kraft persuaded, with Satan's smile. "I thought you up country fellows were better sports."

Kraft spent his puny store of coin at the bar and then gave Judkins and me such an appealing look that he went down to the last dime we had in toasting our guest.

Then when our ammunition was gone and the Klondiker, still somewhat sober, began to babble again of Milly, Kraft whispered into his ear such a polite, barbed insult relating to people who were miserly with their funds that the miner crashed down handful after handful of silver and notes, calling for all the fluids in the world to drown the imputation.

Thus the work was accomplished. With his own guns we drove him from the field. And then we had him carted to a distant small hotel and put to bed with his nuggets and baby sealskins stuffed around him.

"He will never find Cypher's again," said Kraft. "He will propose to the first white apron he sees in a dairy restaurant tomorrow. And Milly—I mean the natural adjustment—is saved!"

And back to Cypher's went we three, and, finding customers scarce, we joined hands and did an Indian dance with Milly in the center.

This, I say, happened three years ago. And about that time a little luck descended upon us three, and we were enabled to buy costlier and less wholesome food than Cypher's. Our paths separated, and I saw Kraft no more and Judkins seldom.

But, as I said, I saw a painting the other day that was sold for $5,000. The title was "Boadicea," and the figure seemed to fill all out of doors. But of all the picture's admirers who stood before it I believe I was the only one who longed for Boadicea to stalk from her frame, bringing me corned beef hash with poached egg.

THE TITLE WAS "BOADICEA."

I hurried away to see Kraft. His satanic eyes were the same, his hair was worse tangled, but his clothes had been made by a tailor.

"I didn't know," I said to him.

"We've bought a cottage in the Bronx with the money," said he. "Any evening at 7."

"Then," said I, "when you led us against the lumberman—the—Klondiker—it wasn't altogether on account of the unerring artistic adjustment of nature?"

"Well, not altogether," said Kraft, with a grin.

Three Wall Streets.

"People have a notion that there is only one Wall street in New York," remarked a keen observer of city life as he stood in front of old Trinity. "As a matter of fact, there are three.

"This Wall street we are looking at now is the one commonly recognized—the financial center of the country, with its feverish activity, its frantic energy, its rushing throng of millionaires, near-millionaires, speculators and aspiring, gilt edged employees.

"If you want to see Wall street No. 2, come down here at 6:30, long after this throng has disappeared, and you will find it a street given over to the passage of overworked, exhausted, underpaid men and youths, the minor employees of the financial center, poorly dressed, as a rule, and without hope or prospect of unearthing wealth. The place to them is merely a treadmill, not a gold mine.

"Wall street No. 3 is visible on Sundays and on holidays. In place of financiers rubbing elbows are immigrants wandering wonderingly through its silent length, with here and there children playing—yes, children playing in Wall street, the children of janitors and caretakers of the great buildings where fortunes are made and lost in a day. There are three Wall streets, and each is interesting."—New York Globe.

Hamlet Omitted.

"See here!" exclaimed the theatrical manager. "Have you the nerve to call this play a rural drama?"

"That is what I claim for it," replied the author modestly, as all authors reply.

"And you pride yourself on being a realist?" snorted the manager.

"I do," replied the author, again modestly.

"Where's your evidence of realism in this play?" demanded the manager.

"Well," explained the author, "I've introduced the old oaken bucket, with the quartet of farm hands; the scenario calls for real cows and chickens; a load of real hay, drawn by real oxen, is introduced in the second act; the heroine is discovered churning real butter in the"—

"Piffle! Piffle!" cried the manager. "What I want to know is where's the mortgage? Who ever heard of a farmhouse without a mortgage that the wayward son comes home and pays off in the last act to frustrate the evil designs of the villain."

And the modest author was forced to admit that there were a few things about realism that he had yet to learn.—Philadelphia Ledger.

FOREST FIRE DAMAGE.

Annual Loss Has Been 50 Lives and Untold Millions of Dollars.

To the Editor of The Republican:

The annual loss from forest fires in the United States for the past half-century has amounted each year to a loss of 50 lives, 50,000,000 acres of woodland burned over and $50,000,000 worth of merchantable timber destroyed.

As appalling as this appears, the damage to the forest is not half accounted for. If the full story were told the amount of loss to the forest would be something like $100,000,000. When we are reminded that at least nine-tenths of this loss can be prevented, under reasonable precautions, there seems little excuse. In countries where the value of the forest is realized, like Germany and France, forest fires rarely occur. This immense fire damage, coupled with the rapid cutting of merchantable timber, has so depleted our timber resources that the question of our future timber supply is a serious one and is leading forest owners to take better care of the young growth that is now coming up after the logging operations.

Naturally this feeling is better developed in some sections than in others because in agricultural communities the amount of woodland has been greatly reduced. In the mountain sections the existence of a timber shortage is slower to be felt, but it is, nevertheless, becoming a stern reality.

Saw mills that a few years ago had before them a large timber supply, are finding that their field of operation is becoming more limited every year and it will only be a question of time when they will be required to move to new fields or go out of business altogether. A case in point is the Kendall Lumber Company at Kendall, on the Youghiogheny river. Other operations have followed, or soon will be following, the same course. It is a melancholy spectacle to see the last of these logging operations. During the boom days everything is prosperous and a large force of men find employed; settlements or even towns are built up, and there is a general feeling of prosperity. As the timber supply becomes exhausted the operation is closed down; men have to seek work elsewhere; settlements that were built up by the lumbering business are doomed to decline or extinction altogether, unless perchance the agricultural interests of the section can make good at least a part of what has been lost.

After the woodlands have been cut over fires almost invariably sweep over the land destroying completely what is left as a nucleus for a new timber growth. In some cases this destruction has been so complete as to render the country absolutely unproductive for at least a generation. A case in point is the southern end of Meadow Mountain on which the white pine was lumbered some 35 or 40 years ago. The organic matter collected by hundreds of years of tree growth in the form of a thick layer of humus and the young pine trees that were left were completely destroyed by the succeeding fires, and to this day there is over a large part of this area nothing but briars and huckleberry bushes scattered among the big boulders.

It is natural that the timber should be cut and it is a wise policy to cut all timber as soon as it reaches maturity, so that a new crop may be secured in the shortest possible time. The trouble has been that where the mature timber has been cut there has been no adequate provisions for restocking the land. Nature has dealt so bountifully with the mountain forests that they will restock themselves naturally and with a valuable growth, if only given half a chance. The whole trouble is with the forest fires that repeatedly occur. Timber lands that were cut over 20 years ago and fires kept out are now stocked with a splendid young growth all reaching merchantable sizes. There are numerous examples of this in the county of which the owners may well feel proud. It is a pity that it is not the rule rather than the exception.

It is safe to say that if forest fires could be kept out of Garrett county for the next 20 years, the additional timber growth would more than pay the annual county expenses. F. W. B.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city of several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements. These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

Peach Orchard Land for Sale.

I offer for sale two farms in Hampshire county, W. Va., both in the peach belt and would make fine peach orchards.

The first contains 232 acres, forty acres cleared and the remainder in timber. About 50,000 feet of saw timber; 10,000 props and a lot of locust posts. Situated 1½ miles northwest of Springfield, on the Romney Branch of the B. & O. R. R. An orchard of sixty bearing apple trees and some peach trees on the place. About thirty acres of run bottom and five acres of this in meadow. Improved by dweeling house, well, etc.

I have been advised by good authority that this farm would make a splendid peach orchard. Convenient to churches, schools, stores, etc. Price $1,500, on easy terms.

The second farm contains about 150 acres, partly cleared and part in timber and has on it a dwelling house and some other improvements. About six acres of run bottom now in meadow. Situated about one mile west of Springfield, W. Va., on the Romney Branch of the B. & O. R. R. Convenient to churches, schools, stores, etc. Price $1,200, on easy terms. A FEUD IN THE MOUNTAINS.

The Avenger Forgets His Enmity to Perform a Noble Deed.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

"Somebody 'll be made ter pay fer this!" The words were hissed rather than spoken, and the boy's fingers closed convulsively on the barrel of his long rifle. It was not yet noon, but the shadows of the forest were thick around him. Stray gleams of sunlight came through occasional openings in the foliage, and one of these fell at the boy's feet and rested upon the dead body of a large deerhound. It just touched the delicate face and ears, but left in pitying shadow the ugly wound made by the bullet. As the young mountaineer gazed at the dark scar his eye gleamed fiercely.

"Somebody 'll pay fer hit," he repeated savagely, "an' I 'low thet somebody 'll be Tom Peters—the low down, sneakin' spy an' traitor! He's driv pap into the mountains by his lyin' an' tale bearin', an' now he thinks he'll do what he likes with our fambly cos I'm a boy. But I'll show him! Hit shan't be said I'm the best shot in the mounting fer nothin'. I'll end this old quar'l now fer good 'n' always."

Then his mood changed. Letting his rifle fall upon the ground, he threw himself beside the dead body of his friend.

"Poor old Driver!" he sobbed. "Can't you speak ter me? Ain't you 'n' me goin' on any more hunts? Poor old doggie, poor old doggie!" For some time he lay there sobbing bitterly. Then he rose and began to scoop a hole in the loose sand. Then he lifted the dead body of his friend and laid it gently in its last resting place.

"Goodby, old doggie," he said as he turned away. "I wish you knew what I'm going fer. You'd rest more easy."

He moved along slowly and cautiously and paused frequently to look around. Across wild ravines and up, up the narrow mountain path slowly and stealthily he moved, and never for a moment did the angry gleam leave his eyes or his mouth lose its resolute harshness.

On this side the range was wild and almost inaccessible, and the cabins of the hardy mountaineers were far apart. Perched like an eagle's nest on a narrow shelf of rock and hidden from the valley below by a thick growth of chestnuts was the home of Tom Peters. His nearest neighbor was Jake Winthrop, who had built his cabin in the wildest part of a gloomy ravine three miles down the mountain.

Time was when these two men had been good friends, but that was years ago. A sudden quarrel at a shooting match had begun the feud. Tom Peters was badly wounded and confined to his bed for months. In his first anger he had sworn to kill Winthrop on sight, but as he recovered he seemed to think better of it.

"GOODBY, OLD DOGGIE," HE SAID.

As the years went by the breach became wider, and the children grew up with the feud as part of their heritage.

It had long been suspected in the valley that Winthrop was engaged in moonshining, but proof was difficult. Several times the officers had made sudden descents upon his place, only to be surprised by his blank looks of wonder and willingness to show them around.

But at last they had their revenge. One dark night they stole into the ravine and found him at work. He had escaped himself, but the still and the supply of whisky were destroyed. Since then he had kept in hiding. Food and information were brought to him by his son, and the two spent long hours in discussing plans of revenge. Both were fully convinced that Peters was the instigator of the raid. He had known of the existence of the still. Indeed, he had helped to make it many years before. He was familiar with the secret entrance to the ravine and knew all about Winthrop's habit of working at night. And only a few weeks before the boy had seen him in the settlement talking with one of the officers. No; there was no doubt who was the secret enemy!

As Bob Winthrop made his way up the mountain path his eyes grew more fierce and angry. He thought of his father hiding among the rocks, of the ruins of the still, of gentle old Driver buried in the gloomy depths of the ravine.

After awhile he began to move more slowly and cautiously. At last he paused near a sharp turn in the path. Then he dropped upon his hands and knees and crawled stealthily around the turn. Before him was a sharp descent of a few rods and beyond this a dense fringe of chestnut trees. Above the trees was a column of black smoke.

"He's cert'nly ter home," he said, with a grim smile of satisfaction. "That smoke means dinner."

It took him but a few minutes to pass through the fringe of woods, and he paused in the shelter of a large clump of chinquapin bushes and glanced sharply around. No one was in sight, but the entire roof of the cabin was in a blaze, and smoke was coming thickly from the door and windows. Bob gazed at it curiously.

"Queer there ain't nobody aroun'," he muttered.

"Mebbe they're in the cabin tryin' ter get things out. Well, hit's good time's any. I'll jes' wa'n him, an' then hit'll be one or t'other."

He stepped from the bushes and gave a loud shout. Then he cocked his rifle and waited.

"Somebody mus' be ter home, or how'd the fire get started. They shorely wouldn' set hit on purpose." He gave another shout and moved slowly toward the cabin. A few moments and there came the frightened wail of an infant.

"A baby!" he cried wonderingly. "Why don't the fools bring hit out?" Then a terrible thought occurred to him. Perhaps they were all dead or away. For a moment he stood irresolute; then a quick flush of pity drove the anger from his face.

"I ain't fightin' babies!" And, dropping his rifle upon the ground, he sped toward the cabin. Without a moment's hesitation he dashed into the wall of smoke and flame. But only for an instant. The heat was too much for him, and he staggered out weakly and half blinded. A large spring of water bubbled up in front of the cabin, and the sight gave him a new idea. A quick bound took him into the spring, and a moment later he once more rushed into the cabin with the water streaming from his clothing. This time he remained longer. When he came out he carried a small bundle in his arms. But almost before he was beyond reach of the flames he stumbled and fell. After a moment he rose and staggered on a few steps and fell again. Before he had reached the place where he had left his rifle he had fallen three times. The last time he did not rise.

At last the small bundle which had fallen upon the ground began to stir. A few frantic movements, and it opened, and a baby crawled out. The blanket was scorched and blackened, and there were great holes which the fire had made, but the baby was apparently unhurt. It gazed about curiously for a moment and then crawled over to the unconscious figure of the boy. After awhile it reached up and touched the blistered face. A shudder ran through the boy's frame, and he opened his eyes. Then he rose slowly to his feet.

"Sorter seems like I fainted," he said in a wondering voice. "I thought only gals did that. But I reckon I'd better be gettin' home 'n' hev these burns looked after. Smart like they's consider'ble bad. Lucky I kept my eyes shet." A low wail at his feet drew his attention. "Yes, baby; I'm goin' ter take you 'long o' me," and the ghost of a smile flickered across his blackened face. "Seems like you sorter belong ter me now. I 'low your folks hev deserted you."

He reached down, but as his blistered flesh came in contact with the baby he drew back, with a low cry of pain. Then, as though ashamed of his weakness, he picked up the baby and his rifle and walked quietly toward the woods. But his progress was slow.

At length he reached the sharp turn in the path. As he did so he fancied that he could hear some one coming up the mountain. A keen scrutiny and he stepped quickly from sight.

"It's him," he muttered fiercely. "Now we'n settle hit fer good an' all."

Moving back into the bushes, he laid the baby upon a bed of leaves. Then he returned and took up a position behind a rock.

The figure came on rapidly. When it was within hailing distance Bob stepped from his concealment.

"You, Tom Peters!" he called sharply. "Is your gun loaded?"

"Yes," in startled accents from below.

"Then aim 'n' fire! Quick!"

Almost with the words came the sharp report of a rifle, and a bullet whistled past. The boy laughed derisively.

"Now hit's my turn." And he brought his rifle into position and took deliberate aim. But even as he pulled the trigger his strength failed him. He staggered weakly for a moment and then sank upon the ground. The bullet flew wide of its mark.

Tom Peters came on deliberately. He was a large, powerful man, with a heavy beard and keen, restless eyes. When he reached the prostrate figure of the boy he gazed down at him regretfully.

"I didn't 'low ter kill him," he said, and there was real concern in his voice. "But hit all come so sudden I might have aimed closter'n I thought. Well, he brought hit on himse'f. But hit's queer he's so burned."

He kneeled down and examined the figure more closely.

"Hair 'n' clothes nigh burned off'n him," he said wonderingly, "an' face 'n' han's a solid blister. Well, he's cert'nly been where there's fire."

A quick glance around showed him the black smoke which was still floating above the chestnuts. He sprang to his feet, with a low cry of dismay.

"So that's how come ye got burned!" he hissed. "Fired my cabin an' mebbe killed my fambly. You—you scoundrel!" He raised his rifle and then lowered it, with a bitter laugh. "Hit's lucky you're dead!

A shadow fell across his path, and he looked up. Several vultures were circling about overhead. A quick shudder ran through his frame. At the same instant he was conscious of hurrying feet. A woman rushed past him sobbing wildly.

"My baby! Oh, where's my baby?" Then, catching sight of the prostrate figure, she threw herself upon it. "Oh, my boy, my boy!" she cried. "Thank God, thank God!"

"What's the matter, Alice?" the man asked sternly. "Are you crazy?"

"No, but hit's a wonder I'm not. Oh, Tom, hit was awful—awful!" And once more she began to sob wildly.

"What was awful?"

"The fire. I saw hit all. Me 'n' the children went roun' on t'other side the ravine fer—fer berries. I 'lowed the baby 'd sleep till we got back. I'd wrapped hit up keerful. We seen the fire plain, but we couldn't get back. Hit's a long way roun' the ravine. Then I prayed fer he'p, an' the boy come an' saved the baby. He went in twicet." Her sobbing had gradually ceased, and she now looked up, with a pitiful inquiry in her eyes.

"YOU, TOM PETERS!" HE CALLED SHARPLY

"Where's my baby?" she asked wistfully. A low cry from the bushes answered her. In a moment the baby was brought and placed in her arms.

"An' did the boy get all them burns a-savin' hit?" Tom Peters asked, with a strange look on his face.

The woman nodded.

"I thought hit war an angel," she said simply, "sent ter answer my pra'r."

Unconsciously her hand began to stroke the boy's face. Either the pain or something in her touch seemed to arouse him. After a moment he opened his eyes and gazed at them curiously. Then he recognized Peters.

"Is your gun loaded?" he asked confusedly.

"No," and the strong voice trembled a little. "I 'low there won't be no more use fer guns atween us."

"But I 'low there will." And by a desperate effort the boy struggled to his feet. "I feel sorter queer, but I reckon I'n hold a gun. An' hit's time this quar'l war settled."

The man folded his arms.

"You'n shoot ef you like ter," he said quietly, "but I'm through."

The boy's eyes blazed scornfully.

"So you're a coward's well's a spy 'n' dorg killer?" he taunted.

A quick flush passed over the man's face.

"I don't know what you mean by spy 'n' dorg killer," he said, "but Tom Peters ain't gen'rally spoke of as a coward."

"Didn' you bring the officers down on pap's still?" fiercely. "Didn' you kill my dorg? Ain't you been a sneakin' spy all 'long?"

"I never heered of the still bein' took till this mornin'," was the calm answer, "an' I ain't a man as kills dorgs. I seen a lot o' settlemint boys huntin' yesterd'y, an' mebbe some o' them shot him." Then he added gently, "You 'n' me can't fight any more."

The fierce light died slowly from the boy's eyes.

"But I seen you talkin' with the officer down to the settlemint," he said doubtfully.

"He war askin' me 'bout a darky who used to work fer you all. He 'lowed on bribin' him, but I had no idee what 't war fer."

The baby began to coo softly, and the boy reached out to touch it. The poor blistered face could not smile, but the eyes had grown very soft and tender.

"Then there ain't no cause fer quar'l atween us," he said musingly. "I'm right glad. Pop thought a heap o' you. That's what made him so bitter. He 'lowed you war spyin' ag'in him."

"I'd ruther be frien's with your pap than with any man in the whole worl'," was the quick answer. "I'd 'a' made up long 'go, but I knew 't war no use. He war that bitter he'd 'a' shot me on sight."

A faint shadow across the sun made them look up. Far away in the sky and almost lost to view were several dark spots. They were the vultures. Even as they looked the spots disappeared.

The boy reached out his hand, and the man grasped it warmly.

HOYES.

Hallowe'en was observed as usual at this place by quite a number of the young people on last Saturday night. All enjoyed it in the highest degree except a few people on whom the tricks were played. In a few instances these young folks had to exceed the speed limit in making their escape from a few blank cartridges and some very commanding voices; nevertheless all got home safe and in the most cheerful mood and feel sure they would all make brave soldiers now.

Misses Kate O'Donnell and Olia Mattingly attended the teachers' institute at Accident last Saturday and report a very interesting meeting.

Mrs. Jennie Miller and little daughter and William Bishoff, all of Stone House, were guests over Sunday of their brother, Thomas Bishoff, of this place.

Charles Callis, who is teaching the the Gauer school this winter, came home to vote. He returned to his school Tuesday afternoon.

Misses Sudie and Sadie Friend returned to their home last week from Mt. Lake Park, where they had been visiting relatives.

Mr. Milton White of St. Mary's, is the guest of Miss Blanche Callis.

Messrs. Gwynn and Nichols, of Lonaconing, made a business trip to Hoyes last week and before returning home Mr. Gwynn visited his sister, Mrs. Foote, at Selbysport.

Master Montie Mattingly, of Piedmont, has been visiting M. Mattingly's for some time past.

Mr. Winters, of Midland, made a trip to Hoyes last Thursday and purchased some very fine cattle.

Rev. Powers will commence protracted services at this place next Monday evening.

Mrs. James McGettigan and children, of near Accident, were calling on Mrs. Will Mattingly Sunday.

Messrs. Harry Shahan and Gill Dewitt, of Armstead, were calling on some of the fair sex in this neighborhood quite recently.

Misses Malva and Rose Wilburn gave a surprise party to their brother, James, one evening last week. All were very pleasantly entertained.

Our school is progressing very nicely with Miss O'Donnell as teacher.

SANG RUN.

We are having pleasant weather at this writing.

Mr. P. S. Hoye spent Sunday evening at T. C. Hinebaugh's.

Mason Browning spent last week with his sister at Accident.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Savage spent Sunday at Rufus Dewitt's.

Quite a number of our young people were out reminding us of Hallowe'en Saturday evening.

Miss Gladys Browning was visiting Miss Alice Hoye Sunday.

Miss Elinor Hinebaugh was visiting her cousin, Miss Helen Hoye, last week.

Miss Mary Browning and sister Maleta spent Saturday in Accident.

R. L. Hoye, wife and sister Helen were Oakland visitors Saturday last.

Alvin Englehart, of Accident, spent Saturday evening at N. Browning's.

Mrs. P. W. Grove and children are visiting here at this time.

J. F. Browning was home for the election. TWINS.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

A new roof has been put on the Romney cottage, which is still occupied by Mrs. Harmison and part of her family.

Mr. John Long and family are occupying the Shaffer cottage on K street.

Mrs A. R. Sperry returned today from a visit to Baltimore.

Mr. W. S. Lantz left yesterday for his new home in Morgantown where his family preceded him a few days.

Preaching in the M. E. church Sunday at 11 am. and 7.30 p. m.

STOYER.

I will send in a few happenings from our little village.

These beautiful days that we are having are certainly appreciated by all. Every one is preparing for the colder days to come.

Corn shucking is about finished by many of the farmers.

Miss Maggie Melvin, of Piedmont, was visiting her brother, Thos. Melvin, last Saturday.

Mrs. J. D. Harvey and niece, Miss Ruby Lantz, of Ryan's Glade, were visiting friends here one day last week.

Mrs. Rogers, who has been the guest of Thos Melvin and family for a few weeks, returned to her home at Midland last Sunday.

Mr. W. T. Stoyer made a business trip to Blaine one day last week.

Miss Bessie Stoyer, who has had an attack of typhoid, is improving.

Mr. Chas. Kidd was seen on our streets one evening last week. He visits our town quite frequently. We wonder what is the attraction.

Thos. K. Harvey was the guest of Jack Wilson Sunday last.

Mrs. Oscar Wolfe, of Blaine, was visiting her mother near here, last Saturday and Sunday.

Misses Grace Riley and Ida Harvey went to Oakland Saturday.

Miss Emma Harvey was visiting at W. T. Stoyer's last Sunday.

Mr. Ed. Tucker, of Cumberland, was a caller in our town last Thursday.

Messrs. L. A. Harvey, Frank Moon and John Kirby, of Kitzmiller, were in town last Sunday evening.

Miss Emma Stoyer has been very ill for the last two weeks.

Quite a number of our folks are attending the series of meetings at White Church.

All we hear these days in this section is politics. IOLA.

Mrs. List in Charge.

The Manley Hotel, of Fairmont, is now under the management of Mrs. L. B. C. List, of Wheeling. Mrs. List has managed the Loch Lynn Hotel at Mt. Lake Park the past several years, and is well known to Fairmont people. Mrs. List and her daughter will reside at the hotel, and have now taken up their abode there.

How to Iron a White Skirt.

To iron a white underskirt begin at the strings and waistband, then take the bottom of the skirt. Iron all round on the right side with a very hot iron, then iron the first frill. This frill will probably have sewed work or lace. In either case it must be nicely ironed on the wrong side. Probably above the frill there will be tucks or hems. They must next be ironed over the wrong side and afterward on the right. Rub the iron the way of the hem. If there is a second frill the cloth under the frill is ironed at the same time as the hem or tucks and the frill again ironed on the wrong side. Put skirt board into the skirt and place each end of the board on the table, thus allowing the skirt to hang over the board. It can thus be easily ironed and nicely finished. Afterward fold it lengthwise and hang up to air.

How to Preserve Your Sight.

A noted oculist advises against using the eyes immediately after waking. Therefore the habit of many young girls of reading or studying in bed is injurious. It is harmful to use the eyes when sleepy, as it is a great strain upon the muscles. If one must read or write when drowsy rise occasionally and bathe the eyes with hot or cold water. Remember that a quick change from a dark room to a brilliant light is a strain upon the eyes.

How to Clean Bottles.

To clean bottles fill them with scraps of newspaper torn into small bits, and put a little soapsuds in the water. Shake the bottle vigorously until the paper has been dissolved to a pulp, and then rinse the bottle thoroughly. You will be surprised how even the dirtiest bottle can be cleaned easily and thoroughly and made bright and shining.

Lesson VI.—Fourth Quarter, For Nov. 7, 1909.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Acts xxvii. 39, to xxviii. 10—Memory Verses, xxviii. 9, 10—Golden Text, Ps. xxxiv. 22—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

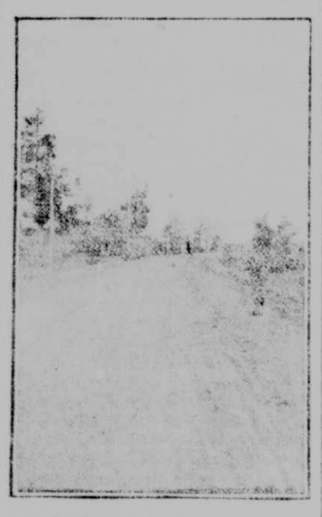
One night as they took soundings they found the depth of water growing less, and, fearing lest they should be cast upon the rocks, they cast four anchors out of the stern and longed for the morning. As the sailors were about to make off with the boat under pretense of casting anchors out of the foreship Paul said to the centurion and to the soldiers, "Except these abide in the ship ye cannot be saved" (31). Some may say, But had not Paul assured them that all would be saved? So we learn that, while God is not willing that any should perish and desires all to be saved, He, having provided a way, says that if men will not accept His way they must perish. When morning came they discovered a place with a beach where they might run the ship aground. And now death again threatens Paul, for the soldiers advised that the prisoners be killed lest they should escape. The centurion, for Paul's sake, prevented this, and so in one way or another all escaped safe to land, as Paul had told them while out in the storm at sea. "And so it came to pass" (44), and in that saying there is one of the finest of Bible studies, for it is true of every prediction concerning the sufferings of Christ and will certainly be true of every prediction concerning His kingdom and glory.

They found themselves on the island of Melita, or Malta, in a time of much rain, and cold rain, too, but the people of the island showed them great kindness and kindled a fire and welcomed them as well as they could. When I read of kindness I recall that David asked if there was any one left of the house of Saul that he might show "the kindness of God" unto him for Jonathan's sake (II Sam. ix. 1, 3, 7). There is ordinary kindness such as was shown by these Maltese, but believers are here to show the kindness of God. Paul did not fail to help make this fire burn and to keep it going, for he, too, gathered a bundle of sticks and laid it on the fire. A good prayer meeting ought to be a good place to warm one, but how often the leader is almost the only one to help make the fire burn, whereas if a dozen or more each threw on a stick or two what a good fire there might be! One might say, "I thank God for the forgiveness of my sins;" another might add, "I am glad that the Son of God loved me and gave Himself for me;" another, "I praise Him for making me a joint heir with Himself." I am sure that a few contributions like these would help to make a great blaze, and many would get warmed up, for it is very cold at some prayer meetings. That old serpent the devil or some of his generation of vipers would be sure to get warmed up, too, and fasten on some one and say something not very kind, which might lead some one to say, "Well, I'll never open my mouth in meeting again," but if they would just shake off the beast into the fire where he belongs they would feel no harm. Again, Paul is misjudged and numbered with transgressors, but soon they change their minds about him, and if we will simply pay no heed to false accusations and misrepresentations the Lord will take care of all and make true His assurance, "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper, and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn" (Isa. liv. 17). Some people look a great while to see some harm come to a child of God, but no real harm can come to such, and what looks like evil God will overrule for good (Rom. viii. 28, 29).

Paul was permitted by God to work a miracle of healing upon the father of the chief man of the island, who happened to live in those parts. He was suffering from fever and a bloody flux, but in the name of the Lord Jesus Paul laid his hands on him and healed him. This led to others bringing their sick ones, and many miracles of healing were wrought during those three months of unexpected blessing which had come to that island. We may be sure that Paul would seize every opportunity to tell of Him who graciously healed the people through His servant, and by him and his companions it would seem as if all on the island must have heard the glad tidings, not only of salvation through a crucified and risen Jesus Christ, but also of the kingdom which He will yet establish on the earth when there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying; neither shall there be anymore pain on the whole earth, and the inhabitants shall not say, I am sick (Rev. xxi. 4; Isa. xxxiii. 24). When the shipwrecked people landed on the island they were shown no little kindness, but when they departed after three months they were honored with many honors and laden with such things as they needed. This must have been real gratitude to God and to His son Jesus Christ and to those who had brought the good news to them. For about thirty years I have seen much of this gratitude from some thousands of people who have had presented to them in the simplest possible way the great truths of salvation and the kingdom, and in nineteen and one-half years I have seen that gratitude in the substantial form of over $450,000 for missions to spread the gospel. All glory to Him!

THE TOP SOIL ROAD.

Details of a Method Which Originated In Clark County, Ga.



MATERIAL IN FIELDS TAKEN.

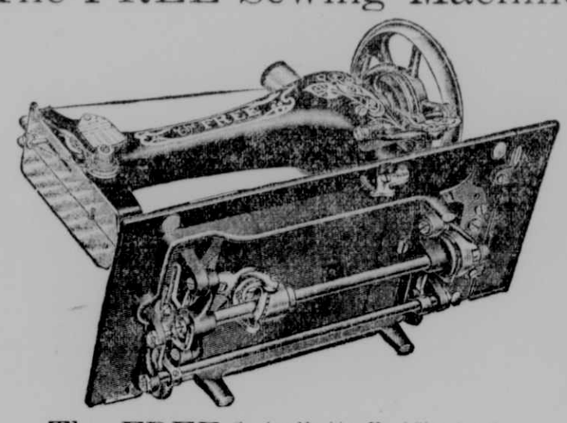
Soil Used Must Have Enough Sand o Gravel and Clay to Resist Action o Traffic and Weather—Cost From $250 to $300 Per Mile.

A new method of road construction which was recently evolved in Clark county, Ga., is called the top soil method, because it consists of building the road out of the surface soil from the adjacent fields. In some respects it is like the sand-clay method, while in others it is similar to the gravel road. So far as the writer is aware, Clark county, Ga., enjoys the distinction of having originated this method. The details were worked out by Professor C. M. Strahn of Georgia university and Clark county's commissioner of deeds.

The success of this method depends largely upon the soil used. Just any soil will not do. It must have enough sand or gravel in it to resist the action of the traffic and weather and enough clay to bind the particles together. It is well known that, although clay has a high cementing value, it will not make a good road if used alone on account of the fact that when it is wet it absorbs moisture and softens. It is also well known that round, water worn gravel or sand which is clean and free from clay will not produce a satisfactory road surface because neither will bind, but if clay, gravel and sand are mixed together in certain proportions they have been found to produce a surface which will be both hard and smooth the year round.

If these materials can be found already mixed the trouble and expense of mixing can be avoided. It is a common practice throughout the United States to use bank gravel for road surfacing which has a little clay in it, but Clark county is the first, I believe, to skin the top soil from the adjacent fields and use it for this purpose. It was observed in Clark county that where the top soil consisted of a mixture of sand, gravel and clay the sand and gravel had been drawn toward the surface and incorporated with the clay during cultivation.

TOP SOIL ROAD, ATHENS, GA.
[From Good Roads Magazine, New York.]



The road is located and graded in the same manner as for gravel or macadam. The foundation is then shaped with a road machine and slightly crowned in the center, after which a layer of suitable top soil is spread to a width of about sixteen feet and a depth of about ten inches in the center and three or four inches at the sides. The next step is to open up the side ditches with a road machine. The earth from the ditches is thrown up against the bed of top soil as a shoulder.

The road machine is then used to level off the surface and to give it the proper slope from the center to the side ditches. The road is now thrown open to traffic and soon packs down into a hard, dry surface. If rainy weather occurs during the spreading of the material or soon after, so much the better. Wet weather and heavy traffic assist in the mixing and puddling process. After this process has continued until the surface soil is thoroughly mixed the road is dressed and reshaped with a light two horse grader. This treatment is continued until the surface is well hardened and all soft or uneven spots are removed.

To get the best top soil along any particular road hand samples are taken and examined before the work is begun. Samples of uniform size are selected and the percentage of gravel, sand and clay ascertained by washing out the clay and sifting out the sand. The sample which appears to have about the right proportion of sand, gravel and clay is selected. From 10 to 25 per cent of clay appears to be sufficient for binding material.

Aside from the grading, these top soil roads cost from $250 to $300 per mile. The road shown in the photograph was so bad the winter before it was improved that the traffic was forced into the adjacent woods and cotton fields to avoid the deep ruts and mudholes. Although the road had just passed through a hard winter and had been subjected to much heavy hauling, the photograph shows that now it is not only free from ruts and mudholes, but that it is hard and smooth.—Maurice O. Eldridge in Good Roads Magazine.

The FREE Sewing Machine

The FREE Sewing Machine Head Showing the Ball-Bearing Rotascillo Movement.

TO THE PUBLIC:—

Sewing machines, like watches, can be bought at almost any price, and while you can buy machines at very low prices, we desire to say that we have sold machines for years as low as $10.00, $15.00 and $18.00, thus meeting the demand for cheap machines and foreign competition. The public is becoming better educated as to the fact that machines, like everything else, are only bought and sold according to their value, and many who buy cheap machines are inclined to exchange them for a high grade machine.

In taking the agency for the FREE machine we were led to do so on account of its many and valuable features, unlike any other machine, and for the high quality of its construction and quality of material used. While the price is the same as all high-grade machines, by contracting for a quantity, selling direct to the consumer without any expense, especially for cash, we are able to offer this high-grade machine for $35.00. We sold two lately to dressmakers, who claim they excel any machine they ever used. We also had an expert machinist to examine, try and test the machine in every way possible. He was unlimited in his report as to its high standing of mechanical construction and material used, its light running, the great variety of work and the satisfactory way all the attachments furnished could be used. It has unlimited guarantee for life time. What more can you ask? We invite one and all to examine the FREE machine now on exhibition at our store.

MARYLAND-WEST VIRGINIA BOUNDARY LINE DISPUTE

Maryland's Claim Presented in Interesting Manner by Mr. Sincell.

A special telegram to the Baltimore American dated at Washington, D. C., November 3rd, gives an account of the argument in the boundary line case between the States of Maryland and West Virginia before the United States Supreme Court, as follows:

The question of the boundary line between Maryland and West Virginia that has been in dispute almost since the colony of Maryland was founded by Lord Baltimore, and that was in the Supreme Court nearly three-quarters of a century ago, came up again today in the Supreme Court of the United States. The state of West Virginia was represented by Mr. George E. Price, of Charleston, who explained to the court that Attorney General Conley, of West Virginia, was detained by reason of the suit between West Virginia and Virginia over the settlement of the debt question. Maryland was represented by Attorney General Straus, Edward H. Sincell and W. L. Rawls, of Baltimore, who was admitted to practice before the Supreme Court today.

On huge stands hung maps of Maryland and West Virginia, showing the territory in dispute, the location of the historic Fairfax stone, which has now disappeared; the Potomac stone, which marks the point Maryland claims is the starting point of the boundary line; the grants of land in the disputed territory that were issued to Virginia and Maryland; the Michler line run by Lieutenant Michler under the commission of 1851, the alleged Deakins line of 1789 and a number of other points that are of importance in the issue.

This morning Mr. Sincell addressed the court on behalf of Maryland. For years Mr. Sincell has devoted his time to the study of the historical data involved. He addressed himself principally to the history of the case. His [illegible]s was not only historically accurate, but he succeeded in presenting his case in a way so interesting and so unlike the usual statement of historic facts that he aroused the attention of the entire court. Chief Justice Fuller and Justices Holmes, Harlan and White interrupted him frequently by questions, each of which served in turn to give Mr. Sincell fresh opportunity to acquaint the court thoroughly with the history of the events that lead to the placing of the Fairfax stone, and the subsequent course of events that made clear how Maryland from the earliest days of the first lord proprietor down to the action of the Maryland legislature in 1890, the act under which the present case is being tried, had protested against the boundary line that is now being claimed by West Virginia.

Mr. Price addressed the court for nearly three hours this afternoon. He presented the ancient claims that have been rehearsed again and again in these dispatches, insisting that the Fairfax stone marked the true boundary line, and that Maryland had acquiesced in that fact when in the Constitution of 1852 the Fairfax stone was referred to as the point from which the boundary line between Maryland and Virginia started. He dealt at length upon the value of the Deakins line, the line run by Francis Deakins under an act of the Maryland legislature in 1781, when it was decided to divide the free lands of Maryland west of Fort Cumberland among the soldiers of the Revolution.

Mr. Price dwelt with such emphasis on the importance of the Deakins line that Mr. Straus was enabled to score a signal victory. He asked Mr. Price if he would state which of the many surveys that have been made would be claimed by West Virginia as the real line. Mr. Straus' question was immediately endorsed by several members of the court, Chief Justice Fuller and Justice White both asking Mr. Price repeatedly to point out on the map the line which he would claim as the boundary.

Mr. Price finally stated that the Deakins line was essentially the line which West Virginia would claim to be the true boundary line. This was a victory for Mr. Straus, because he will show in his argument tomorrow that Deakins never actually ran the line, and that, therefore, there is no Deakins line. Mr. Price sought to explain to the court that the Deakins line must be accepted with modifications, and then sought further to strengthen his case by claiming that Maryland had, in effect, acquiesced in the Deakins line both by granting land patents under that line and by the Constitution of 1852, when the Fairfax stone was named as the starting point of the boundary line between the two states. Here Justice Holmes suggested that the doctrine of laches, while holding between individuals, might perhaps under conditions not be applied to states.

The Baltimore Sun on Thursday contained the following dispatch from Washington:

The Supreme Court of the United States today paid an unusual compliment to Attorney-General Straus, of Maryland, during his argument of the boundary case between Maryland and West Virginia, by sitting for nearly 20 minutes beyond the usual time and directing Mr. Straus to continue his argument.

It was while Maryland's chief law officer was at the very height of an argument which had elicited the interest of the jurists that Chief Justice Fuller decided that court continue to listen to the Attorney-General rather than take its usual recess at 2 o'clock for luncheon.

The marshal of the court, when the hands reach the hour of 2 o'clock, brings the session to a temporary halt, while the long-robed justices of the tribunal pass in procession from the bench and across the corridor into their reception rooms. Plush ropes are hung across the corridor and no one may pass from the Senate to the House end of the Capitol until the members of the court have crossed the corridors.

Attaches recall a time when Mr. Cleveland was arguing an important case when 2 o'clock arrived and he had not finished. He could have finished within 10 minutes and said: "I shall keep your Honors only a few more minutes."

"The court takes its recess at the hour of 2 o'clock," was the response that Mr. Cleveland received.

The argument today was the first appearance of Mr. Straus in a lengthy argument before the court. He has appeared there often before with motions and shorter arguments, but this was the first big argument that he had made, and he was in excellent trim, presenting Maryland's case with a mastery of all its details and with great force. At the conclusion of his argument there were audible comments of approval from members of the court. "A fine argument," exclaimed Justice Harlan quite audibly, and the lawyers who had assembled in the courtroom to hear the case congratulated Mr. Straus at the end of his argument.

The case is one of the most important that has been argued before the court for some time. The record is voluminous, consisting of 2,000 closely printed pages, and embraces rare historical documents connected with phases of the controversy from the time of Charles I and the first Lord Baltimore down to the present. The argument was opened for Maryland on Tuesday with an hour's argument from Mr. Edward H. Sincell. Mr. George E. Price, one of the leaders of the bar of West Virginia, occupied most of the day yesterday, and Attorney-General Straus' argument, which began at noon and closed at 2:18, closed the case for Maryland. The court has taken the case under consideration, and its decision will be awaited with interest.

Attorney-General Straus began his argument today with a detailed consideration of the grants in the charter of King Charles I to the first Lord Baltimore. The main point of inquiry in the case is as to the exact location of the first fountain of the Potomac river. Mr. Straus argued that according to the construction of the Charter, the first fountain of the Potomac river was itself a point within the boundary of Maryland, and was the common terminus of both the western and southern boundaries of the State. He cited authorities, both legal and historical, to sustain this view. He proceeded to show that if such was the true construction of the Charter of Lord Baltimore, it negatived the claim of West Virginia that the spring where the Fairfax stone is located is the first fountain of the river. West Virginia claims that Fairfax stone marks the first fountain of the river, and at the same time that the boundaries of Maryland do not even extend that far. This position the Attorney-General vigorously combatted showing that it was in conflict with the "calls" for the boundaries of the State. Mr. Straus contended that the first fountain of the river is at the Potomac Spring, about a mile and a half west of Fairfax Spring.

A strong feature of his argument was his construction of the effect of the proceedings between the commissioners of Lord Fairfax in England and the commissioners representing the colony of Virginia in 1745, whereby the spring at the Fairfax stone was fixed as the fountain, or source, of the Potomac, Mr. Straus contending for Maryland that those proceeding did not bind Lord Baltimore, and West Virginia having contended that they did bind him and Maryland as his successor in title. Another important feature of Mr. Straus' argument was his construction in court of the charter granted by Charles I in 1632 to the first Lord Baltimore.

The Attorney General then addressed himself to the most difficult part of the case, from the standpoint of Maryland's claim, wherein West Virginia set up the old Deakins line as marking a boundary up to which Virginia and West Virginia, as her successor, have been in possession for more than 100 years. Mr. Straus contended that the Deakins line had no real existence, that it never was actually run by Francis Deakins, its reputed surveyor, and that the case furnished no evidence which could afford a basis upon which the court could adopt the Deakins line as a boundary between the two States. He argued that the act of the General Assembly of Maryland of 1787, under which Deakins laid out the military lots for the soldiers of Maryland in the Revolutionary War, did not authorize Deakins to establish a boundary for the State, and that on the contrary it merely directed him to lay out such lots as he deemed fit and capable of being settled and occupied by the soldiers at that time.

Mr. Straus showed that so far from the Deakins line being run as a boundary line, Deakins had laid it down on his map as running east of a number of patents and grants which Maryland had made just a few years before and which she perfected about the time that the lines of the military lots were laid down.

The Attorney-General showed that Maryland had been actually in possession since 1859 and shortly thereafter up to the line run by Lieutenant Michler in that year, and that there was no question of the right of the State to that line as its western boundary. But both Maryland and West Virginia in this case declared that the Michler line was not the proper boundary, Maryland claiming to run to the meridian extending due north from the Potomac Spring, about 1½ miles west of the Fairfax Spring and the Michler line, and West Virginia claiming to go east of the Michler line to the alleged Deakins line.

Having shown that Maryland was in possession up to the Michler line, the Attorney-General contended that as both parties declared that the Michler line was not a true boundary and neither was committed by acquiescence to any particular boundary, and as both had treated the dispute as a pending, open and unsettled controversy, the whole question upon its merits was open to the court and that West Virginia could not prejudice Maryland's rights by a claim of adverse possession or prescription.

INDIAN SUMMER DAYS ARE HERE

Squaw Winter Has Gone and the Charm of the Year Is Now.

In this section of the land people are wont to speak of the first real delightful weather in October as Indian summer, but they are wrong. These are the days of the real Indian summer, although today may be bleak, chilly and cloudy, but now is the proper time for the dawning of this aftermath of golden autumnal days. According to old traditions, Indian summer never sets in until after "squaw winter," and this we had, with its cold winds and suggestions of snow, while a large majority of the trees yet hung heavy with foliage. The frosts came unusually late this fall and pansies, dahlias, heliotrope and other garden flowers were still in bloom long after the middays of October.

But what is Indian summer, this soft interval of balmy weather, which succeeds the first bitter encroachments of winter? While that would be difficult to answer, meteorologically, it is easy to affirm that it is the mellowest, quietest, most divine season of the whole year, and sometimes in this latitude runs far into December.

The characteristics of the season, when it appears in all its glory, are a mild and genial temperature, gentle southwestern breezes, unusual brightness of the sun, extreme brilliancy of the moon, a clear, blue sky, sometimes half hidden by a veil of gray haze, daybreaks redder than a splotch on the blackbird's wing and sunsets laden with golden fleeces, the wooded valleys aglow with the fires of richly tinted leaves still clinging to the listless limbs or laying softly where they have fallen, a holy stillness throughout all nature's walks and an intuition sense in every devout soul of the Father's goodness to his ungrateful children. These are the days of which Bryant sung:

When the sound of dropping nuts is heard,
Though all the leaves are still,
And twinkle in the smoky light
The waters of the rill.

Indian summer is the breathing spell of the year. The forces of nature that have brought to maturity the promises of spring seem to be lying in calm restfulness after their labors. There is an unwonted dreaminess, a languor of spirit in keeping with the soft haziness of the atmosphere that lies upon the landscape. It is a time for reflection and thoughtfulness. What man can sit down in this calm season, among the sights and sounds of the outdoors, and not experience a feeling of gratitude that he is in existence? It fills the mind with poetry, a glance off towards the bluffs, indistinct in the cerulean haze, the wide prairies a sea of molten gold; fleece specked skies, soothing winds, they all breathe a finer theology than emanates from crypt or pulpit.

For all its balmy air, its bright skies, its softened landscape, the Indian summer is not a period of exhilaration. It arouses none of the feelings of bouyancy that characterize the month of May and early June. Then all nature is full of promise. Bud and blossom and leaf, the purling of brooks and the song of the birds, all join in a sursum corda, to which the heart cheerfully responds. But Indian summer has a rather depressing influence upon the mind. It is suggestive of sombre reflections as we walk among the fallen leaves and the dry grasses and feel that the end of the year is near at hand. The flight of time is a common theme of the preacher and the novelist and the recurrence of stated periods are always impressive. The anniversary that the youth hails with pleasure, to the elderly person becomes a sad reminder of departed years and the chilly monitor of the approaching end—

When the groves
In fleeting colors wrote their own decay,
And leaves fell eddying on the sharpened blast
That sang their dirge; when o'er their rustling bed
The red deer sprang, or fed the shrill-voiced quail,
Heavy of wing and fearful; when, with heart
Foreboding or depress'd, the white man mark'd
The signs of coming winter, then began
The Indian's joyous season. Then the haze,
Soft and illusive as a fairy dream,
Lapp'd all the landscape in its silvery fold.

MYSTERIOUS FIRE WITH ALMOST FATAL RESULTS

Home Near Jennings Destroyed. Mother and Son Frightfully Injured.

News reached Oakland yesterday of a fire at Jennings, this county, Sunday night, with horrible consequences and the probable death of at least one of the persons who were caught in the building by the flames.

Mr. Daniel Yommer, a prosperous farmer at Jennings and the recent candidate for County Commissioner on the Democratic ticket, was robbed of his home by fire and came within an ace of losing his wife and son by the same agency. Indeed, it is yet a question whether or not his son will recover.

The fire which burned the home of Mr. Yommer was discovered between the hours of ten and eleven o'clock by Clarence Beachy, an employe of Mr. Yommer, who was awakened by the crackling of the flames at the corner of the building just below his bedroom window. At the time the fire had gained much headway and it was as much as Mr. Beachy could do to don his clothing and alarm Mr. Yommer and his family before the building collapsed. With the collapse of the structure Mrs. Yommer and her son received their terrible burns, they being caught under the falling timbers. While Mrs. Yommer's injuries are exceedingly painful, she being burned about the face and hands, those of her son are even more terrible, his injuries being all over his body, and it is reported that his eyesight is entirely destroyed. His sufferings, as reported to THE REPUBLICAN by telephone last night, are horrible, and his prospects of recovery are meagre.

Mr. Yommer's escape from the house without being burned is somewhat miraculous, the report being that his burns are few and slight.

The house with all its contents, including clothing, furniture and a goodly supply of winter provisions, was entirely destroyed, entailing a loss of a considerable sum with no insurance.

Fake Insurance Schemes.

Mr. Frank B. Crouse, Commissioner of Insurance, is preparing a report to be submitted to Governor Crothers and it is expected in the wake of the report will follow a bill to be presented to the next legislature. This bill, which Mr. Crouse admits is being given consideration by the Commission appointed by Governor Crothers, will deal with the "fake" insurance schemes said to be numerous in this state.

These schemes are disguised as fraternal organizations, according to Mr. Crouse, and they are a menace to the legitimate concern. In his report this matter will be dealt with in detail, and it is expected that the Commission will draft a bill that will have the effect of preventing these schemes from further operation.

THE WOOING OF A MAN FROM TEXAS.

Wiles of Cupid Supplemented by a New York Policeman.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

It was only a cheap downtown restaurant that reeked with the odors of cabbage and onions and boiled dinners, and the cashier's desk itself was an affair of a secondhand auction house, but the girl behind it had the air of a duchess extending her hand to be kissed. When the red faced proprietor scolded her she listened indifferently or with the slightest upcurl of her lip, and when he tried to be jocose or to make love her manner was just the same. Many times he had threatened to discharge her or to marry her offhand, but before her superbly indifferent eyes the words had died in his throat, and he had apologized and scowled and grumbled in the same breath. She was good at figures, was absolutely trustworthy, was a draw to trade, and these attributes were valuable to a man who could neither read nor combine figures himself. Besides, his hold upon her father was sufficient to make her marry him whenever he wished. So, whatever his determination in secret, in her presence he quailed and waited.

In the cashier's desk was a book on etiquette which bore the marks of much study, and with it were several novels of the old school type, where the heroines were proudly indifferent or sentimentally silly. These books had molded the aesthetic side of Big Kate's life, as had her determined attendance at night schools.

Suitors Big Kate had had in plenty, though her home life was in a cellar, with the perpetual steam of her mother's washtubs and the smoke of her father's pipe stifling the atmosphere and with the scolding of the one and the utter shiftlessness of the other stirring her to early and abnormal activity. Big Kate's beauty was of an unusual and stately type for such environment, and her very indifference made her seem more desirable. To not one of the suitors had she shown kindness, however, and least of all to Red Pete, the restaurant owner, to whom it was an open secret that her father had promised her in return for unlimited and perpetual whisky. The girl herself was aware of the promise and that two years of it had been paid when she entered upon her duties at the restaurant.

As customers came in her eyes gave them a single glance, and if by rare chance one of them was of the world described in the novels her eyes followed him down the restaurant to one of the oilcloth covered tables and watched him more or less attentively through the meal. In her secret heart—her aesthetic heart—she had determined to marry a hero if she ever married at all—not a back alley fighting hero, but one of the novel class—a man who had never smelled soapsuds and boiling cabbage in all his life and who had been able to ride in carriages without thought of expense. A few such men had come into the restaurant in the two years, but the ones she approved of had scarcely noticed her, while those who paused at the desk with bold admiration had been sent on their way by a single inquiring glance of her cold eyes.

Then one day a man came in who challenged her attention at the very door, he was so big and strong and friendly looking. But his trousers were thrown negligently into long, unblacked boots, and he wore a wide brimmed hat, which flapped as he walked, and there was a huge belt about his waist and a bright handkerchief knotted carelessly about his throat. As her eyes took in these damaging facts they returned to the book of etiquette which lay open among her businesslike pile of coins.

But a moment later their corners saw something that made them lift again and look straight down the restaurant. Two young girls were seated at one of the tables, and a flashily dressed youth had taken a chair and pushed it directly between them, to their evident annoyance. The newcomer's comprehensive glance seemed to take in everything in the room, and this situation among the rest. As he passed the girls one hand removed the broad brimmed hat, while the other dropped upon the youth's shoulder and lifted him with a strong, easy motion high into the air. In that position the youth was carried two tables down and dropped into another chair with the remark, plainly audible through the room: "There, sonny; that's the cheer ye'd ought to 'a' took. Now, don't git flustered an' cry, but eat your mush an' molasses like a nice little boy should an' then run out an' play. I'll take this next cheer, an' we'll be a little fambly sosherble, you an' me."

Involuntarily Big Kate smiled her warm approval of the act, and the stranger, whose glance was again roving about the room, caught the smile direct. Instantly he rose to his feet and came straight to her, his face full of responsive interest.

"Thank ye for that smile, miss," he said frankly. "It's the first real friendly look I've had since I left Texas. This city seems to be mostly on a stampede, with nobody to round up. Don't it seem that way to ye?"

"I don't know," she answered vaguely. "I've never thought about it that way. But, then, you see, I've never been out of the city in my life."

"Never been out the city!" in amazement. "Good Lord! An' I've never been in one like this before. Say, what do folks do here for amusement—grass fed country folks, I mean? Ye see, I only come in last night with a bunch of cattle, an' I've got to stay here a whole week to end up the sale. What'll I do evenin's an' off times?"

"Why, there is the bridge," doubtfully, "and trolley rides. Strangers do them, I believe. Then there are the theaters."

"That's so," with jubilant relief in his voice. "I've heared 'bout the New York theayters. Of course I must see them. But I'm feared I'll be like the bull in the china shop that I've read of if I try to do the thing alone. I don't s'pose ye'd be—be willin' to sort of start me this first evenin'? Ye see, I've never been in a theayter in all my life. Of course, I know it ain't the real proper way"—hurriedly. "There should be introducin's an' time to git acquainted an' all that, but I don't know a single man in all New York. Down to Texas we don't stand much on ceremony like ye do in a city, but I could put up a stake or—or a margin with a policeman or somebody to show I mean square an' am well heeled. Will ye go?"

Big Kate considered. At first her eyes had returned to her book of etiquette, then after a little had gone up to the frank, boyish face looking down at her. It was an open, manly face, with straight, honest eyes.

"Yes, I will be glad to go," she answered. "You may call for me a little before 8 at"—she was about to say the restaurant, but substituted instead, with a direct look at him—"the cellar below the Chinese laundry on the corner. My people live in a cellar."

The next morning the Texan came into the restaurant for his breakfast and stopped at the cashier's desk longer than was necessary on his way out and the same at dinner and at supper. At supper he remained long enough at the desk to obtain Big Kate's consent to go with him again to the theater.

The third evening when he stopped at the desk with his supper check Red Pete appeared.

"Look-a-here, Mr. Cowboy," he blustered, "we don't want any more o this. I'm willin' for the men to talk with Big Kate, for it draws trade, but it mustn't go too fur. I don't want any more theater goin'. She's my promised wife."

The Texan flashed a quick look at the cashier. She smiled calmly.

"It's the old man's promise, Red Pete," she said serenely, "not mine. Yes," to the Texan, "I'll go with you. I thought the cellar would make some difference. I'm glad it don't."

Red Pete broke into a torrent of oaths, stamping his feet.

"If he does go with ye, it'll be clubs for him. I've got good friends on the street."

When he went out the Texan saw a policeman a few doors away. Obeying a sudden impulse, he went to him. This was unfamiliar ground, and it might be well to play the game shrewdly.

"Hello, pardner!" he began affably. "Reckon you've got a toler'ble broken range on this street. Plenty o' stampedin' an' buckin', ain't they?"

"It's a little rough, if that's what you mean," replied the officer doubtfully.

"I s'posed so from the way things boil. Well, if ye ever want quiet come down to Texas, an' if ye ever come near the XXX ranch ask for Many Horse Charlie—that's me. I'll put the world up to ye right. Money's easy down there. Here, drop this into your pocket," transferring a note that made the officer's eyes glisten. "I don't reckon the city pays more 'n half what ye earn, an' it's a duty for the people to make up the rest. Well, so long."

The officer's eyes followed him gratefully.

"That's a gentleman," he soliloquized as he carefully folded the note and put it away into a place of safety. "If he ever needs a friend I hope I may be near."

The next day was a busy one, for the Texan was closing out his herd and the deal would take him until late in the evening, but he made time for a few minutes' run into the restaurant.

"I won't be able to git round for the theayter tonight, Katie," he said as he leaned over the desk, "but it won't matter so much now, after what we talked over last night. It seems a good deal o' hurry, don't it? But the herd 'll be closed out today, an' I must be gittin' back to the ranch. There's a thousand horses needin' my 'tention right now. The wust is hurryin' you so. But after what ye said 'bout—'bout the home folks I thought mebbe ye wouldn't mind much. Ye'll find it nice down there—house an' fixin's an' all—an' I'll try to make it up to ye for havin' to take all on—on trust."

Big Kate lifted her eyes toward him. The etiquette book and the novels were on the desk, covered with a lot of papers. She had not looked at them for two days. There was a new expression on her face.

"I'm not taking a thing on trust, Charlie—not a single thing," she declared. "It's all in your face plain and in your eyes. I know every word you've said is perfectly true. It seems strange though. I've often thought about marrying, but the man never looked the least bit like you, and now," a soft flush stealing over her face, "it don't seem as if I could want to marry a man who looked any different, boots or hat or—or anything."

"Thank ye, Katie. An' now there's another thing," lowering his voice. "Your folks ain't done what they ought by ye, but they're your folks just the same. Now, I want ye to take this," slipping a roll of money into her hand, "an' spend it on 'em in any way ye think best. No," at the look in her face, "ye mustn't feel put out or—or mortified. 'Tain't nothin' to what ye're doin' for me—takin' everything on trust. An', besides, ye'll be my wife tomorrow, when it'll be all right for ye to take anything. Why not a few hours sooner, when ye can lay it out on 'em yourself an' see it's done like ye want? There, that's right," as she slipped the money into her dress with heightened color, but trustful eyes. "Now I'd better be goin'. Red Pete's tearin' this way fit to kill, an' I don't want to start a row today. Remember, tomorrow at noon. I'll have a license, an' we'll find a preacher somewhere. Goodby."

"NOW, YOU TWO SCUD UP THAT SIDE STREET."

He bent over suddenly and pressed a kiss upon her forehead. As he did so there came a wild bellow of rage from Red Pete. The Texan dodged through the door, laughing, followed by a choking: "Don't ye ever come in here ag'in! Don't ye ever dare!"

The following noon Red Pete was waiting for him. He had been waiting all day. As the Texan appeared he sprang forward savagely.

"Get out o' here!" he yelled. "If ye don't I'll have ye 'rested. I'll set the whole street on ye. They're all my friends."

"Come, Katie," said the Texan quietly.

As she stepped from behind the desk Red Pete rushed to the door.

"Police! Police!" he shouted.

A policeman was standing on the corner, and he responded quickly. He took in the situation at a glance.

"I want ye to 'rest this man," stormed Pete, "this cowpuncher. He's tryin' to run off with my cashier. I s'pect he's been stealin'—I s'pect both of 'em have. I want him 'rested."

"All right," assented the policeman. "That's a pretty serious charge. I guess you'd better come with me, my man," dropping his hand heavily upon the Texan's shoulder.

"That's the way," approved Red Pete. "Don't ye let him git off now, officer. Big Kate, ye git behind your desk, an' don't let me see ye speakin' to another man in a month."

"Hold on!" interposed the officer. "The girl will have to come with me too. You included her in the charge."

"But I didn't mean"—

"Too late for that now. I will have to arrest both. If the girl's innocent she will get off."

"Well," doubtfully, "if ye say so. But, remember, I'll go bail. Send her back soon's ye can. I'd go along if I could leave the business, but I can't."

"Of course not," agreed the policeman. "I'll attend to it all right. Now come along, you two."

He grasped the prisoners roughly. Big Kate looked frightened. The Texan after one look into the officer's face went along quietly.

At the corner the policeman stopped.

"Now, you two scud up that side street," he ordered. "A parson lives the second door from the next corner. Get it over soon's you can and then jump on a trolley and be off. Red Pete's got friends on this street, and they're a hard crowd. He could make you trouble. Hurry now, and good luck to you!"

FOR THE CHILDREN

The Game of Travels.

The company takes its place in a circle, and one is chosen as a leader. He or she then opens the game by rolling a handkerchief into a ball and throwing it at one of the players, saying while doing so:

"Will you go with me?"

The one receiving the ball catches it and answers, "Where?" The leader answers, "To Altoona," or uses the name of any other place beginning with "A." The one holding the ball then throws it at some one else, and the same formula is repeated.

The name of the place must be given very promptly. If a player receiving the handkerchief fails to respond at once the one seated at his or her right hand takes the ball from him or her and throws it at the leader. The failing player must then leave the ring, taking a seat elsewhere in the room.

The leader then throws the ball at some other player, and so the game continues. When a majority of the players have been forced to leave the ring by reason of failing to give a name beginning with "A," the letter "B" is taken and the game goes on.

Boomerang Kinks.

There are a good many "kinks" to be learned to throw the boomerang skillfully. One is always to throw against the wind if you want it to come back to you. It is a miniature aeroplane, for it literally sails against the wind and is borne upward and onward by the breeze. If the player wants to make a long distance straightaway record he can throw with the wind, but he must take care to select a boomerang which is heavy, so heavy that it will not be too much affected by the air currents. By pointing the boomerang at a certain angle he can make it soar aloft in circles like a hawk until it may be as high as 100 feet above the earth. As in golf playing, it is not so much mere strength that makes a long thrower, but the skill in aiming, the direction and, in boomerang throwing, the way in which advantage may be taken of the air currents.—St. Nicholas.

Animals With Pockets.

Did you ever think what a curious thing it is that some animals have pockets—great, roomy, fur lined vest pockets big enough to carry a family of little ones about in? Many of the animals native to Australia and Tasmania have these convenient pockets, and so has the opossum, a common animal in our southern states. The kangaroo is the largest of this species. Full grown kangaroos go sixteen feet at a jump, and so when going on a long journey or running from hunters think what a comfort it must be to Mother Kangaroo to know that her babies are snug and safe in her pocket, and if they have a taste for scenery they can peep out of the top at the passing landscape.—Century Path.

Riddlemerse.

Why is a man looking for a philosopher's stone like Neptune? Because he is sea-king what never was.

On which side of a donkey would you look for the most hair? On the outside.

Why do not trees open their trunks in the spring when they change their dress? Because they leave their summer clothing out.

Why is a bootblack like an editor? Because he polishes the understanding of his patrons.

Human Burden Race.

This is a most amusing variation of the old fashioned potato race. The players are divided into two equal squads and stand facing each other on parallel lines about thirty feet apart. A player from each squad goes to the opposite line and, at the signal "Go," runs across the space, picks up a member of her team, carries her back to the line and then returns for another girl. The player first carrying all of her squad across the space wins the game.

Game of Jingling.

This is an old game and used to be played on village greens in England. A piece of ground is roped off, and the players are put in it blindfolded, the jingler, who has a small bell fastened to his arm, being the only one who can see. The other players then try to catch him, guessing by the sound of the bell where he is. The one who catches him becomes jingler.

A Good Trick.

Place a cork on top of a bottle or a table. Stand in front of it, fix your eyes on the cork, walk slowly backward ten or twelve feet, extend your right hand, close one eye and walk forward till you think you are near enough to knock the cork off with one blow of your finger.

The Doggies' Drive.

Three little doggies went out to drive
In the funniest coach that you ever saw,
And the funniest coachman now alive
Held the reins in his clumsy paw.
Bumpity bump down the hill so steep,
For Towser, the coachman, was fast asleep.

Three little doggies cried, "Stop—oh, stop!"
As the houses and trees went flying by.
But the sleeping coachman upon the top
Never opened his drowsy eye.
Clankity clank o'er the rocky road
Went Towser, the coachman, and his load

Three little doggies in wild affright
Cried to the horses, "Whoa, there—whoa!"
But Towser was snoring with all his might,
So clumpity clump did the horses go.
Rockity rock over road and rill,
And if they've not stopped they are going still.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city of several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements. These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

Peach Orchard Land for Sale.

I offer for sale two farms in Hampshire county, W. Va., both in the peach belt and would make fine peach orchards.

The first contains 232 acres, forty acres cleared and the remainder in timber. About 50,000 feet of saw timber; 10,000 props and a lot of locust posts. Situated 1½ miles northwest of Springfield, on the Romney Branch of the B. & O. R. R. An orchard of sixty bearing apple trees and some peach trees on the place. About thirty acres of bottom and five acres of this in meac Improved by dweeling house, well, etc

I have been advised by good authority that this farm would make a splendid peach orchard. Convenient to churches, schools, stores, etc. Price $1,500, on easy terms.

The second farm contains about 150 acres, partly cleared and part in timber and has on it a dwelling house and some other improvements. About six acres of run bottom now in meadow. Situated about one mile west of Springfield, W. Va., on the Romney Branch of the B. & O. R. R. Convenient to churches, schools, stores, etc. Price $1,200, on easy terms. KODAK SAFETY FILM

[This matter must not be reprinted without special permission.]

A CONVINCING DEMONSTRATION

A reader of these notes living at Leraysville, Pa., sends us a clipping giving a brief summary of the potato spraying experiments which have been conducted by the experiment station at Burlington, Vt., during the past eighteen years. The showing is such an excellent one that potato raisers will be glad to hear about it. Thorough spraying with the bordeaux mixture, blue vitriol, lime and water made up in the 5-5-50 recipe twice yielded 67 per cent more and spraying three times yielded 141 per cent more than the unsprayed. During the eighteen years that the station has used the bordeaux mixture there has been an average increase of 92 per cent, or 112 bushels, per acre. The lowest increase in yield was 26 per cent and the highest 215 per cent in seasons when there was much dampness. The varieties experimented with were the White Star, Polaris, Green Mountain and Delaware, and these when unsprayed yielded from 54 to 267 bushels per acre under least and most favorable conditions, while sprayed the returns varied from 133 bushels to 389 bushels per acre. These figures should be scanned twice by the fellow who pretends to raise potatoes on a commercial scale, and even for the home garden the precaution is well worth while.

A SURE HOG CHOLERA CURE.

Experiments which have been conducted by experts in animal disease at the Kansas City stockyards with a view to giving the new serum cure for hog cholera a still further test seem to prove beyond doubt that it is both effective and reliable. At the beginning of the test, which extended for thirty days, thirty-five hogs were placed in an isolated pen, twenty-two of which were inoculated with serum, four with virulent cholera blood and the nine remaining given no treatment at all. During the period all the hogs which were not vaccinated with the serum died, while the twenty-two that had been inoculated did not contract the disease at all, but were alive and healthy at the close. In order to give the new cure the severest test the treated hogs were subjected to the most aggravated type of exposure, hogs that had died of the disease being left in the pens for periods of two or three days. Dr. L. R. Baker, chief of the government inspection department at Kansas City, had the work in charge and in conjunction with his assistants will shortly make a full report of the experiments to the department of agriculture, which will in turn give the matter still further publicity.

SOMETHING TO WORK FOR.

A scad of young fellows don't fare any better than they do in a financial way because they spend every cent they earn just as fast as it comes into their hands. The outcome of this is that, saving nothing, they have nothing ahead toward which to strive and naturally feel unprepared to tackle any business proposition requiring capital or to make definite plans to have a home of their own, both of which influences would tend to have a steadying and uplifting influence on their lives. The average young fellow, plugging along alone without any well defined object in life, often has spells when he questions whether the mere feeding and clothing of himself is really worth while, and in too many cases his doubt would seem to be justifiable. It is only when he gets to working for something or somebody outside of himself that life has zest and meaning. A savings fund laid aside for some definite purpose, perhaps the starting of a home or the helping of some friend or relative in need, is a boon which thousands of young fellows ought to avail themselves of. The start may be hard, but the rest is easy. The second hundred dollars is often easier saved than the first ten.

THE NEED OF SHADE.

During the hot weather of July and August this year there appeared in some of the central western states accounts of cattle in pasture being killed by the intense heat. In most cases where such losses were reported there was no shelter for the stock from the glaring rays of the sun. In one instance all of a herd of twenty-three died, while in another some fifteen perished, the animals when found being piled up one upon another in an effort to reach a mere patch of shade hardly sufficient for a single animal. Losses of this type would seem to suggest the wisdom of providing shade of some kind in the pasture lot so that on especially hot days the stock may find refreshing shelter there. Where a grove is not available shelters of some kind should be erected, which may be left open on two or three sides so as to permit of a good circulation of air. This item is too late to help out any this year, but it may serve as a reminder for next.

The hazelnuts which the children gathered this fall will taste mighty good by the winter fire.

Good management on the farm as well as in the home consists as much in knowing what to let go as in what to do—in other words, in the power of discrimination.

Just why it is so we have never seen explained, but fruit that is grown on sandy land seems to develop a brighter color at maturity. In selecting an orchard site it is therefore well to keep this point in mind.

A British abortion remedy that is said to be very effective consists in giving animals subject to this ailment two drams of pure carbolic acid well diluted in water in soft feed every other night during each alternate fortnight during pregnancy.

Better a little dirt on the kitchen floor and a bright smile for the tired and hungry husband when he comes in from a hard day's work in the field than floors white as scrub brush and elbow grease can make them and a cross and irritable wife with the back ache.

In a good many years' experience in the feeding of silage there has been virtually no evidence forthcoming that it is in any way injurious as a feed for cattle. More than this, it is relished by the other farm animals, and all seem to thrive when it constitutes a portion of the regular ration.

Before the hot fires of the early winter are started in heater or furnace it is a good idea to inspect the flues and see if the brick and plaster are substantial enough to last until spring without repairing. It is an easy matter to overlook because it is quite out of sight, yet an important one notwithstanding this fact.

The highest price paid for beeves on the Chicago market this season was $8.30 for a bunch of native steers weighing 1,930 pounds and finished for the market at Bloomington, Ill. This means that a single animal of this weight cashed its owner $137.80. In the words of the hapless little negro in the comic supplement, "This makes a noise like prosperity."

There seems to be a pretty well settled opinion that while seed corn will retain its vitality if buried in an oat bin it will not do so if the ears are hung over the bin above the oats. The reason for this seems to be that in the first place the ear is kept quite dry, its moisture being absorbed by the oats, while in the second instance it gathers enough moisture so that hard freezes kill the germ.

The fellow who puts off the securing of his seed corn until he is afield with a husking wagon the latter part of November or December may be trusting Providence for a good stand of corn next season, but has mighty little ground on which to base any such confidence. In this as in some other familiar experiences the Lord helps those who stir around and do most to help themselves.

While a chicken will roost on most any old thing, from the edge of a barrel to the reel of a reaper, a glance at the shape of the foot when it clutches a support shows that to be comfortable the roost ought to be nearly round. While straight and even poles about two inches in diameter with the knots trimmed smooth will do nicely if one can get them, a pine 2 by 2 with the corners rounded off makes an excellent perch.

Oranges grown in some portions of Mexico are infested with maggots, the larvae of flies which lay their eggs in the skin of the growing orange and hatch by the time the fruit is ripe and have a fine time in the pulp of the orange until they emerge as fully developed flies. For this reason California, with her immense orange growing interests, has placed an embargo on Mexican oranges as well as nursery stock, so much is a spread of this pest feared. The maggot is white in color and is from a third to half an inch long.

Washington rated agriculture as one of the noblest and most useful of pursuits in a day when the methods followed were crude and the results attained meager. Today it occupies a still more exalted position and in a very true sense furnishes the means whereby we are able to subsist as a nation. The time is fast approaching, if not already here, when an increasing number of the brightest boys and girls of the land will look to agriculture and horticulture in their general and special fields as callings which they may enter with ample equipment of intelligence and energy, knowing that in return for the same effort necessary for success in professional, business or clerical pursuits they will reap a generous and substantial reward. The conditions to be found in rural life may and ought to be healthful, wholesome and uplifting—nay, even inspiring—if the right spirit is brought to its activities. Notwithstanding the progress made in the past fifteen years, there is as yet but a meager showing of the possibilities of the highest and best type of agriculture. It is the one great field of effort, tremendously wide and roomy, which has not yet been exploited and exhausted. The door of opportunity swings wide for those who would enter it, promising a type of life, though fraught with hard toil and some discouragements, at once the most health giving and independent of those pursuits which young men and women are entering today.

At the rate which automobile accidents are chronicled it begins to look as though the old saw "The fools are not all dead yet" would soon be untrue.

Cows and clover in some form are the two best agencies known for resting and regenerating tired and worn out soils. Many realize this truth; a good many ought to.

It is fair to assume that work horses enjoy a frequent and refreshing drink of cool water just as much as workmen do. If they were remembered in this way there would be fewer of them giving out on hot days during harvest.

As a rule, the most beautiful colored autumn leaves are noticed those falls when heavy freezes hold off till late, the varied colors which the leaves of different trees take on being in way of a chemical change, the result of a natural ripening process.

Many a grower of produce comes to grief by rising to the bait of a little higher price offered by an unknown firm and shipping stuff which represents the best part of a season's work on which no account of sales is ever given and for which no pay is ever received. It is much better to play safe at somewhat lower price levels.

There is little excuse for the farm animal being afflicted with vermin or scab when there are so many effective dips and disinfectants on the market. Dipping tanks which will do for hogs, sheep and calves are on sale at most any agricultural implement house and are quite inexpensive. For larger cattle disinfectants may be applied in the form of a spray.

A flock of hens is doubtless better off from the standpoint of health if they sleep out of doors in pleasant weather in the same way that folks are if they sleep in the open air or in tents instead of in stuffy bedrooms. The hens may dislike being ejected from the henhouse for the first few nights, but they will soon become accustomed to the outdoor perch.

If the money which is annually spent by farmers in mining and other wildcat and blue sky enterprises were put into the purchase of better machinery, the installing of dairies and the hiring of more help to give the acres worked a more intensive tillage, more profit would be forthcoming from these improvements in a single season than from the aforesaid investments in a lifetime.

In latitudes where the winters are forbidding and tend to keep folks closely housed during the winter months it is a sensible thing to be out of doors during the fall and early winter as much as possible in order to store up vitality and energy to bear the more rigorous outdoor air of the colder months. Every chance that offers should be improved to breathe this fine, crisp, life giving air that is so characteristic these October and November days.

The designations "nigh" and "off" used in referring to the left and right hand animals of a team came into use because of the fact that the driver of the pioneer ox team used to stand when driving to the left of the left hand animal so he could wield a whip in his right hand, which was nearest the team. The customary position of the driver of a team of horses is on the right instead of the left side of the seat, with the result that the nigh horse is the one farthest from him and the off horse the one nearest.

According to figures which have been compiled by the Canadian forestry department, there is in the Dominion a total of 1,500,000 square miles of standing timber, but notwithstanding this enormous reserve there were set out in 1908 under the direction of the department 3,000,000 young trees to take the place of those felled, while a total of 10,000,000 little trees have been set out during the past few years. It would have been well for this country had a like policy been inaugurated when its timber resources were considered inexhaustible.

A good number of farmers in the vicinity in which the writer lives this year attended big state fairs in company with their good wives. This is the proper system—a practice which many another man might adopt with both pleasure and profit to those concerned. From the very nature of the case family and household cares tie a woman at home closely, and for this reason special pains should be taken to see that now and then at least she is given a change which will put a new element into her life and make more endurable the humdrum work of every day. In all too many instances the farmer's wife has too little recreation and too few outings, either because the man of the house is so selfish that he won't let her step off the place or so much of a tightwad that he does not allow her the money to dress neatly or to spend on a trip that she might like to take. Any woman who does the work that falls to a woman's lot to do on the average farm should receive just as much credit for its successful operation as her husband, who cares for the stock and tills the fields. On this basis she is entitled to outings as much as her husband and to the wherewithal that she may enjoy them.

PURCHASING VOTES

At the election last week Maryland voted on an amendment to disfranchise the negro. It failed, as it ought to have done. Taking away from a race the right to vote, which was once given them, is a difficult, if not an impossible task. We hear sometimes of people expressing themselves in favor of disfranchising the negro, and they point to the alleged practice of buying up the negro vote as their reason. We do not think this practice is so universal as to justify such a course, says the Ohio State Journal. There are, doubtless, negroes who sell their votes, and white people, too, no doubt, but they are a low class, and are very few compared with the body of decent and intelligent voters. But here is something we cannot understand—why a negro who sells his vote should be disfranchised and the man who buys it should be permitted to vote. If the matter were analyzed, the man who buys a vote is a worse citizen than a man who sells his vote. Whenever a low-down negro or white man sells his vote there is always some alleged respectable man who does the buying or furnishes the money.

THE MARYLAND-WEST VIRGINIA BOUNDARY CASE.

The territory in dispute between the States of Maryland and West Virginia, involved in the case argued in the Supreme Court of the United States on Thursday by Attorney-General Straus, is a strip containing nearly 50 square miles lying along the western boundary of this State. The northern boundary of the grant of Charles I to Lord Baltimore was from "that part of the Bay of Delaware which lieth under the fortieth degree of north latitude from the equinoctial, where New England is terminated," passing from Delaware Bay in a right line by the degree aforesaid into the true meridian of the first fountain of the river "Pattowmack." That was the western boundary of the State. Maryland claimed that the line should have run to the first fountain of the South Branch, which is the larger branch or main stream of the Potomac If this contention had been allowed, the western boundary would have been far west of the one for which Attorney-General Straus is now contending, and several of the counties of West Virginia would have belonged to Maryland. But in that contention the State was defeated by the decision that the North Branch, and not the South Branch, is the "River Potomac."

Then Maryland established the fact that West Virginia is claiming and occupying territory one and a half miles east of the meridian of the first fountain of the North Branch. The present boundary is a line running due south from Mason and Dixon's line to Fairfax stone. This stone was fixed by proceedings between Lord Fairfax and the Dominion of Virginia, in which Maryland had no part and by which Lord Baltimore could not have been bound. It was assumed by some that the spring at Fairfax stone was the first fountain of the Potomac. But that assumption was wrong, because the Potomac in fact flows from a fountain at a place called Potomac stone, a mile and a half farther west than the Fairfax stone. Attorney-General Straus maintains that Maryland had in no way estopped herself in claiming the western boundary for which he contends by any act accepting the present boundary.

The disputed territory is a sparsely settled mountain region, with, however, two or three small villages in it. There is fine timber land and some fertile valleys. The greater part of the territory is underlaid with coal of the upper and lower Youghiogheny basin and the upper Potomac basin. It is a territory, upon the whole, well worth acquiring.—Baltimore Sun.

A MATTER WHICH CONCERNS BUSINESS INTERESTS.

As a reason for plunging the State into another prolonged fight on the negro suffrage question, the Sun cites the dictum of William Jennings Bryan to the effect that "no question is settled until it is settled right." A very good saying; but much depends on who has the determination of when an issue is settled right. Mr. Bryan made use of this oracular utterance in reference to the silver question, which seems to be fairly conclusively settled, in utter disregard of his views about it. As there were but 85,000 votes out of a total of 285,000 for the amendment, a good many people will say the disfranchising question has been settled right.

But more important than the repetition by Mr. Bryan of an axiom which has come down from the Stone Age, and more important than the views of our contemporary as to the weight it should have in Maryland, is Governor Crothers' prompt acquiescence. His "me, too," followed more quickly even than usually marks the concert between the luminary and its chief satellite, showing that at times flattery cannot be too nauseous, or blandishment too manifest to fail of effect.

Thanks to the overpowering strength of the counties in the legislature, they can do what they please. The Governor's recommendation will have weight with that body. If he recommends, as he says he will, another disfranchising amendment—in return for the incense which is constantly burned before him—it will have weight; his recommendation will have great weight. The situation is one, therefore, which concerns the business interests of the State and the city.

Nobody will deny that it is harmful to the material welfare of the city and State to have men running up and down in it dinning into the ears of the people that Maryland is suffering dreadfully from the incubus of the negro—especially when it seems so certain that the incubus is going to remain with us. It must be harmful to progress for outsiders to hear the constant cry that there is a millstone about the neck of this city and State which cannot be got rid of. It will not induce capitalists or immigrants to locate in Maryland to perpetually remind them that in one-half of the State—if the spellbinders are to be believed—life and property are not safe, wealth is disappearing and ruin holds sway. Last of all, it would be difficult to overestimate the injury done by the majority party year after year training new adherents up in the belief that political leadership consists of getting some shrewd shibboleth which appeals to the passions of the people, instead of teaching them to gain political standing by wise administration.

Maryland has great business questions demanding solution. It is worse than folly to push them aside and devote our political energies to threshing out so barren an issue as negro disfranchisement.

The Editor's Complaint.

It is held to be an inexcusable outrage for a newspaper editor to make the slightest mistake in a statement of any sort, while professional persons, upon whose certainty of knowledge and on whose statement in regard thereto, life and death or the most important interests depend, make the most serious errors without incurring the slightest criticism, much less blame.

Take the judge on the bench, whose decisions are set aside and annulled by higher courts almost every day, and the judge whose judgment is so reversed does not suffer in the least in public and professional estimation.

These are curious facts, but they are facts, and they are mentioned, not by way of excusing editorial mistakes, for there is no excuse for them. It is because every individual firmly believes that he could conduct newspapers better than those who are charged with the work, while no unprofessional person would undertake to usurp functions of the judge or the physician.

ALLEGANY'S FINE SHOWING.

Republicans Swept Whole County—Cause of Sloan's Defeat.

For the first time in eight or ten years the whole Republican county ticket in Allegany county has been elected. It swept the county last Tuesday by majorities ranging from 68 majority for D. Lindley Sloan, the Republican candidate for judge in the Fourth Judicial Circuit, to 2,368 for Zihlman, the Republican candidate for State Senate, and over 2,000 against the disfranchising amendment. The average majority in Allegany county was something like 1,300, which is most creditable to the party and especially to the state central committee of the county.

It is to be observed also that part of the 15,000 majority recorded against the disfranchising amendment in the state, the Sixth District of Maryland gave a majority of 5,630, as follows: Allegany county, 2,606; Garrett county, 1255; Washington county, 1,482, and Frederick county, 887, showing that Baltimore city and Western Maryland practically defeated the disfranchising amendment.

It has been stated in several of the papers that D. Lindley Sloan, Republican candidate for judge in the Fourth Judicial Circuit, was defeated by Judge Boyd, because of Republican defection in Garrett county. This is a mistake, because Garrett county, while giving Mr. Sloan on a reduced majority of 154, had much to contend with in the fact that a Democratic lawyer of Oakland organized a citizens' or independent movement in the interest of Judge Boyd without however, indorsing him in the platform of that party's convention, but using the movement for the purpose of taking votes away from the Republican candidate for judge and giving them to the Democratic candidate. Garrett and Allegany counties both gave majorities, one of 154 and the other 63 for Sloan, who was defeated by a majority of 689 in Washington county, a most unusual and suspiciously remarkable Democratic majority in a Republican county. If Washington county, which has been in the habit of giving Republican majorities ranging from 500 to 1,000 for Pearre and McComas when they have been candidates for Congress, had even held the Democrats down to a stand-off, Sloan would have been judge.

DAVIS AND ELKINS HAVE THE KEY

Will Build Short Railway Line and Have a Double Outlet for Coal.

Senator Stephen B. Elkins and his father-in-law, former Senator Henry G. Davis, by the construction of less than a hundred miles of track, will within a year, it was stated, at Fairmont Monday night, be in control of a railroad situation which will give them a low grade outlet both to the eastern seaboard and the northern lakes for the enormous product of their West Virginia mines. They are now placidly sitting on the key to this interesting and profitable situation, while their engineers are putting the finishing touches on the surveys.

The building of the forty-mile extension of the Morgantown & Kingwood road, from its southern end at Rowlesburg up Cheat river and across to Elkins, will give the two multi-millionaires a line from Morgantown to Charleston. At Morgantown they will, it is now definitely known, connect with the Pittsburg & Lake Erie and thus reach the lakes, and at Charleston they will attach themselves to the Virginia Railroad and put their coal at tidewater. There is much activity in Preston county, where the Elkins interests own the great Muddy Creek and Big Sandy coal fields. These fields will, it is understood, be pierced by a branch line from Trowbridge Ferry, on Cheat river, to Point Marion, at Cheat's mouth, where the P. & L. E. will again be touched. This survey has been made and accepted. By this maneuver the Elkins coal will be run by gravity, practically from the mines to the Lake Erie tracks.

The man who vouched for the truth of these statements said there was no doubt but that the Lake Erie would build into Fairmont. "The New York Central interests own tens of thousands of acres of coal in Marion county and they are coming for it," he said. "The Elkins-Davis connection will not in the least interfere with their coming here."

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mrs. E. E. Friend was much surprised Monday evening about 7.30 o'clock when her neighbors to the number of about forty took possession of her cottage. After a pleasant hour a table was spread and cake, coffee and fruit served by the visiting ladies, after which music, plays and conversation was indulged in until a late hour, when all retired much pleased with their visit. The occasion was the celebration of the thirty-fifth anniversary of Mrs. Friend's birth day.

A social will be held in the Methodist Episcopal church Thursday evening, Nov. 19th, to which all the members of the church are urged to be present and everybody in the neighborhood are cordially invited to come. Short addresses will be delivered by Superintendent Reed, Revs. Williamson, Musgrave and others. Refreshments will be served but there will be no charge.

Everybody who owns or could borrow a shot gun were at the lake Tuesday and Wednesday mornings hunting wild ducks and geese. A number of ducks and one lone gander were bagged.

Mrs. Bussell and daughter, Miss Finnell, left the Park Saturday for their winter home.

Mrs. Creed Collins was here this week closing up her cottage.

Mrs. Harmison closed Romney cottage Tuesday and departed for her winter home.

Mr. Lloyd Crane and family will soon leave for Clarksburg where Mr. Crane expects to get employment.

A letter was received here a few days since announcing the death of Rev. Mr. Browning, of near Arkadelphia, Ark., a Presbyterian Minister, who died last month from injuries sustained from a run-away team of horses. Within the present year Rev. Browning was married to Mrs. Fanny E. McKenny, who is well known here and in Oakland, in each of which places she spent several years. She is the mother-in-law of Rev. C. E. Clark. Rev. Browning was possessed of a large property.

The M. E. Sunday School was reorganized last evening as follows: Superintendent, H. N. Cuppett; assistant, J. A. Hayden; secretary, Miss Abbie Chance; assistant, A. T. White; treasurer, Mrs. E. E. Friend; librarians, Pete Murdock and Russell Cuppett; organist, Miss Jennie Lee; assistant Miss Effie Cuppett; superintendent home department, Mrs. J. A. Hayden; superintendent cradle roll, Mrs. J. Enlow.

The Epworth League was also reorganized at the same time as follows: President, H. V. Leighton; 1st vice president. A. T. White; 2nd vice president, Miss Cora Weimer; 3rd vice president, Mrs. E. E. Friend; 4th vice president, Miss Abbie Chance; secretary, W. D. King; treasurer, A. R. Sperry; organist, Mrs. Lloyd Biggs.

Frank, the sixteen year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Donithan, residing on F street, died Tuesday afternoon of typhoid fever, after an illness of six weeks. Deceased had been employed at Keyser, W. Va., where he contracted the disease and was brought home four weeks ago.

Word came to Rev. L. A. Rudisill of the serious illness of his son Wesley, in Raleigh, N. C., where he is in the employ of an electric light company. He was stricken with typhoid fever some days ago. He has the best attention and his early recovery is hoped for.

Mr. Irvin L. Sperry has been appointed treasurer of the Southern Service Company of Norfolk, Va. This is a lucrative and responsible position.

The announcement of the death of an old and valued friend of Mountain Lake Park reached here Wednesday morning, in the person of Mrs. Virginia E. White, who died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Creede H. Wilson, in Cumberland, Tuesday morning last. Mrs. White had spent her summers at the Park for the past twenty years or more.

BITTINGER.

The farmer prods his weary team
The thick set sod to break;
One vision haunts his autumn dream—
A big, hot buckwheat cake.

Miss Nettie Brininger returned to her home at Sunnyside last Saturday, after spending a week with her sister, Mrs. J. Turner Lohr, at this place.

Some of the young men of this neighborhood are bagging quite a number of pheasants since the season is open; one reports having killed 19 pheasants and 12 rabbits in three days last week.

We are glad to report an improvement in Rev. Shoup's condition. He was well enough to visit some of his friends near this village last Sunday and Monday.

E. S. Brenneman, of this place, has been engaged to teach the Jennings school, which was vacated by the recent resignation of Mr. Rodimer.

C. E. Ellithorp made a brief business visit to Oakland last week.

After a few weeks' visit with relatives and friends here, Miss Fannie Wiley returned to Waterloo, Iowa, last Monday, where she will resume her work as a professional nurse

A report reached here early last Monday morning to the effect that the residence of Daniel Yommer, near Jennings, had burned to the ground the night previous and that Mr. Yommer and his wife and son were badly burned.

CAR SHORTAGE BECOMING SERIOUS

Coal Companies Forced To Refuse Orders Except Subject To Delay.

The shortage of coal cars in the West Virginia field is becoming more serious every day, and practically every Baltimore company operating mines in that district is handicapped and losing business because of the inability of the railroads to furnish equipment with which to move coal.

It is estimated that in the Fairmont region alone the mines are behind approximately 200,000 tons in deliveries, and the indications are that the congestion will become worse rather than improve, owing to the rush of all classes of freight. Some companies have been forced to refuse orders for coal except subject to delay. In the meantime consumers are clamoring for fuel, and in some instances are offering premiums over quoted prices.

Not only cars but locomotives also are scarce. Builders are working day and night to supply equipment, but are unable to materially relieve the situation. Some of the coal companies which are under contract to furnish a specified amount of coal monthly to certain concerns are buying coal from dealers at practically retail prices in order to fulfill their obligations.

Absolutely Pure...

And now they are telling how it happened.

Mr. N. U. Bond was in the city last night on business.

Mrs. J. M. Stanton and children are in Parkersburg visiting relatives and friends.

Three pounds fresh fish for 25 cents; quart fresh oysters, solid measure, 40 cents, at Creutzburg's.

Mr. Will B. Miller, of Deer Park, was in the city last Friday and made this office a brief social call.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Gonder and Misses Edith Bolden and Dora Brown spent last Friday in Cumberland.

Mr. Jacob S. Miller, of Grantsville, spent last Thursday evening and Friday morning in Oakland on business.

Mr. and Mrs. Julius Scherr, of Eglon spent Sunday in Oakland with their daughter, Mrs. Julius C. Renninger.

We present today a table showing the official election returns of Garrett county. Had we held this paper back in order to secure these figures last week many of our subscribers would have failed to receive their paper until Monday or Tuesday of this week, hence the delay in publishing the returns.

Dr. John E. Legge spent yesterday in Baltimore where he attended a lecture delivered by the celebrated surgeon, Dr. Charles Mayo.

Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Spedden and two children, of Crellin, spent Sunday in Oakland as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Naylor at their home on Fourth street.

Mr George Ault, of near Accident, who has been in Oakland and vicinity for several weeks engaged with a well boring concern, returned to his home Monday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Chichester and little son, who have resided in Oakland for the past two years, left for their home in Virginia last Friday, expecting to return here early in the spring.

Dr. Frank Weber, who has been located for the past two or three months at National, Allegany county, is in the hospital attached to Maryland University in Baltimore as a patient.

Mrs. John Kephart, of Washington, who spent a week in Oakland with relatives, left for home Sunday morning, being accompanied as far as Cumberland by her sister, Miss Cleo Krantz.

New steel rails of fifty feet long each have been distributed along the tracks of the B. & O. through Oakland which will be laid soon at which time the cross over switches will be changed from their present location west of the station to a point fronting the old Glades Hotel grounds.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Shaffer, of Parkersburg, spent a few days in Oakland with relatives, returning to Parkersburg yesterday afternoon. By a change made in his position by the B. & O. Mr. Shaffer will hereafter reside in Fairmont, W. Va., his run over the road being from that point to Richwood, W. Va.

Mr. Fritz White, of Hutton, arrived in Oakland this morning on his way home from the Maryland Agricultural College, where he has been a student for the past several weeks. Fritz, along with half a hundred other boys, took french leave of the institution last night on account of the probable quarantine of the school this morning owing to a case of scarlet fever having developed in one of the halls.

Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Kahl and two children, of Edgland, North Dakota, arrived in Oakland last Friday morning on their way to Accident and other down county points where they will visit relatives and friends for two weeks. Mr. Kahl is a son of Mr. Lewis Kahl, of Accident, and went west a number of years ago where he is engaged in farming and reports his crops this year as being good.

County Treasurer elect Robert L. Fries, of Sines, accompanied by his little daughter, spent last Friday and a part of Saturday in Oakland where Mr. Fries met and was congratulated on his election by quite a large number of his political friends and well wishers. That Mr. Friese will make on excellent officer we have no doubt, and his selection as the Republican nominee for the position was no mistake.

A town is like a large family. We are interested in each other's welfare, or should be. A cut-throat, every-man-for-himself policy means ruin for any community. It means retrogression and failure. The first lesson that any family must learn is that to be happy and successful is unity and mutual assistance. The same applies to the business life of a town and the more abundant will be the town's prosperity. Stand by each other and patronize the home folks.

New windows of an artistic design, exceedingly pretty and constructed with a view to better light and add to the appearance of the building, have been placed in the Presbyterian church. These windows, with other improvements, which were completed some time ago, makes this one of the handsomest places of worship in this section of the country, and much credit is due the officers of the congregation for the improvements thus planned and successfully carried out.

The printing of the minutes of the sixty-third annual Conference of the West Virginia District M. E. church, was completed at this office yesterday afternoon and on Monday they will be sent out by the Secretary, Rev. J. B. Workman, who is expected here that morning from his home in Wheeling. The book is a neat pamphlet of one hundred and seventy-seven pages and cover and contains interesting data concerning the Methodist Episcopal church for the West Virginia District. One very striking fact in connection with the work of this church in the West Virginia district is that it showed during the past year a greater growth, with one exception, than that of any other conference in the United States, in net increase in membership.

With the indulged hope that Oakland's streets will again be cleared of the piles of earth which have been occupying a most prominent place for the past three or four months, incident to the installations of the water and sewerage systems throughout the town, it will behoove all right thinking people to lend a helping hand, before the winter's snows come, to clear the pavements fronting their properties of the accumulated fallen leaves and piles of dirt which have been littering them the entire summer and fall

THE DEATH RECORD.

JESSE HARTLEY.

On October 30th, death came to one of our homes in Blaine and took from it one upon whose strength and labor a faithful wife and sweet child depended. Jesse, son of William and Maggie Hartley, was born February 10, 1887. On December 22, 1907, he married Miss Hallie Thrasher, of Kitzmiller. To them was born one child, Alice. Toward the close of his second year of married life, and when fortune was beginning to smile upon him, this brother was called out of this world. Soon after Brother Hartley was hurt, he gave his heart to Jesus and found peace. During all his illness, he leaned hard upon the strong arm of the Almighty, and in his closing hours declared Jesus to be the best of all friends. He departed in peace and we do not weep without hope, "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him." The funeral services were conducted jointly by the Rev. W. W. Sutton, of the M. E. church, and the Fraternal Order of Eagles. The interment was made in the Hamill cemetery November 1. W. W. SUTTON.

Married.

BITTINGER—BECKMAN.—On November 7th, at the Lutheran parsonage in Oakland, Truman Cecil Bittinger, of Accident, and Miss Sarah Margaret Beckman, of Oakland.

MASON — BOLDEN — Announcement cards were received in Oakland yesterday afternoon apprising their many friends of the wedding of Miss Annie Irene Bolden, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Bolden, and Mr. Lee Ridenour Mason, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. George M. Mason, all of Oakland. The couple took their friends by surprise by going from Oakland to Cumberland on the early morning train yesterday where they were married by Rev. J. William McCauley, pastor of the Lutheran church in that city. The bride and groom are among Oakland's best known and highest respected young people and their many friends will join in wishing them a long and happy married life.

A Big Gasser Near Grafton.

On Saturday the Philadelphia Company shot the well in the R. E. Dunham farm near Grafton, which had been drilled to a depth of 2300 feet, and the result is a well of greater magnitude. The well is seven miles from Grafton and the fuel will do much for the industrial situation in that town.

CHAPTER VII.

THE TOSS OF A COIN.

HILLARD made an inexcusably careless shot. He grounded his cue and stood back from the table. That was the way everything seemed to go—at tennis, at squash, at fencing, at billiards, it was all the same.

"I say, Jack, what's the matter with you anyhow?" asked Merrihew, out of patience.

"It was bad," Hillard agreed. "Perhaps I am not taking the interest in the game that I formerly took."

"And when I make a proposition," pursued Merrihew, "to ride to the Cat skills and back, something you would have jumped at a year ago, you shake your head. Think of it! By George, you had a bully time last year! You swore it was the best trip we ever took on the horses. Where's your spirit of adventure?"

"I'm sure I don't know where it is. Shall we finish the game?"

"Not if you're going to throw it like this," declared Merrihew.

"Ten and a string against your half a string," said Hillard, studying the score. "I'll bet a bottle that I beat you."

"Done!" said Merrihew. Being on his mettle, he made a clean score of twenty, five to go. "I can see you paying for that check, Jack."

But the odds tingled Hillard's blood. He settled down to a brilliant play and turned sixty-one in beautiful form.

Later the two passed upstairs to the secluded alcove. Merrihew filled the glasses with the air of one who would like to pass the remainder of his days doing the same thing—not that he was overfond, but each bottle temporarily weeded out that crop of imperishable debts. To him the world grew roseate and kindly viewed through the press of the sparkling grape, and invariably he saw fortune beckoning to the card tables.

"Now, then, Jack, I've got you where I want you. Who is she?"

"On my word, I don't know."

"Then there is a woman!" cried Merrihew. "I knew it. Nothing else would so demoralize you. Drink a health to her."

Hillard raised his glass and touched that of his comrade. For the peace of his mind he determined to tell Merrihew the whole adventure.

"To the lady in the fog!" he said.

"Fog?" blankly.

"Well, the lady in the mask."

"Fog, mask? Two of them?"

"No, only one. Once I met her in the fog, and then I met her in the mask."

"I'll drink to her, but I'm hanged if I don't believe you're coddling me," said Merrihew disappointedly. "This is New York."

"The whole story, Jack, details and all; no half portions."

Hillard told the yarn simply, omitting nothing essential. He even added that for three weeks he had been the author of the personal inquiry as to the whereabouts of one Mme. Angot.

"I don't know, Dan, but this has taken so strong a hold on me that I shan't forget it soon. Imagine it yourself. Oh, but she could sing! I am a man not to be held in the leash of an adventure like this, but she held me. How? By the hope that one day I might see her face with no veil of mystery to hold her off at arm's length."

Merrihew was greatly excited. He was for ordering a second bottle, but Hillard stayed him.

"By George! And you are sure that it was at the Sandfords'?"

"I am positive. But there is a puzzle that I have failed to solve—Sandford's cable and the caretaker's declaration. I know that I was in that house. The patrolman says that he has seen no light in the house since the family sailed for Africa. It is no dream, but it begins to look as if I were the victim of some fine hoax."

"It is more than a hoax, in my opinion. Wait till Sandford returns and finds his silver gone."

Hillard started.

"And his gold plate," continued Merrihew, pleased with the idea. "My boy, that's what it is—the best dodge I ever heard of. It will make a good story for the Sunday papers. You won't be in it unless she ropes you in as an accomplice."

"I'm a romantic ass!" Hillard sighed. Leddy Lightfinger! If this turned out to be the case he would never trust a human being again.

"Let's take that ride on the horses," Merrihew urged. "That'll clear your brain of this sentimental fog."

"No!" Hillard struck his hands together. "I've a better idea than that. I shall go to Italy, and you shall go with me."

"Impossible. Why, I'm all but broke."

"I'll take you as a companion. I'm a sick man, Dan. I'm likely to jump overboard if some one isn't watching me every minute."

"I'd like to go, Jack. Heaven and earth, but I should! But I can't possibly go to Italy with a letter of credit no more than twenty-five hundred, and that's all there is in the exchequer at present."

"Between such friends as we are"—

"That racket won't work. I could not take a moment's peace if I did not feel independent."

"But I'm not going to give it to you," Hillard protested. "I am going to lend it to you."

"And could I ever pay you back if I accepted the loan?" humorously.

"There's Monte Carlo. You might pull down a tidy sum," said the tempter.

"That's the way, you beggar. Hit me on the soft side." But Merrihew was still obdurate.

"Now, listen to reason, Dan. If you wait for the opportunity to go to Europe you'll wait in vain. You must make the opportunity. One must have youth to enjoy Italy thoroughly. The desire to go becomes less and less as one grows older. Besides, it completes every man's education. I'll put the proposition in a way you can't possibly get round. You will always have that thousand, so don't worry about that. You have twenty-five hundred on hand, you say. With that you can see Italy like a prince for three months."

A scar ran from his cheek to his chin.

"What's the proposition?" Merrihew drained the bottle.

"This—I'll agree to take not a penny more than twenty-five hundred myself. We'll go on equal terms. Why," confidently, "besides living like a prince you'll have four hundred to throw away at roulette. Boy, you have never seen Italy; therefore you do not know what beauty is. When we eventually land at Bellagio, on Lake Como, and I take your lily white hand in mine and lead you up to the terrace of Villa Serbelloni and order tea, then you will realize that you have only begun to live—gardens, towering Alps, the green Lecco on one side and the green Como on the other and Swiss champagne at $1.40 the quart! Eh?

"And then," Hillard added, "there's Kitty Killigrew singing her heart out to a people who can't understand a word she's singing."

"Can it be done for twenty-five hundred?"

Merrihew chewed his cigar with subdued fierceness. He knew very well that he was destined to go to Europe. Kitty Killigrew, who had promised to mail the route they were to play and hadn't!

"It is written, Dan, that you shall go with me."

"We'll settle this argument right here now." Merrihew drew out a coin. "Call it," he cried recklessly.

"Heads!"

The coin flickered in the light, fell and proved that all money is perverse by rolling under the davenport upon which they were sitting. An amusing hunt followed. They ran their hands over the floor, turned the rug, pulled out the davenport and looked behind, burned innumerable matches and finally rang for the attendant. The situation was explained, and he procured a candle. He was ultimately successful.

"Here it is, sir."

"What is it, head or tail?" asked Merrihew weakly.

"Head, sir," said the attendant.

"Keep it," said Merrihew generously, even sadly. He never got up a game of chance that he did not get the worst of it. And now, Italy! All that way from home! "Boy, bring up a bottle of '96."

"And the lady in the mask?" asked Merrihew as they at length stood up.

"I must relegate her to the fog she came out of. But it would be a frightful thing if—if"—He hesitated to form the words.

But Merrihew had no such scruple. "If the silver and plate were missing when the Sandfords return?"

"Oh, bosh! It's all some joke, and I'm the butt of it. She was in that house by the same authority she rode the horse."

"A woman of that sort would have no difficulty in hoodwinking the stablemen," declared Merrihew.

"By the way," he continued, "received a postal from Kitty this morning from Gibraltar. Fine trip. Visited the gun galleries and the antique furniture shops. Says no sign of prima donna as yet, but believes her to be on board. O'Mally's on the water wagon. But Kitty aggravates me."

"What has she done now, refused you by marconigraph?"

"No, but she promised me her address."

"Address her care Cook's, Florence, Rome, Venice. It's the popular mail box of Europe, and if she has given them the address they will forward."

"That helps considerably. I'm glad there's one Cook which can be relied on."

"In the morning I'll arrange for passage. We'll try the Celtic."

"I'll leave the business end of the trip to you."

"The first Saturday in March, then, if we can get booking. That will be in less than two weeks."

In the lobby of the club as they were about to enter the coat room Hillard ran into one of several gentlemen issuing.

"Pardon me," he said, stepping aside.

"Non importa!" said the stranger, with a graceful wave of the hands.

Hillard looked quickly into the gentleman's face. "I am clumsy," he said in Italian.

Then the other stared at him and smiled. For a moment there was a brief tableau, in which each took the other's measure and noted the color of the eyes. The man was an exceedingly handsome Italian, for all that a scar ran from his cheek to his chin. It was all over in a moment, and Hillard and Merrihew proceeded to the street.

"Handsome duffer," was Merrihew's comment. "But you never can tell a man by his looks. Gaze on me, for instance."

"Go home!" Hillard slapped him jovially on the shoulder.

"Home! Ah, yes! But shall I have a home to go to when I get back? You have roped me in nicely. My poor little twenty-five hundred! But Swiss champagne at $1.40 the quart! Well, every cloud has its lining."

As Hillard never received any answer to his personal, he discontinued it. Truly, she had returned to the fog out of which she had come. But it was no less difficult for him to take up the daily affairs again. What mystery veiled her? Whither had she gone?

Giovanni was delighted when he heard the news. He would go, too, and act as valet to the signor and his friend till they put out for Rome. Then, of course, he would be obliged to leave them. Occasionally Hillard would reason with him regarding his deadly projects. But when a Latin declares that he has seen through blood, persuasions, arguments, entreaties, threats do not prevail. He comforted himself with the opinion, however, that Giovanni's hunt would come to no successful end.

"You will surely fall into the hands of the police."

"What God wills comes true. But by this time they will have forgotten me."

"But your man might be dead."

"He is not dead. If he were something would tell me."

"It is a bad business, and I wish you no luck."

Giovanni smiled easily. Wishes seldom interfere with any one.

"I will double your wages," said Hillard, "if you will go where I go and return with me when I come back to America."

A deprecating movement. "Money? It is nothing. I am rich after my kind."

"Are you still in the church?"

"I confess regularly once a week. Oh, I am a good Catholic."

"Take yourself off. I am displeased with you."

* * * * * * *

It was a drizzling, foggy morning when they drove down to the boat. But the atmospheric effects made no impression on the volatile Merrihew. And he had an eye for all things, from the baskets of fruit and flowers, messengers with late orders from the stores, repeated farewells, to the squalling babies in the steerage.

At 4 o'clock they were on the high seas, heading for the Azores. Hillard was dreaming, and Merrihew was studiously employed over a booklet on how to speak Italian in one day. Giovanni, who had been arranging the luggage, came up on deck. He had two packets of letters and telegrams. One he gave to Merrihew and the other to his master.

Hillard found among his a bulky envelope postmarked Naples. Naples! He sat up. It had been addressed to the house and the address typewritten.

"Look at this!" he cried.

"Good Lord!" Dan gasped; his feet coming down to the deck.

Hillard was holding up for his inspection a crumpled black silk mask

CHAPTER VIII.

WHAT MERRIHEW FOUND.

THE great ship had passed the isle of Ischia, and now the bay of Naples unfolded all its variant beauties. Both he and Merrihew were foremost in the press against the forward rail. To the latter's impressionable mind it was like a dream—yonder, the temples and baths of Nero of the golden house; thither, the palaces of the grim Tiberius; beyond, Pompeii, with Glaucus, Ione and Nydia, the blind girl. The dream picture faded, and the reality was no less fascinating—the white sails of the fishermen winging across the sapphire waters, leaving ribboned pathways behind; proud white pleasure yachts, great vessels from all ports in the world, and an occasional battleship, drab and stealthy, and the hundred pink and white villages, the jade and amethyst of the islands, the ruined temples, the grim giant ash heap of Vesuvius.

"See that village on the cliffs toward the south?" asked Hillard. "That's Sorrento, where I was born. Sh! Look at Giovanni!"

Merrihew looked at the old Roman. Tears were running down his cheeks, and his gaze strove to pierce the distance to the faroff Sabine hills. Italy! Hillard leaned over and touched him on the arm, and he started.

"Take care, Giovanni."

"Pardon! I am weak this day, but tomorrow I shall be strong. Seven years! Have you not longed for it yourself? Has not your heart gone out many times across the seas to those cliffs?" pointing to Sorrento.

"Many times, Giovanni. But remember and control yourself. Presently the carabinieri will come on board. You will see that all our luggage goes promptly to the Bristol once we are through the customs."

"Trust me, signor."

They landed at the custom house at 2 in the afternoon and passed without any difficulty.

Hillard obtained rooms pleasantly situated looking out upon the sparkling bay. Giovanni began at once to unpack the trunks, happy enough to have something to occupy him till after dark, when he determined to venture forth. The dreaded carabinieri had paid him not the slightest attention. So far he was as safe as though he were in New York.

It was yet so early in the day that the two young men sallied forth in quest of light adventure. Besides, Merrihew was very eager to find some Roman and Florence newspapers. The American Comic Opera company was somewhere north. They found stationed outside the hotel a rosy cheeked cabby who answered to the name of Tomasso, or Tomass, as the Neapolitans generally drop the finals. He carried a bright red lap robe and blanket, spoke a little English and was very proud of the accomplishment. He was rather disappointed, however, when Hillard bargained with him in his own tongue. Tomass shook his fingers under Hillard's nose, and Hillard returned the compliment. Finally Tomass compromised on 1 lira 50 centesimi (30 cents) per hour, with 50 centisimi (10 cents) as a pourboire (tip). Crack, crack! Down the hill they went, as if a thousand devils were after them.

"By George," gasped Merrihew, clutching his seat, "the fool will break our necks!"

Tomass grinned and cracked his whip. He did not understand the word slowly in his own tongue or in any other, at least not till he reached the shops. A dozen times on the Via

A crumpled black silk mask

Roma Merrihew yelled that they would lose a wheel. But Tomass knew the game.

Merrihew had never seen such shops. Coral, coral wherever the eye roamed—where did they get it all, and to whom did they sell it? Necklaces, tiaras, rings, brooches, carved and uncarved—were there women enough in the world to buy these things?

"If I had a wife"— he began.

"Well?"

"I'd feel devilish sorry for her husband at this moment."

"But isn't the color great?" said Hillard. It was good to be in Naples again.

TO BE CONTINUED.

Two horses, buggy and cart for sale at once at a bargain; one black horse, one a bay, the latter a perfectly safe animal for ladies or children to drive; a good leader and will work any place.

THE GRANGE

Conducted by
J. W. DARROW, Chatham, N. Y.,
Press Correspondent New York State Grange

THE NATIONAL GRANGE.

Convenes In Annual Session at Des Moines, Ia., In November.

Official announcement has been made of the forty-third session of the national grange at Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 16-19. The Savery hotel will be the headquarters, and the business meetings will be held in a large hall in the hotel and the public meetings in the Auditorium. On Thursday evening of that week the subordinate degrees and the sixth and seventh will be conferred. All day Thursday will be devoted to the public meetings, at which time it is expected that Iowa and adjoining states will be represented by their chief executives or United States senators, also heads of agricultural colleges. The feature of the public meetings will be the address of the Right Hon. Sir Horace Plunkett of Ireland, who is at the head of the great co-operative movement in that country. Friday and Saturday of that week will be devoted to degree work, and on Saturday evening the annual session of the Priests of Demeter, the highest official body of the grange, will be held. The annual memorial services will occur on the following Sunday. The balance of the session will be devoted strictly to business. Hon. N. J. Bachelder, master of the national grange, will preside. The biennial election of officers will take place this year.

N. J. BACHELDER.

GOOD ROADS CONVENTION.

The Grange Active In an Intelligent and Aggressive Way.

The second annual good roads convention was held Sept. 21 to 23 at Cleveland, O., under the auspices of the American Automobile association, the national grange, United States office of public roads, the American Roadmakers' association and several automobile organizations. The highway problem was considered from all angles, and the varied interests of the participants brought out a presentation of all the modern phases of the subject.

The grange has been very active in an intelligent and aggressive way in the stimulation of thought and action on improved highways and represents well the farmer's view, says the Breeder's Gazette. The prejudice against motors on the highways is wearing away and will the more rapidly disappear as farmers come in larger numbers to the use of these machines. Undoubtedly at present many farmers are influenced against road betterment because it brings increased use by autos. Time was when many farmers fought road improvement because bicyclists advocated it, and their attitude toward the subject is the same now that motorists are interested in a movement for better highways.

It is idle to fight the trend of the times. A road suitable for an auto is better suited to the farmer's wagon or buggy than one which the motorist shuns. Interests are identical. Discussion is useless on that point. The problems are the best system of road building and maintenance and the equitable distribution of the cost. It is rank injustice to ask that all the cost fall on the farmer.

A Worthy Compliment.

The Patrons of Husbandry, or grange, as it is more commonly known, is the oldest of farmers' organizations. It has made mistakes, yet it has a magnificent record. Conservative along many lines of action that the American Society of Equity stands for, it is aggressive in forcing needed legislation for the rural classes, and the measures that it has compelled congress and the different state legislatures to enact stand out in bold relief as a monument to executive ability and perseverance.—Colman's Rural World.

The Farmers' Union.

The Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America reports a membership of 1,500,000 in the twenty-four states where it is organized. One of the objects of the union is to rush the construction of elevators in time for the handling of the wheat crop of 1909 when it is thrashed. The organization is the outcome of a project suggested by a Texas schoolteacher.

Webster grange, Monroe county, N. Y., is arranging for a school of agriculture to be conducted by Professor Wilson of Cornell university.

OLDEST WEDDING PACT.

An Interesting Contract Which Was Drawn Up Centuries Ago.

Out of the mass of so called "elephantine" papyrus in the Royal museum at Berlin on which a number of scholars have been at work several months have come some of the most curious finds the scientific world has been presented with in years.

One of these is the most ancient marriage contract in the world, according to Professor Leopold Wenger, an eminent Hellenist. Written in excellent classical Greek, from its context evidently composed about 311 B. C., the document begins, "In the seventh year of the reign of Alexander, the son of Alexander, in the fourteenth year of the satrapy of Ptolemaos, in the month of Dios."

The contract sets forth that Herakleides has agreed to take as his wife Demetria of Kos, the lawful daughter of her father, Leptines, and of her mother, Philetis. Then it acknowledges the receipt of clothing and jewels, valued at a thousand drachmas, which Demetria has laid at his feet in recognition of the honor he is about to bestow upon her. Even the newly wedded couple's place of residence is given in the agreement. The rest of the contract deals with the possibility of the husband's unfaithfulness and provides for the regulation and settlement of any lapse in obligation. That Demetria should be untrue evidently was not contemplated, as no mention is made of such possibility.

In case the husband should forget his vows it is provided that each side shall appoint an arbitrator, and when the charge is proved the marriage is to be dissolved, the husband giving back the thousand drachmas' worth of clothes and jewels and paying, besides, a thousand drachmas in Alexandrine silver currency.

Six witnesses signed the contract, which is still in a state of nearly perfect preservation after nearly 2,200 years.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Revival of the Guideboard.

In many towns and counties now a white painted stone post gives in clear black letters at every fork in the roads a list of towns hardly less formidable than those on the train bulletins of a railroad terminal. At a glance the traveler may see his way along for fifty miles. Sometimes the automobile associations are themselves responsible for information disseminating guideboards of different construction, but equally useful. The necessity of providing a new class of travelers with a new sort of facts has been back of the movement for guideboard rehabilitation. The contrast in this respect makes it easy to distinguish the regions of horse drawn vehicles content with a next town direction and those places which have felt the era of the automobile. A lesson in local geography is carried in every such guideboard. Perhaps this revival of the guideboard is but a return to conditions that prevailed before the days of the railroad.—Boston Transcript.

Saint-Saens and Wagner.

Camille Saint-Saens has been unquestionably the foremost musician in France since the death of Gounod. Like so many other musicians, he began to play the piano when quite a child and was only seventeen when he composed his first symphony. He was a friend of Wagner, Liszt and Gounod, and apropos of his first meeting with Wagner an interesting story is told. Saint-Saens was sent to the house of the great German with a letter of introduction from a friend. On being shown into an anteroom to wait the arrival of his host he saw a part of the manuscript score of one of Wagner's operas lying on the piano. Sitting down at the instrument, Saint-Saens began to play the music, and so masterly was his rendering that Wagner, who was in the next room, rushed in and joyfully embraced him. M. Saint-Saens is still as brilliant a pianist as he is a composer.—London M. A. P.

Waterloo Battlefield.

The battlefield at Waterloo, writes an American tourist from Brussels, is rapidly being divested of all its interesting features. The houses which sheltered men who helped to make history there are being torn down, the roads and paths are being obliterated, and soon there will be nothing left to remind one of Napoleon's last stand but the great mound capped by the Waterloo lion. The museum, where all the battlefield trophies are on view, uniforms, arms, drawings and pictures, was never a pretentious institution, but no visitor failed to look with interest at the many exhibits behind the glass doors. This also is to be dismantled, and the articles which have been carefully kept for years will be distributed among the provincial museums of Belgium, where as individual exhibits they will lose much in value.

Automobiles In Nova Scotia.

Some Brockton people who have been making automobile tours in Nova Scotia have run up against some strange regulations of the provincial character which have tended to considerably abridge their convenience and comfort.

It appears that the Nova Scotia regulations forbid cars from using the highways in certain sections on the market day in each week, when the country folk flock into the town to do their trading. They discovered, too late for their convenience, that the market days do not occur on the same day of the week in every town, so that while they steered clear of that in one town they brought up with a bang against the bars in another town on the line of the routes they had planned.—Newburyport News.

FOR LOVE OF A WIDOW

John's Attempt at Suicide Rewarded With Sensible Advice.

By DONALD ALLEN.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

It was a new sensation for John Dale, farmer's hired man, to wake up one morning and find himself in love with the Widow Harper, who owned the next farm on the west. He had known her for a year, but love had come creeping along so insidiously that it gave him a shock when he came to realize it.

The Widow Harper owned her farm; John Dale was simply a hired man at $20 a month. The Widow Harper could discuss Shakespeare; John Dale had simply heard that Columbus discovered America. The Widow Harper quoted poetry; John Dale couldn't even repeat a Mother Goose rhyme. On account of these things and many others poor John Dale felt that the widow was as far above him as the clouds above the cornfield. Love had come, but it was a hopeless love. She was not for him. When he strolled over to her house she might welcome him with a smile and repeat lines from Byron or Milton as they sat in the gloaming, but in the end she would marry a sewing machine agent, and he must suffer with a broken heart.

For a week the farmer's hired man kept his hopes and fears to himself. Then he could stand it no longer, and he made a confidant of a lightning rod man who came along and stayed overnight. After supper the stranger was taken out behind the straw stack and told all. He listened without smiling once. He listened to the very end, and then he sighed and shook his head in a solemn way and replied:

"John, if you were talking about a girl it would be different, but she's a widow, you see. A widow is a curious creature. No man just knows how to handle her. She may fall into the arms of a tin peddler, or she may tell a millionaire to take his hat and go."

"Then there's no hope for me?" plaintively asked the hired man.

"Yes, there's one hope. If the widow quotes poetry she's romantic. If

"WHY DID I FALL IN LOVE WITH YOU?"

she's romantic you have a chance. You've got to appeal to her romance by dying for her—dying for love of her."

"But if I died I sure couldn't marry her."

"You mustn't really die, but almost. Here, now, let us do some planning. I'll beat a farmer every day in the week when it's business, but when I find a man eating his heart out for unrequited love I can't go back on him."

The talk between the two was strictly private, but one of the results came to hand within a week. John Dale was found by his employer in the barn just as he had swung off in a noosed rope to commit suicide.

"You tarnal idiot, but what did you do it for?" demanded the farmer after he had cut down and revived the victim.

John Dale shed tears and said his life was a burden to him, and of course the Widow Harper heard of the affair and wondered over it. The would be suicide ceased to visit her, and that was another cause for wonder.

Ten days after his first attempt the hired man made another. He was caught just as he was about to partake of enough paris green to have killed a couple of horses. It was the farmer's wife that caught him this time, and as she gave him a box on the ear and snatched the dish away from him she said:

"Well, if you hain't turning into the biggest fool in America! What in catnip ails you, anyway?"

"It's my breaking heart!" was the tearful reply.

"Your breaking fiddlesticks! It's biliousness and nothing else. You are acting like a boy ten years old."

The widow heard of this second attempt, and it made her look serious for several days. She would have had a talk with John had he appeared, but she looked for him in vain.

Two weeks passed this time, and then came the third attempt at suicide. The farmer and his man were mowing grass beside the river when John suddenly threw away his scythe and leaped into the current. There happened to be an old boat handy, and the farmer managed to get the victim ashore and stretch him on the grass. Then he gave way to his indignation by shouting:

"You potheaded lunatic! What's got into you this summer? This is the third time you've tried to die. What's the matter?"

"I'm in love!" replied John after a long minute.

"You're in what?"

"I'm in love with the Widow Harper, but she don't love me, and that's why I want to die. I stood it till I can't stand it no more."

"Ever ask her to have you?"

"I dasn't."

"You seven kinds of idiot! Don't know whether she'd say yes or no, but trying to kill yourself!"

The widow heard of the third attempt through a farmer's boy, and she was sitting on the veranda after supper and thinking the matter over when John Dale suddenly appeared. He had a story to tell, and he went right at it like a man hoeing corn.

"Widow Harper," he began, "I know I hain't fit to lick your shoes, but I love you. When I found I was loving you I tried to kill the feeling, but the harder I tried the more I loved. That's why I tried to hang myself."

"I see," she said as he paused and wiped away a tear.

"I was in hopes my sore throat would make me forget you, but it didn't. I had suffered for you, and you were dearer than ever. I couldn't get you out of my mind. I kept thinking and thinking, and, knowing how hopeless it was, I turned to that later bug pizen. I had a note for you in my pocket, and you'd have got it after my death. Mrs. Whalen took the pizen away from me just as I was asking heaven to always bless you. In the note I also said I hoped you'd be happy with any man you married."

"Yes," remarked the widow as another pause came.

"Then I was determined to weed you out of my heart at any cost. I drank sour cider; I fell off the fence on purpose; I pinched the cows when milking them to make them kick; I ran through a bed of nettles in my bare feet; I rolled off a haystack. It was all in vain! I was loving you more instead of less. Down by the river I got to thinking about you marrying that sewing machine agent or a wire fence man, and I just made a run for the river and jumped in. I swallowed all the water I could, and I kicked when Mr. Whalen got me by the hair and pulled me out."

"And after trying three times you have succeeded in weeding me out of your heart?"

"No. That's what I've come over to tell you. I keep thinking of you every minute. If a bird sings or a duck quacks or a goose cackles I think it's your voice and look around. Why was I born into this world? Why did I ever see you? Why did I fall in love with you?"

"And now, John, just what is it you want?" asked the widow when he had uttered his last word and was gritting his teeth to keep the tears back.

"Why, I want—I want you to have me!"

"Then ask me. If you had done so a year ago I should have said yes, as I shall say now."

Shrewd Peter the Great.

Peter the Great adopted rather a novel means to convince his subjects that they should change their clothes to conform with the modern costumes of western Europe. Believing, as is well known historically, that the future greatness of Russia depended upon the facility with which it was made to assimilate all that was best in other countries, he had succeeded in introducing some important innovations into the half civilized region over which he held sway. At length he had patterns of cloth hung up at the gates of the towns, and those who did not conform to the fashions thus set were docked publicly, albeit this was done in as pleasant a manner as possible, for Peter believed in being good natured with his people. They, on the other hand, loudly demurred and used the argument that what was good enough for their forefathers was good enough for them.

"Very well," said the sagacious Peter. In 1703 he gave a dinner at Moscow to celebrate the marriage of one of his jesters and insisted that it should be conducted in strict conformity with ancient usage. There had formerly been a superstitious custom of not lighting a fire on a wedding. So Peter made them do without a fire, although it was very cold. He would not give them any wine, because their forefathers never drank it. When they remonstrated he reminded them that it was a poor rule which did not work all around, and thus by his good natured greatness wheedled his people into new coats, about the hardest thing that can be done with humanity.—London Mail.

The Panacea of Nature.

Every great and commanding moment in the annals of the world is the triumph of some enthusiasm. The victories of the Arabs after Mohammed, who in a few years from a small and mean beginning established a larger empire than that of Rome, is an example. But there will dawn ere long on our politics, on our modes of living, a nobler morning than that Arabian faith in the sentiment of love.

This is the one remedy for all ills, the panacea of nature. We must be lovers, and at once the impossible becomes possible. Our age and history for these thousand years have not been the history of kindness, but of selfishness. Our distrust is very expensive. The money we spend for courts and prisons is very ill laid out. We make by distrust the thief and burglar and incendiary, and by our court and jail we keep him so. An acceptance of the sentiment of love throughout Christendom for a season would bring the felon and the outcast to our side in tears, with the devotion of his faculties to our service.—Emerson.

ALL SORTS OF ROADS

Forty-seven Kinds In a Mile Near Ithaca, N. Y.

BUILT IN 100 YARD SECTIONS

Work of the Department of Agriculture and Cornell University—Designed to Give Data on Highway Construction.

Forty-seven different sorts of road to the mile seems a pretty large order, but that is the sort of construction that the road office of the department of agriculture has been undertaking in New York state. It is a large piece of work and promises to give some of the most valuable comparative data on roadmaking that have ever been accumulated in the United States.

The work is to be done in conjunction with Cornell university and will be on a stretch of well traveled highway outside of Ithaca. The materials for the construction have all been accumulated, and the work has attracted much attention. The road will be divided into sections of 100 yards each and each of these will be built of different material and in a different manner. The road office made plans for the construction of telford and macadam sections, and these will be given a top dressing of almost every conceivable sort of road binder. The roads will be coated with asphalt, different sorts of tar, light and heavy oils and such other binders as have been brought to the attention of the department from various sections of the world.

There will be roads constructed of slag, granite and various sorts of rock, and these will be combined with different sorts of top dressings tending to form a good chemical combination for preserving the surface from wear.

It is expected that the road will be finished before the coming of cold weather, and the first report on its

USING THE ROAD ROLLER ON A MACADAM SECTION.

[From Good Roads Magazine, New York.]

wearing qualities will be made early next spring. From that time on there will be periodical inspections and reports, so that the department will know just how the various sections are standing up to the work. All of the sections will be kept in as perfect repair as possible, and a record will be made of the cost of the work, so as to give not only the original cost of building, but the annual cost of upkeep.

The cost will be calculated for the various materials used, both with and without including the transportation charges, so that it will be for any community to tell just what a certain sort of road ought to cost in its own vicinity.

The department has so far decided on the sort of roads to be built on about 4,200 feet of the experimental stretch, and the whole work probably will cover about a mile.

One of the essential features of the periodical reports that will be made will be how the different sections withstand different sorts of traffic. It has been found that some of the best roads where iron tired vehicles and horses are used are the poorest in withstanding the scouring effect of rubber automobile tires. One great object of the various sorts of binders to be experimented with is to find something that will make a permanently dustless highway and one that will not be disintegrated by motor traffic.

The experiments of the road office with what it terms "palliative" dressings have been quite wide in the past season and tolerably satisfactory. The stretch of road laid in the agricultural department grounds and treated with wood pulp sulphite liquor has stood up quite well, but it is found that it will require about two dressings per year to keep the road in good condition. As the liquor now costs more than light oil for road dressing it seems not to be an economical material to use.

What the Purchase of an Auto Did.

A farmer in western Kansas bought a $3,000 automobile recently. After he got it home he found a stretch of road a mile long in his neighborhood too sandy for his machine. So he simply took his farm hands and teams and built a mile of macadam road through that sand.

OIL MADE EARTH ROADS.

New Product Which Will Keep Dirt Highways Hard and Smooth.

Now it is possible to make smooth boulevards out of rough country roads at a comparatively small cost. Protracted rainy weather may prevail or regular "gully washers" may come, but the roads treated by the new process will keep hard and smooth even though mud is knee deep in the ditches and in the fields. A prominent oil company asserts it has solved the problem. The general manager of the fuel oil department of that company in New York city states that for several years his company has been making tests to perfect an oil which would serve the same purpose on the earth roads in the country and small towns as the asphalt road oil does on the macadamized boulevards. In April the company placed on the market the standard macadamized asphalt binder oil for earth roads. Tests have been made in different parts of the United States, and the general manager says it has been thoroughly demonstrated to be a complete success. To show his confidence in the oil, arrangements have been completed to build a small section of road at Independence, Mo.

The process of making good roads with this new brand of road oil is very simple. First the road must be plowed thoroughly and then run over several times with a harrow, after which it should be rounded with a grader and dragged to make it hard. After this it is ready for the road oil.

"The cost of this process is far less than the rock or macadamized roads, of course," said the manager. "It will cost from $500 to $900 a mile to thoroughly oil an earth road the first time. The cost after that is far less each year to keep it oiled.

"It is expected that this new process will revolutionize road building. We receive thousands of letters from all parts of the country asking for complete details. The demand has been so strong it has been necessary to have printed matter prepared on the subject. The good roads movement is spreading rapidly. It is one of the most striking evidences of continued and substantial prosperity. Good roads enhance the value of property and the pleasure of living in the community."

CONCRETE BLOCKS FOR ROADS

Only the Wheel Track Is Paved, Reducing Cost of Construction.

Orlando H. H. Dickson of Jacksonville, Fla., one of the most active champions of good roads in Duval county for many years, has received word from his attorney at Washington that a patent has been allowed on his concrete block for constructing roads. The authorities at the patent office at first refused him a patent because the method was, they thought, in conflict with other similar roads that had been patented, but Mr. Dickson employed a first class attorney, who fought the matter through to a successful issue.

The road as patented consists of heavy concrete blocks in shape not unlike common T rails laid on their sides, except that they are much larger and only three or four feet in length. They have a mortise on one end and a tenon on the reverse end and so are locked together, making them a continuous road, but easily repaired if broken, as one block can be taken out and another one inserted in a few moments' time. The groove is large enough to easily carry an automobile tire, and such a road can be built with a double track at less cost than ordinary first class country roads cost. Mr. Dickson is in correspondence with several manufacturers of machinery for concrete work, who assure him that a machine can be constructed to turn out several hundred blocks in a day at small cost for labor. A short piece of the road is now in use between Jacksonville and Apoka and has been tested enough to prove its complete adaptability as a first class road for farm vehicles or automobiles.

Crushed Coral For Roads.

General Carlos Garcia-Velez, minister from Cuba to the United States, who has been traveling in the west to promote reciprocity sentiment, says that Cuba boasts of more than 1,500 miles of the most excellent macadam roads in the world.

"We used crushed coral in our roads in Cuba," said he, "and there is no better medium for road building known. It is practically impervious to water and when rolled smooth preserves for many years its continuity. Our government has expended $15,000,000 in the past three years in this kind of improvement and will continue until we have a perfect system of roads."

Good Roads Would Help Everybody.

The good roads movement is an economic movement, a thing that somewhere and at some time touches the "pocket nerve" of every producer and every consumer in the land, a factor as indispensable as navigable inland waterways to the fundamental settlement of all freight rate questions. A real and stable macadam highroad between Denver, Kansas City and Chicago, for instance, would be of more benefit to the economic development of Colorado than forty successful appeals to the interstate commerce commission.

Good Road Campaign.

The chamber of commerce of Wichita Falls, Tex., has engaged in a campaign of education on good roads subjects. It is sending out speakers with stereopticon exhibits to lecture in county schoolhouses on the advantages of improved roads and to secure signatures to a petition to the county commissioners to call an election to vote on a $100,000 bond issue for the construction of good roads in the precinct or district.

THE LOST GERANIUM

Mrs. Wigley had no back garden whatever, only a tiny piece of ground in front with a wooden paling, and there was not much growing there, but a remarkably fine geranium, bearing magnificent trusses of a pale pink tint, stood in a pot on the window sill. This geranium was the pride of Mrs. Wigley's simple soul.

Her friend, Mrs. Hubbard, Christian name Eliza, who lived at West Winthrop, was more eulogistic than all the rest put together, for Mrs. Hubbard was a great gardener and knew a fine specimen as well as any one. Her own garden was a perfect picture, but she could not show a geranium like Sarah Wigley's, nor, indeed, anything to compare with it. She called in on a certain Saturday afternoon and paused before entering the cottage to inspect her friend's possession. It was in full bloom.

"Well, I never!" cried Eliza Hubbard. "What a waste!"

Sarah Wigley was staring out of the window, but failed to recognize her friend.

"What a waste!" reiterated Mrs. Hubbard. "She can't see me, though I am as big as life and twice as ugly, and yet the Lord lets that fine pink geranium grow and blow under her very nose. It isn't any kind of good to her, and it would be a real blessing to me."

"Is that you, Eliza?" asked Mrs. Wigley.

"If it ain't, Sarah, it's my double."

"You've been looking at my geranium, Eliza," said her friend. "Isn't it a picture?"

Mrs. Hubbard responded heartily.

"Go in, my dear," she said to Sarah Wigley. "You will catch your death of cold."

Mrs. Wigley retired. Eliza Hubbard drew the door close. Her face was crimson, her heart beat fast.

"It isn't as though she could see it," said she. "She won't even know it is gone, and if she does what does it signify? 'What the eye don't see the heart can't grieve for!'"

She seemed rather proud of the quotation. Of a certainty it had never been used in such a connection before. But pride was replaced by a dull sense of shame as she lifted up the geranium and, hiding it under her shawl, sped home with it. As she walked she planned where she would place the geranium. It would look best, she thought, between two fine white ones of which she was uncommonly proud, and there she deposited it in the darkness.

A few days later Eliza Hubbard called on Sarah Wigley. She peeped in through the window and saw her old friend sitting over the handful of fire, though the evening was sultry, shivering and holding her thin hands to the blaze.

"My gracious!" said she, stepping briskly in. "You ain't cold tonight, are you?"

Sarah Wigley rose stiffly.

"I'm a bit poorly, my dear. I ain't felt myself since my loss. You've heard tell how some tramp or the other made off with my pink geranium, haven't you?"

Mrs. Hubbard was apparently a bit poorly also, for she shivered likewise.

"I did hear some such tale," said she. "But I don't suppose you grieve much, eh, Sarah? It ain't as if your eyesight was as good as mine. You can't keep looking at the blossoms."

For answer Sarah Wigley burst into a flood of tears.

"I know I am worse than a fool to make a fuss about a geranium plant," said she, "but I suppose I am kind of low in health. Anyway, I can't help myself. I ought to be ashamed of myself," said she, "at my time of life not to have faith greater than a grain of mustard seed. Haven't I prayed the good Lord to put it into the heart of that tramp to bring me back my geranium, and who knows that he won't see fit to do it? I'd had that geranium three years, Liza, and I'd got to set store on it as though it was a child."

Eliza Hubbard cleared her throat.

"No," she said softly, "I don't. I wish I was half as good as you. But I ain't. I yield to temptation right away. I ain't more strength of mind than a baby. I say, Sarah, I wouldn't take on so if I was you. Perhaps—perhaps"—she hesitated and cleared her throat again—"perhaps you'll get your flower back again, after all."

She leaned forward and kissed her friend's wrinkled cheek.

"Good night, Sarah," said she. "I'd pray again tonight, if I was you, just as you did before."

"Yes," replied Sarah meekly, "I mean to."

She was cheered by her friend's sympathy.

The moment she rose the next morning she glanced out of the window. Did her weak eyes deceive her? Was it really the geranium she saw below? She dressed herself hastily and hurried downstairs. Yes, there was no mistake about it; it was her pet flower, in the same pot, with the splotch of red paint on its rim.

"The Lord be praised!" said she, hugging it close.

And Eliza Hubbard meanwhile, her face red with shame, clasped her hands together and offered her prayer.

"There ain't a meaner sinner on earth than me," said she, "but I never found it out till now." She stooped low and dug up her finest white geranium.

"I'm going round to Sarah's now at once," said she, "and while I'm about it I'll take this other white geranium to her as well. The pink one will look uncommon nice between them two."

INFLAMED EYE TREATMENT.

How to Make and Apply Soothing and Healing Lotions.

The preparation of soothing and healing lotions for the eyes should be known to every housekeeper, for the reason that acute pain often arises from trifling accidents, and to prevent inflammation until professional treatment is secured timely application is necessary. If there is tendency to weakness of sight or to swollen eyelids, the latter sometimes due to a low condition of the system, applications may be beneficial.

Of simple home remedies hot water is one of the best applications that can be used when the eyes are inflamed, whether from crying or from irritation caused by a foreign particle lodged on the eyeball or lid. The water should be as hot as can be endured, and two soft cloths are necessary for the treatment, as one must be wrung out and put over the eyes, while the patient lies down, and as the compress cools the other is immediately laid on. Twenty minutes of this will usually reduce the redness from a prolonged fit of crying.

Camphor water eye wash, of which one hears so much, is easily prepared by putting a grain of borax to an ounce of camphor water. It is safest to filter this or any other mixture containing a powder through brown paper, that no smallest particle shall remain. The lotion may be dropped into the eyes several times a day and at night. In extreme cases of irritability a tiny piece of linen is soaked with the solution and laid directly over the lids, renewing as it dries. If this treatment is continued through the night, as may be done with little trouble, the eyes will be improved in the morning.

Tea makes a better eye tonic than many persons know, for the tannic acid which is extracted from the leaves is an excellent astringent. For this use a strong decoction is brewed with boiling water, and the infusion stands until the liquid is cold. It is then strained and the eyes are freely bathed.

For acute inflammation that often appears when a foreign particle is not quickly removed from the eye an alum mixture is strongly recommended. A grain of the powder is put into an ounce of water, and after the former has dissolved the lotion must be filtered through brown paper. A few drops are put into the eye immediately and at night. Equally soothing is sulphate of zinc and rosewater, a grain of the former to an ounce of the latter. This, too, is dropped in night and morning.

How to Make a Sewing Box.

One of the most convenient articles a roomer can have is a sewing box—not a large affair, but something large enough to hold the numerous little articles needed every week and which really take up too much space in the bureau or trunk. It can be slipped under the bed and will not be unsightly in the room if covered. Get a pretty green and pink striped cretonne and cover the box neatly, tacking the cretonne on the inside of the box. Then line it with green linen, tacking it around the inside of the box with little white headed tacks. On the lid, which should be hinged, have a little pincushion, a place for scissors, tape measure, tracer and ruler. The heavy elastic holds them in place. Button boxes, boxes of thread and dress patches can be kept in the box portion. Save your pieces of white dimity to patch shirt waists and underclothes and have darning cotton, silkoline, also wax and a crochet hook, in the box. If one has an old suit case it could be made into an ideal sewing box, but the lining should be fastened in with trunk glue. Trim the edge of the lid with a fancy rope cord and tassel.

How to Take Olive Oil Easily.

A young woman who had suffered for years with gastric troubles was advised by her physician to take olive oil three times a day. As the pure olive oil was extremely distasteful she compromised by buttering her bread, shaking the salt and pepper over it and then soaking it in a tablespoonful of pure olive oil. In this way she easily swallowed the required three tablespoonfuls. In a comparatively short time her digestive troubles wholly disappeared, though she had stopped all medicines and treatment save deep breathing, where she used the abdominal muscles steadily and regularly for five minutes at a time. When oil is ordered medicinally it will prove less distasteful if eaten on cress or lettuce. At first a little vinegar may be taken, the amount gradually reduced until the pure oil can be eaten without nausea.

How to Remove Lint From Mahogany.

When pieces of felt are pasted to the bottom of ornaments that are to stand on a polished surface care must be taken that the surface is not damp or the varnish fresh or the lint from the felt will stick to the wood and be worse than the scratch. This happens quite often in the slides of old mahogany desks. The unsightly mark on the top can only be removed by scraping gently with a piece of fine sandpaper and then rubbing up with sweet oil and vinegar. Do not scrape hard or the varnish will be scored and the surface of the mahogany be ruined.

How to Restore Chamois Skins.

An excellent way to restore chamois skins that have become stiff and soiled is to rub them through a strong solution of cold water and household ammonia, later rinsing thoroughly in clear cold water to soften. Pin to the line to dry in the sun and then rub through the hand slightly.

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

Woman Heads Chicago Schools.

Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, who was recently appointed superintendent of Chicago's public school system, is the first woman in the school annals of that city or of other large cities to receive so important an appointment. She defeated six men who have excellent records as educators. Her salary will be $10,000 per year.

Discussing her policies, Mrs. Young said:

"I think it is time to lay more force on the old plain forms known as the three R's. You see, there have been great changes in the educational world in the last ten years. The old methods were inadequate for the modern child. An era of fads began. Much that is good was added to the old log schoolhouse curriculum, but much that was useless was added also. The time has come to put a check on the fads and to ask ourselves which of them are really useful. We must not confuse the real purposes of teaching by too many trimmings."

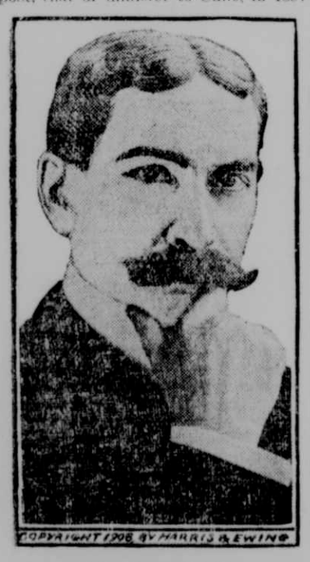
Mrs. Young was born in New York, is sixty-four years of age and has devoted her life to teaching. She has for years been head of the Cook county normal school. She began teaching in 1862, was married in 1868 and has been a widow for twenty-five years.

A Homeless Ambassador.

At a recent dinner in New York Joseph H. Choate, former ambassador from the United States to Great Britain, was speaking of the necessity for proper ambassadorial residences in foreign countries.



"When I first went to England," said Mr. Choate, "I spent weeks and weeks looking for a house. It was a most arduous service in my country's interest. I trailed all over the available sections of London, and while I was at it a London bobby arrested a man who was pursuing a most erratic and forlorn course out Hyde park way.

"'Here, my man,' said the bobby, 'what are you doing? Why don't you go home?'

"'Home?' replied the man bitterly. 'I have no home. I am the American ambassador.'"

New Ambassador to Mexico.

Henry Lane Wilson, who succeeds David E. Thompson, resigned, as ambassador to Mexico, goes to his new post with a long diplomatic experience to draw upon. In fact, he comes from a diplomatic family. His father, the late James Wilson, was a United States minister to Venezuela and died in that republic. The new ambassador was appointed to his first diplomatic post, that of minister to Chile, in 1897 by President McKinley. In 1905, in recognition of his services, he was made minister to Belgium, one of the most desirable diplomatic posts in the grade of minister. He now takes a step higher to ambassadorial rank.

Mr. Wilson is a native of Indiana and after leaving college engaged in journalism, becoming editor and proprietor of the Lafayette Journal. Subsequently he studied law and about twenty-five years ago removed to Spokane. There he not only built up a fine practice, but became wealthy through fortunate investments in real estate and in the banking business.

SICK HEADACHE CURES.

How to Relieve This Most Distressing Form of Illness.

Sick headache, while not dangerous, is one of the most disagreeable forms of illness. Some women are subject to it at such frequent intervals that they are incapacitated for several days at a time.

Unless the headache is known to come from some functional disorder it can generally be traced to impaired digestion or a sluggish liver. These must be treated in the interims of the headaches, as at the time nothing but alleviating remedies are possible.

A treatment that is often successful is to abstain from red meats for a time and to be careful about taking foods that ferment easily. One man who had doctored for years for sick headaches was cured by his wife seeing to it that he drank a cup of hot water with a half teaspoonful of salt in it as soon as he arose in the morning.

A half lemon in a glass of cold water taken night and morning is another remedy that has proved helpful to many.

During the attack rest and quiet are imperative. Lie down in a darkened room, drink quantities of hot water and apply either a hot water bottle or an ice bag to the temples and the base of the brain.

Cloths rung out of hot witch hazel often bring quick relief. Headache cologne if rubbed on the temples in time acts as a preventive, while some sufferers are helped by taking a cathartic at the first symptom.

In severe cases five or ten minutes' treatment with an electric battery is invaluable. This is better than massage, as the pressure is sometimes too strong when the headache is bad.

In the first stages of sick headache it can often be averted by taking abdominal and neck exercises and by putting a mustard plaster over the stomach.

How to Make Kitchen Aprons.

To the woman who does her own work there is great satisfaction in a neat, well made apron, and such a necessary article may be easily and quickly made at home and prove much more attractive than the ready made ones. An admirable apron is cut with a panel front that extends to the bust and fitted side gores that are finished with a band of buttons around the waist. A bias band around the neck is slightly shaped and buttoned to the panel front, but may be slipped on over the head without unbuttoning. There is a shaped pocket at the side, and if one is desired on the front at the bust it may be added. Denims and percales in solid colors or checked ginghams are usually chosen for work aprons, but for more elaborate ones dotted or crossbarred muslins are very dainty and launder well. The latter may be touched up with lace edged ruffles put on with beading through which colored ribbons are run, pockets set on with fine featherstitching or embroidery, and instead of the plain belt about the waist ribbon strings may be substituted.

How to Clean White Leather Shoes.

Soft white leather shoes can be cleaned in gasoline, and when not too badly soiled they clean nicely with almost any white powder. Pique or linen shoes should be washed, but often if merely dusty they can be cleaned with white chalk or flour. The regular white shoe polish can be used on them. A white polish is made with whiting and water, made medium thick and applied with a cloth. Rub the shoes free from dry powder after they have dried. Chamois bootees clean nicest in rather strong ammonia water. They should be washed in a suds with ammonia in it and rinsed in ammonia water and wiped dry with a towel. Do not dry chamois near artificial heat.

How to Overcome Cooking Odors.

A volatile oil rich in sulphur is contained in onions, turnips and cabbage. When these vegetables are boiled this oil spreads over the surface of the water and sends its fumes to the far corners of the house. If the vegetables are soaked in salted water for an hour before cooking the trouble will be less. If they are kept at the boiling point for three-quarters of an hour, but not allowed to boil, they will become tender, yet their odor will not permeate the house. If boiling for a short time is preferred as a method of cooking, a crust of very hard bread dropped into the water for ten minutes will absorb most of the oil as it rises, when the crust may be removed.

How to Get Rid of Ants.

To get rid of ants in a kitchen use on the floor over which they have to pass a spray composed of coal oil, ninety-five parts, and crystals of carbolic acid, five parts; also spray their nest if it can be found. Persist in this treatment and they will leave the place. Do not get the spray on articles of food. The spray must be exceedingly fine. Several hand sprayers are on the market and are ordinarily used in distributing disinfectants. The vapor from this solution is fatal to the ants.

How to Prevent Rusting.

It is better to use wooden pegs in bathrooms or kitchens, where damp towels or cloths are apt to be hung; otherwise the linen may rust from the iron. If iron hooks are already in place and it is not convenient to change them, give them a coat of white enamel paint. It prevents danger of rusting and is much less unsightly against the paper. If the linen has already been rusted it may be removed by rubbing with lemon juice and salt.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

Caring For Supplies.

Keep roasted coffee in tin or glass and tightly covered. When exposed to the air or kept too long it loses both aroma and strength. For these reasons it should be bought in limited quantities. On the other hand, green coffee improves with age.

Store salt in a stone jar in a dry place. When desirable to keep butter any length of time wrap each roll in clean muslin, then pack in brine that will float an egg and weight down with a heavy plate.

Cover the top of the jar closely. Lard should be kept in bright tin pails or cans. Soda and baking powder should be left in the original packages and kept in a cool, dry place.

Soap should be purchased in quantities, unwrapped and stacked on a shelf to harden. When well dried out its lasting qualities are about doubled.

Retrocession of Gums.

Tincture of myrrh may be used to harden the gums or it may be rubbed on them with a soft flannel cloth or brushed on them with a camel's hair brush. In using powder or paste on the teeth be careful to remove every particle from them, just as if it were food.

If the supply of paste or powder gives out make use of castile or some other bland white soap until dental reenforcement can be provided. Soap does not make an agreeable substitute as far as taste goes, but it is cleanly, and some of the prettiest, whitest teeth seem never to have been cleaned or brushed with anything except soap, with perhaps an occasional interruption of powdered charcoal.

Washing Pink Garments.

The following is a good plan for keeping pink in garments—that extremely perishable color: Pour boiling water over a piece of red cheesecloth, let it stand for a few minutes till the color is all out of the cheesecloth, then pour the dye into a pail of cold water and, after washing and thoroughly rinsing the garment, put it into the dye water and allow it to remain for an hour. Then wring it out and hang it to dry. No matter how old and faded the material, this method gives it a perfectly even coloring.

Combination Chair.

The combination dining chair for infants and adults herewith shown is a high chair possessing all the practical features of the ordinary dining chair. It looks like and is an ordinary dining chair when folded, but simply lifting back the seat converts it into a high chair of the standard height, tray and all. When in the latter position the infant's seat is supported by steel bars of the Jack-in-the-box type, and that is what the chair really is.—Popular Mechanics.

CHAIR OPEN AND CLOSED.

Baby's Bathtub.

A fine substitute for the expensive rubber bathtubs for infants may be made from a yard of rubber sheeting and a clothes basket. Saw off the handles from the basket; take heavy rubber sheeting and cover the top of the basket, leaving a depression in the sheeting. Use a rope and staple to fasten it to the outside rim of the basket. In this improvised bathtub the smallest infant may be laid for a bath with no danger of slipping.

Bananas and Bacon.

Chill and broil slices of bacon, then transfer it to a hot platter. Have ready two or three large ripe bananas peeled and cut into rather thick rounds. Drain off nearly all the bacon grease, return the frying pan to the fire and turn the bananas into it. Sprinkle lightly with sugar and brown the slices on both sides. Heap the bacon in the center of the platter and arrange the border of the bananas around it. Serve very hot.

Remedy For Sties.

Sties are annoying small tumors which come upon the edges of the eye lid, and when they recur frequently are caused by some constitutional difficulty that requires internal treatment. Like fever blisters, they give warning of their coming, and if touched in time with nitrate of silver or a cold gold ring may sometimes be driven away.

Cheese Straws.

Grate strong cheese till you have one-quarter of a pound, then add one-quarter pound butter, good one-quarter pound flour, a pinch of salt and a dash of cayenne pepper. Mix and roll out and cut in finger strips and bake slowly to a delicate brown.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson VII.—Fourth Quarter, For Nov. 14, 1909.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Acts xxviii, 11-31. Memory Verses, 30, 31—Golden Text, Rom. i, 16—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

After three months at Malta of testifying of the Lord Jesus, the result of which eternity will declare, they proceeded toward Rome, tarrying three days at Syracuse, in Sicily, one day at Rhegium, in the extreme south of Italy, and seven days at Puteoli, where they found believers. The brethren at Rome, having heard of Paul's arrival at Puteoli, came out to meet him as far as Appii forum and the three taverns, thus encouraging him and causing thanksgiving to God. Then they returned with him to Rome. There is a suggestion here of the way it will be at the coming of the Lord. When He comes to the air on His way back to earth the saints shall all meet him in the air and later be manifested with Him in glory, when He shall come to the same Olivet from which He ascended (I Thess. iv, 16-18; Col. iii, 4; Zech. xiv, 4). Arriving at Rome, the other prisoners were delivered to the captain of the guard but Paul was permitted to dwell by himself with a soldier who kept him. For two whole years he dwelt in his own hired house and received all that came to him, preaching the kingdom of God and teaching the things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ with the most perfect freedom (16, 30, 31). We shall meditate more fully on this delightful occupation presently. After three days in Rome Paul called the chief of the Jews together that he might state his case to them, which he briefly did in facts with which we are already familiar, and he added "For the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain" (20).

In Joel iii, 16, we read that in the time of trouble the Lord will be the hope of His people and the strength of the children of Israel. In I Tim. i, 1, Paul says that he is an apostle of Jesus Christ by the commandment of God our Saviour and Lord Jesus Christ our hope, but in the New Testament I think we are safe in saying that "hope" always refers to the coming of Christ for His saints, as in Tit. ii, 13; Heb. vi, 18-20; Rom. viii, 23-25. The hope of Israel would then be the coming of Christ as Israel's Messiah to make of them a righteous nation and bless all nations through them. This implies Jesus, as the seed of David, risen from the dead, and also the resurrection of the saints according to Dan. xii, 1, 2. When Paul stated his case before these Jews of Rome they said that they had not heard of his troubles in Jerusalem, nor had any one spoken any harm of him, but they would like to hear what he had to say about this sect, which they knew was everywhere spoken against (22). It was foretold that it would be so (Ps. cxviii, 22; Isa. viii, 14, 15; liii, 1-3; Luke ii, 34), and to this day it is so, for our Lord is still rejected and by the world disowned, but the strange thing is that, even among those who accept the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour and expect to spend eternity with Him and are with more or less zeal seeking to serve Him now, there is such antipathy to anything concerning His second coming or the future of Israel as a righteous nation to bring blessing to all nations.

It may truly be said that as the hope of His church or the hope of Israel He is still spoken against by those who, like these Jews, profess to honor His word. Well, they appointed him a day and came to his lodging, and from morning till evening he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus both out of the law of Moses and out of the prophets (23). For two years he continued to do this with all who came to him. He had but one topic—the Lord Jesus Christ and His kingdom. He had but one book—the Scriptures. If the Scriptures are not wholly and absolutely reliable, then preachers are simply lecturers, talking out of their own hearts their own messages, which are all vain words, for, apart from the word of God, which is forever settled in heaven (Ps. cxix, 89), we have no revelation of the will of God and the purpose of God; but, thank God, there are many left who, like Paul, believe God that all things shall be just as He has told us and who, like our blessed Lord, find in all the Scriptures, the law, the prophets and the Psalms, the things concerning Himself (Luke xxiv, 27, 44). The teacher of the Bible should be able to begin at Moses and from all the book point out the predictions concerning the sufferings of Christ and the glory that shall follow as they are set forth in shadow and symbol and in plain statements. Gen. iii, 15, has both in one verse; Gen. iii, 21, is full of the sufferings and the benefit to us; Gen. iii, 24, talks of the resurrection and the glory.

The story of Abel tells us in type of suffering and of the blood that speaketh better things than that of Abel. The story of Enoch, in the light of the epistle of Jude, tells of suffering and of the glory of translation. In Noah and Lot we learn, with our Lord's comment, of the judgments which must precede the kingdom. In Abraham and his son we see the great sacrifice and learn to look for the city. Joseph helps us to be patient and to believe that every step, however great the darkness, is a step toward the throne.

How to Iron a White Skirt.

To iron a white underskirt begin at the strings and waistband, then take the bottom of the skirt. Iron all round on the right side with a very hot iron, then iron the first frill. This frill will probably have sewed work or lace. In either case it must be nicely ironed on the wrong side. Probably above the frill there will be tucks or hems. They must next be ironed over the wrong side and afterward on the right. Rub the iron the way of the hem. If there is a second frill the cloth under the frill is ironed at the same time as the hem or tucks and the frill again ironed on the wrong side. Put skirt board into the skirt and place each end of the board on the table, thus allowing the skirt to hang over the board. It can thus be easily ironed and nicely finished. Afterward fold it lengthwise and hang up to air.

How to Preserve Your Sight.

A noted oculist advises against using the eyes immediately after waking. Therefore the habit of many young girls of reading or studying in bed is injurious. It is harmful to use the eyes when sleepy, as it is a great strain upon the muscles. If one must read or write when drowsy rise occasionally and bathe the eyes with hot or cold water. Remember that a quick change from a dark room to a brilliant light is a strain upon the eyes.

How to Clean Bottles.

To clean bottles fill them with scraps of newspaper torn into small bits, and put a little soapsuds in the water. Shake the bottle vigorously until the paper has been dissolved to a pulp, and then rinse the bottle thoroughly. You will be surprised how even the dirtiest bottle can be cleaned easily and thoroughly and made bright and shining.

How to Destroy Potato Bugs.

Place boards here and there among the potato vines and on them lay slices of raw potatoes. The bugs will go for them and can be destroyed. In a week's time, after a daily slaughter, no bugs will be in sight. It might be well to use paris green on the potato slices, thus saving the work of killing the bugs.

Wild Duck Shooting.

Tuesday was an excellent day for wild duck shooting, the weather conditions being propituous, and the game on some of the streams and lakes was exceedingly plentiful. One hunter bagged nine beautiful birds, while some others were not so lucky, bringing home from one to half a dozen. Yesterday morning the ducks were still in the vicinity and a few were shot.

[illegible] HAS EVIDENCE OF ELECTION FRAUD

Movement For Fair Elections No Longer Partisan.

District Attorney John C. Rose of counsel for the Republican State Central Committee has in his possession the evidence upon which action will be taken for alleged violations of the Wilson law at the last election. Such facts as Mr. Rose has have been secured by representative Republicans from all sections of the State and by Independent Democrats. Most of the facts concern the extraordinary lengths to which the Democrats went in order to keep the Republicans in ignorance of the making-up of the official ballot.

"These facts," said Republican Chairman Hanna of the Republican Committee, "will be digested by Mr. Rose before any action is taken. After he has gone carefully into the situation the Republicans will outline a plan of action. Wherever it is possible to institute criminal proceedings they will be instituted. In some of the counties the election itself will be contested. This is particularly true of Queen Anne's county. Charges will be preferred against the Election Supervisors in several of the counties, and the Governor will be asked to give us a hearing on the facts we wish to submit. All the facts will be marshaled with the purpose of attacking the validity of the Wilson law itself, with a view of having the whole thing set aside.

"This movement has progressed beyond the point where it can be regarded as partisan in its nature. Agencies that are not Republican are working with us to accomplish the ends which we have in view."

As a result of the conference held Monday at Republican State headquarters between leaders of the party, representatives of the Wilson law counties and several prominent independent Democrats, including Archibald H. [illegible] and DeCourcy W. Thom, it was decided to put squarely up to Governor Crothers the abuses practiced in the Wilson law counties preceding and during last election day, when fraud was alleged. The Governor will be asked to give a public hearing to charges that will be made against Democratic election supervisors in several of the counties.

Some of the men who attended the conference said that the Republicans and independents, whom the Reform League will give assistance, are determined that there shall be honest elections in Maryland, and a campaign will be organized for the purpose of arousing the people of the State to demand a discontinuance of the abuses that have been practiced. An effort will be made to interest public sentiment to the extent that the approaching Legislature will be on its good behavior and pass legislation that will be for the enlightenment of the people of the State. Trick ballots will be denounced, and if the General Assembly cannot be prevailed upon to amend the Wilson law in the counties affected by it, strong efforts will be made to prevent the extension of the system to any other section of the State.

It is said evidence will be produced before Governor Crothers of violations of the election law of a character that he as chief executive of the State cannot afford to ignore. It is desired that the hearing before the Governor be public, in order that the people can learn through the testimony printed in the newspapers just what the conditions are in some of the counties. It is expected some of the Election Supervisors will be promptly removed from office by the Governor if, indeed, they escape criminal prosecution.

It is proposed to show that the issue should be a moral rather than a political one, and for this reason an appeal will be made to the fair-minded people, irrespective of party, to rise up and protest against tampering with the electorate. These conditions can be made of fraud at the recent election the screws will be put on, but even in case nobody is sent to jail the promoters of the fair-election plan will feel that they have been successful if an object lesson is established and safeguards are placed about the electorate that will insure against fraud at future election.

Just what date the Governor will fix for the hearing has not been decided. Those who will insist that he shall listen to the testimony concerning alleged fraud to be offered wish to have him place himself on record as Governor of the State as to just what he will and will not stand for.

PRESIDENT TAFT GETS THE DATES MIXED

He Nearly Cheats the Nation Out of a Thanksgiving Day.

Washington, Nov. 15—President Taft issued his first Thanksgiving Day proclamation today, naming November 25 as Thanksgiving. Knowing that this is one of the new wrinkles in the administration of each President, some persons thought it possible that the President might, in a moment of absent-mindedness, name Wednesday or Friday as the day.

This the prseident did not do, as he remembered that Thanksgiving must come on Thursday, but some one connected with the White House staff came very near giving the American public no Thanksgiving Day this year at all. The President's proclamation, when issued for publication, was dated November 15, and read:

"Therefore, I hereby appoint Thursday, the 15th day of November next, as a day of general thanksgiving," etc. It was pointed out that this made Thanksgiving come on November 15, 1910, whereupon copies of the proclamation were quickly corrected

The following is the text of the proclamation:

"BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

"A PROCLAMATION.

"The season of the year has returned when, in accordance with the reverent custom established by our forefathers, the people of the United States are wont to meet in their usual places of worship on a day of thanksgiving appointed by the Civil Magistrate to return thanks to God for the great mercies and benefits which they have enjoyed.

"During this past year we have been highly blest. No great calamities of flood or tempest or epidemic sickness have befallen us. We have lived in quietness, undisturbed by wars or rumors of wars. Peace and the plenty of bounteous crops and of great industrial production animate a cheerful and resolute people to all the renewed energies of beneficent industry and material and moral progress. It is altogether fitting that we should humbly and gratefully acknowledge the divine source of these blessings.

"Therefore, I hereby appoint Thursday, the 25th day of November, as a day of general thanksgiving, and I call upon the people on that day, laying aside their usual vocations, to repair to their churches and unite in appropriate services of praise and thanks to Almighty God.

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done at the city of Washington this 15th day of November, in the Year of Our Lord, One Thousand Nine Hundred and Nine, and of the Independence of the United States, the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth. WILLIAM H. TAFT.

"By the President:

"P. C. Knox, Secretary of State."

DON'T MARRY THE MAN WHO IS DIFFERENT

From Yourself, if You Wish To Sail Happily Over Matrimonial Seas.

Perhaps there has never been an unhappy marriage that has called forth as much general sympathy for the victim of it as has that of James M. Barrie, who has just obtained a divorce from his wife. It seems too bad that the creator of "Peter Pan" and "Sentimental Tommy" and "The Little Minister" and "Libby," and all that dear and whimsical company of fireside folk should not himself have known the joy of a happy and peaceful fireside of his own.

But, now that it is all over, one sees how such a marriage was almost bound to end in disaster, for Barrie and his wife came from such different environments, of such different stock, with such different habits and such a different viewpoint of life that they could no more blend harmoniously than oil and water. Of course, the climax of their matrimonial tragedy came in the wife's unfaithfulness, but before that had come the friction that had worn in two the bond that bound them to each other.

Barrie came of the strictest sect of "auld licht" Presbyterians. His wife was an actress.

He was raised in the dire poverty that has made the Scotch peasant the closest fisted person in the world. She belonged to a class whose hands are always wide open and who are as prodigal of money as if it grew on trees.

She must have shocked his rigid ideas a thousand times a day.

His narrow ways must have grated continually on her nerves, and so at last the woman's heart turned back to her own kind, the gay, lavish, easy-going, laughter-loving people to whom she belonged.

The fate of the Barries has in it a moral that is as poignant as any taught by his plays or stories, and its lesson is that if you want to be happy when married to marry within your own class, a person who has been brought up with the same ideas and habits and standards of conduct that you have.

We see this rule transgressed every day, and every day we are called upon to shed tears over the ensuing disaster, for the attraction of opposites that is strong enough to make us marry is only exceeded by the repulsion of opposites that makes us fight after we are married to the individual with whom we have nothing in common.

When an elderly widower with grown children marries a flighty young girl, who need be surprised if it isn't long before the tongue of gossip begins to wag over their troubles?

He is sober and sedate and has reached the time of life when he wants to sit by the fire in slippered ease of an evening. She is gay and frivolous, mad for excitement and amusement, and so young that her feet ache for the dance.

When a piously brought up young man, one who is used to seeing his mother and sisters find their diversion in missionary meetings and sewing societies, and who himself is a Y. M. C. A. man and an usher at church, falls in love with a chorus girl and marries her, don't we all shrug our shoulders and say, "I told you so," when we learn of the subsequent divorce proceedings?

When a stingy man picks out for a wife the most gorgeously and extravagantly dressed girl of his acquaintance, who is amazed when a report leaks out that tney quarrel like Kilkenny cats over the bills?

When a narrow little provincial girl marries a city rounder, who is astonished that she weeps her eyes out over his habits and nags him to death about them?

When a woman who is as bound to have love as a flower is to have sunshine, and who has been petted and caressed and flattered at home, marries a man who is a human iceberg, and the head of the Amalgamated Knockers' Club, is it surprising that she either dies of a broken heart or runs off with some man who will give her the affection she craves?

Yet people go along light-heartedly and debonairly making these kinds of matches—matches that are so inevitably bound to make both parties miserable—that it would seem that a three-headed donkey, and not Cupid, presided at the average wedding.

It is a curious thing that only in matrimony do we demand the impossible. The most foolish of us would not go to a butcher shop to buy diamonds, or look in an ash barrel for flowers, yet we marry a man or woman expecting to find the very qualities that they advertise they do not keep in stock.

The one and only secret of happiness in married life is congeniality. A man and woman can be perfectly blissful together if they have the same interests and aspirations. They can pass a life of perfect contentment working like slaves and denying themselves everything if they have a passion for accumulation, but they will be utterly wretched if one wants to idle and spend and the other to toil and save.

So, a couple may live an ideal life together, either going to prayer meeting or doing first nights at the theatre if both find their amusement in the same thing, but if one takes to prayer meeting and the other to the theater they are bound to come to disaster.

Of course, Nature, which cares nothing for the individual, but everything for the race, is at the bottom of making two entirely dissimilar people fall in love with each other, but after she has tied the knot she deserts them. She doesn't bother to blend together the two inharmonious natures that she has doomed to live side by side. She simply leaves them to fight it out as best they can.

It is perhaps asking a great deal to suggest that one thwart Nature, but to marry one's own kind is the only chance to be married. The ones we love longest and enjoy being with most are not our opposites, but our doubles—those who think our thoughts, speak our language and agree with us instead of contradicting us on every point.—Baltimore Star.

THE DEATH RECORD.

WILLIAM M. LOHR.

Wm. M. Lohr was born at Ralphton, Jenner township, Somerset county, Pa., May 13, 1842, and baptized in infancy. At the age of fourteen he was confirmed in St. James Ev. Lutheran church of the Jenner pastorate. In this faith he remained true unto the end, which was on Nov. 4, 1909, aged 67 years, 5 months and 21 days. He leaves a widow, four children and twenty-two grandchildren to mourn his departure. The burial took place at Addison on Nov. 7, and was conducted by the pastor, M. Grossman. Mr. Lohr had a wide circle of friends. He was a successful farmer, and at one time a school teacher. Garrett county, Md., had honored him by making him her treasurer. He served two years in defense of the Union, and was the commander of the Addison Post for some years. His absence is keenly felt both in Divine service and Sunday school, which he attended regularly and contributed liberally. He was assistant superintendent in Sunday school and councilman in the congregation.

MRS. DEBORAH ARONHALT.

Died, at her home, November 3, after several weeks' illness, Mrs. Deborah I. Aronhalt, wife of Mr. James Aronhalt, of near Bayard, W. Va., aged fifty years. Mrs. Aronhalt was a worthy companion, a kind and affectionate mother, and as a neighbor she was an example in that she ever strove to live peaceably with all, never wishing to offend any, always sympathetic and ever ready to help in case of distress anywhere. She leaves a husband, three sons and one daughter, two brothers and one sister. After brief services at her home, conducted by Rev. I. W. Abernathy, she was laid to rest in the family burying ground beside a little son who had preceded her to the grave several years ago. While we greatly miss this kind friend and neighbor, we thus enter into full sympathy with the bereft family. A FRIEND.

PETER BROWN.

Mr. Peter Brown, of Cove, died Saturday night at the Western Maryland Hospital, Cumberland, to which place he was taken several days previous suffering from peritonitis. He was a merchant of Cove and leaves a wife and four small children. The body was taken to the Butler undertaking rooms in Cumberland and Sunday afternoon was shipped to his home at Cove for interment.

TO TAKE STEPS TO MARK THE BRADDOCK ROAD

D. A. R.'s Propose to Erect Markers Along Historic Highway.

A movement has been started among patriotic societies of Maryland and the District of Columbia to mark the old Braddock road, leading from Baltimore to the Ohio. The idea originated with Mrs. Croxall, agent of the Janet Montgomery Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, in Montgomery county, Md., and has been presented by her to the notice of other chapters of the same societies.

Mrs. Croxall's proposition is to outline the road for the most part with cairns of the special rocks or marbles indigenous to the different localities along the way. This is the plan followed by the Western Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution in marking the Santa Fe trail. As a practical inauguration of the movement the Janet Montgomery Chapter will shortly make a pilgrimage to the "Devil's Feather Bed," near Gaithersburg, Md., and there erect a cairn of the beautiful white quartz rock with which that section abounds.

What may be considered a preface to this work was accomplished two years ago by the placing of a large stone upon the ancient track within the grounds of the new Episcopal Cathedral at St. Albans, almost at the border of Montgomery, by the Society of Colonial Wars in the District of Columbia. Nature had already provided the first marker for the old trail in the gigantic mass of rock standing well within the limits of Washington, upon the banks of the Potomac, near the mouth of Rock Creek. The modern name of the pile is the Key of Keys, but in tradition it is known as Braddock's Rock, for it was here that Braddock's troops first crossed the Potomac upon their march westward through Maryland upon their ill starred expedition against Fort Duquesne.

But it is not simply as a reminder of Braddock's march that the Daughters of the American Revolution would save the old route from obliteration. When the United States built its first highway, the National road, the general alignment of Braddock's route was followed. Braddock's road in turn was merely a widening and deepening of the Indian trail used by Washington for his expedition into the Ohio Valley two years before.

For a few years after Braddock's defeat the old trail remained unused except by scouting parties. When at the close of the Revolution the great tide of immigration swept westward by far the greater proportion followed the old trail Maryland as early as 1795 passed a law for the widening and straightening of the ancient track.

Similar laws were passed by successive legislatures up to 1802, when by the building of the National highway over its course it became the main artery of communication or travel from Baltimore to Ohio and the forerunner of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway.

Exactly when Braddock's road ceased to be a distinctive highway it is hard to say. Certain portions are used to the present day. It would even be possible to pursue it step by step for its entire length through Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and Pennsylvania.

Fifty Thousand Voted for Rayner.

The tabulation of the Senatorial primaries shows that without any effort over 50,000 Democratic votes were cast in favor of Hon. Isidor Rayner for United States Senator.

Senator Rayner had no opposition whatever, and several days before the election he published a card stating that the vote at the Senatorial primary would not be necessary in his case and directing the attention of the voters to vote for the Legislature. Notwithstanding this, the returns show that over 50,000 Democrats went to the polls to testify their approval of his course in the Senate and to express their sentiment in favor of his re-election. His friends say he could have easily polled the whole party vote if it had been required.

Dedication.

The Baptist church at Loch Lynn Heights will be dedicated Sunday, Nov. 21. The morning service will begin at 10, the afternoon service at 2 and the evening service at 7 o'clock.

The speakers will be Rev. B. H. Payne, of Marietta, O.; Rev. E. J. Woofter, of Salem, W. Va., and Rev. E. B. Hatcher, D.D., of Baltimore. There will be fine music.

AID TO MERCHANTS.

Co-operative Delivery a Success Wherever Rightly Tried.

HOW THE SYSTEM WORKS.

Method Followed In City of Twelve Thousand Would Prove Effective In Places of Other Sizes—Reduces Expenses and Losses From Deadbeats.

One method by which merchants may reduce expenses and at the same time increase trade is by the co-operative delivery system. It also furnishes a protection against deadbeats. It has been successful wherever tried on right lines. To avoid complications drivers should not be allowed to solicit orders, though they may take orders and deliver them to the firm voluntarily dictated by the customer. The concern should not be organized for profit, and certain taxes can be avoided in most states if it is incorporated as a non-money making company. It is got up by the merchants of the town, each of whom pays a certain agreed rate for the delivery of packages. A sliding scale of prices may be agreed on for packages of different sizes and character. In some towns the flat rate of a certain charge per month has been tried, but is not so satisfactory as the charge per piece.

To give the detailed workings of the system it is well to take a specific instance. I have before me an interview published in the Illinois Retail Merchants' Journal, which it takes from another paper, but does not give the name of this exchange nor that of the merchant interviewed. The city in which the experiment is tried is one of about 12,000 inhabitants. I quote the most salient points in the interview:

"In starting a central delivery system the first thing to do is to route out your city and number each route. About a week before you open the central station give each driver his route and have him call on each customer on his route. He can explain the purpose of the system and leave at each house a copy of a letter outlining the entire plan, also a route card. Have him mark on the route card the number of the route the customer is on, so that in ordering goods the customer can give the number of the route and address.

"Our central station is located in a central part of town. We have a large building, about 88 by 68 feet, and the wagons drive in one door and out another. They come in order—first No. 1, and No. 2, and so on. On one side of the wall there is a large distributing counter. There is a space for each route on this counter, and each man arranges the deliveries for his route under the direction of a superintendent.

"We make five deliveries a day, three in the morning and two in the afternoon. We deliver about two miles in each direction, and the routes are so arranged that the driver delivers up one street and down another, so that he works both ways, going out and coming in.

"Their first trip in the morning is to the different stores, where they select the goods for the first delivery. These orders are taken to the central station and distributed, and all wagons leave there at the same time. On their way back to the station they again call at the stores and gather the orders for the next trip.

"This system is also helpful in keeping track of 'deadbeat' customers. If you have a customer who owes you a bill and then stops trading with you and you cannot find out where he is trading, by going to the central station you can ascertain what store the goods are coming from. And, again, you may have customers who refuse to pay for goods claiming they never received them. If the goods were delivered the superintendent can in a very few minutes produce the coupon which was attached to the order showing the date delivered, who delivered it and the number of packages.

"We also have a lot of outside deliveries for people not in the company. The revenue from this is what we call 'velvet.'

"Our system nets us a saving of from 20 to 60 per cent as compared with the old method of delivering, and we would not now do without it for anything."

While this experiment was tried in a city of 12,000, there is no reason why it should not work equally well in a city or village of almost any size, provided, of course, it is large enough to require deliveries at all. It might be well to add that the merchant giving the above interview was himself the mover in the matter of starting the co-operative delivery system in his town.

Calling the other merchants together, he laid the matter before them, and a committee was appointed to investigate. The report was favorable, and the enterprise was started with twenty-four members. Firms having delivery wagons and horses of their own put these in on an agreed basis. Other wagons were bought, each firm contributing its share. The effort was a success from the start.

Co-operation is absolutely essential in building up a town or in winning trade. It is the most effective method of fighting catalogue houses. It is the co-operation of merchants in a commercial club or some kindred organization that is the secret of the growth and advancement of so many American cities. This system of co-operative deliveries is but another feature of the same work.

TIPS ON SANDWICHES.

How to Make Them Appetizing With Little Trouble.

The housewife who learns the art of making sandwiches is always well fortified against problems when serving an informal luncheon to guests. Close grained bread should be used, for coarse bread will crumble. And bread baked in round tins is preferable to that cut into slices and cut with a biscuit cutter, since the baked edges preserve the shape. Moist fillings should be laid between lettuce leaves, and by buttering the bread the moisture cannot penetrate it, making it soggy. Melted butter can be used if it is not soft enough to spread. A salmon sandwich is a tempting article of food and should be half mixed with chopped boiled egg and very thin slices of olives and pickles. The wise hostess will make two different kinds of sandwiches, some with the mixture moistened with vinegar or lemon juice, others without, for many persons cannot take acids. Practically all meat sandwiches are extremely rich, and strong condiments are noticeable in the filling, especially mustard and catchup. While white meat makes a delicate sandwich, yet the darker meats, mixed with mayonnaise and other relishes, are more appetizing in every way.

When hot sandwiches are served at a noonday luncheon at home the contents of the sandwiches are placed between the layers of bread and fried, or the bread is toasted and covered with a cooked meat filling, then covered with buttered toast and served hot. Peanuts mixed with mayonnaise and sliced egg make a good sandwich. They make a fruit sandwich which is well liked by those who are fond of fruit and bread. The filling consists of chopped dates, figs, lemon juice and ground nuts, lightly mixed with tart jelly. The bread is buttered for this. Candied fruits are often used, but often the sandwich is a bread cake, more of the angel food cake variety, filled with fruits and moistened with cherry juice or the liquor from preserved pineapple or peaches.

How to Wash Windows.

Windows should never be washed while the sun shines directly on them, for this is sure to cause streaks to appear on them. Of course the glass may be wiped dry as soon as it is washed, but this is twice the work, since one must rub until the glass is perfectly dry. This is not necessary if the sun is not shining on the windows, for it does not add anything to the appearance of the windows when finished. If the glass is badly soiled and it is necessary to apply a good deal of water to remove the dust and stains, it is better to wash with plenty of water and then let the glass dry and then sponge the window off again. This will remove all the streaks left by the first washing. Should the glass become too dry before you return to finish the drying it may be sponged over again with the sponge wrung dry out of hot water. Always let the window stand for a few minutes after washing it before drying it and it will dry much easier and in but half the time.

How to Clean Jewelry.

Small articles of jewelry, especially the silver kind, will be difficult to clean in the hands of an inexperienced person, since dull silver is more difficult to restore to its former beauty than gold. The best method is to immerse the brooch, ring or pin in a solution of cyanide of potash, procurable at any drug store. Do not let the liquid touch the fingers. Let remain in the liquid for two minutes, remove and wash in hot soapsuds. This will be sufficient to restore the brilliancy of the metal. The best method of cleaning chain bracelets or necklaces of gold is to make a paste of ammonia and whiting and rub this into the tiny links with a soft brush, afterward washing the pieces in soft water and polishing with a chamois.

How to Bake Cookies.

If your family bankers after small cakes it will be found to be a paying investment to have special baking sheets made. Have your tinner cut flat pieces of sheet iron with edges turned up about a quarter of an inch or less. These should just fit the oven, but must not be so tight as to stick. Two or three of such sheets will suffice for a good sized baking, and there is no time lost scraping pans to regrease for a second lot. The flat sides make it easier to slip a knife under and slip the cake from the pan. For chocolate drops or cookies buttered papers can be used on the sheets.

How to Pad an Ironing Board.

The next time the blanket on your ironing board wears out and you must hunt a new one to replace it try substituting newspapers. Choose thick Sunday editions, the uncolored sections, and tack to the board so that the sheets lie smoothly and of any desired thickness. Cover with muslin in the usual way. Newspapers not only have the merit of being more easily put on and causing your board to be more even, but they can be quickly and easily replaced at no cost.

How to Make a Nail Hold.

Where a wall is so soft and loose that a nail driven into it for a picture or bracket will not bear the weight of the latter it may be easily remedied. Mix a little plaster of paris in a teacup with some water. Scoop out a small hole in the wall with a screwdriver, fill it with the plaster and then insert the nail gently. It will set quite hard in a minute or so, and the nail will then be perfectly secure.

BETTER TILLAGE DID IT.

What can be accomplished by the mere fact of a thorough cultivation of the soil has been brought to the writer's attention very forcibly during the past few weeks. A fifty or sixty acre field belonging to a farm which has been share rented for the past twenty years and hence gradually robbed of its fertility—for it has not been manured or replenished with clover—was given a deep plowing and this year planted to corn. Prior to this year the field had been sort of an agricultural byword, little being expected of it and as little being realized from it. This season, however, different tactics were followed. The field was put in good tilth as a seed bed, good seed planted and a good stand of corn secured. During the growing season it was cultivated thoroughly five times. The result was an eye opener. Not only did this handling result in a good growth of stalks which were well eared, but so mellow was the surface kept that the crop was able to withstand protracted dry weather in much better shape than richer and heavier land which was not so well tilled, notwithstanding it had a coarse gravel subsoil. A lot of farmers who have driven past this field have been wondering what magic was used on it. It was just a matter of cultivation of the soil which unlocked its possibilities, in spite of the fact that its fertility was badly depleted. The same cultivation, coupled with manure and clover, would accomplish even better results. These three things ought to be tried on thousands of farms through the cotton, corn and small grain belts.

PROXY FARMING.

One of the greatest curses of present day American agriculture is the all too prevalent system of proxy farming, or absentee landlordism. Go into any section one will and the most rundown places are almost without exception those owned by men who live in town and have turned the virtual management of the farm over to a cash or share renter, who in all too many cases, being on a short lease, thinks he does best for himself by skinning the land to the limit. Very likely the owner came into possession of the property when land was got for a song or inherited it from some thrifty parent, and it is natural enough if he receives a fair interest return on what he considers is invested that he should not be as alert along the line of seeing that its fertility is kept in repair as he ought to be. Best results are obtained in the farm management when the owner works it himself if he has any business head at all. Next best is the leasing of the farm to a careful man on a long time lease, so that both tenant and landlord may share jointly in the benefit which may accrue from stock feeding, clover growing and dairying operations.

CHEAP PLOWING.

A north Iowa gasoline engine manufactory, the largest of its kind in the world, some little time ago established an experimental farm on which during the season closing all of the plowing, disking and seeding operations have been done with traction engines. In the matter of comparative crop yields the figures have not been fully worked out, but in the plowing operations it was found that the cost in labor, oil, etc., of plowing an acre was 35 cents. While the large areas on which steam or gasoline tractors would give most effective and economical results are in a way incompatible with the widespread tendency toward a division of these large areas and the following of a more intensive type of tillage, the fact remains that there are still a good many sections where the small tractor might be used with decided advantage as a substitute for horses in plowing and other farming operations. A feature of the above machine plowing that ought to be mentioned is that it was done at a depth of from seven to eight inches, which is nearly twice the depth of ordinary horse plowing.

NEEDED INOCULATION.

An Illinois farmer who sowed fourteen acres to alfalfa last year had an experience which might be a help to some of his fellows. He sowed the seed in the spring and did not take the precaution to inoculate the soil with bacteria laden soil from an old alfalfa field or sweet clover patch. The field was a complete failure except for a quarter of an acre, on which the alfalfa grew luxuriantly. He was at a loss to understand this, but after doing considerable thinking he remembered that some thirty-five years before his father had attempted to grow some alfalfa (then called lucerne) on this particular spot. While the stand was not very good, enough of it developed to inoculate the soil with the necessary bacterial life. It is more than likely that many a failure with alfalfa is traceable to paying no attention to the matter of soil inoculation.

Sponging the back of an animal with crude petroleum will fix the ticks.

If there happens to be a woman's club in the neighborhood, encourage the good wife to join it. It will widen her outlook on life and furnish a much needed variety.

The two or three messes of green lima beans which come from the home garden are such a rare treat that they pay well for the trouble taken in raising them.

A heavy freeze which struck the Michigan and Wisconsin cranberry fields at picking time ruined the crop of many growers. As a result of this the festive berry will be high at Thanksgiving time.

The natives of Hawaii can't go out in the back yard with a big slice of watermelon and enjoy it with the same zest as we do in America, if they are finicky at all, for the melons grown on the islands are likely to be infested with maggots, which appreciate a good thing as much as folks do.

One of the surest as well as most profitable crops for the Pacific coast horticulturist is the English walnut. The trees are remarkably free from the insect pests and fungus which so often attack fruit trees, while the crop is one that is much less perishable and can thus be held if prices are not satisfactory.

If the little people who come into the home are to reach a respectable maturity, scalding water, fly poison, rough on rats and headache tablets should so far as possible be kept out of their reach. Hardly a week passes but one sees chronicled in the daily papers the death of helpless little babies who run afoul of some one of these things.

A town the writer visited the other day was an improvement over many others in that a considerable number of its vacant lots were busy growing alfalfa instead of being allowed to produce a rank growth of burdock, mustard or what not. It furnished a good bite of nutritious hay for cow or horse and was quite an advertisement of the possibilities of the soil of the locality.

While lime is in no sense a substitute for manure and should not be used with this thought in mind, it does serve as a corrective of soil conditions—sweetens sour soils and puts them in shape to furnish food for growing plant life. A ton of lime per acre is usually sufficient to set things right, and it may be applied to the land with manure in the shape of the freshly air slacked product or it may be put on alone.

Ventura county, Cal., produces three-fourths of the world's supply of lima beans, the output last year being 68,000,000 pounds, worth $2,720,000 to the growers. This is one of the special agricultural interests which impress the traveler through southern California, fields of beans in the district devoted to growing them stretching as far as the eye can reach. The fields are planted to permit of horse cultivation and are kept remarkably clean.

One of the many interesting exhibits in the forestry building at the Seattle exposition was a section of a pile taken from Galveston bay last year which had been doing service for thirty-three years. That it was able to withstand the attacks of the teredo, a mollusean borer, during this long period was owing to the fact that it was treated with creosote before being driven. Had it not been so treated it would have been riddled and worthless in a very few months.

The high prices which have prevailed for small grains for the past two years have caused a good many more farmers to stack their grain than for many years past, due to their desire to hold it and not market it with a rush as soon as thrashed. This will result in a brighter and better quality of grain which of itself will fetch a higher price than that badly discolored. More than this, the stacking of the grain has made possible good progress in the plowing of the stubble and the heading off of a scad of weeds in next year's fields.

With every year that goes by that easy way of harvesting corn, hogging it down, makes new friends, and this because it saves the job of husking and because hogs fed corn in this fashion do better and make more rapid gains than in the usual method of pen or lot feeding. Not only do the hogs get the corn, but at the same time a good deal of green forage, which keeps their systems in good condition, enabling them to consume a generous ration of corn with the largest possible advantage. This method requires good fencing, but the gain in one season will usually pay for this.

A bunch of lambs will find abundant feed in the average cornfield from the time the corn dents until December. One who has tried this plan states that the lambs will clean up the grass and weeds first and, while they will later browse some on the leaves of the corn, rarely disturb the ears or break down the stalks. Not only is such forage a waste that would count for nothing, but the devouring of it and the tramping of many seeds into the soil mean an infinitely cleaner field the next season. Sheep will do more for a weedy, unkept farm than almost any other single agency at the disposal of the tiller of the soil, and a flock of them should be kept on every well managed farm, when the above plan can be given a test.

It is usually the tabby cats that are most often found kicking around under one's feet which are the poorest mousers and of least account.

It requires from four and one-quarter to four and one-half bushels of wheat to make a barrel of flour, while a barrel of flour will make about 280 one-pound loaves of bread.

A sick animal on the farm should be isolated at once. This not only makes it possible to give the special care needed, but will lessen the likelihood of a spread of the trouble provided it should prove catagious.

Several counties in Wyoming were lately placed under quarantine by the federal authorities for the purpose of preventing what is styled as the lip and leg disease among sheep, an ailment somewhat similar to the foot and mouth disease in cattle.

There is one present day fad which has a deal of common sense to back it, and that is the rapidly increasing tendency of people in cities and smaller towns and in some cases the country of sleeping in tents on their porches or in their back yards. It has healthfulness and solid enjoyment to commend it.

The State Poultry association of Connecticut has brought pressure to bear on the members of the state legislature and secured the passage of a bill which compels dealers to sell eggs for what they really are. A placard must be placed in each receptacle containing eggs stating whether they are fresh or cold storage.

A good, square look at a piece of meat reeking with tuberculosis germs, and the exhibit is being made frequently these days, is calculated to make the consumer of meat and milk products thankful that some one in the past decade had patriotic concern enough for the public health to assist in giving this dread plague its present publicity.

A Pennsylvania farmer we heard of the other day very effectively solved the problem of loosening up the clay hardpan soil of a long cropped field by sowing the field in the spring with seed of the long horn turnip and plowing the whole crop under in August. He found that the long taproots of the turnip had penetrated the hard soil to a foot or more, and when the roots decayed the field was very effectively perforated, making possible a ready circulation of air and moisture. Alfalfa performs a similar service in loosening the soil, but the turnips get action in a much shorter time.

With the long winter evenings approaching, plans for a systematic course of reading or study would be an excellent thing for the ambitious boy or girl who may not have all the advantages he or she desires. A bright young person could outline a very satisfactory course for himself, which, if followed out conscientiously, would be of great value to him, while to him who may have a trifle more spare time excellent courses of correspondence in special and even collegiate courses are offered by schools and universities of high standing. More than one earnest young student has acquired the major part of a college education in this way. The chief requirements are industry, patience and perseverance.

While it is true that a tract set apart as an orchard should not be turned into a hog lot, it is nevertheless worth remembering that it is a real benefit to the trees and results in fruit that is free from worms if a drove of hogs can be given the range of the orchard for three or four hours a day from the time when the windfall apples begin to litter the ground. These drops are usually wormy, and the worms are destroyed when the apples are consumed. When the drops reach a merchantable size the hogs may be kept out of the orchard until after harvest, when there will be considerable more stuff they will clean up. Besides cleaning up the apples and destroying a lot of worms, they will also devour a good many grubs and insects of one kind and another.

A plain spoken friend of the writer, in referring to the practice of those on a rural party telephone line in taking down their receivers and listening to conversations when their neighbors' ring sounded, dubbed it as "harkin' on the line." Not infrequently a telephone patron will not hear a call distinctly and will thus unwittingly overhear a conversation that does not concern him. There is excuse for this, but mighty little for the practice which prevails in some sections where from two to half a dozen receivers are taken down every time a ring is given for some other patron on the line. Those who have got the habit of "harkin' on the line" probably have given the practice little scrutiny, but in the last analysis it is akin to sidling up to two people engaged in private conversation on the street for the purpose of overhearing what they may have to say or secreting oneself behind a door or under a window to hear conversations not concerning him in the least. It makes matters no better that the offender cannot be detected, but rather the more disgusting and small. Where it develops into a habit it is an abject admission of insufficiency and poverty of both character and experience as well as prima facie evidence of morbid curiosity and poor breeding.

Peach Orchard Land for Sale.

I offer for sale two farms in Hampshire county, W. Va., both in the peach belt and would make fine peach orchards.

The first contains 232 acres, forty acres cleared and the remainder in timber. About 50,000 feet of saw timber; 10,000 props and a lot of locust posts. Situated 1½ miles northwest of Springfield, on the Romney Branch of the B. & O. R. R. An orchard of sixty bearing apple trees and some peach trees on the place. About thirty acres of run bottom and five acres of this in meadow. Improved by dweeling house, well, etc

I have been advised by good authority that this farm would make a splendid peach orchard. Convenient to churches, schools, stores, etc. Price $1,500, on easy terms.

The second farm contains about 150 acres, partly cleared and part in timber and has on it a dwelling house and some other improvements. About six acres of run bottom now in meadow. Situated about one mile west of Springfield, W. Va., on the Romney Branch of the B. & O. R. R. Convenient to churches, schools, stores, etc. Price $1,200, on easy terms. A MATTER OF FIGURES

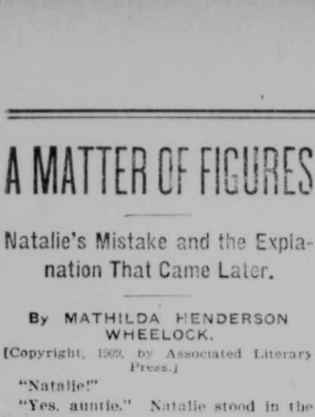
Natalie's Mistake and the Explanation That Came Later.

By MATHILDA HENDERSON WHEELOCK.



[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

"Natalie!"

"Yes, auntie." Natalie stood in the orway.

That letter to Anne Whitmore in regard to those purchases for Coralie's trousseau with which she is to be commissioned—can't you attend to it for me, please? Coralie ought to be here to attend to her shopping in person. You'll find the list with her letter there on your desk. Write in your own person so as not to disturb me for the signature. You know what I wish you to say. I went over it with you this morning. Don't forget the outside limit—$1,200. George would utterly spoil Coralie if I permitted it, and Anne Whitmore would abet him."

Natalie turned at once to her task. Coralie's letter with its dazzling list lay at hand. Such beautiful things! But Natalie felt no envy of this favored cousin, whose rich bachelor uncle made it his chief pleasure to indulge. Her own life as housekeeper for dear

NATALIE SAT WHITE FACED AND STUNNED.

Uncle Joshua, who was a widower, childless and far from rich, was as happy as it was busy.

Envy Coralie? Natalie envied no one, particularly now, when Ted Markham was coming to Forestville to end his vacation. She had met him it winter during a visit to Cousin Adaline. Ted was paying teller in the same bank where Cousin Adaline's husband was bookkeeper, and his calls at the pretty flat had been frequent during the three weeks of Natalie's visit. Then all the spring there had been his letters.

And only yesterday had come a box of roses. Her note of acknowledgment should go by this mail, but Aunt Esther's letter must be first. She wrote this conscientiously, then looked at the tiny clock as she signed her name. She had time for Ted's note yet if she hurried.

The postman's whistle broke into the signature as she finished, and, hastily thrusting the letters into their respective envelopes, already stamped and addressed, she sealed them and going to the open window, laughingly threw them on the gravel at the feet of the carrier, who was just turning away.

Four days later Ted's answer came. Natalie flew with it to her own room, while Aunt Esther seated herself on the piazza with the letter brought her by the same mail.

"Natalie!"

The call came sharply up to where Natalie sat, white faced and stunned with Ted Markham's letter before her.

"I have thought best to change my plans," she had read. "Some fellows are going camping and have asked me to go with them. We shall be somewhere in the Maine woods, not, I imagine, in very close proximity to a postoffice, so that you will probably not hear from me while I am away."

That was the gist of the letter. The rest didn't matter.

"Natalie!"

"Yes, auntie."

"I wish you'd hear this, please," whereupon Natalie descended.

When she had reseated herself Mrs. Eldred read:

"My Dear Esther—Your habit of delegating your letter writing to whosoever will relieve you of the duty has in this instance resulted in the inclosed jumble, from which I am unable to extract anything that will serve me as a working hypothesis.

"With much love and some pardonable curiosity, ANNE WHITMORE."

Natalie glanced at the inclosure which her aunt handed her, her face paling and flushing by turns—the first page of her letter to Mrs. Whitmore and her note of acknowledgment to Ted. For a moment she sat staring; then her overwrought nerves gave way, and she fled upstairs to her room. There, later, with head bowed on her crossed arms, her aunt found her.

"Why, don't take it like that, child! The mistake can be easily rectified."

"He isn't—isn't coming!" she managed at length to sob out.

"Isn't coming!" Mrs. Eldred adjusted her glasses. "Natalie, let me see that young man's letter, please."

Natalie obediently passed it over. Mrs. Eldred was puzzled.

"He should at least have your note of thanks for the roses. You will send him that, of course."

"He doesn't expect me to write him again. He—he doesn't want me to."

Mrs. Eldred reread the letter. It did seem as if the young man were slowing down the correspondence, and, with a sigh, she laid the missive down at Natalie's elbow and softly withdrew.

The matter troubled her for days, however. Meanwhile she did some thinking, the final result of which was that on the very day but one before his vacation ended Ted Markham was handed the following letter, forwarded from his bank to the little postoffice, seven miles from the camp where he had spent a restless and thoroughly unsettled twelve days:

My Dear Mr. Markham—I have reason to believe my niece, Natalie Dare, sent you, instead of the inclosed note, a list of materials my friend, Mrs. Whitmore, was to select for the trousseau of my daughter, who is to marry Mr. Harry Gaston, bookkeeper in the First National bank of our town. My brother, with whom Coralie and I live and who is very wealthy, spoils my daughter dreadfully, as the list will show. Will you kindly mail the letter to me at your earliest convenience? Yours very truly,

ESTHER ELDRED.

Mr. Markham had just time for the 10:18 for New York. It would land him in New York in time to catch a train for Forestville, which would give him just four hours of his precious vacation with Natalie.

Once settled on the train, he took a worn envelope from his pocket, extracted a letter—more properly speaking, part of a letter—and read:

Aunt Esther insists that the inclosed list must come within an expenditure of $1,200. She considers this quite sufficient for a girl who is to marry a bank clerk, even though a fond uncle is willing to indulge her extravagantly. Very sincerely, your NATALIE DARE.

It was Natalie herself who the next evening answered Ted's ring at the door and who listened to the explanation he lost no time in making.

"I've been a fool, Natalie," he wound up. "But those figures! Twelve hundred dollars—why, they simply floored me! That was almost the extent of my salary for a year, and if that was what you were accustomed to and what you considered a reasonable and even an economical outlay for clothes at one clip—well, girlie, there seemed but one thing for me to do, and that was to forget what I had hoped for."

"But the things were for a trousseau," began Natalie.

"There wasn't a word about a trousseau in my part of the letter! I'm glad there wasn't. That would have put a quietus on my hopes with a vengeance, Natalie."

"But I said the girl was to marry a bank clerk." Natalie hurried on indignantly. "How, then, could you suppose"—

Ted's arms shot out and took her into a swift embrace.

"How could I suppose anything else? To me there was only one girl in the world—and one bank clerk who loved her. It was unwarrantable presumption on my part, Natalie, but can't you see? And won't you forgive?"

And Natalie both saw and forgave.

Pussy on the Ocean.

The great stage scene of the piece was a shipwreck, and after the vessel had gone down only the comic man and the heroine were to be seen tossing on a frail raft on the boundless ocean.

The comedy merchant had expected that his woebegone appearance would raise a laugh, but even he was astonished at the roar which went up when they saw him.

At last he was able to get a hearing. "I wish," he said to the heroine, "that we could get out and walk home, but it's so jolly wet."

The audience was too exhausted to laugh any more, and the voice of the man in the gallery sounded painfully clear:

"If I was you," he said, "I should do it. There's a cat been hopping about on the waves for the last five minutes, and she don't seem to 'ave suffered much."—London Answers.

A Witty Comment.

None of Dickens' children inherited his genius, but Charles Dickens, Jr., had some of his father's humor. When in Boston a number of years ago he was the guest at a dinner given by a club whose membership included many admirers of his father. The presiding officer in an endeavor to emphasize this circumstance as particularly grateful to the guest by an unfortunate slip of the tongue declared that the hosts were delighted to welcome Charles Dickens the younger not only on his own account, but for his father's. Mr. Dickens in response said that he cordially concurred in the estimate of his father as his superior and always appreciated manly candor combined with critical acumen. The situation was saved by a wit calling out, "Long live Charles the second, who never lost his head!"—Boston Transcript.

Historical Divisions of Time.

For convenience time is by historians usually divided into three great eras—ancient, mediaeval (or middle) and modern. The ancient period is considered to extend from the earliest times down to the fall of the Roman empire in the west in A. D. 476, the mediaeval from that date to the discovery of America by Columbus in 1492 and the modern from that time to the present. Some historians prefer to put the end of the mediaeval period at the capture of Constantinople by the Turks, about forty years earlier than the Columbus event. The dark ages are often held to be coeval with the mediaeval era, but some authorities think that the term should be applied only to the part of the era extending from the downfall of the empire of Charlemagne, in the ninth century, onward.

BEAUTIFYING FACTORIES.

What May Be Done by Judicious Use of Grass and Vines.

While general exhortations to American towns to put on their beautiful garments and be something more than barracks for toiling thousands have a certain value, there is power in particular instances. Here is a little story of the beautifying of American factories:

Moline, Ill., is a town of shops. It has perhaps 23,000 people, yet its factory district is two miles long, the manufacturing interests being developed out of all proportion to everything else in the community.

The Moline Wagon company occupies a four story brick structure with a frontage on "the factory line"—Third avenue—of several hundred feet. The building stands almost flush with the right of way of the terminal tracks of the local railways. Some years ago Walter Rosenfield, the president of the company, started out to beautify after the German fashion, with climbing vines and window boxes, that portion of the facade where the offices of the company give on the street. A very small grass plot at the office door is made the most of. Virginia creepers embower the windows and climb forty feet up the walls, while window boxes with scarlet geraniums, brilliant foliage plants and hanging vines afford splendid masses of color the season through.

Good examples are contagious. The first to follow suit were the two great factories of the Deere syndicate—the Deere & Mansur corn planter works and the Deere Steel Plow works. The first named constructed a new office building beside the factory and allowed space for landscape treatment in front of it, employing a landscape architect trained at the Iowa State Agricultural college under the supervision of John Good, the vice president of the company, who is an amateur horticulturist of much experience.

Deere & Co. set apart a long strip of ground, perhaps fifteen wide, between the factory wall and the tracks which parallel the highway for special treatment, and masses of shrubbery have been employed there in a way which breaks the wearisome effect of long lines upon the eye and transforms a considerable stretch of street. The Velie Carriage company has adopted the same plan with like success.

The special significance of this is in the fact that Moline was not laid out with any idea of the recognition of the aesthetic in its manufacturing district. The success there in beautifying a long line of factories of standard construction simply shows what may be done under apparently untoward conditions with even the least foothold for grass, flowers, vines and shrubs when the problem is intelligently and enthusiastically attacked.

BRIGHTEN RURAL LIFE.

Indianian Believes Schools Might Be Improved.

Fassett A. Cotton, late state superintendent of instruction, Indiana, says: "The mothers and daughters who have borne their share of the burden of toil on the farm have been the larger sufferers. Life for them is too hard, and the social advantages are too few and far between. Under such circumstances it is not strange that farmers' children are attracted to city life and that they leave the farm.

"Now, with the school as the center of township (or rural) life, economic, social and educational interests can work out the solution together. The school center is better than the village center. It is doubtful if the latter is possible. In the nature of the case most farmers must live on their farms. The township school (a school centralized, to be patronized by all the residents of a township) should be conducted under the ideal conditions.

"Three things are fundamental in this problem of raising the social standard of rural life—first, the co-operation of economic, social and educational forces with the school as a center is absolutely essential; second, the community life with its dominant interest, agriculture, must determine the nature of the work of the school and the mode of procedure; third, the teachers must be capable of dealing with the problems of life, willing to make the community their permanent home and to take the solution of its economic, social and educational problems as their life work."

New Jersey Town's Waste Paper Plan.

Disposing of the city's waste paper at a profit is a plan adopted by the common council of Bayonne, N. J. Special carts are detailed by the street commissioner to collect the waste paper, which the city plans to sell by the hundred pounds and for which there is a steady market. For some time complaints have been made by residents that the garbage carts are overloaded, with the result that paper is blown from them about the streets. The matter was taken up by the Merchants' association, and the members have agreed to tie their waste paper neatly in bundles and place it on the curbstones on certain days each week, when the city will send collectors to gather up the bundles.

What England Wants.

A recent number of an English publication contains a plaintive cry for much needed help. English wants are thus specified:

"What England wants just now is a man or several of infinite ability and ample means who, purely for the sake of their art alone, will prepare imaginary schemes showing how and in what way our cities ought to grow if they are to be healthy dwelling places and beauty spots instead of blots upon our land."

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1909.

AN INTERESTING OCCASION IN THE MASONIC WORLD.

Dedication of the new Masonic Temple, on Charles street, today brings to Baltimore a large and distinguished body of members of the ancient and famous order, who gather to help celebrate the occupation of a home which Baltimore Masons may well be proud of and at the same time congratulate the grand master of the Grand Lodge of Maryland, Gen. Thomas J. Shryock, upon the completion of his twenty-fifth year in that post of honor and dignity. The pleasure of the occassion is shared by all the people of the city, whether or not they are members of the order. The spirit with which the erection of the new Temple was undertaken when the old one was destroyed aroused general admiration. The walls were hardly cold before the work of rebuilding began, and while the loss of many relics and decorations was a grievous one, the new building is an impressive monument to the courage and devotion of the Masons of this city and State, who, with Grand Master Shryock, are the recipients today of a multitude of good wishes.—Baltimore News, Nov. 16.

VIGOROUS PROSECUTION OF ELECTION FRAUDS NEEDED.

There cannot be doubt as to what course Republican leaders should take in reference to the allegations of fraud in the Wilson ballot law counties. Before the election charges were repeatedly made that the laws were being violated, and after the election the charges were reiterated with emphasis. It is the business of the State's Attorneys and the Grand Juries of the various counties to see that proper investigation is made of such allegations and that prosecution is undertaken where it is justified, but experience has demonstrated that, no matter how much fraud may be committed in these counties, there is little likelihood that the authorities will attempt to bring anybody to book for it.

A complete showdown of how elections are conducted in these counties is well worth the trouble and expense required to make it. Even if there is not proof enough at hand to convict any person of crime, it will certainly help to prevent future frauds if the public is let into the secret of how grossly unfair election officials can act within the law.

Public opinion is essential to proper enforcement of all law. It is not sufficiently aroused as yet to the gravity of the offenses perpetrated in a number of the counties to make itself felt. The opportunity to bring its influence into operation by a disclosure of the trickery and unfairness employed at the recent election should not be overlooked.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

The new Baptist church at Loch Lynn will be dedicated Sunday, services being held morning, afternoon and evening. At 10.00 a. m., after song service, the sermon will be preached by Rev. P. H. Payne, D. D. of Marietta, Ohio; at 2.00 p. m., sermon by Rev. E. J. Wooter, of Salem, Va., and at 7.00 p. m. sermon by Rev. E. B. Hatcher, D. D., of Baltimore, Md. The music will be furnished by the Loch Lynn, Mountain Lake Park, Deer Park and Ferndale choirs. Miss Mazie Prevost, of Mountain Lake Park, will be one of the soloists. Rev. C. W. Hudson, the pastor, may well feel proud of this elegant church edifice.

The social at the M. E. church this evening promises to be a very enjoyable affair. Let every one in the community come.

The Mountain Spring Bottling Company are putting in the foundation for their building, which is located between the planing mill and grist mill. The building is of concrete, 30x30 feet and will be fitted up with the most up-to-date appliances for shipping pure spring water for family use.

Mr. Jacob L. Echard has the contract for cutting the timber from the northeastern section of the park grounds. The mill was brought to the grounds this week and will be located near Crystal Spring. Mr. Scott Gilpin will be the head sawyer and have charge of the mill.

Mrs. C. V. Harvey was thrown from a carriage a few days ago, and while not seriously injured, she was under the care of a physician on account of the nervous shock she sustained. She has about fully recovered.

Tuesday evening the ladies of the Baptist church of Loch Lynn held a social and oyster supper from which a handsome sum was realized for the building fund.

Mr. and Mrs. Winchel, who had been visiting friends for several days returned to the Park Saturday evening.

Miss Jennie Murphy, who conducted the Fallen cottage the past two seasons, leaves today for Salisbury, N. C., where she will spend the winter with her sister.

The conference minutes were distributed here yesterday and we hear many expressions of commendation of the neatness of the work. The editor of THE REPLBLICAN is to be congratulated on the product of his fine printery.

Messrs. Cuppett, Leighton & Co. are remodeling the livery barn in the rear of their store building, to be used as a feed warehouse. This was rendered necessary on account of their large and increasing business.

Mr. Hanson Lewis has been engaged as lumber inspector by the American Car and Foundry Company, of Pittsburg, Pa.

Rev. W. D. Reed, our new District Superintendent, will preach and administer the Sacrament in our church at 10.30 a. m. There will be no services in the evening on account of the Baptist services in Loch Lynn.

BITTINGER.

Talk about tall stories, the season's fish yarns seem tame when we hear the stranger from Pine Ridge, tell about Uncle Si's tater crop. "Uncle Si planted a new variety of taters last spring and them taters grew so fast that them tater bugs couldn't crawl fast enough to get up to the leaves. Long about the first of July, when bees began to swarm, Uncle Si dug up a few of the smallest taters and hollowed them out for bee hives."

W. A. Althers and wife were calling in this village last Monday afternoon.

Rev. Lawrence Ries, of Cordova, Md., came to this village to spend a few days with his friend, Rev. Yugel, and it is rumored that he will take unto himself a wife while here.

A number of people from this place were present at the dedicatory services of the new Lutheran church at Jennings on last Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas B. Wiley made a business trip to Oakland early this week.

We are glad to report a decided improvement in Rev. J. B. Shoup's health, and we are informed that he purposes starting for his southern home this week.

Mrs. Jonas Hetrick, of Savage, Pa., was visiting in this village last Sunday afternoon.

Miss Lizzie Orendorf took up her duties as primary teacher in our village school on last Monday morning.

MERRILL.

A pretty double wedding took place at the New Germany M. E. church last Sunday evening at 7.30 o'clock, when Mr. Harry Caldflesh led Miss Cora Miller to the altar, and Mr. Alonza Warnick took Miss Jenne Wiland to be his wife. Rev. David Merrill performed the ceremony before a large congregation. Mr. Lloyd Robeson presided at the organ and played the wedding march. The happy couples left for Washington, D. C. After spending some time in eastern cities, they will make their homes at New Germany, where both grooms are employed, Mr. Caldflesh as bookkeeper at Mr. W. D. Broadwater's store and Mr. Warnick as manager of the steam laundry.

A masquerade ball will be held at Michael Northcraft's on Friday evening. The Billmyer string band of Jennings will furnish the music.

Rev. John Dishorn, of near Avilton, has purchased a piece of property from Mrs. J. H. Gregg and expects to erect a home for the poor and aged of this vicinity.

Burkhart Bros. will appear at Jenking Hall tonight and will present their latest play, "The Rejuvenating of Aunt Mary."

Revival services will begin at Fair view tonight and continue indefinitely.

A number of cases of typhoid fever are reported near Bond. There are four cases in the family of Mr. Thomas Wilt.

Mrs. Wesley Broadwater is seriously ill at her home here.

Mr. Ralph Wiland and Miss Lillian Ruby, of New Germany, are the guests of Mr. D. D. Broadwater.

BLOOMINGTON.

Mr. David Michaels, of this county, who recently purchased from Mr. John Gleason, of Piedmont, the Gov. Thomas farm near Frankville, Md., last week sold his home place on Dry Run to Mr. Stephen Wilt, of Bond, for $1400, possession to be given early in the spring.

Mr. N. U. Bond returned this week from a visit to Brockwayville, Pa., where he had been called on account of the illness of his father.

Postmaster Stump, of this place, was a business visitor to Cumberland a few days ago.

Mrs. James Hartley, of Kitzmiller, is visiting her son, Mr. James Rowe, who is ill and confined to his home on account of painful injuries received last week while at work in Brydon's mine.

Mrs. Frames, who has been a patient in the Hoffman Hospital at Keyser, for the past few weeks, returned home on Friday, very much improved in health.

Mr. Howard Bishoff, county commissioner for Mineral county and largely instrumental in his official character in having placed Keyser and Piedmont on the water wagon, where they say the two towns will have to ride for a couple of years, has sold to Dr. Z. T. Kalbaugh, of Piedmont, and Mr. W. C. Liller, of Keyser, all the coal underlying his farm at Cross, in all about 300 acres, for $30 an acre.

Mr. Andrew Paugh, a private in the U. S. Artillery, stationed at West Point, is home on a fifteen-day furlough, visiting his mother, Mrs. Rebecca Paugh, of Hampshire. Mr Paugh happened to be detailed for guard and police duty at the time of the match between West Point and Harvard football teams, when Cadet Eugene Bryne received fatal injuries, and saw him carried off the field.

Mr. Howard Dawson, of Terra Alta, has returned home after a pleasant visit to his brother, Mr. John Dawson, of this place.

Mrs. Edward Warnick was the guest of friends in Piedmont during the past week.

Mr. Andrew Mullen, the first stranger to arrive in town after the place had changed its name from Mount of Savage to Bloomington, its oldest resident and best known business man, now retired from active pursuits on account of advancing age, honored at one time by being elected a Democratic member of the board of county commissioners, a good neighbor and faithful Christian gentleman, after sixty years continuous residence in our midst (he came here in 1849), is packing up his household goods, preparatory to making his home in Piedmont and becoming a citizen of West Virginia.

Mr. Howard Poland, of Luke, was a guest of his father last Sunday.

Chas. Warnick, whose legs were so badly mangled by falling under the wheels while trying to jump on a westbound freight train on the B. & O., at Bond Junction, about four weeks ago, that amputation became necessary, the left leg being amputated near the hip, the right above and near the ankle, was brought to his father's home at Hitchcock's tunnel, from the Keyser Hospital, on Saturday morning. His wounds are about healed up and he is rapidly gaining in health.

STOYER.

Our Indian summer days were enjoyed by all, but the weather is not so favorable now. We are threatened with cooler weather.

Loading lumber is the order of the day with many of our town men.

Mrs. Geo. Price and son, Austin, of Chaffee, were visiting friends here last week.

Mrs. Chas. Hilleary, of Oak Grove, was visiting at J. T. Stoyer's last Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. John Stoyer and Mr. Abraham Moon were calling in town Sunday.

Mr. James Melvin, of Piedmont, is visiting his brother, Mr. Thos. Melvin, at this place.

Mrs. J. W. White and Mrs. Jack Wilson and children were visiting in Bayard Saturday and Sunday last.

Mr. W. T. Stoyer made a business trip to Gorman one day last week.

Mrs. John McIntyre was a caller in town Monday.

Mrs. Elmer Tice and sister, Mrs. Dowden Boyles, were calling on friends in Bayard one day last week.

Mrs. Emily Wilson, of Cumberland, is visiting her brother, Mr. Elmer Tice.

Miss Grace Riley was visiting her sister, Mrs. Jim Bowers, of Dodson, Saturday and Sunday.

Mr. Henry Harper was seen on our streets last Sunday.

Mr. Waitman Stoyer and sister, Miss Nora, were visiting at J. W. Harvey's, near Wilson, last Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry White, of Dobbin, were in town last week on their way to attend the funeral of Mr. White's sister, Miss Lucinda White, who died at her home near Mt. Lake Park last Wednesday.

Mrs. Mary Wilson, who has been visiting her son, Mr. Tom Wilson, for several months, has returned to her home at Scranton, Pa.

Those who attended the teachers' institute at Kitzmiller from this place were Messrs. Virgil Stover and Arthur Harvey and Misses Ida Harvey and Grace Riley. They report having had a very enjoyable time. IOLA.

CHERRY GROVE.

Mr. and Mrs. John Stark and daughter, Ida, of New Germany, visited Mr. and Mrs. Louis Broadwater, this week.

Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Coleman, of Sutton, spent Thursday with Mrs. Coleman's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Broadwater.

Rev. and Mrs. D. M. Merrill spent a few days with Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Robinson this week.

Mr. O. S. Fike was in Oakland on business last week.

Mr. Edwin Connor, of Frostburg, is the guest of friends here.

Mr. Orval Garlitz, who is employed at Midland, visited his home at Avilton this week.

Mrs. D. M. Merrill, who has been the guest of friends at Scottdale, Pa., during the past week, has returned home.

District Stewards' Meeting.

A meeting of the stewards of the M. E. church of the Oakland district will be held in St. Paul's church in Oakland November 22nd and 23rd, when the following order of service will be observed:

Monday evening, the 22nd, at 7:30 o'clock, Dr. A. B. Riker will preach a sermon, to be followed by a social hour.

The service Tuesday will begin at 6:30 o'clock in the morning with a sunrise prayermeeting, followed at 9:00 by devotions led by Rev. A. Mick, a former pastor of Oakland, but now stationed at Terra Alta. At 9:30 an address will be delivered by Dr. Carl G. Doney, president of the West Virginia Wesleyan College. The sermon at 10.30, to be delivered by Rev. Eugene Weaver, will close the morning services. In the afternoon at 2:30 the District Stewards' meeting will be held followed by a Workers' Convention. In the evening at 7:30 Dr. Riker will again preach, thus bringing the conferenee to a close.

Hit in Head with Axe.

Last week a serious affair took place in Westernport. It seems as if W. F. Johnson, of Garrett county, Md., was trying to collect a bill for services rendered George Eagle. It is said Eagle refused to pay, and then Johnson took Eagle's team and started home with it. Eagle followed and attempted to recover his team, when Johnson, the driver, picked up an axe and struck Eagle in the head with the butt end of it. Dr. Fazenbaker dressed the injured man's wounds. The latter is said to be in a serious condition.—Piedmont Independent.

Eclipse To Be Visible Here.

There will be a total eclipse of the moon, visible generally throughout the United States on the morning of Nov. 27th. The moon will enter the earth's shadow from the southwest at 2:11 a. m., and totality will begin at 2:14. The total eclipse will last till 4:36, with the middle of the eclipse at 3:55. The moon leaves the shadow at 5:88 and the eclipse is over. The above times are for localities which keep Eastern Standard time.

"Miss Petticoats" Coming.

With froufrou of furbelows and ripples of laughter "MISS PETTICOATS" is on her way to the Oakland opera house where she will be presented by a clever company on Saturday, Nov. 20, and the whole town is on the "qui vive" to see and hear the adventures of this wonderful girl, who, born of French and American parentage on the New England coast, had a most remarkable career. Her name was given her by her fond grandfather, with whom she lived on board of an old whaler, because the mother, when dying, had called her "mon petit coeur," and left her to old Capt. Stewart, a sturdy sea captain, who lived in the cabin of the "Harpoon" and here little Agatha Renier, daughter of a French nobleman, grew to womanhood. Her brilliant evolution from this quaint home, through the vicissitudes of the smart set of New Bedford, and her final graduation into aristocratic circles of Paris as a leader of society, furnished some very lively reading in the novel of "MISS PETTICOATS," and it was brought out as a play about five years ago at the great Boston Theatre, where it was greeted nightly by enthusiastic audiences, who pronounced it a powerful and thrilling play. From the shores of picturesque New England to the salon of the Countess Fornay is a long stretch, and makes a highly interesting contrast. The villainies and jealousy always awakened by a beautiful woman beset Agatha from the beginning when she saved the life of a rich old lady by "clinging like a scarlet vine" to the horses' heads, until she returned in triumph and with the same irresistible strength of will, inherited from her Puritan mother, doomed all her former enemies, and brings the remarkable drama to a climax by giving up her own strong will for "love's sweet sake." Some very funny incidents and a vein of happy wit runs through the play. The four-in-hand dance in the superb ball room of the Countess in Paris by the four sailors from the shores of New England forms one of the most laughable situations and brings down the house.

Masons Offer Reward of $100.

At a meeting of Moorefield Lodge No. 29, A. F. and A. M., Moorefield, W. Va., ordered that a reward of one hundred dollars be offered for the apprehension and conviction of the party or parties who murdered the wife and son of Edward M. Reid at Medley, W. Va. Mr. Reid was a member of Moorefield Lodge. This increases the total reward offered to $1,600.

Musical Play.

"Little Red Riding-Hood" will be given by home talent in Laughlin's Hall, Deer Park, on Saturday evening, November 20, at 7:30 o'clock. After the play the Aid Society of the M. E. church will serve ice cream, cake and coffee. Admission 10 and 15 cents.

Union Thanksgiving Service.

Next Thursday, Thanksgiving Day, the union service, as has been the custom heretofor, will be held in the Presbyterian church, when Rev. G. R. Williamson, of the M. E. church, will deliver the sermon.

COME IN AND GET ACQUAINTED

HORTICULTURAL EXHIBITS.

President Brown, of the Society, Wants Garrett Well Represented.

Senator W. McCulloh Brown, who this year is President of the State Horticultural Society, was in Oakland last Saturday. Mr. Brown is very anxious to secure specimens of the various grains raised in Garrett county for exhibition in Baltimore on December 1st, and he has arranged that any samples sent to Mr. E. S. West, in Oakland, will be packed and forwarded by Mr. West.

Wheat, oats, buckwheat, rye, barley and corn should go; one gallon of the grains, all well selected and sorted, and twelve ears of corn, of uniform size and appearance. Allegany and Garrett counties will be classed alone on corn.

Garrett county has won first prizes for fruit and flowers, now let us show what we can do on grains.

All exhibits must be in place at the Fifth Regiment Armory on Tuesday, November 30th, 1909.

Mussel shells, which for years have littered the bed of the upper Ohio River and have not been looked upon as having a commercial value, are soon to be turned into buttons. Eastern capital will erect at St. Mary's, W. Va., a factory which will rival the big shell plant at Amsterdam, N. Y.

Road work by the contractor, Mr. J. E. Francis, on Hooppole, was brought to a standstill last week by the unfavorable weather and Mr. Francis has parked his wagons, engines, and other material for the winter. The laborers employed on the road left Oakland yesterday afternoon for Manheim, W. Va., where they will work in the cement mill until spring.

Mr. Jacob J. Bender, of Grantsville, and Messrs. J. Turner Lohr and C. E. Ellithorp, of Bittinger, were in Oakland Monday and Tuesday where they appeared as witnesses before the Court Examiner, Mr. W. R. Offutt, to give testimony concerning the proposed sale of the real estate of Mr. Bender's recently deceased sister, Mrs. Catharine Lohr, of near Bittinger.

The first real winter weather of the season struck Oakland yesterday morning when the thermometer took a drop of something like 15 degrees between the hours of seven and twelve o'clock. From that hour on the drop in temperature was steady until toward evening at which time it registered twenty-five degrees above zero. The entire day was stormy with the wind from the southeast blowing a pretty stiff gale. Snow was the accompaniment.

Mrs. C. F. Schroeder, pipe organist and directress of the Presbyterian choir, last night very pleasantly entertained the members of the choir, the pastor, Rev. J. A. McClelland, and the members of the music committee, at her home on Washington street, as a compliment to Mrs. G. A. Bolden, a member of the choir, who will leave for Charleston Friday. A very pleasant time was enjoyed by all present, and Mrs. Schroeder proved herself a royal, good hostess.—Grafton Sentinel.

Rev. J. B. Workman, former pastor of St. Paul's M. E. church in Oakland, but who was sent by the Conference from here to Wheeling, were he is pastor of Wesley Chapel, arrived here Monday morning and was engaged until yesterday in shipping the printed minutes of the Conference to the subscribers in all parts of the District. While in Oakland Mr. Workman was the guest of his daughter, Mrs. Grover Stemple. He returned to Wheeling yesterday afternoon on train No. 55.

Lieut. E. S. West, the Oakland real estate man, has just had printed at this office ten thousand sixteen page and cover lists of the properties in Garrett county for sale. These lists are being mailed to every state in the Union and to a majority of the foreign countries including Mexico and the South American countries. The text of Lieut. West's list is reprinted in this paper today. The cover pages of the booklet contain much matter advertising Oakland and Garrett county generally and was prepared by the Oakland Board of Trade, which stands sponsor for the same.

The Maryland Cereal and Forage Crop Breeders Association has this year made a special class for Allegany and Garrett counties in the corn section of the 3d Annual Wheat, Corn and Hay Show to be held at the Fifth Regiment Armory, Baltimore, December 1st, 2d and 3d. This will allow exhibitors of corn from these two counties to compete with among themselves instead of against the whole western part of the State, which includes some of the best corn growing sections of the country. There are two set of prizes offered, one for yellow and one white corn. First prize is $7; 2nd $5, and 3d, $2.

The following gentlemen, members of Company No. 9, Uniform Rank, Knights of Pythias, Oakland, visited the K. of P. fair at Cumberland Monday night: Surgeon H. W. McComas, Capt. Robert Townshend, Lieut. W. Hinebaugh, Second Lieut. D. E. Bolden, Henry Lauer, Ernest Townshend, Wm. Lawton, Harper Bartlett, John Davis, E. A. Weimer, Jack Enlow, W. D. Dixon, Paul Mitchell, Sam Aronhalt, Erbie Lantz. The visitors were met at the station by Company No. 4, and escorted with a band to the hall. They remained in Cumberland Tuesday and took in the city in a sight-seeing auto.

ALLEGED CHICKEN THIEVES

Captured by Deputy Sheriff Brown Near Tunnelton Last Night.

Several weeks ago three men, named B. E. Conn, Frank Howard and Walter McBratney, arrived at Swanton and rented a small house near the farm of the late A. F. George, where they resided until Tuesday when they packed up and shipped their property to Tunnelton, West Va.

While these men were living at Swanton nearly every hen house and duck pond in the community of Swanton and well on down Hooppole from Oakland was visited and the farmers were relieved of their poultry by the wholesale.

Sunday three men came to Oakland where they hired a livery team and drove down Hooppole as far as McHenry, at which place they took supper at Mr. Dougald McLean's. Monday morning Mr. McLean missed quite a lot of poultry and upon investigation after information had been made to the State's officers it was ascertained that a box of chickens had been brought to Oakland and disposed of to one of the merchants here. This box had a tag on it bearing the name of B. E. Conn and upon this evidence warrants were issued for the arrest of the parties. They were located at Tunnelton and brought here last night where they will be accorded a hearing before Justice West as soon as the prosecuting witnesses can be summoned to appear.

R. L. Polk & Co.'s New Maryland State Gazetteer for 1909-1911 Just Out.

Those interested in the rapid growth of the State of Maryland during the last three years, should be most agreeably surprised after perusing the pages of the voluminous State Gazetteer just issued by R. L. Polk & Co., of Baltimore.

Maryland can well be proud of the imperishable record thus given of the State's rapid progress in three short years. It amply shows that the State is keeping well abreast in the general race for commercial supremacy among the larger States.

To the business man this Gazetteer should prove invaluable as will be seen after reading the following short description of the book, which has been produced at enormous expense and with the aid of numerous experienced representatives sent by the firm to every section of the State.

The first few pages contain general miscellaneous State information. This has been culled from official sources and includes the State Government, the State Judiciary, United States Courts in Maryland, State Institutions, State Boards, State Registers of Wills, State Attorneys, State Sheriffs, State Surveyors, County Commissioners of Maryland, and a list of the Banks and Bankers, giving the amount of their capital, also the names of the cashiers.

The second part of the book is devoted to Baltimore. This gives every business person or firm in Baltimore listed under their various classified headings.

Following the Baltimore section will be found a perfect encyclopaedia of information about every town, village and settlement through the entire State. Each place is arranged in alphabetical order after each name, a rough sketch, giving every item of general public and business interest with regard to such place, together with a complete list of the business people resident there, also a list of the farmers in the surrounding country receiving their letters from that particular post office.

Following the Gazetteer section is a Business Directory of the entire State, everyone in the State being classified in alphabetical order, both by town and trade.

Such a work as this merits the loyal support of every true business man in Maryland. We can confidently recommend the work and we certainly congratulate the firm of R. L. Polk & Co. for so thoroughly showing in detail, all through their book, practically "what the State of Maryland is made of," also the indefatigable enterprise of its citizens throughout the entire State.

The book is well bound, is printed in plain clean type, also indexed so that all information can be easily found.

Special new features in the work are the complete City Directories of the towns of Frederick and Westminster in the Gazetteer section, together with comprhensive Co-partnership Directories of the towns of Cambridge, Cumberland and Hagerstown.

Preparing For Census

Offices were opened this morning in the Federal building by J. J. Stump, supervisor of Census for the Fifth district of Maryland, comprising Garrett, Allegany, Washington, Frederick and Montgomery counties, and active work begun towards arranging for the taking of the census which will be begun in April next.

Miss Blanche Bradley has been appointed supervisor's clerk and is already at work. About 160 enumerators will be required to do the field work in the district and as soon as the applications are properly gone over the appointments will be made.

Mr. Stump is actively engaged in districting the counties and incorporated towns and cities preliminary to getting the work started.—Cumberland News.

The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Copyright, 1908, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co

"I never saw so many kids," Merrihew finally observed, "so many dirty ones," he added. "Herod would have had his work cut out for him here. Now where can we get some newspapers? I must know where she is."

At the bookshop in the piazza they found the Rome and Florence papers. Hillard went through them thoroughly, but nowhere did he see anything relative to the doings of the American Comic Opera company.

"Not a line, Dan."

"But there must be something in the Florence paper. They should be playing there yet."

"Nothing. These papers are two weeks old."

Merrihew stared blankly at the sheet. "I should like to know what it means."

"We will write to the consulate in Rome. If there has been any trouble he will certainly notify us. I'll write tonight. Now, here's Cook's next door. We'll ask if there is any mail for Kitty Killigrew."

But there wasn't, nor had there been, and the name was not on the forwarding books.

"Looks as if your Kitty were the needle in the haystack."

"Cut it!" savagely. Pictures and churches and museums were all well enough, but Merrihew wanted Kitty Killigrew above all the treasures of earth.

When they turned down to the Via Caracciolo, with the full sweep of the magnificent bay at their feet, Merrihew's disappointment softened somewhat. It was the fashionable hour. The band was playing near by in the Villa Nazionale. Americans were everywhere. Occasionally a stray princess or countess flashed by inert and listless against the cushions and invariably overdressed. And when men accompanied them the men (if they were husbands) lolled back, even more listless. And beggars of all sorts and descriptions besieged the "very great grand rich Americans."

They were nearly a week in Naples. They saw the galleries, the museums and churches; they saw underground Naples; they made the weary and useful ascent of Vesuvius, and Merrihew added a new smell to his collection every hour. Pompeii by moonlight, however, was worth a thosand ordinary dreams, and Merrihew, who had abundant imagination, but no art with which to express it, happily or unhappily, saw Lytton's story unfold in all its romantic splendor.

They lingered at Amalfi three days and dreamed away the hours under the white pergola. Merrihew was loath to leave, but Hillard was for going on to Sorrento, for which his heart was always longing.

A spring rain fell as they took the incline, and it followed them over the mountains and down into Sorrento. They finally drew up in the courtyard of the Hotel de la Sirena, and the long ride was at an end. The little garden was white and pink with roses and camellias, and the tubbed mandarins were heavy with fruit.

"And this is March," said Merrihew, his thought traveling back to his own bleak country, where winter is so long and summer is so short.

Their rooms were on the northeast corner, on the first floor, and from the windows they could look down upon the marina piccola and the tideless sea, a sheer 150 feet below. Everybody welcomed the Signor Hillard. The hotel was his and everything and everybody in it.

Later, when they were alone, Hillard began to explain.

"They remember my father. He used to live like a prince in Sorrento. Every time I come here I do the best I can to keep the luster to his name. Tomorrow I shall point out to you the villa in which I was born. A Russian princess owns it now."

"A real live princess!" said Merrihew. "Is she beautiful?"

"Once upon a time," returned Hillard, laughing.

Giovanni did not return till late that night, and on the morrow Hillard questioned him.

"I have been to see a cousin," said Giovanni, "who lives on the way to El Deserta."

"Ah! So you have a cousin here?"

"Yes, signor."

How old he looked, poor devil! Hillard had not taken particular notice of him during the past week's excursions. Giovanni had aged ten years since they landed.

"And was this cousin glad to see you? And is he to be trusted?"

"Both, signor. He had some news. She—the girl—is a dancer in a Paris cafe."

"Would you like me to give you the necessary money to go to Paris and bring her back to the Sabine hills?" Hillard asked softly.

"I shall go to Paris, signor—after."

"What is his name?" Hillard had never till this moment asked this question.

"I know it. That is sufficient. He is high, signor, very high, yet I shall reach him. If I told you his name"—

"There would be the possibility of my warning him."

"That is why I hesitate."

"You are a Catholic, Giovanni."

Giovanni signified that he was.

"Does not the God of all Catholics of all Christians, in fact—does he not say that vengeance is his and that he will repay?"

"But there are so many of us, signor, so many of us small and of slight importance, that, likely enough, God, with all his larger cares, has not the time to remember us. What may happen to him in the hereafter does not concern me, for he will certainly be in the purgatory of the rich and I in the purgatory of the poor. It must be now, now!"

"Go your own way," said Hillard, dismissing him. "I shall never urge you again."

Giovanni gone, Hillard leaned against the casement. The sun was bright this morning, and the air was clear. He could see Naples distinctly. Below, the fishermen and their wives, their bare feet plowing in the wet sands, were drawing in the nets, swaying their bodies gracefully.

And then Merrihew burst in upon him wildly excited and flourished the hotel register.

Hillard came forward, and this is what he saw:

Thomas O'Mally
James Smith,
Arthur Worth
La Signorina Caprieciosa
Kitty Killigrew
Am. Comic Opera Co., N. Y.

"Kitty has been here!"

"Perfectly true. But I wonder"—

"Wonder about what?" asked Merrihew.

"Who La Signorina Caprieciosa is Whimsical, indeed. She must be the mysterious prima donna."

Hillard studied the easy flowing hand and ran his fingers through his hair thoughtfully.

"What is it?" asked Merrihew curiously.

"I am wondering where I have seen that handwriting before."

Another fortnight found the pair back in Naples after spending a week on Capri. At the hotel they found a batch of mail. There was a letter which held particular interest to Merrihew. It was from the consul at Rome, a reply to Hillard's inquiries regarding the American Comic Opera company.

"We'll now find out where your charming Kitty is," Hillard said, breaking the seal.

But they didn't. On the contrary, the writer hadn't the slightest idea where the play actors were or had gone. They had opened a two weeks' engagement at the Teatro Quirino. There had been a good house on the opening night. The remainder of the week did not show the sale of a hundred tickets. The American manager had shown neither foresight nor common sense, and his backer withdrew his support. The percentage demanded by the managers in Florence, Genoa, Milan and Venice was so exorbitant (although they had agreed to a moderate term in the beginning) that it would have been nothing short of foolhardiness to try to fill the bookings. The singing of the prima donna, however, had created a highly favorable impression among the critics, but she was unknown. The writer also advised Mr. Hillard not to put his money in any like adventure.

"That's hard luck," growled Merrihew, who saw his hopes go down the horizon.

"But it makes me out a pretty good prophet," was Hillard's rejoinder. "The angel's money gave out. Too many obstacles. To conquer a people and a government by light opera—I can't be done here. And so the American Comic Opera company at the present moment is vegetating in some little boarding house waiting for mone from home."

Merrihew gnawed the end of his cane. All his pleasant dreams had burst like soap bubbles. Had they not always done so? There would be no jaunts with Kitty, no pleasant little excursions, no little suppers after the performance. And what's a Michelangelo or a Titian when a man's in love?

"Brace up, Dan. Who knows? Kitty may be on the high seas—that is, if she has taken my advice and got a return ticket. I'll give you a dinner at the Bertolini tonight, and you may have the magnum of any vintage you like. We'll have Tomass drive us down the Via Caracciolo. It will take some of the disappointment out of your system."

"Look at this!" he cried.

They had ridden up and down the Via Caracciolo twice when they espied a huge automobile, ultramarine blue. It passed with a cloud of dust and a rumble which was thunderous. Hillard half rose from his seat.

"Somebody you know?" asked Merrihew.

"The man at the wheel looked a bit like Sandford."

"Sandford? By George, that would be jolly!"

"Perhaps they will come this way again. Tomass, follow that motor."

Sure enough, when the car reached the Largo Vittoria it wheeled and came rumbling back. This time Hillard had no doubts. He stood up and waved his arms. The automobile barked and groaned and came to a stand.

"Hello, Sandford!"

"Jack Hillard, as I live, and Dan Merrihew! Nell," turning to one of the three pretty women in the tonneau, "what did I tell you? I felt it in my bones that we would run across some one we knew."

"Or over them," his wife laughed.

When we meet an old friend in a foreign land, one who has accepted our dinners and with whom we have often dined, what is left but to fall on his neck and weep? There was, then, over this meeting much ado with handshaking and compliments, handshaking and questions, and, as in all cases like this, every one talked at once—how was old New York, how was the winter in Cairo, and so forth and so on—till a policeman politely told them that this was not a private thoroughfare and that they were blocking the way. So they parted, the two young men having promised to dine with the Sandford party that evening.

"What luck, Dan!" Hillard was exuberant.

"Saves you the price of a dinner."

"I wasn't thinking of that. But I shall find out all about her tonight."

"Who?"

"The lady in the fog, the masquerading lady!"

CHAPTER IX.

A TANGLED SKEIN.

SANFORD knew how to order a dinner, and so by the time that Merrihew had emptied his second glass of Burgundy and his first of champagne he was in the haze of golden confidence. He would find Kitty, and when he found her he would find her heart as well.

"Say, Jack," said Sandford, "what did you mean by that fool cable anyhow?"

Hillard had been patiently waiting for an opening of this sort. "And what did you mean by hoaxing me?"

"Hoaxing you?"

"That's the word. I was in your house that night. I was there as surely as I am here tonight."

"Nell, am I crazy or is it Jack?"

"Sometimes," said Mrs. Sanford, "when you put the chauffeur in the tonneau I'm inclined to think that it is you."

Hillard looked straight into the placid gray eyes of his hostess. Very slowly one of the white lids drooped. His heart bounded.

"But really," continued Sandford seriously, "unless you bribed the caretaker you could not possibly have entered the house. You have been dreaming."

"Very, well, then. It begins to look as if I had." It was apparent to Hillard that Sandford was not in his wife's confidence in all things. He also saw the wisdom of dropping the subject while at the table.

They took coffee and liqueur in the glass inclosed balcony. Hillard found a quiet nook not far from the lift. He saw that Mrs. Sandford's chair was placed so that she could get a good view of the superb night. He sat down himself, sipped his liqueur meditatively, drank his coffee and as she nodded lighted a cigarette.

"Well?" she said, smiling into his brown eyes. She was rather fond of Hillard, a gentleman always and one of excellent taste. There was never any wearisome innuendo in his wit nor suggestion in his stories.

"You deliberately winked at me," he began.

"I deliberately did."

"Sandford is in the dark. I suspected as much."

"Regarding the wink?"

"Regarding the mysterious woman who occupied your house by your express authority and who rode the hunter in the park."

"Was there ever a more beautiful picture?" sweeping her hands toward the city.

"The beauty of it will last several hours yet. Who and what was she?"

"I wish I could find you a wife. You would make a good husband."

"Thank you. I am even willing, with your assistance, to prove it. Who was she, and how came she in your house?"

"She wished that favor and that her presence in New York should not be known. Now describe to me exactly what happened. I am worrying about the plate and the silver."

He laughed. "And you will meet me halfway?"

"I promise to tell you all I dare."

"There is a mystery?"

"Yes. So begin with your side of it."

He was a capital story teller. He recounted the adventure in all its color—the voice under his window, the personals in the paper, the interchange of letters, the extraordinary dinner, the mask in the envelope. She followed him with breathless interest.

"Charming, charming!" She clapped her hands. "And how well you tell it. You have told it just as it happened."

"Just as it happened!" confounded for a moment.

"Exactly. I have had a letter—two in fact. You did not see her face?"

"Only the chin and mouth. But if I ever meet her again I shall know her by her teeth."

"Heavens! And how?"

"Two lower ones are gone. Otherwise they would be beautiful."

"Poor man! You have builded your house upon the sands. Her teeth are perfect. She has fooled you."

"But I saw with these two eyes!"

"There is a preparation which theatrical people use—a kind of gum. She mentioned the trick. Isn't she clever?"

"Yet I shall know her hair," doggedly.

She put her hands swiftly to her head. "Now, you have known me for years. What is the color of my hair?"

He recounted the adventure in all its color.

"Why, it is blond."

"Nothing of the kind. It is auburn. If you cannot tell mine, how will you tell hers?"

"I shall probably run after every red headed woman in Europe till I find her," humorously.

"Our ears never deceive half so often as our eyes."

"Her face is not scarred, is it?"

"Scarred!" indignantly. "She is as beautiful as a Raphael, as lovely as a Bouguereau. If I were a man I should gladly journey round the world for the sight of her."

"I am willing, even anxious."

"I should fall in love with her."

"I believe I have."

"Come, Mr. Hillard. I am just fooling. You are too sensible a man to fall in love with a shadow—a mask. One does not fall in love that way."

"She is married?"

"Certainly I have not said so."

He flicked the ash from his cigarette.

"Have you those letters?"

"One of them I'll show you."

"Why not the other?"

"It would be wasting time. It merely relates to your adventure. She sailed the day after you dined with her."

"That accounts for the shutters. The police and the caretaker were bribed."

"I suspect they were."

"If I were a vain man, and you know I am not, I might ask you if she spoke well of me in this letter. Understand I am not inquiring."

"But you put the question as adroitly as a woman. We are sure of vanity always. Yes, she spoke of you. She found you to be an agreeable gentleman. But," with gentle malice, "she did not say that she wished she had met you years ago under more favorable circumstances."

"Come, give me the death stroke and have done with it. Tell me what you dare, and I'll be content with it."

She opened her handkerchief purse and delved among the various articles therein.

"I expected that you would be asking questions, so I am prepared. I did not tell my husband for that very reason. He would have insisted upon knowing everything. Here, read this. It is only a glimpse."

He searched eagerly for the signature.

"Don't bother," she said. "The name is only a nickname we gave her at school."

"School? Do you mean to tell me that you went to school with her? Where?"

"In Pennsylvania first, then in Milan. Read."

O Cara Mia—If only you knew how sorry I am to miss you! Why must you sail at once? Why not come to my beautiful Venice? I have so much to say that cannot be written. You ask about the adventure. Pouf goes my little dream of greatness. It was a blank failure. The officials put unheard of obstacles in our path. The contracts were utterly disregarded. In the first place, we had not purchased our costumes and scenery in Italy.

"Costumes and scenery?" Hillard sought the signature again.

The base of all the trouble was a clerk in the consulate at Naples. He wrote us that there would be no duties on costumes and scenery. Alas, the manager and his backer are on the way to America, sadder and wiser men! We surrendered our return tickets to the chorus and sent them home. The rest of us are stranded—is not that the word?—here in Venice, waiting for money from home. If I were alone, it would be highly amusing, but these poor people with me! There is only one way I can help them, but that—never! You recollect that my personal income is quarterly, and it will be two months before I shall have funds. There are persons moving heaven and earth to find me. My companions haven't the least idea who I am. So here we all are, wandering about the Piazza San Marco, calling at Cook's every day in hopes of money. I am staying with my maid in the Campo Santa Maria Formosa, near our beloved Santa Barbara. I have guaranteed the credit of my companions, and they believe that Venetians are generous people. Generous! Perhaps you will wonder how I dared appear on the stage in Italy. A black wig and a theatrical makeup—these were sufficient. A duke sent me an invitation to take supper with him, as if I were a ballerina! I sent one of the American chorus girls, a little minx for mischief. She ate his supper and then ran away. I understand that he was furious. Only a few months more, Nell, and then I may come and go as I please. Come to Venice. CAPRICCIOSA.

Hillard did not stir. Another labyrinth to this mystery! Caprieciosa—Kitty Killigrew's unknown prima donna, and all he had to do was to take the morning train for Venice, and twenty-four hours later he would be prowling through the Campo Santa Maria Formosa.

Mrs. Sandford observed him curiously, even sadly. Why couldn't his fancy have been charmed by an everyday, sensible girl and not by this whimsical, extraordinary woman who fooled diplomats, flaunted dukes and kept a king at arm's length as a pastime? And yet—

"Caprieciosa," he mused aloud. "That is not her name."

"And I shall not tell it you."

"But her given name? Just a straw, something to hold on. I'm a drowning man."

"It is Hilda."

"That is German."

"She prefers it to Sonia."

"Sonia Hilda. It begins well. May I keep this letter?"

"Certainly not. With that cara mia? Give it to me."

He did so. "Shall I seek her?"

"This is my advice—don't think of her after tonight. If you ever see or recognize her, avoid her. It may sound theatrical, but she is the innocent cause of two deaths. These men sought her openly too."

"What has she done?"

"She made a great though common mistake."

"Political?"

"Don't be foolish. I am sorry I let you see the letter. I forgot that she told me her hiding place."

"Her hiding place?"

"Mr. Hillard, she is as far removed from your orbit as Mars' is from Jupiter's. Forget her."

"My orbit is not limited. I shall seek her. When I find her I shall marry her."

"I like you too much, Mr. Hillard, to stand by and see you break your heart against a stone wall."

"Don't you see, the deeper the mystery is the more powerful the attraction becomes?"

The door to the lift opened and closed noisily, and Hillard turned negligently. A man sauntered through the room. The moment he came into the light Hillard's interest became lively enough. It was the handsome Italian with the scar.

"Who is that man?" he whispered. "Only a few weeks ago I bumped into him on coming out of the club."

"Do not attract his attention," she answered.

"Who is he?" he repeated.

"A Venetian officer and a profligate. I entertained him once, but I learned from him that I had been ill advised."

Hillard saw that this subject would admit of no further questions. The man with the scar had committed some inexcusable offense, and Mrs. Sandford had crossed him off the list.

It was after 10 when Hillard and his friend took their leave.

"We shall leave in the morning for Venice," said Hillard.

"Venice? How about Rome and Florence?"

"Which would you prefer, Rome and the antiquities or Venice and—Kitty Killigrew?"

"Kitty in Venice? Are you sure?"

"She is there with La Signorina Caprieciosa. Oh, this is a fine world, after all, and I was wrong to speak ill of it this morning."

"If Kitty's in Venice I'm an ungrateful beggar too. But I do not see why Kitty's being in Venice excites you."

"No? Well, fate writes that Kitty's mysterious prima donna and my lady of the mask are one and the same person."

"No!"

The two without further words marched along the middle of the Corso to the hotel. The concierge started toward them, but suddenly reconsidered and retreated to his bandbox of an office. The strangeness of his movements passed unnoticed by the two men, who continued on through the lobby into the first corridor. Hillard inserted his key in the door of his room and swung it inward. He paused on the threshold with good cause.

Two dignified carabinieri rose quickly and approached Hillard. There was something in the flashing eyes and set jaws that made him realize that the safest thing for him to do at that moment was to stand perfectly still.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

TAKE care of what common sense you may possess, for the world's stock of that commodity is low.

School children are in accord on one subject. If they were to make the history they would scatter fewer big words through it.

Any one who thinks that too much can't be said on some subjects hasn't had the privilege of listening to the feminine contingent.

We often hear a man say that he is doing the best to do his worst.

Often after we have toiled all day for our daily bread we have to toil half of the night for occasional butter.

Twins create a great deal of admiration, but somehow seem to cause very little envy.

It is most exasperating not to find anybody to blame for your ill temper.

We really are practicing self denial when we are so carefully withholding our most excellent advice.

Lots of people get busy too often. What they most need is to keep busy.

Putting up a good imitation of liking work is also a good long stride toward success.

Finished.

Isn't it discouraging?
Nothing left to do!
How can anybody shine?
Chances are so few!
Not a thing but what is old
Underneath the sun.
Who could be original?
Everything's been done!

Telegraph and telephone,
Riding on a rail.
Steamships that can cross the main,
Leaving home their sail.
And inventions such as that Standing in a row—
Say, a fellow born today
Hasn't any show!

Nor is that the only field
That is strangled thus.
C. Columbus sailed the seas
And discovered us.
Cannot be discovered twice;
That's as sure as sin.
Nothing doing for the man
Who success would win.

Great orations that have moved
Men to war or tears
Were delivered in the past,
Many, many years.
Subjects poems might inspire,
Used is every one.
There is nothing left to do—
Everything's been done!

So Poetical.

"Kindness does not seem to make any impression on him."

"About the only way you can educate some people is by hitting them with a brick."

"Is that what you would call sermons in stones?"

Necessities.

"I think I should enjoy going on an arctic expedition."

"It would be interesting."

"Now, what kind of an outfit do you think a man ought to have for that climate?"

"Well, I think he ought to have an overcoat and socks anyway."

Her Limitation.

"You know a man may smile and be a villain still."

"But can a woman?"

"I don't know as to that. She might smile and smile and be a villain, but she could hardly be still."

A Test.

"Can that young man of yours take a hint?"

"I don't know, papa."

"Find out, will you, tonight?"

"How shall I go about it?"

"You might set the dog on him."

He Looked It.

"You must strike when the iron is hot."

"I am a ball player, not a blacksmith."

"Funny I should make that mistake after watching you play."

Expert.

"He spends a lot of money."

"Yes, I notice. I wonder where he gets it."

"Oh, lots of people don't have to have money in order to spend."

His Peculiarity.

"See that man there?"

"Yes."

"He is a believer in lotteries."

"Ever win?"

"Married three times."

OFFICE OF

E. S. WEST,

Real Estate Agent. OAKLAND, MD

DEAR FRIEND:

In preparing this partial list of valuable real estate for sale in this vicinity, I deem it advisable to state in the first place that I am not a real estate agent in the ordinary acceptation of the term. This is no wildcat scheme to swindle innocent and unsuspecting people. I positively will not misrepresent conditions or property in this locality under any consideration, and I offer my services simply as an agent to show you the farms and properties listed with me for sale. I am in a position to look after the interests of both purchaser and buyer at one and the same time, and I will arrange for mortgage loans on property purchased through this agency, insurance, taxes, etc. My motto is: "my customers must be pleased," and if you are looking for a farm, city property, a summer home, coal or timber lands, I can fix you out to your entire satisfaction. I will gladly answer all inquiries, and you are invited to call on me for full particulars, terms, etc., on any and all properties listed with me. I make it a practice to attend promptly to my correspondence, answering all letters if possible on the day received.

I have traveled extensively throughout the world, and am familiar with most of the nooks and corners of the United States, and will state frankly that while there are some exceptions and drawbacks to a permanent residence in every locality that I have visited, I am convinced that this mountain top offers greater advantages, and to my mind, is the least objectionable of all.

Come to Western Maryland young man and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands, or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements. These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite your attention to the fact that this locality offers as great advantages in dairying and truck farming as any in the country. Thousands of acres of rich glade land with a deep black soil, until recently thought to be worthless, and much of which is still covered with hazel brush and alders, can be purchased at a very low figure. A considerable portion of this glade land requires more or less drainage to get the best results. But "there is no excellence without great labor," and the following will prove to you that under proper conditions this soil is the most productive in the land. These are some of the best yields reported in the county: Wheat 32 bushels; Oats 104 bushels; Corn 55 bushels, Barley 36 bushels; Buckwheat 45 bushels, and Potatoes 450 bushels per acre; Timothy and Clover 5 tons, Alfalfa 7 tons, Turnips 500 bushels, Cauliflower, Celery and Cabbage $500 to $1000 gross per acre, and cabbages weighing 25 pounds each.

In addition to the above I wish to state that people here are beginning to realize that this is an ideal apple country. Hundreds of acres on this mountain top are being set to apple trees yearly. Last year apples from this county won first prizes in the National Horticultural Congress and Exposition at Council Bluffs, Iowa; the State Horticultural Exposition in Baltimore and New York City. A great many varieties of fruits and berries are profitably grown with little attention.

Oakland has a population of nearly 2000 people, is the county seat of Garrett county, and on the main line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad within six hours of the Nation's Capital, and is situated in the center of a magnificent farming country with almost unbounded resources. Right in our midst are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, iron ore, fire and potters clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, an abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, and the purest water on earth.

Our accessibility to Eastern cities and the numerous summer resorts in this immediate vicinity give us a market and prices for farm products second to none in the country.

We are in the center of a plateau 20 by 60 miles in extent; 2800 feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for inconvenience. America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort—where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long. While you who reside in the low lands, or large centers of population swelter with the heat in summer and are breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned atmosphere. Here the draves are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. We have excellent highways, and the state is now spending $238,000 on roads radiating from Oakland.

The little city of Oakland has a modern system of water works, sewerage and natural gas. A healty climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, are entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water; a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems; where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy of an equal start in life.

The Creator is still making people, but no more land. "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame." Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." This is a new country, until recently covered with great forests of oak, poplar, maple and hemlock and is now awaiting the tiller of the soil. There is no doubt in my mind that this is a far more desirable country than Texas, Oklahoma, Dakota, Canada or any other western country which is being boomed at the present time.

In this age of advertising you may have come in contact with those who had for sale the proverbial "gold brick," if this is true, you are no doubt "from Missouri" and "have to be shown." Therefore I thought it advisable in this connection to publish a few of the many letters received, as evidence of our standing and method of transacting business:

Every Man to His Own Business.

No business goes without effort. A long felt want has been a suitable man to act as foragent in the sale of real estate in this county. The matter has been taken up by Lieutenant E. S. West. He has purchased a fine home in this locality and opened up an office as a real estate agent. He is an active, energetic and reliable young man. Although comparatively a stranger he is already doing business, finding customers and making sales.

J. M. DAVIS & SONS, Oakland, Md.

Worthington, W. Va., Oct. 5th, 1909.

E. S. WEST, Oakland, Md.,

Dear Sir:—I desire to thank you for your courteous treatment and efficient manner in which you represented me in the purchase of the property in Oakland. I will be glad to recommend your agency to any and all of my friends who may be looking for a location in your vicinity.

Yours very truly,

R. M. FORTNEY.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:—

This is to certify that I have recently purchased a farm through the agency of Mr. E. S. West of Oakland, Md., and am entirely pleased with his courteous treatment, interest and ability manifested in transacting my business, and can cheerfully recommend this agency to any one looking for a location.

WM. D. WHITEHILL.

Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, U. S., J. A. T. Hull, Chairman.

Washington, D. C., June 21st, 1909.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:—

I take great pleasure in cordially endorsing Lieutenant E. S. West, late of the Regular Army, now on the retired list, as a gentleman of very high character and excellent ability. I am very sure that he will always be found a gentleman of integrity, and any courtesies extended him will be highly appreciated by me.

J. A. T. HULL.

No. 1 — 341 Acres — $18,000

341 acres, 12-room house, barn 40x80 ft., all other necessary out buildings, buildings all practically new, excellent young orchard; this farm is level and in high state of cultivation, about $3000 worth of hay and grain harvested on this farm this year, fine cold spring at the house. This farm lies just across the railroad southwest of Mt. Lake Park, and only one mile from Oakland; it is all cleared but 50 acres. There is no better farm or location in the country. It is positively worth twice what is asked for it. Come and see this farm that I am offering for $18,000.00.

No. 2 — 700 Acres — $7,500

200 acres cleared, two good orchards, fine big farm house and necessary out buildings, place is well watered and has an excellent spring of cold water at the house. Coal opened on the place, as fine veins of fire clay and white rocks as can be found in the country; fire clay alone was optioned at $35 per acre at time of late money panic; railroad is projected through this farm, and is expected to be built soon. This farm is six miles from Oakland, and will be sold as a whole or divided. 250 acres known as the "Home Farm," which has all the improvements, can be bought for $5,250, and the balance 450 acres, which is covered with a fine young growth of timber suitable for mine props, etc., can be purchased for $2,250.

No. 3 — Town Property — $3,000

8-room house and one acre of ground in city of Oakland; plenty of excellent fruit; two barns, good well of water, good stone cellar, natural gas at the door. This is a great bargain for any one desiring town property; conveniently located, only four blocks from postoffice.

No. 4 — 53 Acres — $3,000

An excellent little farm, level and free from stones; four and one-half miles from Oakland; one-half mile from railroad station; 40 acres cleared and fenced; fine new bank barn, 36x42 feet; this land is underlaid with coal, and is a bargain at $3,000.

No. 5 — 2044 Acres — $28 per Acre

This is one of the most valuable tracts of timber land in this part of the country, 352 acres in fee and balance in timber rights only, with 20 years to remove the timber. A large portion of this tract is underlaid with valuable limestone. This is one of the best logging propositions to be found anywhere, the timber will all come down hill, and can be manufactured and loaded on cars for about $7.50 per thousand; a lumber charter and 24 mile railroad charter will go with the property. This timber fronts on the Western Maryland railroad for three miles, and will cut in the neighborhood of Nineteen Million feet of valuable lumber. There are several thousand acres of good timber directly behind this tract, which will have to come through it. This could be purchased as needed.

No. 6 — 50 Acres Timber Only — $1000

50 acres valuable Oak Timber, one and one-half miles south of Oakland.

No. 7 — 15 Room House — $6,500

7 acres of valuable land with this valuable home, barn, orchard, etc., located in desirable portion of Oakland.

No. 8 — 121 Acres — $3,000

Hill farm; good orchard, 50 acres cleared; no buildings, good coal range on the farm. Will sell the coal for $2,000, or the farm including all mineral rights for $3,000.

No. 9 — 209 Acres — $6,000

This is an excellent farm near the town of Accident, 100 acres cleared; good buildings, fine stone spring house; excellent trout fishing; sugar camp that will set 1200 vessels. The cleared portion of this farm lies practically level, and is a bargain at $6,000.

No. 10 — 12½ Acres — $900

This place is only one-half mile from business portion of Oakland; is all cleared, has a very good house, good well of water, excellent fruit stone cellar, and could with very little labor be made a very desirable home. The soil is productive, and well adapted for truck growing, fruit, etc. This is the greatest bargain for anyone wanting a cheap home convenient to Oakland. This place must be sold soon, and the price, $900, is the lowest figure that will buy it.

No. 11 — 20 Acres — $7,500

This valuable piece of land is improved with a fine two-story brick house, tenant house, barn, etc., and lies in the suburbs of Deer Park. The house alone would cost more to build than we are asking for this property. This little farm would make a great many desirable building lots that would have a ready sale. This would make an ideal summer home for anyone desiring a location on this mountain top. The land is all fertile and in a high state of cultivation; plenty of fruit and shade; natural gas at the door.

No. 12 — 47 Acres — $1,700

This tract lies in the suburbs of Deer Park, is only partly cleared, and would make a number of desirable building lots, or could be made an attractive and convenient farm; it is a bargain at $1,700.

No. 13 — Town Property — $1,300

Two good dwelling houses on a single lot in town of Deer Park; a snap at $1,300.

No. 14 — 47 Acres — $1,600

This tract is near Dobbin, W. Va., located on Mason road leading to Oakland. 5 room house, fair out buildings, 75 bearing apple trees, choice fruit; 25 acres cleared. Good limestone quarry, coalopen; one mile from school. Mineral rights reserved. Will sell for $1,600.

No. 15 — 100 Acres — $3,500

Situated near Loch Lynn, adjoining farm of Sampson Bittinger; 50 acres cleared; fair buildings; good orchard; land smooth and productive. $500 worth of timber on the place.

No. 16 — 25 Acres — $1500

This farm is four miles from Oakland on Broad Ford Run; 12 acres cleared; good 8 room house; some fruit and berries. Good barn and excellent water. For sale at $1,500.

No. 17 — 100 Acres — $4,500

Situated on the B. & O. Railroad, near the town of Hutton, in a high state of cultivation; 80 acres cleared; 8 room house; 125 bearing fruit trees. Uncleared portion has approximately 100,000 feet of saw timber. Farm is well watered and free from debt. 80 tons of hay cut on the farm this year. Can be bought if taken this Fall for $4,500.

No. 18 — 214 Acres — $1500

This tract is on Backbone mountain, about one mile from Altamont, and near the railroad. About 50 acres clear and under fence. Small house and out buildings. Best spring in the country. Analyzed and found to be purer than the water shipped from Truesdale Heights. Excellent location for sanitarium. Water from this spring alone would be worth thousands of dollars to anyone who would ship it to the city. Tract has 75,000 of saw timber and will cut 2000 ties. County road runs near the tract and private road through the place. Would make an ideal sheep or grazing farm and can be bought for $1,500.

No. 19 — 152½ Acres — $2,700

Situated on the Cranesville public road, 4 miles west of Oakland. Good buildings, good fences, 50 fruit trees in bearing; about 50 acres cleared. School one-fourth mile from the house. Farm is well watered; lays practically level. Soil of wooded portion very rich and easily cleared. This farm is worth $4,500, can be bought if taken this Fall, for $2,700.

No. 20 — 51 Acres — $4,000

Valuable farm of 51 acres known as "Morning Side," one mile south of Mt. Lake Park. Improved by good new 8 room house, finished in hardwood; has direct connection with the water works of Mt. Lake Park with a heavy pressure. Splendid bath, hot and cold water; cement cellar; 400 bearing fruit trees. Farm practically all cleared; lays smooth. 250 foot poultry house, stable, grainary, etc. This property if taken soon can be had for $4,000—house alone cost that money. Perpetual water rights go with the farm.

No. 21 — ½ Acres — $2,500

Good 8-room house; acre and one-half ground, Halfway between Oakland and Mt. Lake Park. Very desirable location. For sale at $2,500. House alone would cost $3,000 to build.

No. 22 — Bottling Works and Residence — $6,000

Steam Bottling Works. Good house and barn on a lot 225x200 feet. Excellent spring. For sale at $6,000.

No 23. — Town Lots

Corner lot on Sixth and Green street. Quarter acre ground; nice oak trees. One of the best building lots in town. For sale at $700. Corner lot on Seventh and Oak street at $550. Two lots on Oak street, between Seventh and Eighth streets, at $425 each, or $800 for the two.

No. 24 — City Property — $4,000

One of the most desirable homes in Oakland, located on Alder Street, known as the "Episcopal Rectory." This property is worth much more than I am asking, and is a decided bargain at $4,000.

No. 25 — City Property — $1,400

The large house and lot on Center street; convenient and desirable location. This property must be sold as soon as possible, and to close it out quick I will offer it for the next sixty days for $1,400.

No. 26 — City Property — $10,000

One of the best locations in the city for business block; is improved with a good property. Ideal location for fine hotel. Can be bought for $10,000. Owner is anxious to sell.

Exhibit of Farm Products in Front of Office of E. S. West, Oakland Md., Saturday, Oct. 2, 1909.

No. 27 — City Property — $3,000

Desirable location; 10 room house, hot water heat, bath, electric light, natural gas at the door; convenient to business portion of city; a bargain at $3,000.

No. 28 — Building Lot — $3,800

One of the most desirable building lots in business portion of Oakland; ideal location for hotel or apartment house, both of which are badly needed in this place. I am offering this property for $3,800.

No. 29 — 30 Acres — $900

This little farm is located on Northwestern Pike about nine miles south of Oakland. This little farm lays smooth, has an abundance of pure water; good soil, good portion of it cleared, and is improved with a very good farm house, stable, young orchard. Owner desires to buy a larger place and will sell for $900; $200 down and balance in yearly payments of $100.

No. 30 — 175 Acres — $4,000

This farm is located near Bittinger, and is one of the best in that locality. Farm is improved and lays well. Four tons of maple sugar was manufactured on the place last Spring. Owner is anxious to sell and is offering this property for $4,000.

No. 31 — 158 Acres — $3,000

An excellent farm, 80 acres cleared and well fenced. New farm, excellent soil; two orchards; farm is smooth; good improvements. Less than one-half mile from school and church; four and one-half miles from railroad station. If you are looking for a good farm of this kind, you cannot beat it for $3,000.

No. 32 — 65 Acres — $6,500

Beautiful tract of land, one-half mile out of Oakland; 40 acres cleared and under cultivation; beautiful building site by a never failing spring of pure water, which could be piped all through the home. Abundant water for all farm purposes. Ideal location for Summer home or sanitarium, and is cheap at $100 per acre.

No. 33 — 32 Acres — $2,200

This little farm is one mile from Oakland; ideal place for truck farm, fruit or poultry. Very good house, excellent spring; gas line passes by the house. Owner does not reside here, and will sell if taken soon for $2,200.

No. 34 — 33 Acres — $1,100

A very desirable little farm, good house and stable; about one-half the farm cleared and fenced; good soil; 30 bushels of buckwheat was grown per acre on this farm this year. I will sell this place for $1,100.

No. 35 — 118 Acres — $3,500

One-half mile from Deer Park; excellent soil; 50 acres cleared; 200 young apple trees; small farm house, and other out buildings; good springs; price $3,500.

No. 36 — 100 Acres — $1,100

100 acres of nice smooth land, unimproved, one mile north of Deer Park. Would make an excellent farm. Can be bought this Fall for $1,100.

No. 37 — Park Property — $2,000

Excellent 13 room house, conveniently located in Mt. Lake Park. This property is worth twice what I am asking for it, and is a great bargain at $2,000.

15 acres in suburbs of Oakland, improved with good seven-room house, barn, orchard, etc. For sale at $5,000, or for rent at $30 per month, furnished.

No. 44 — City Property — $1,750

Desirable eight-room house and good lot on Fifth street, between Alder and Center. A bargain at $1,750. Owner resides in another state and is very anxious to dispose of this property.

No. 45 — 1021 Acres — $20,500

This is a valuable tract of coal land and could be cut up into a number of good farms. This tract is known as "Chestnut Flat" or the "Schoolfield Tract," and lies near Crellin in the state of West Va. The coal alone on this tract would be worth more than the $20,500 asked for the property in fee.

No. 46 — 113 Acres — $5,800

This farm lies in Garrett county, four miles from Frostburg; one-half mile from school; 32 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation. It has been estimated that the uncleared portion will cut 30,000 mine props, 100,000 feet of Hemlock, 300,000 feet of White Oak, 150,000 feet of Red Oak, and 50,000 feet of Chestnut timber. There are 50 apple trees, sugar orchard of 1000 trees, good buildings, good spring water and a running stream through the farm. On fine road. Owner is in poor health and is very anxious to sell. Who will be the first to take advantage of this bargain at $5,800.

No. 47 — 63 Acres — $4,200

58 acres cleared; some timber on wooded portion. Six-room farm house, good barn 48x56 feet; good bearing orchard, excellent spring and spring house. Place is well watered; farm lies well, just rolling enough for a good drainage. Well worth the price asked $4,200.

No. 48 — Suburban Property — $1,800

A beautiful 50-acre lot in east suburbs of Oakland, very productive and almost level; a number of young fruit trees. This lot would make an ideal building site for a suburban home, and can be purchased for $1,800.

No. 49 — 105 Acres — $1,600

This farm is near Swanton, this county; has 75 acres cleared and fenced; five room farm house, stable, spring house and other necessary out buildings; excellent water, two good orchards, one in full bearing and others coming in bearing, choice apples, plums, grapes, etc. Most of this farm lies smooth and can all be cultivated; is a snap at $1,600.

No. 50 — City Property — $1,200

2½ acres nice level ground in city of Oakland, would make good building lots and would be ideal for trucking. This property lies two blocks from business portion of town, and I consider very cheap at $1,200.

No. 51 — 50 Acres — $650

This tract of land lies 3½ miles north of Deer Park; about 8 acres cleared. Two cheap farm houses on the property, a good garden, plenty of good water. This land is smooth and fertile. Would make a nice farm for some young man who would clear it out, and owing to its location would be very valuable. This farm is cheap at $650.

No. 52 — City Property — $1,500

Excellent 8-room house with basement, pantry, bath, and a good barn; is equipped with natural gas, has pure spring water piped through the house, sewer connections; is on a lot 70x160 feet. This property is nicely located near the head of Second street, and is cheap at $1,500. This property if not sold in the meantime, can be rented next summer season, furnished, at $50 per month.

No. 53 — Suburban Property — $1,000

5-Acre lot in east suburbs of Oakland, in high state of cultivation. Would make a beautiful building site; can be had for $1,000.

No. 54 — 50 Acres — $850

This little farm lies near McHenry, this county, on the proposed state road. Only a small portion of this farm is cleared, and is improved with a good 8-room house, stable, a few young fruit trees. Farm is well watered, has a good spring at the house. There is no marketable timber except ties and props. Will sell this farm if taken soon at $850.

No. 55 — 4½ Acres — $350

Will sell a half interest in 5½ acres, lying on the south side of the B. & O. railroad tracks, at junction of Wonderly county road at Mt. Lake Park, for $350.

No. 83 — 320 Acres — $7,000

320 acres of land at Superior, Wisconsin; Superior and Duluth, the twin cities 'in the eye of the Northwest,' where the 'finger points of destiny' unerringly marks their incomparable situation, may one day eclipse in commerce any other point in the United States—bar none." There is going to be the biggest kind of a boom up there. Five new railroads building to Superior; second water power in America opened; the U. S. Steel Corporation is building a fifteen million dollar plant, etc. There is a fortune in this 320 acres. The man who can buy and hold this property for a few years will see East Superior extend clear out beyond these two quarter sections, which are now only four miles from the heart of Greater Superior. Write us and arrange to see it.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson VIII. — Fourth Quarter, For Nov. 21, 1909.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, II Cor. xi, 21, to xii, 10—Memory Verses, 24, 25—Golden Text, II Cor. xii, 9—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

The topic of this lesson is "Paul's Story of His Life," and yet that seems to be more fully told in his testimony before Agrippa in chapter xxvi, or even in his address from the castle stairs in chapter xxii, or more concisely in Phil. iii, or more fully by putting these three records together. The verses assigned us for today's study are rather a resume of his sufferings, with special reference to his being stoned to death at Lystra and his marvelous experience at that time. With such a record as that in chapter xi, 23-28, who is there today who has anything that can begin to compare with it in the matter of suffering for Christ's sake? At the time of his conversion the Lord said to Ananias, "I will shew him how great things he must suffer for my sake" (Acts ix, 16), and this seems in our eyes as if He had filled the bill quite fully. Let us understand a little more fully the service of suffering as set forth in Rom. v, 3; Phil. i, 29; Col. i, 24; Rev. ii, 10, and elsewhere. It is made unmistakably plain that by the suffering of Christ in our stead, as our sin bearer, all who receive Him are made meet to be partakers of the inheritance, having in Him redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins (Col. i, 12-14).

There is, however, another phase of the suffering question in Heb. ii, 10, where it speaks of bringing us to His glory and of Him as the captain of our salvation being made perfect through sufferings. He is our high priest, who can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, for He was in all points tempted like as we are (Heb. iv, 15). Now, since by His atonement He has made us kings and priests unto God, having washed us from our sins in His own blood, and we are to reign with Him on the earth (Rev. i, 5, 6; v, 10), we must remember that to be fitted to reign with Him we must suffer with Him (II Tim. ii, 12), by His atonement made fit for his presence, but by our suffering with Him here as His redeemed ones made fit to fill the place in His kingdom which He is preparing for us while He prepares us for it; hence we have a little light on the great mystery of the believer's sufferings as seen everywhere in greater or less degree.

If by His grace we are patient under all our trials we are winning for ourselves a special crown—the crown of life (Jas. i, 12; Rev. ii, 20), which we shall have to cast at His feet in that day. And not only so, but the power of Christ is seen upon us to His glory, the patience under trial as it could not otherwise be seen. Paul therefore says, "Most gladly will I glory in my infirmities that the power of Christ may rest upon me" (xii, 9). This is something like Phil. i, 20, where he says, "Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death."

While Paul had unusual fellowship in suffering, he had also some unusual revelations. Not only was his conversion unique, but the various manifestations of the Lord to him afterward were very remarkable, as was also the revelation of "the mystery" of which he so often speaks. He tells us that, lest the abundance of the revelations should unduly exalt him, there was given him a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan, to buffet him. He tells us that he asked the Lord three times to deliver him from it, but the answer was, "My grace is sufficient for thee, for my strength is made perfect in weakness" (verse 9). I do not know how we can be quite sure as to what this thorn in the flesh was till Paul himself shall some day tell us if it is best for us to know. Some one has said that we are not told what it was in order that if any one has a thorn in the flesh he may find a bit of comfort in supposing that that was just what Paul had. This certainly is true—that if any believer has a physical infirmity and cannot get it removed by prayer or by the physician's skill then the answer to Paul must be accepted and the Lord trusted for grace to bear it meekly for His glory, for, while these words were said to Paul, they were written for us.

As to the special vision and revelation of our lesson, it seems to have been about the time that Paul was stoned to death at Lystra, and it is quite probable that while Paul's dead body was being dragged out of Lystra (Acts xiv, 19) he was in the third heaven, or paradise, which he here describes, and saw and heard things that he could not put into earthly language. We have no record of anything that Lazarus of Bethany said when he came back from the dead, probably because words could not utter it. The best thing I have ever read on these heavenly realities is "The Trance of Rev. William Tennent," once a minister at Freehold, N. J., who was dead for three days and afterward preached the gospel for many years. It is a little tract published by Miss M. E. Munson, 77 Bible House, New York. The foundation of all that is beautiful in this lesson is to be able to say, "I know a man in Christ" (xii, 2), for unless we are in Christ we are certainly lost, but being in Him all is well for time and eternity. Then to be able to say truly "Christ liveth in me" (Gal. ii, 20), as is the privilege of every true believer, insures the manifestation of His life in us.

CO-OPERATION GROWS

Practical Work of the Grange Along This Line.

Some Facts and Figures Taken From Reports of Co-operative Enterprises In Several New England States. Money Saved to Members.

The New England Homestead remarks that the strong vehicle of co-operation is the grange. Maine and Vermont have many local granges with grange stores. There is a large amount of co-operative buying of grains, fertilizers, etc., in carload lots apart from these grange stores. The famous grange co-operative enterprise at Houlton, Me., has been before commented upon in these columns.

The last report available from this store covers the period of Dec. 10, 1908, to June 10, 1909, and figures are as follows: Flour sold, $10,023; sugar, $1,365; grass seed, $11,300. A summary of the work thus far this year shows a business of $164,974. The running expense for the same period has been $3,989.

Speaking about Connecticut conditions, State Master Hadley says that much is being done in the way of associated effort. About a year ago a Patrons' co-operative association was formed, and many dollars have been saved members.

Concerning the situation in Maine, State Master Stetson says: "In co-operative stores there are six that I know of which will do a business of $250,000 this year. It is probable that the stores of which I am not informed and the granges which buy in carload lots will amount to as much more."

Last year Massachusetts state grange formed a strong Patrons' co-operative association, which is a society incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts, with a capital stock of $25,000. Since Jan. 1 the association has made sales of 100 cars of grain, 15 cars of flour and 795 tons of fertilizing material, has paid for grain $58,000, for flour $18,000, for fertilizer $25,000, for various other products a total of several thousand dollars more. On this basis it is figured that $3,000 to $4,000 was saved members on fertilizers, $3,000 on flour and $4,000 on grain. Still further, it has been a saving to the farmers in general, inasmuch as the regular trade has cut profits and prices somewhat to meet the prices of the co-operative association.

Nowhere in the country is grange fire insurance developed more strongly or satisfactorily than in New England. The state granges of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut all have fire insurance companies. Aug. 1 of this year the Massachusetts state grange had outstanding insurance of more than $3,058,371. Commenting on this, E. D. Howe, secretary of the company, says, "Fully 95 per cent of this amount is on property of Patrons."

The surprising total of $20,000,000 in risks is what State Master Stetson reports from Maine. He says: "We have three fire insurance companies carrying risks approximating $20,000,000. The present year's assessment of the company doing the largest business in the state will be $1.50 per $1,000 of insurance. In addition to this work the Maine state grange built and takes care of a cottage at Goodwill Farm, which provides a home for fifteen homeless girls. At this time we are collecting money from the granges to establish a permanent scholarship fund for one pupil."

Of New Hampshire State Master Hadley writes: "Our state grange has not done a great deal in late years by way of co-operation only in fire and life insurance. Our fire insurance company has succeeded for eighteen years or more and is now carrying about $6,000,000 worth of fire risks. The rate is 1 per cent for three years."

The grange in Rhode Island is turning the co-operative wheel. State Master Marchant has the following to say: "While we have never attempted any co-operative stores in Rhode Island, our members have saved many dollars from the familiar trade card system. Co-operation in the purchase of fertilizers has not been as general as could be wished, but the granges located on the island of Rhode Island have for years had their fertilizers (approximated several hundred tons annually) mixed at the factory under direction of the granges. Thus came a saving of several dollars a ton as compared with the commercial price. Probably the greatest financial co-operative benefit has been derived from insurance. Our fire relief association started business in 1901, and the rate of premium charged has been about one-half that charged by stock companies on farm property. Our company is carrying more than $100,000 in risks, has paid all losses promptly and has a balance of $5,000 in the treasury."

The constitution of the national grange distinctly says that no grange can confer more than two degrees on the same candidate at the same meeting. It is not within any state master's power to set aside or modify the constitution. It is, however, perfectly proper for a grange to call as pecial session for the purpose of conferring degrees.

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

The Union Pacific's New Head.

Judge Robert Scott Lovett, the new chairman of the executive committee of the Union Pacific railroad, has for several years been the right hand man of the late E. H. Harriman, whom he succeeds. In the Union Pacific this office is superior to that of president of the company. As vice president and general counsel of the road Judge Lovett, it is said, shared the confidence of his predecessor to a greater extent than any other man.

Judge Lovett's close connection with Mr. Harriman's policies really dates from 1906. He had been the head of the legal department of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific for some time previously. Born on a farm near Shepard, Tex., in the first year of the civil war, he became a railroad man before he was a lawyer. He began his railroad career as station agent of the Houston East and West Texas railroad in his native town, and it was while he was a forty dollar a month freight clerk for the road at Houston that he studied law.

When he was admitted to the bar he formed a partnership with former Representative Charles Stewart, but soon returned to the railroad field as local counsel of the road which had first employed him. He eventually became general counsel of the road and was soon afterward appointed assistant general counsel and then general counsel of the Texas and Pacific, remaining with the Gould road until he became a member of the firm representing the Southern Pacific.

One of the first results of his association with E. H. Harriman was his election to the presidency of the Houston, East and West Texas. He then became counsel for the Southern Pacific, with offices in Houston, and it was from there that E. H. Harriman brought him to New York.

Dr. Cook's Backer.

John R. Bradley, the man who financed Dr. Cook's polar expedition, is a wealthy New Yorker who devotes much of his time to the pursuit of big game in various quarters of the globe. In fact, it was a desire on his part to bag a few polar bears that resulted in the now famous expedition. In 1906 he suggested to Dr. Cook that the latter become his guest on an arctic trip to hunt big game. It was finally agreed that they start the following year, and in the spring of 1907 the party was outfitted. While storing equipment it was suggested that the supply was ample for a dash to the pole. "Let's do it," said Cook. Mr. Bradley declined to take part in the venture, but told Dr. Cook that he would take him to the arctic in his vessel and turn over the equipment for a try for the pole.

Mr. Bradley is highly elated over the success of Dr. Cook. He is a native of Pennsylvania, stands six feet high and weighs about 200 pounds. His life in the open has kept him in athletic trim. With his strong constitution and store of energy he could doubtless have made the northward march with Dr. Cook without falling by the wayside. Mr. Bradley has written big game stories for the magazines and, it is said, is preparing a book on that subject.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, barries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements. These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

HURCH DISTRICT STEWARDS' MEETING.

Was Largely Attended By Representative Churchmen of Oakland District

The meeting of the stewards of the Methodist Episcopal church of the Oakland District, West Virginia Conference, was held in St. Paul's M. E. church in Oakland Monday evening and Tuesday of this week, when every moment of the several services was interesting and brought out some new theme for thought and meditation and polished some rusting ideas into renewed action.

The services were opened Monday night by a sermon by Dr. A. B. Riker, pastor of First church, Moundsville, W. Va., who spoke eloquently and convincingly along evangelization lines, pointing out to the large number of ministers present their duty to themselves and to their churches, urging them to renewed efforts and higher aims. This service was followed by a social hour when old acquaintanceships were renewed and new ones made.

Tuesday morning the day's services opened with a sunrise prayer meeting at 6:30 o'clock, when quite a number were in attendance, followed at 9:30 by a devotional hour led by Rev. A. Mick, of Terra Alta.

Dr. Carl Gregg Doney, president of the West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, spoke on the college aims and what it has accomplished for the young men and young women of the Conference. At 10:30 Dr. Doney, in the absence of Rev. E. Weaver, delivered a sermon to an appreciative and highly interested audience.

In the afternoon at 2.30 o'clock the district stewards' conference was held when the salary of the District Superintendent was increased from $2021 to $2100.

Dr. Riker preached again Tuesday night. A polished man and brilliant scholar his address will leave a lasting impression upon those who were so fortunate to be present and those who failed to hear him missed a rare treat. Rev. Dr. Reed, the District Superintendent, deserves much credit for having secured Dr. Riker at these services which throughout were highly profitable and profitable.

Printing for India.

In The Republican Job Printing Department tomorrow the work of printing and binding five thousand copies of a memorial calendar for the Lee Bengali Mission of Calcutta, India, will be commenced. KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS DISTRICT MEETING

Fourth Gathering of Pythian Knights Will Be Held in Oakland.

The District Meetings of the Knights of Pythias of Allegany and Garrett counties has come to be an event in local Pythianism fondly looked forward to by the members of the fraternity and all others who have that spirit of fraternalism and good fellowship which is an essential in making such gatherings successful socially. This has been the history ever since the first meeting was held some years ago and the indications are that the gathering of Knights in Oakland tomorrow will eclipse all former efforts and will remain a bright page in the history of Pythianism for years to come.

The arrangements for the meeting are in the hands of a select committee of members of the Oakland and Friendsville lodges who have promulgated the program, neatly arranged on folding bristol cards containing the list of speakers to be heard at the banquet tomorrow evening at six o'clock when two hundred Knights and their ladies are expected. The toastmaster will be Mr. B. Frank Williams, of Frostburg, and the speakers have been selected from the Oakland, Cumberland, Frostburg, Lonaconing, Friendsville and Rowlesburg lodges.

An afternoon meeting will be held at one o'clock with Mr. A. T. Matthews as chairman, at which officers of the Grand Lodge of Maryland will be present and deliver addresses. At night a class of new members will be admitted to the Oakland lodge and the Knight Rank work will be conferred by Cumberland City Lodge No. 60.

THE DEATH RECORD.

BENJ. F. FRIEND.

Mr. Benjamin F. Friend, of Mountain Lake Park, died very suddenly last Thursday afternoon after a brief illness of appoplexy with which he was stricken about ten o'clock that morning while engaged in working near the residence of Capt. James A. Hayden. Mr. Friend was aged nearly sixty-five years and was a soldier of the Union during the war of the sixties. He was a member of the Baptist church and his funeral took place from that edifice at Loch Lynn Heights Saturday morning with the interment at the White cemetery. He leaves several children, among them being Mrs. W. O. Cleveland and Mrs. Morrel Jamison, of Oakland, and Mr. Willie Friend of Mountain Lake, besides his widow who was a daughter of the late Jonathan White, of Loch Lynn Heights.

THE FIRE AT JENNINGS

Home of Mr Daniel Yommer Burned To the Ground.

Mr. Joseph Harris, the Jackson street merchant, returned last Thursday from Jennings, Garrett county, where he visited the members of the Yommer family, whose home was burned to the ground on Sunday night, November 7. A daughter of Mr. Harris' is married to Mr. William Yommer, a member of the family. From Mr. Harris the Star received the first authentic report of the fire.

The Yommer family had an early supper on the night of the fire and retired about 8 o'clock. Shortly after 9 o'clock the hired man, Clarence Beechy, was awakened by the sound of a fire crackling in the kitchen beneath the room where he was sleeping. He jumped from his bed and rushed to the door of the room, where he was met by a cloud of smoke. Going to the window he threw it open and jumped to the ground and proceeded to awaken the occupants of the house.

Mr. and Mrs. Yommer, their son, Clarence, and three daughters, who occupied rooms on the second floor, rushed down stairs clad only in their night clothes. By this time the flames had made such progress that it was impossible for any of them to procure clothing before running from their rooms.

Upon reaching the lower floor, Clarence Yommer, aged about twenty years, closely followed by his mother, ran to the kitchen where the fire started, and threw open the door. As he did so, he was enveloped in a cloud of smoke and flame. Both mother and son were frightfully burned before they could find their way from the blazing building. Mrs. Yommer was burned about the face and head, while her son was frightfully burned all over his body. For several days after the fire, it was thought that Clarence would lose his eye sight, but at this wring he is making favorable progress.

Mr. Daniel Yommer, the only other member of the family to receive injuries, was painfully though not seriously burned about the head.

As soon as the family had made their escape from the building, they proceeded to walk to the home of Mr. Yommer's married son, Mr. William Yommer, about half-a-mile away. Clarence Yommer reached the home of his brother completely exhausted and with his under clothes burned to a crisp, hanging from him in shreds.

The Yommer home was burned to the ground and not an article of any description was saved. A small amount of insurance was carried on the property, but the amount in no way covers the loss.

Mr. Daniel Yommer is a well known and prosperous farmer of Jennings, where he has lived for over fifty years. He owns two farms and a saw-mill.—Lonaconing Stsr.

STOYER.

We have had the worst forest fires in the past few days that we have had for several years.

Mr. P. J. Melvin, the store manager, has been very busy the last week restocking his store.

Mr. Alva Paugh, of Deer Park, was visiting his aunt, Mrs. J. T. Steyer, last week.

Mrs. Jack Wilson spent Saturday in Oakland.

Messrs. W. H. Steyer and Charles Kidd were calling on friends here Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Harvey, of Ryan's Glade, were calling on relatives here last Sunday.

Misses Nora, Nina, and Ruby Steyer and Mr. Leon Steyer were calling on Mrs. C. E. Hilleary Sunday.

Mrs. Emily Wilson has returned to her home in Cumberland.

Misses Jessie Thompson, Ethel Neville and Opal Shillingburg spent Sunday at W. T. Steyer's. That seems to be the leading place for the young people to have a good sociable time.

Some of our youug people have the western fever.

We are sorry to know that Misses Grace Riley and Ida Harvey will leave soon for New Mexico where they expect to take up a homestead. They will be missed by their many friends. We wish them much success.

The mines at this place will soon be ready to ship coal.

The hunters made good use of the snow by chasing rabbits.

Mr. Thos. Wilson, who has been sick for some time, is slowly recovering.

Mrs. Maggie Sollars, of this place, is visiting friends at Mt. Storm, W. Va.

We hope the many readers of this paper will spend a happy Thanksgiving, thanking God for the many blessings they have received during the year.

NEW LUMBER OPERATIONS

Of The Croft Lumber Company, A Garrett County Corporation.

Alexander is a little town beautifully located on the left fork of the Buchanan river, about 25 miles south of Buckhannon, W. Va.

The Croft Lumber Company have recently erected a new band saw mill of about 75,000 feet capacity per day, and have built 20 new six-room houses

F. O. Glotfelty, of Oakland, and L. M. Shircliff, of Gorman, two of Garrett county's most successful contractors, have the contract of stocking the mill with logs. They have ten teams and forty men at work and are doing excellent work.

Under the skilled and able management of Jas. A. Dowler, the superintendent and manager, the mill is running at full blast every day and making an average cut of sixty thousand feet every day. They are shipping from six to eight car loads of excellent quality and well manufactured spruce and hemlock lumber each day. Mr. Dowler, who was a resident of Garrett county for a number of years, being manager of the Meadow Mountain Lumber Co. at Friendsville, where he met with much success and made a host of staunch friends among Garrett county woodsmen, who have followed him to his new location at Alexander.

The mill is located seventeen miles down the river from where the timber is located and the log train makes two trips a day and hauls from ten to twelve truck loads of logs.

Garfield Glotfelty, of McHenry, has the job of scaling the logs and managing the train. He is one of Garrett's bachelor boys.

The Croft Lumber Co. is composed of some of Maryland and Pennsylvania's richest lumbermen, who have met with much success in that business, and with such an able and practical man as Mr. Dowler to manage, success is sure to follow.

REPUBLICANS SPENT $50,000

National Committeeman W. P. Jackson Alone Contributed $13,000.

The reports of Chairman John B. Hanna, of the Republican State Central Committee, and Secretary and Treasurer James E. Godwin, of the Republican City Committee, both of which were placed on record Monday show that the Republicans, through these two committees, spent $50,429.47 in the recent campaign. Of course, this does not include the sums spent individually by candidates, committees and political agents. Mr. Hanna filed his report in the Circuit Court at Belair, while Mr. Godwin's report was filed in the Circuit Court for Baltimore City.

The report of Mr. Hanna shows that the Republicans in the State closed their campaign with a balance on hand of $708.41, while in the city the Republicans have a shortage of $6,096.20.

The largest individual contribution to the Republican campaign was made by Mr. William P. Jackson, of Wicomico county, the national committeeman from Maryland, who gave $7,000 to the State and $6,000 to the city, making a total of $13,000. This is regarded as the largest individual contribution received by the Republicans for a number of years and, the party leaders say, shows the wisdom of Collector William F. Stone in confering the honor of national committeeman upon Mr. Jackson. The father of Mr. Jackson, former Congressman William H. Jackson, who for a number of years was one of the most liberal contributors to the Republicans and who generally financed the campaign on the Eastern Shore especially when he was a candidate for Congress, gave $1,000 to Mr. Hanna.

Collector Stone gave $3,000 toward the State fight and $1,000 to the city committee. In addition Mr. Stone has also taken $2,388.35 of the indebtedness of the city committee, which makes his total contribution, if this indebtedness is not made good from other sources, $6,388.35.

Former United States Attorney-General Charles J. Bonaparte and Mr. Robert Garrett each gave $1,500 to Mr. Hanna.

From the State fund Chairman C. Edward Keller, of Allegany county, received $300, while Treasurer A. J. Oester, of Garrett, received $100.

Can Enjoy the Services.

A few days ago a telephone connecting Col. A. G. Sturgiss' home with the pulpit of St. Paul's M. E. church was installed by the official board of that congregation whereby Col. Sturgiss is permitted to enjoy the music, sermons and other services conducted therein while he is confined to his room with a stubborn attack of rheumatism with which he has been afflicted for a long time.

THEY STOLE OTHER THINGS THAN CHICKENS

House Full of Furniture Recovered at Tunnelton by Maryland Officer.

The three men, B. E. Conn, Walter McBratney and Frank Howard, whose arrest in connection with the wholesale thievery of poultry in Garrett county was mentioned in this paper last week, and who have since been guests of Sheriff Brown at the county's expense, will have something more serious to answer before the Circuit Court than that of robbing the hen and poultry houses of farmers all over the northern end of the county, provided there is no break in the chain of evidence now in possession of the State's officers, and there is likely not to be, as the State has a strong case against all three of the men and there is every probability that they will remain guests of the State for some time to come.

As soon as the news of the arrest of the three men became known through medium of THE REPUBLICAN owners and others took a look around their properties with the result that at Sang Run the summer home of John Boyle, a native of Pittsburg, whose property is under the care of Mr. J. Alvin Friend, was found to have been broken into and upon investigation it was ascertained that the contents of the building had been removed surreptitiously and by parties unknown. Mr. Friend, upon discovering this state of affairs investigated and connecting the dis appearance of the goods and chattels of Mr. Boyle with the appearance at Sang Run of Conn, McBratney and Howard, he was not long in coming to the conclusion that the whereabouts of the goods could be ascertained by getting into communicatisn with Sheriff Brown at Oakland. The Sheriff, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Friend, went to Tunnelton Tuesday and securing a search warrant there the house rented by the trio and occupied by two women and a little girl of eight years, presumably the families of two of the men, was entered and the following goods, identified by Mr. and Mrs. Friend as the property of Mr. Boyle, was recovered and brought to Oakland by the Sheriff:

Ten pairs men's shoes, one large trunk, one telescope, five double blankets, one dozen sheets, one dozen pillow cases, six dozen towels, two iron beds, two pairs bed springs, three mattresses, a lot of dishes, one dozen silver napkin rings, a lot of silver spoons, knives and forks, one cracker jar, seventy-five phonograph records and one phonograph horn, two baskets, a quantity of men's and women's wearing apparel, several hats, comfort, one dozen bed spreads, twelve napkins, a lot of cooking utensils, preserves, meat saw, two brooms, one table oilcloth, three rugs, eight pillows, twelve chair cushions, three pictures, one umbrella, and other articles too numerous to mention.

The men were being accorded a preliminary hearing by Justice West on the charge of having stolen chickens, turkeys, etc., when the information charging them with having robbed the Boyle property was lodged against them by Mr. Friend. In the face of the latter information and no doubt appreciating the fact that they were in for it, the men waived a further hearing and the cases against them were sent to the grand jury for investigation and the suspects returned to jail.

Fine New Postal Cards.

Designs for the new postal cards to be issued by the Government have been approved by Postmaster General Hitchcock. The cards will be furnished by the Government Printing Office, in accordance with a contract effective on January 1.

On the ordinary card the head of the late President McKinley will appear, as now, but a much better likeness of him has been selected. On the new small card, intended for index purposes and for social correspondence, a likeness of President Lincoln will appear. The two-cent international card will bear a portrait of General Grant.

A novel and pleasing innovation has been made for the double or reply, postal card. On the first half will appear a portrait of George Washington, while the stamp on the second, or reply half will be a likeness of Martha Washington.

The borders of the stamps will be diversified in design, On all the cards the words "Postal Card," required by the Universal Postal Union Convention, will appear on the borders of the stamp and not, as now, a separate inscripton. The paper to be used is the best for the purpose yet manufactured.

WEST VIRGINIAN WILL START A RANCH OF MILK TREES

Has Remarkable Plant on Exhibition Now in Huntington.

According to the Huntington Advertiser, a Cabell county man intends to revolutionize the dairy industry of that county. He proposes to furnish his patrons with cowless milk, and there will not be a single cow in his herd, if it can be called a herd. His product will be purely vegetable, but he will probably have to consult the pure food law before he sells it as milk, that is, as milk as it is commonly understood. Instead of herds of cattle, the gentle bossie will be absent. In her place, his dairy will consist of an orchard of trees, and milking will be the simple process of making an incision in the bark of the tree and catching the precious fluid in pails. The product is pure vegetable milk, rich and nutritious and a valuable food product, but there is some question as to its butter-making capabilities. At any rate, there is no danger of the existing dairies going out of business all at once, or even soon. The Advertiser says:

"There stands in the lobby of the Huntington theatre one of the most remarkable specimens of the world's flora ever discovered. The scientific name of this plant would be understood by so few that it is omitted here, and the less technical term of milk or cow tree is substitued. The tree has an abundance of milky juice, and is allied to the fig tree. When the trunk is incised a rich, milky, nutritious fluid, in appearance and quality like cow's milk, is discharged in such abundance as to render it an important food product to the natives where it grows. The tree is common in Venezuela, growing to the height of 100 feet. The leaves are leathery, about one foot long and three or four inches broad. The milk of which resembles cream in consistency, but is too viscid to be a safe article of food. The specimen now on exhibition is about eight feet in height and the main bole is two inches in diameter. Beginning at a height of one foot from the root, a myriad of sponge-like branches strike out in every direction. In spite of the number and size of these offshoots, the tree maintains its size until near the top, where an umbrella-like canopy of branches spreads above.

"The specimen now on exhibition is potted, but the tree is quite capable of surviving in the open The milk tree is aptly named. By making an incision in one of the branches a steady flow of rich, thick milk breaks forth, the sack-like bark seeming to be stuffed almost to the bursting point with the milky fluid.

"This much for description of the plant itself.

"Mr. Gainer, manager of the theater, is the owner of the plant. It has been demonstrated that the main branches, if clipped close to the body of the tree, will live, if planted in moist earth, take root and grow with remarkable rapidity. It is said that a full grown tree, if properly cared for, will produce four quarts of rich milk a day. This product is palatable, and a chemical analysis shows it to be entirely wholesome.

"Mr. Gainer recently purchased a number of lots and it is said by some of his closest friends that he intends to establish a milk ranch, upon which he will grow the milk tree and market its product. Mr. Gainer owns two lots 30x200 feet. It is estimated that this space will accommodate 2,000 milk trees of average size. With this number of trees showing a production of four quarts daily the total output of the ranch would approximate 2,000 gallons per day.

"The butter making qualities of the fluid have not yet been tested. One milk tree requires as much water as the average cow, but one of the peculiar qualities of its product is that it absolutely refuses to coalesce with water. The instant water is poured into the fluid a sort of rubber shield forms on the surface, leaving the water standing clear above."

Fire Destroyed Hay.

Fire on last Saturday destroyed three large stacks of hay on the farm of Mrs. Jennie Kimmell, near Deep Creek bridge, and also a number of fence posts. The building on the farm was also broken into and other depredations committed. Mrs. Kimmell offers a reward of $25 for information that will lead to the arrest and conviction of the guilty party or parties.

Mr. Roy H. Hamill, son of Mr. and Mrs. M. R. Hamill, of Oakland, until the close down of the mines was superintendent of the Upper Potomac Mining Company at Upper Potomac, has secured a position as traveling representative with the Hutchinson Bros. Company at Fairmont, where he will make his future home.

THE COMING OUT OF MAGGIE.

How a Whilom Wallflower Blossomed Into a Belle.

By O. HENRY.

[Copyright, 1906, by McClure, Phillips & Co.]

Every Saturday night the Clover Leaf Social club gave a hop in the hall of the Give and Take Athletic association on the east side. In order to attend one of these dances you must be a member of the Give and Take, or if you belong to the division that starts off with the right foot in waltzing you must work in Rhinegold's paper box factory. Still, any Clover Leaf was privileged to escort or be escorted by an outsider to a single dance. But mostly each Give and Take brought the paper box girl that he affected, and few strangers could boast of having shaken a foot at the regular hops.

Maggie Toole on account of her dull eyes, broad mouth and left handed style of foot work in the twostep went to the dances with Anna McCarty and her fellow. Anna and Maggie worked side by side in the factory and were the greatest chums ever. So Anna always made Jimmy Burns take her by Maggie's house every Saturday night so that her friend could go to the dance with them.

ACROSS THE FLOOR MAGGIE SAILED.

The Give and Take Athletic association lived up to its name. The hall of the association in Orchard street was fitted out with muscle making inventions. With the fibers thus builded up, the members were wont to engage the police and rival social and athletic organizations in joyous combat. Between these more serious occupations the Saturday night hops with the paper box factory girls came as a refining influence and as an efficient screen, for sometimes the tip went around, and if you were among the elect that tiptoed up the dark back stairway you might see as neat and satisfying a little welterweight affair to a finish as ever happened inside the ropes.

On Saturdays Rhinegold's paper box factory closed at 3 p. m. On one such afternoon Anna and Maggie walked homeward together. At Maggie's door Anna said, as usual, "Be ready at 7 sharp, Mag, and Jimmy and me 'll come by for you."

But what was this? Instead of the customary humble and grateful thanks from the nonescorted one there were to be perceived a high poised head, a prideful dimpling at the corners of a broad mouth and almost a sparkle in the dull brown eye.

"Thanks, Anna," said Maggie, "but you and Jimmy needn't bother tonight. I've a gentleman friend that's comin' around to escort me to the hop."

The comely Anna pounced upon her friend, shook her, chided and besought her. Maggie Toole catch a fellow—plain, dear, loyal, unattractive Maggie, so sweet as a chum, so unsought for a twostep or a moonlit bench in the little park! How was it? When did it happen? Who was it?

"You'll see tonight," said Maggie, flushed with the wine of the first grapes she had gathered in Cupid's vineyard. "He's swell all right. He's two inches taller than Jimmy and an up to date dresser."

Anna and Jimmy were among the first Clover Leafs to arrive that evening. Anna's eyes were brightly fixed upon the door of the hall to catch the first glimpse of her friend's "catch."

At 8:30 Miss Toole swept into the hall with her escort. Quickly her triumphant eye discovered her chum under the wing of her faithful Jimmy.

"Oh, gee," cried Anna. "Mag ain't made a hit—oh, no! Swell fellow? Well, I guess! Style? Look at 'um."

"Go as far as you like," said Jimmy, with sandpaper in his voice. "Cop him out if you want him. These new guys always win out with the push. Don't mind me. He don't squeeze all the lines, I guess. Huh."

"Shut up, Jimmy. You know what I mean. I'm glad for Mag. First fellow she ever had. Oh, here they come."

Across the floor Maggie sailed like a coquettish yacht convoyed by a stately cruiser. And truly her companion justified the encomiums of the faithful chum. He stood two inches taller than the average Give and Take athlete; his dark hair curled; his eyes and his teeth flashed whenever he bestowed his frequent smiles. The young men of the Clover Leaf club pinned not their faith to the graces of person as much as they did to its prowess, its achievements in hand to hand conflicts and its preservation from the legal duress that constantly menaced it. They viewed, then, the genuflexions and alluring poses of this visitor with their chins at a new angle.

"A friend of mine, Mr. Terry O'Sullivan," was Maggie's formula of introduction. She led him around the room, presenting him to each new arriving Clover Leaf. Almost was she pretty now, with the unique luminosity in her eyes that comes to a girl with her first suitor and a kitten with its first mouse.

"Maggie Toole's got a fellow at last," was the word that went around among the paper box girls. "Pipe Mag's floorwalker!" Thus the Give and Takes expressed their indifferent contempt.

Usually at the weekly hops Maggie kept a spot on the wall warm with her back. She felt and showed so much gratitude whenever a self sacrificing partner invited her to a dance that his pleasure was cheapened and diminished.

But tonight the pumpkin had turned to a coach and six. Terry O'Sullivan was a victorious Prince Charming, and Maggie Toole winged her first butterfly flight.

The girls besieged her for introductions to her fellow. The Clover Leaf young men, after two years of blindness, suddenly perceived charms in Miss Toole. They flexed their compelling muscles before her and bespoke her for a dance.

Thus she scored, but to Terry O'Sullivan the honors of the evening fell thick and fast. He shook his curls, he smiled and went easily through the seven motions for acquiring grace in your own room before an open window ten minutes each day. He danced like a faun, he introduced manner and style and atmosphere, his words came trippingly upon his tongue, and—he waltzed twice in succession with the paper box girl that Dempsey Donovan brought.

Dempsey was the leader of the association. He wore a dress suit and could chin the bar twice with one hand. He was one of "Big Mike" O'Sullivan's lieutenants and was never troubled by trouble. No cop dared to arrest him. Whenever he broke a pusheart man's head or shot a member of the Heinrich B. Sweeney Outing and Literary association in the kneecap an officer would drop around and say:

"The cap'n 'd like to see ye a few minutes round to the office whin ye have time, Dempsey, me boy."

But there would be snudry gentlemen there with large gold fob chains and black cigars, and somebody would tell a funny story, and then Dempsey would go back and work half an hour with the six pound dumbbells. So doing a tight rope act on a wire stretched across Niagara was a safe terpsichorean performance compared with waltzing twice with Dempsey Donovan's paper box girl. At 10 o'clock the jolly round face of "Big Mike" O'Sullivan shone at the door for five minutes upon the scene. He always looked in for five minutes, smiled at the girls and handed out perfectos to the boys.

Dempsey Donovan was at his elbow instantly, talking rapidly. "Big Mike" looked carefully at the dancers, smiled, shook his head and departed.

The music stopped. The dancers scattered to the chairs along the walls. Terry O'Sullivan, with his entrancing bow, relinquished a pretty girl in blue to her partner and started back to find Maggie. Dempsey intercepted him in the middle of the floor.

Some fine instinct that Rome must have bequeathed to us caused nearly every one to turn and look at them. There was a subtle feeling that two gladiators had met in the arena. Two or three Give and Takes with tight coat sleeves drew nearer.

"One moment, Mr. O'Sullivan," said Dempsey. "I hope you're enjoying yourself. Where did you say you lived?"

The two gladiators were well matched. Dempsey had perhaps ten pounds of weight to give away. The O'Sullivan had breadth with quickness. Dempsey had a glacial eye, a dominating slit of a mouth, an indestructible jaw, a complexion like a belle's and the coolness of a champion. The visitor showed more fire in his contempt and less control over his conspicuous sneer. They were enemies by the law written when the rocks were molten. They were each too splendid, too mighty, too incomparable, to divide pre-eminence. One only must survive.

"I live on Grand," said O'Sullivan insolently, "and no trouble to find me at home. Where do you live?"

Dempsey ignored the question.

"You say your name's O'Sullivan," he went on. "Well, 'Big Mike' says he never saw you before."

"Lots of things he never saw," said the favorite of the hop.

"As a rule," went on Dempsey, huskily sweet, "O'Sullivans in this district know one another. You escorted one of our lady members here, and we want a chance to make good. If you've got a family tree let's see a few historical O'Sullivan buds come out on it. Or do you want us to dig it out of you by the roots?"

"Suppose you mind your own business," suggested O'Sullivan blandly.

Dempsey's eye brightened. He held up an inspired forefinger as though a brilliant idea had struck him.

"I've got it now," he said cordially. "It was just a little mistake. You ain't no O'Sullivan. You are a ring tailed monkey. Excuse us for not recognizing you at first."

O'Sullivan's eye flashed. He made a quick movement, but Andy Geoghan was ready and caught his arm.

Dempsey nodded at Andy and William McMahan, the secretary of the club, and walked rapidly toward a door at the rear of the hall. Two other members of the Give and Take association swiftly joined the little group. Terry O'Sullivan was now in the hands of the board of rules and social referees. They spoke to him briefly and softly and conducted him out through the same door at the rear.

This movement on the part of the Clover Leaf members requires a word of elucidation. Back of the association hall was a smaller room rented by the club. In this room personal difficulties that arose on the ballroom floor were settled, man to man, with the weapons of nature, under the supervision of the board. No lady could say that she had witnessed a fight at a Clover Leaf hop in several years. Its gentlemen members guaranteed that.

So easily and smoothly had Dempsey and the board done their preliminary work that many in the hall had not noticed the checking of the fascinating O'Sullivan's social triumph. Among these was Maggie. She looked about for her escort.

"Smoke up?" said Rose Cassidy. "Wasn't you on? Demps Donovan picked a scrap with your Lizzie boy, and they've waltzed out to the slaughter room with him. How's my hair look done up this way, Mag?"

Maggie laid a hand on the bosom of her cheesecloth waist.

"Gone to fight with Dempsey?" she said breathlessly. "They've got to be stopped. Dempsey Donovan can't fight him. Why, he'll—he'll kill him!"

"Ah, what do you care?" said Rosa. "Don't some of 'em fight every hop?"

But Maggie was off, darting her zigzag way through the maze of dancers. She burst through the rear door into the dark hall and then threw her solid shoulder against the door of the room of single combat. It gave way, and in the instant that she entered her eye caught the scene—the board standing about with open watches; Dempsey Donovan in his shirt sleeves dancing, light footed, with the wary grace of the modern pugilist within easy reach of his adversary; Terry O'Sullivan standing with arms folded and a murderous look in his dark eyes. And without slacking the speed of her entrance she leaped forward with a scream—leaped in time to catch and hang upon the arm of O'Sullivan that was suddenly uplifted and to whisk from it the long, bright stiletto that he had drawn from his bosom.

The knife fell and rang upon the floor. Cold steel drawn in the rooms of the Give and Take association! Such a thing had never happened before. Every one stood motionless for a minute. Andy Geoghan kicked the stiletto with the toe of his shoe curiously, like an antiquarian who has come upon some ancient weapon unknown to his learning.

And then O'Sullivan hissed something unintelligible between his teeth. Dempsey and the board exchanged looks. And then Dempsey looked at O'Sullivan without anger, as one looks at a stray dog, and nodded his head in the direction of the door.

"The back stairs, Giuseppi," he said briefly. "Somebody 'll pitch your hat down after you."

Maggie walked up to Dempsey Donovan. There was a brilliant spot of red in her cheeks, down which slow tears were running. But she looked him bravely in the eye.

"I knew it, Dempsey," she said as her eyes grew dull even in their tears.

THE KNIFE FELL AND RANG UPON THE FLOOR.

"I knew he was a guinea. His name's Tony Spinelli. I hurried in when they told me you and him was scrappin'. Them guineas always carries knives. But you don't understand, Dempsey. I never had a fellow in my life. I got tired of comin' with Anna and Jimmy every night, so I fixed it with him to call himself O'Sullivan and brought him along. I knew there'd be nothin doin' for him if he came as a dago. I guess I'll resign from the club now."

Dempsey turned to Andy Geoghan.

"Chuck that cheese slicer out of the window," he said, "and tell 'em inside that Mr. O'Sullivan has had a telephone message to go down to Tammany Hall."

And then he turned back to Maggie.

"Say, Mag," he said, "I'll see you home. And how about next Saturday night? Will you come to the hop with me if I call around for you?"

It was remarkable how quickly Maggie's eyes could change from dull to a shining brown.

"With you, Dempsey?" she stammered. "Say, will a duck swim?"

DISFIGURING SCARS.

How to Prevent Them After Being Burned or Wounded.

Scars are mainly the result of careless treatment, and once formed there are no instructions to be given to the amateur for their removal. A good surgeon will be able at least to restore a moderate amount of sightliness, even though he cannot wholly eradicate the scar. But when a wound has been received, if it is likely to leave a scar and one cannot strictly adhere to all given rules and advice, it should at once be put under the care of a skillful surgeon. If he is all that is desired, there will be scarcely a mark to tell of the accident unless the wound is unusually deep. Care must be taken not to draw the edges of the surrounding tissues out of shape. When the wound is dressed it positively must be bathed and the raw and bleeding edges should be cleansed from all particles of dust and dirt or any foreign matter, says the Brooklyn Eagle.

The reason that oily and creamy remedies are used is that any application that is of a greasy nature soothes the surrounding tender cuticle. Masks and bandages exclude the air and protect the wound from drying too quickly. If this should happen, it may be noticed that the skin becomes dry and shriveled, surely resulting in a scar, however small. If the skin is kept soft and elastic it stands to reason that these disfiguring contractions will to a certain extent lose something of their tension and in that way become less noticeable. Even after the wound has apparently healed and all bandages may be removed a soothing lotion should be used quite frequently, about three or four times daily, and plentifully at night, especially if the unfortunate one has received burns upon the face, arms or hands, because upon the exposed parts of the body the scar would be more noticeable and unsightly.

A lotion which is very soothing and may be used for such purpose is composed of four ounces of filtered rainwater or rosewater and one dram of rectified spirits, one dram of tannin and two drams of glycerin. Agitate thoroughly and apply. One will be thoroughly rewarded for patience and persistence in using these applications, especially after a severe burn, as then the tissues will have been deprived of their fatty substance by the extreme heat and will need nourishment.

How to Slip Rubber Plants.

When a rubber plant has grown too large to be convenient it can be slipped and the slips planted, and they should then grow into fine, healthy plants. Some persons use earth for the slipping process, but a famous florist says that for those who live in a city or town the sponge method is better. A large sponge of the very cheapest quality can be bought and cut into small pieces, or the bits of sponge one can get as cheap as 5 and 10 cents will do equally well. Next one must get young, healthy shoots and up near the tip of the tree make an incision in the stalk, not cutting it the whole way through. The rind or skin should be intact. Then the sponge should be wet and tied over the incision. This must be kept moist constantly. In a short time little hairlike roots will be thrown out of the sponge, and when these look fairly strong the branch should be severed below the sponge and the new plant potted, sponge and all. A shady place at first and afterward a sunny one will best suit the young plants.

How to Keep Silverware Bright.

Here is a good homemade liquid for keeping silver clean. It is a great help to every one who has tried it:

Make a strong alum water and skim off all the particles that will not dissolve. To this add shavings of pure white soap. Let them dissolve and bottle it. After the silver has been cleaned with whitening or any other soap or liquid that comes for that purpose rub each piece with a clean bit of cheesecloth soaked with this alum water. It adds luster and keeps the silver clean for quite some time. If it is found that any silver spoon or cup has been stained by medicine or egg, dip a cloth in sulphuric acid, rub the stained part until it disappears, then wash the piece in soap and water.

How to Soothe Tired Feet.

People who must stand at their work all day should wear very comfortable shoes with broad soles, well fitting arches, and proper heels. This is the only possible way of being comfortable under the circumstances. It is well also to wear high shoes, buttoned or laced closely around the ankles, which are apt to swell from the long strain of standing. The feet should be given a hot bath every night, as well as a morning bath, when they should be scrubbed with a stiff brush. A soothing bath for tired feet is warm water with a little baking soda or borax dissolved in it. A vigorous rub with alcohol is also good. Another soothing application is to rub the feet with a piece of lemon.

How to Fasten Hair Bows.

Little girls often have their hair "bobbed," and the mothers or nurses who must tie on the large bows are often perplexed as to how to fasten these large ribbons to the small wisp of hair. Here is a very good arrangement which overcomes the difficulty and at the same time preserves the ornamental bow without necessitating retying it each day. Make the large bow and sew a strip of stout baby ribbon of the same color underneath. Wind the narrow ribbon around the hair several times, tie in a tight bowknot and it will hold nicely.

CHICAGO'S FIREBOATS.

Water Guns That Discharge Nine Thousand Gallons a Minute.

The two new Chicago fireboats are 120 feet long and of thirty-six foot beam, and their fire fighting battery as well as the means resorted to by which they can anchor solidly anywhere in the river instead of having to light a fire alongside a dock is as revolutionary and interesting as the power plant. The main water battery consists of two great "water guns" that can be swung in any direction or at any angle upon their standards. These standards are mounted on a platform just over the positions of the pumps, each great nozzle taking the entire force of 4,500 gallons of water per minute from the pump under it when desired, or should the necessity require it one nozzle, by inserting a slightly larger head, can take the combined 9,000 gallons per minute of both pumps and throw it in one huge, shattering stream.

Each nozzle, with a two inch opening and each receiving the full force of the pump under it, can throw a powerful stream fully 500 feet, while one of them, with a three and one-half inch opening and receiving the water from both pumps, can throw a stream nearly twice the size about the same distance, perhaps a little farther. In addition to these justly named water guns, the fire fighting battery consists of sixteen connections for hose; but, of course, the larger the number of lines of hose used the less is the force of the streams from the water guns. It would, however, be impossible to use the water guns on many fires, as their force would soon batter down the walls of an ordinary brick building if the fighting were at close range; also should the necessity require lines of hose could be run from those connections to supply fire engines at a fire several blocks away from the river. In fact, the boats could be used from several points in the river or from the lake front to fight any fire in Chicago's business district.—Popular Mechanics.

Telephone and Phonograph.

Some time ago a magnetic phonograph was invented which its designer hoped to use in connection with the telephone to receive and record messages in the absence of the owner of the phone. The objection to this system was that a person calling up a number and receiving no response was not inclined to deliver his message to something so intangible as an unresponsive and apparently inanimate machine at the other end of the wire. A new improvement is reported along this line, in which a phonograph is provided to answer calls of telephones when the person called is out. The person before leaving will deliver a message to the phonograph stating when he will return, where he is going or where he may be called, and this the phonograph will automatically repeat twice to each call. This it will do, no matter how many calls there may be.—London Standard.

Street Noises.

When the first international congress for the suppression of street noises is called to order in Berlin in June, 1910, there will be representatives, according to a statement made by Mr. Bordengreen of the Society For the Betterment of London, from the United States, England, Germany, Austria, Holland, Belgium, Switzerland and Denmark. "By that time," says one of the New York society, "the objects of the organization will have become better known and we will have outlived the ridicule with which the noise fighters are now looked upon." At the London conference, where the question as to where to hold the first congress was determined, it was also agreed that the second meeting of the kind be held in New York in 1912 under the direction of Mrs. Isaac L. Rice.—New York Tribune.

Her Telephone Nurse.

"I wasn't sick enough to need a nurse," said the woman who lives alone, "yet I was in something of a predicament. The doctor had prescribed a medicine which he wanted me to take four times in the night. I said I was afraid I should not wake up at the proper time.

"'Oh, I'll fix that for you all right,' said he. 'I will instruct the telephone company to call you at 10, 12, 2 and 4 o'clock and to keep on ringing till you answer. It is very simple.'

"Apparently it was. He gave his instructions. The girl called me at the specified hours. I took my medicine, and so a new use for the telephone was born."—New York Sun.

Makas' Idea of Hospitality.

The commander of a punitive force in the Kameruns sent to chastise some recalcitrant natives has just made his report to the German government. The tribe giving trouble is known as the Makas, and they delight in cannibalism. The chiefs, according to the report, fatten slaves to eat them. Captain Dominik says that it is the custom of the country, should visitors arrive unexpectedly, to bring in one of the slaves and kill him as we should a fowl for the entertainment and welcome of the guest.—London Globe.

G. A. R. In Foreign Lands.

The first Grand Army post in Europe has lately been organized at Oldham, in Lancashire, England, where twenty former Union soldiers reside. Although it is the first European post, it is not the first outside the limits of the United States, as there are already four in Canada, one in Peru and one in Honolulu. There are, according to the United States pension commissioner, about 5,000 pensioners residing in foreign countries.—St. John (N. B.) Globe.

The man Who Makes A STUDY OF HIS APPEARANCE

Is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we mould into the garments give them a character that finishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the owner complete.

All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

Peach Orchard Land for Sale.

I offer for sale two farms in Hampshire county, W. Va., both in the peach belt and would make fine peach orchards.

The first contains 232 acres, forty acres cleared and the remainder in timber. About 50,000 feet of saw timber; 10,000 props and a lot of locust posts. Situated 1½ miles northwest of Springfield, on the Romney Branch of the B. & O. R. R. An orchard of sixty bearing apple trees and some peach trees on the place. About thirty acres of bottom and five acres of this in mead Improved by dweeling house, well, etc.

I have been advised by good authority that this farm would make a splendid peach orchard. Convenient to churches, schools, stores, etc. Price $1,500, on easy terms.

The second farm contains about 150 acres, partly cleared and part in timber and has on it a dwelling house and some other improvements. About six acres of run bottom now in meadow. Situated about one mile west of Springfield, W. Va., on the Romney Branch of the B. & O. R. R. Convenient to churches, schools, stores, etc. Price $1,200, on easy terms. Address Dr. Perciva Lantz, Alaska, W. Va. 7-

CAN PHONE FROM THE TRAIN

New Device Successfully Tested On The Erie.

If, when on a railroad trip it should dawn upon you, after the train had started, that you had forgotten something or neglected to receive an important commission, instead of fuming until the train stopped at a station, whence you could telegraph and then remain fuming until you received an answer, you could telephone from the train and have all the annoyance over in a jiffy, you would probably be grateful, wouldn't you?

Yet this will be made possible with the perfection and installation on the railroads of a device invented by Frederick Larcoix, an electrical engineer, which was tested in the presence of a large number of railway officials and engineering experts on the Erie railroad yesterday. By the use of Mr. Lacroic's invention telephoning from a moving train is already a fact.

James Harriman, one of the passengers on the special train on which the tests were made, telephoned to a broker's office and asked for the market quotations on Erie Copper and other securities, and they were given to him. Others tested the device calling their homes or offices, distant 10 to 15 miles. The words of the persons at each end of the line were audible to each other, the rumbling of the train making little difference.

Mr. Lacroic's invention not only permits telephoning, but also acts as a safety device to prevent head-on or rear-end collisions, or the running of a train into an open switch or broken rail, and it was this feature of the invention in which Mr. Lacroix and the railway officials were most interested.

Office Femininity.

"Women may flaunt their independence as much as they like," said the observant man, "but they seldom lose their femininity. If you take a look at those stenographers and typewriters who nestle about in every downtown office, you will find them between business hours at work on some little thing they would have done if they had been at home, a piece of embroidery, a doily, hemstitching a handkercheif, or embroidering a centerpiece or something. The top drawer of their desk is always full of feminine things, needles, thread and scissors. In fact, there are very few of them that I have seen who don't make their part of the office, in spite of their work, as much like home as as possible. —New York Times.

How He Saved the Circus.

Willis Cobb, the circus man, told this story:

Years ago he was traveling through the south with a wagon tent show and the press agent among other glowing accounts of "what's coming," announced a "herd of 20 camels from the sandy desert of Arabia."

When the show reached town, instead of 20, there was but one sickly camel. Some of the country newspapers paid no attention to this slight discrepancy, but when Cobb entered the office of a Georgia country editor he was mad enough to fight.

"I saw your parade, sah," he said, "and you have lied to our people. I've a good mind to roast you. Where are your 20 camels you made my paper say you've got in your show?"

"I'll tell you now it was," explained Cobb. "When we passed the swamp on the way here it was full of alligators, and without the slightest warning they leaped upon the bank and devoured all but one of the camels. We put put up a brave fight, but it was no use."

The editor gazed at Willis a couple of minutes and then said: "You're a good one. You ought to be a Georgia editor. Come out to my house to dinner today. I want to introduce my wife to the biggest liar on earth. She will be glad to meet you."

MR. ROOT GAVE HIS WIFE TEN COMMANDMENTS

Mrs. Root Tried To Obey Them But He Was Derelict.

When Mrs. Minnie Root, of Ann Arbor, Mich., was married she promised to "love, honor and obey" her husband, Frank. But that was not enough for him. He laid down ten commandments for her government as a wife. She vows she has tried to obey them. But she declares, too, that he has broken all the commandments that should rule the conduct of a truly good husband. Four of his ten commandments were read during the trial of her suit in the Circuit Court the other day:

"First—Thou shalt wed none but thine own true love, neither for money or social position, nor because thou art lazy.

"Second—Thou shalt look with one hundred eyes upon a man before thou marriest him, but thou shalt wear blinders after marriage.

"Third—Thou shalt accept thy husband as he is, and add not to him nor take away from him thine vain imaginings, for behold, the man thou did marry is a good fellow and the one thou dreamest of does not exist.

"Fourth—Thou shalt beat upon the cymbals and proclaim thy husband 'Master.'"

It is whispered that the other injunctions in this marital decalogue are:

"Fifth—Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's costly gowns, nor her diamond ear-rings, nor her sable coat, nor her silk stockings, nor her complexion, nor her husband, nor anything which is thy neighbor's.

"Sixth—Thou shalt not run up bills.

"Seventh—Thou shalt not waste kisses and affection upon a cat nor take to thy bosom a ki-yi.

"Eighth—Thou shalt not commit thyself to such follies as the festive cocktail and the insidious cigarette.

"Ninth—Remember wash day—but send the clothes to a laundry.

"Tenth—Honor thy husband so that thou shalt not dishonor thyself."

Mr. and Mrs. Root are accomplished musicians. Besides living inharmoniously, they have been running rival music stores recently. He loves her, or has loved her, for in one of the letters offered in evidence, written to his wife's father, the husband says:

"Minnie has never given me the soul satisfaction I craved, but I have always adored the girl. I am not guilty of the things she sets forth in her bill."

At another time Mr. Root wrote: "My wife possessss traits both beautiful and noble that led me to choose her from all womankind for my wife. It is her mother who has caused the trouble between us."

EMPTY ACRES

Vast Unimproved Area Given as Reasons for High Cost of Living.

Government statistics show that of West Virginia's 15,374,080 acres only 5,498,981 are improved. In other words, West Virginians are using a little more than one-third of the land of the state for agricultural purposes. A considerable portion of the neglected land is, of course, unfit for farming, but it is probably not an exaggeration to say that at least 5,000,000 acres could be added to the productive lands of that state. Of the lands actually under cultivation, only a small portion is farmed to the best advantage.

These figures, in a measure explain the high cost of living about which there is so much just complaint. There is a great work in the state for those who are endeavoring to arouse interest and stimulate intelligent effort in agricultural pursuits.

The distribution of rainfall, the steady temperature, the long growing seasons, the variety of soil, promise pre-eminence in agriculture when science and brawn unite to produce the result. Iowa has 86 per cent of its farm area improved, according to the census of 1909.

WORK OF THE GENEALOGIST

His Compensation Depends On His Ability To Get Up a Handsome Family Tree.

The principal workers from the outside in the library of congress are those who are hunting up genealogies. They begin early and work late at this task, and they are paid variously, according to the genealogies they work out, declares the Washington Herald.

"To trace down an ordinary genealogy," said one of these researchers the other day, "I receive $20, but if I am able to procure a real handsome genealogy with a duke or a baron or a touch of royalty in it, then I get almost any price my conscience allows me to charge. One American family—now don't be curious, because the family happens to live outside of Washington—gave me $500 for getting up a lovely family tree for them, which included the privilege of using a coat of arms with royal quarterings. I believe they were called down for using this coat of arms in England, and so they lay it aside when they are in Europe; but in America it appears in great splendor on their stationery, carriage doors and table linen, and it is said that the women of the family have it embroidered on their lingerie, being unaware of the fact that the distaff side of the family are not entitled to the coat of arms, but only the quarterings of their father's and mother's arms on a lozenge. Don't pity the poor genealogist, for we are probably as well paid for our work as any of those who must work for a living."

Why Turkeys Are Scarce.

Science has at last discovered why the turkey is so scarce that its price has become prohibitive for many a Thanksgiving table—the big bird has been literally wiped out in New England by appendicitis. More than this, the disease has spread as far south as Virginia, and is already invading Michigan, which, up to the present time, has for years been the chief breeding place for turkeys.

So serious is the danger of a virtual extinction of the national bird that a thorough investigation of the causes of the disease and its possible prevention is being made by such well-known scientists as Dr. Theobald Smith and Dr. E. E. Tyzzer, of the Harvard Medical School, and by Dr. Philip B. Hadley, of the State experiment station of Rhode Island.

The same disease which has decimated turkeys has of late spread to game birds, such as partridge and quail, and the investigation in this special line is being prosecuted by Dr. George W. Field, of the Massachusetts fish and game commission. The findings of all these men have agreed that the old-fashioned "turkeyail" or "backhead," which thousands of farmers have bewailed as the bane of the valuable flock of Thanksgiving birds, is the only outward sign of a disease, which starts from a small living organism, and which produces in the intestines of the turkey or partridge an inflamation similar to that of appendicitis in man.

The organism which infects the doomed birds has been variously identified simply as an amoeba and more especially termed the "coccidium avium," but under either name it has done its work and the experts unite in saying that once the disease has attacked a partridge or a game bird there is no hope. Although the disease is almost exactly the same, and in the same location as appendicitis in man, nobody thought it worth while to perform an operation for appendictomy on birds.

CONVICT LABOR ON PUBLIC ROADS

As was announced in The Sun yesterday, the Governor has appointed a commission to draft a law for the employment of convict labor on the public roads. The policy which will be embodied in this law has long been urged upon the State Government by labor organizations and those citizens who are more especially concerned in the improvement of the highways of the State. Upon the part of some of the officials there has been from time to time discouragement as to the use of convict labor on public works. At the session of 1906 an act was passed conferring upon the County Commissioners of the various counties authority to employ jail prisoners undergoing punishment in working on the roads or in preparation of road material in yards or quarries. This was regarded as an excellent measure, because in the counties jail prisoners are kept in idleness at the expense of the taxpayers, and confinement in the jails in the winter especially, is not regarded by the tramp or the worthless vagabond as any kind of punishment. This kind regards work as the severest hardship, and if going to jail meant going to work they would be far more careful to keep out of the hands of the law. Nevertheless, for some reason which is not apparent, this law of 1906 does not seem to have produced any noticeable results.

A law also gives authority for the employment of inmates of the House of Correction upon the road from Baltimore to Washington, and this has been done to some extent. In the regular work of the State penal institutions it has been found difficult to properly employ short-term prisoners. Only a few of those who are committed to the penitentiary or House of Correction are competent mechanics, and it has been the policy in both those institutions to utilize the time a prisoner serves in training him in some occupation by which he can make an honest living when he is discharged. But the short-term prisoners cannot be trained effectively, and road work is what they should be engaged in. Having only a short term to serve, they will not risk a longer imprisonment by an attempt to escape, and, therefore, strict guarding will not be required. The outdoor work is far more healthy than work in shops, and while working on the roads convicts will not come in competition with honest labor.

The employment of convict labor on the public roads in certain of the Southern States has been found to be altogether advantageous, and in some of them, more especially in the Carolinas, great results have been achieved and a splendid system of highways built at small cost. Georgia has also embarked in road improvement by convict labor on a large scale, and it is expected that farm values will be greatly enhanced and the prosperity of the State advanced.—Baltimore Sun.

FIRE DEPARTMENT ESSENTIAL

Oakland has now reached a point in the history of its progress when in the course of a few days it will have a complete water and sewerage system; a bountiful supply of potable water, and also a means of protecting the property of the town from fire, which has been a menace and a dread for so many years.

There is one thing, however, that we must not forget, and that is that while we have plenty of water and fire apparatus, it is absolutely necessary to have an organized body of men to use them properly. Until we have a fire department to take charge of the apparatus, and to become drilled in the rapid and efficient use of the same, a company of men invested with authority to take complete charge of fighting a fire, we cannot get proper results from the water system. Sometimes a delay of a few minutes means the loss of a building that might have been saved, and men who know just where to put their hands on the hose, and have practiced making connections with the nearest fire plug, can gain these few minutes over the uniniated.

There is no reason why Oakland should not have a volunteer fire department equal to any of our neighboring towns, or to any in the state, and there should be no delay in its organization.

The fire at the residence of G. S. Hamill, Jr., on Saturday, did very little damage, and was promptly extinguished by the bucket brigade that reached there shortly after the alarm was given. Is this fire had at night, or on some day when few people were on the streets, the result might have been quite different.

There should be a fire alarm that could be quickly sounded either day or night, and the hose and reels should be kept in a convenient place, where they can be promptly reached, and all placed in charge of the fire department.

We may have our department organized and in good working order before the next fire occurs, and we may not, but if we start now we have done all we could.

We would suggest that the town council send a committee to some nearby town, Piedmont or Lonaconing, both of which have excellent fire companies, and get the benefit of their experience, and then call for volunteers at a public meeting called for this purpose and organize the Oakland Fire Department at once. We cannot get proper reduction in our insurance rates until this is done, and while every citizen will turn out and do his duty at the next fire, it is so much better to have this matter in the hands of a few who know what to do, and how and when to do it.

A BABY IN THE HOUSE.

Let the world shed a tear for that college professor out in Illinois who killed himself because, it is suggested in the dispatches, there was a baby in his house. When it made its advent squalling as babies will, he packed his valise, clapped on his hat and sought a refuge in a nearby boarding house. Venturing, once or twice, to return home, he was driven away again by its cries. Finally he sought complete and permanent deafness by swallowing potassium cyanide, and was found dead on the college campus, his blind eyes staring at the dawn.

The world will soon forget him, but it would be better for the world, perhaps, if it could remember him forever, says the Baltimore Sun. A monolith to his memory, erected in some public place, would do its share toward making mankind kindlier, happier and better. Just as our shafts to great soldiers stir within us the fever of patriotism, and as our monuments to great martyrs make us resolve to be brave and good—just so would this memorial serve to foster and keep alive the noble sentiment of pity. Every citizen who stopped before it, or gave it a glance in passing, would go away a bit sorry for the man, and a bit determined to steer clear of his wretched folly.

Babies squall, true enough, and their squalling is not music, but the man who sees them only as makers of disagreeable noises is a man so lacking in imagination, so devoid of the elemental feeling of human kinship, so steeped in shallow, sophmoric pessimism, that his room is obviously of more value to his fellow men than his presence. To the rest of us a baby is the greatest of all the world's delights, and never more so than when it makes noises—of laughter, of hunger or of mere sound and fury. We see the light of the future in its eyes; we know that its chubby fists may one day strike valiant blows for freedom and human progress; that the germs of epochmaking ideas may lie dormant in its mind; that its life may be worth a million of such as ours; we understand its look of wonder, its loud demand that its appetite be satisfied, its hearty laugh and wholesouled protestations, its grossness, innocence and gusto, for to us, too, the world is full of lures and mysteries, all compact, and life is a great adventure. If babies were noiseless and perfect we might lay them away in conservatories to grow up like lilies. But they have all the human faults and frailties, virtues and vices, joys and sorrows; and so we take them to our hearts and cherish them as of our kind, knowing them for editions de luxe of our own imperfect selves.

Pity the poor man who hated babies! What a dull thing life must have been to him! What a hollow sound he heard in laughter! What a vanity he saw in tears!

MR. RAYNER'S HEAVY EXPENSE.

Despite the effort to make the Senatorial primary less expensive for Senator Rayner, who was the only candidate, by persuading good Democrats to act as judges and clerks of election without pay, the Senator's declaration of money expended show that making even a lone race for the Sanate is an expensive luxury. The faithful did not respond and it cost the Senator, in round numbers, $12,000 to go over the course alone.

Of course, there is a defect in a law which compels a man to go to any such expense when there is nobody running against him. It is all wrong to make a candidate stand the expense of an election, anyhow, and we should protest against any law that made him pay so heavily to become a candidate for the United States Senate if the primary were of special importance one way or the other. But the fact is, nobody cares anything about the Senatorial primary. It is a farce, a traversity on the sort of "direct primary" the Democratic party promised the State. It gives the Democratic leaders complete control of the situation and robs the city of any real share in determining the question of who shall represent the State in the Senate. The only good thing about it is that when the primary is held the choice of a Senator—where there is but one candidate—is settled and got out of the way of the Legislature, thus taking away from the politicians excuse for letting the matter block the work of that body.

This is something, to be sure, but so long as a primary of this kind is held its chief claim to distinction will be that it is a standing proof of the Democratic party's betrayal of a deliberate promise.

SCHOOL MATTERS

A Reply to James D. Hamill of the Journal.

To the Editor of The Republican:

May I have space in your columns to reply to James D. Hamill's attack on the School Board in his paper of last week?

I want to say to Mr. Hamill, first of all, that the best description of him I've ever heard was that from the eloquent tongue of Col. Geo. A. Pearre in his address at Friendsville, when he said the people of Garrett county ought to tar and feather him for publishing such a paper as he does. It is a well known fact that the Garrett Journal rarely has anything good to say of any one, but devotes its pages to criticism and abuse, using the most incorrect and unchaste language. Incorrect because he knows no better, unchaste because his own morals are not his boast of manhood.

A newspaper is a medium through which truth, morality and information is disseminated. Can the Journal claim credit for any of these commendable characteristics? I am sorry to say it's doubtful. I've often heard it said that what you see in the Journal cannot be relied upon and it has been my observation. In his attack on the School Board last week, he said Mr. Stewart Rodamer resigned at Jennings because he was not paid the salary he had been promised. This is not true. Mr. Rodamer was paid every cent he was promised. It is true that Mr. Rodamer left the school without saying a word to the School Board and without complying with the law by giving thirty days notice. The School Board don't know yet why Mr. Rodamer left the school, and have not heard one word from Mr. Rodamer concerning his leaving.

Mr. Hamill refers to the small salaries paid teachers. What an unwise thing it is for him to refer to the salaries paid teachers now when there is a chance to compare them with the salaries paid when he was president of the Board. Mr. Hamill you had better keep quiet. Your record as a school man has not been forgotten by the teachers or the people of this county. Seven and one-half months now, compared with thirty-five days when you were president of the Board.

For the year ending July 31, 1908, the present Board paid to the teachers of the county $39,537.80. For the year ending July 31, 1909, there was paid to the teachers for salaries the sum of $42,111.09. Compare this with $6,343.00, in 1895, when James D. Hamill was president of the Board.

These are only two items of comparison, but all the other matters in the conduct of school affairs under James D. Hamill as president compares in about the same way with the present management. What a simpleton he is to attempt to delude the people by publishing such things as he does, when the sad remembrance of his administration of school affairs are so fresh in the minds of the people. An intelligent man would not throw himself liable to such humiliation, but one who is incapable of appreciation in liable to do just that kind of a thing.

The fixing of salaries is the business of the School Board, and is not in the hands of the editor of the Journal.

Very respectfully,
MEMBER OF THE BOARD.

A Rumor Not Verified.

A report was started here yesterday that the Supreme Court of the United States had decided the Maryland-West Virginia boundary case. The report could not be confirmed and it is most likely not true as the case was only recently submitted to that tribunal. The dispute involves a narrow strip of land, now a part of Preston county, W. Va., and not the section of West Virginia between the North Branch and the South Branch of the Potomac.—Tuesday's Cumberland News.

GIVE THEM A START

Tne New Year is rapidly approaching. This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

COME and SEE THE FREE Sewing Machine

Spend a most delightful half hour in our store, examining this wonderful Sewing Machine.

The Free is as different from every other sewing machine as your wash machine is different from your wash board, and simply because it is "superior."

MR. WILLIAM C. FREE, president of the Free Sewing Machine Co., spent the best years of his life laboring to produce in The FREE Sewing Machine, a machine which would possess all the good points of every other machine, which would eliminate all the bad points of every other machine and which would possess some 15 special improvements. He succeeded!

Here are a few of the Improvements

Which will arouse your enthusiasm:

The "Rotoscillo" Movement, Mr. Free's Invention.
The Eight Sets of Ball-Bearings.
The Beautiful French Leg Design, which does not show dust.
The Automatic Shuttle Ejector.
The Automatic Locking Drawers.
The Rotary Spool Pin, which never breaks a thread.
The Automatic Tension Release, which never breaks a needle.
The Needle which can't be put in wrong.
The Improved Head Latch.

THE FREE Sewing Machine is Insured

For Five Years, against Breakage, Wear, Fire, Tornado, Lightning and Water.

This means that if from any such cause any part, (a needle, belt attachment, etc.,) or all the machine is destroyed it will be replaced free to you.

The Free Sewing Machine Company is the only company which has enough faith in their machine to dare "insure" it.

Attachments, which go with the Free are the best and do beautiful work.

We are Exclusive Agents for The FREE. Come and See It.

A SERIOUS FIRE AVERTED

Residence of Mr. G. Semmes Hamill Saved From Destruction Saturday.

Last Saturday morning about eleven o'clock the roof of the residence of Mr. G. Semmes Hamill, Jr., located on Alder street in the extreme east end of Oakland, caught fire from a spark emitted from the chimney and was blazing rapidly before it was discovered by members of the family who telephoned the alarm down town and which was responded to in a hurry by quite a large crowd of men who succeeded in getting the fire apparatus to the scene a few moments after the flames were extinguished by the application of a few bucketsful of water.

A space some ten or twelve feet square was burned in the roof but no other damage was done.

Mr. J. M. Stanton left Oakland yesterday afternoon for Parkersburg, W. Va., where he will spend Thanksgiving Day with relatives and friends and later in the week accompany his family home from Parkersburg where they have been on a visit for some time.

Among those who attended the District Stewards meeting held in St. Paul's M. E. church Monday evening and Tuesday of this week were Rev. and Mrs. M. W. Rider, of Tunnelton, Rev. Asbury Mick, of Terra Alta, and Rev. E. P. Idleman, of Gormania.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Mullen have moved from Bloomington to our town and will occupy one of Dr. Shuey's houses adjoining St. John's M. E. church, South. Mr. and Mrs. Russell Pattison will occupy the house vacated by Mr. Mullen at Bloomington.—Piedmont Herald.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Alvin Friend, of Sang Run, were in Oakland Tuesday, going from here to Tunnelton, W. Va., where they identified a large quantity of goods stolen from the summer home of John Boyle at Sang Run. Mr Boyle is a Pittsburger and spends his summers at Sang Run.

Maroney Bros., who have occupied the Helbig stables near the Second street crossing for the past year or two, disposed of some of their stock Tuesday to Mr. George Welling, and removed the remainder to their stables on the hill, where they will continue in the business. Mr. Welling will operate the Helbig stables.

Mrs. A. R. Sperry and daughter, of Mountain Lake Park, left that point Friday morning for Baltimore where Thanksgiving Day will be spent with the sons and daughters of Mrs. Sperry, all of whom are residing in that city with an aunt. Mrs. Sperry will return to her home at the Park in a few days.

For the purpose of giving the faithful employees of THE REPUBLICAN a well earned and well deserved holiday this Thanksgiving Day, the current issue of the paper is issued this week on Wednesday evening, instead of Thursday afternoon. We trust that every individual reader may have just cause for Thanksgiving this year of our Lord 1909.

Mr. Daniel M. Beeghley, of Brandonville, W. Va., was in Oakland Tuesday when he was appointed by the Orphans' Court admistrator of the estate of his sister, Mrs. Catharine Oester, who died recently at her home on the National Road in Grantsville District. Mr. Beeghley qualified as administrator and gives the usual notice to creditors in this paper today.

Dr. B. Frank Selby, of Oakland, accompanied Mrs. Selby to Baltimore Tuesday morning where the latter will become a patient in Maryland University Hospital. Mrs. Selby has been quite ill since early in the summer and by direction of her physicians she was taken to the institution above named followed by the well wishes of numberless friends for her speedy recovery.

Mr. H. E. Jones, employed at the Deer Park hotel as private secretary to its manager, Mr. W. E. Burwell, spent last Sunday at Deer Park with his bride, as guests of Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Garrett. Mr. and Mrs. Jones passed the day very pleasantly driving about, enjoying, among other drives, a trip to Eagle Rock. Mrs. Jones, who has never before visited Garrett county, expressed great delight over the beautiful scenery afforded by driving to the various points of interest.

Mr. Joseph E. Harned, of Oakland, whose reputation as a botanist has extended to other parts of Maryland aside from Garrett county, has received and accepted an invitation from the State Horticultural Society to exhibit specimens of the local flora at the State Society meeting to be held in Baltimore beginning on December 1st. Mr. Harned has several hundred distinct specimens of wild flowers, ferns and grasses, habitants of the local country, which he has with considerable care and much taste mounted. Two hundred of these specimens will be exhibited in Baltimore, the management of the meeting having assured Mr. Harned that a prominent place will be given him in the armory where the exhibition tables will be arranged. Mr. Harned will take his collection to Baltimore Monday night and on Tuesday they will be placed on exhibition and will be in charge of one of the Agricultural College instructors.

Dr. Frank Weber, son of the late Henry Weber, of Oakland, arrived home last Saturday from Baltimore where he was a patient for several weeks in Maryland University Hospital suffering from an attack of illness. While Dr. Weber has not fully recovered, he is somewhat better and to complete the cure he was advised by the physicians at the hospital to enter one of the Western sanatoriums for further treatment which he will probably do this week. We hope for his speedy restoration to health.

Rev. J. B. Shoup, of Bittinger, accompanied by his little seven year old grandson, John Henry Keller, arrived in Oakland last Saturday morning and after spending the few intervening days here as the guest of Rev. and Mrs. E. Manges, Mr. Shoup left Tuesday morning for a point in North Carolina, where he will remain a few days with his daughter, and later go further South to his new home at Veteran, Florida, where he expects to spend the winter. The little grandson went from Oakland the same morning to Chillicothe, Ohio, where he will make his future home with an aunt, who adopted him.

Mr. John E. Gleason, of Piedmont, sold his farm, which was formerly owned by the late Governor Frank Thomas, near Frankville, in Garrett county, to Mr. David Michaels. Gov. Thomas was accidentally killed many years ago by a helper, near the tunnel just opposite to the farm. It was while entertaining the well known artist, Sontag, during the construction of the B. & O., that the Governor was his host and dispensed genuine Maryland hospitality, but made a request that Mr. Sontag would not sketch him or mention his name in the papers. This request was abused, and Governor Thomas was much incensed by the publication in Harper's Weekly of sketches both of himself and his home, as he was leading the life of a hermit. It also recalls to mind the famous duel fought by Governor Thomas, near Berkely Springs, in which Mr. Lucas, of near Hailtown, was the second for Governor Thomas and Lawyer Price, of Hagerstown, was the principal. After Mr. Price fired, Governor Thomas fired in the air, as he was opposed to duels, but was a brave man. His life was ruined by his unhappy marriage to Miss McDowell, of Virginia, a daughter of the then Governor McDowell, of Virginia, at which time Mr. Thomas was Governor of Maryland. Mrs. Thomas, after her divorce, married a Presbyterian minister. She was a lovely lady and it was only a question of mismating in her marriage to Governor Thomas.

Mr. James O. Cleveland, of Oakland, while walking along the boardwalk fronting the Episcopal Rectory, last Wednesday, in company with another gentleman, was tripped up by a loose board in the walk and was thrown to the ground, his right side being badly bruised by coming in contact with the edge of the walk. For several days following the accident Mr. Cleveland was kept within doors and suffered greatly. He is somewhat better now, but still unable to work.

Orphans' Court Proceedings.

At the semi-monthly meeting of the Orphans' Court held in Oakland Tuesday of this week with all the members present, the following business was transacted:

Letters of administration were granted David M. Beeghley, of Brandonville, W. Va., on the personal estate of his recently deceased sister, Mrs. Catharine Oester.

Edward F. Weimer was appointed administrator with the will annexed of Horace R. Chaney, late of Avilton.

Miss Estella Reckner, of North Glade, is spending this week with her old friends in this neighborhood.

Irvin Custer, of Beckman, was seen in this village one day last week.

A protracted Bible conference is now in progress at the Glades Mennonite church near this village.

Defraud Veterans

Charles Wesley Currence is again in the clutches of the law for the alleged defrauding of an old soldier under the guise of being a special pension agent and is in jail at Beverly, W. Va. Currence was arrested some years ago on such a charge and later released as being insane, and again arrested and sent to the home of incurables at Huntington, from which place he escaped and was arrested a third time, but was released for lack of evidence. Once while under arrest at Parkersburg he tried to burn himself to death in the county jail.

CHAPTER X.

CARABINIERI.

"SIGNORI," began Hillard calmly, "before you act will you not do me the honor to explain this visit?"

"It is not he!" said one of the carabinieri. "It is the master, and not the servant. This is Signor Hillar, is it not?" he continued, addressing himself to Hillard. "The signor has a servant by the name of Giovanni?"

"Yes. And what has he done to warrant this visit?"

"It is a matter of seven years," answered the spokesman. "Your servant attempted to kill an officer in Rome. Luigi here, who was then interested in the case in Rome, thought he recognized Giovanni in the street today. Inquiries led us here."

"At any rate, it looks as though Giovanni had been forewarned of your visit," answered Hillard. "And may I ask what is the name of the officer Giovanni attempted to kill?"

"It is not necessary that you should know."

Hillard accepted the rebuke with becoming grace.

"And now, signor," with the utmost courtesy, "permit us to apologize for this intrusion. We shall wait in the hall, and if we find Giovanni we shall gladly notify you of the event."

"Hello! What's this?" exclaimed Hillard, going to the table when the officers had gone. It was a note addressed to him:

My Kind Master—The carabinieri are after me. But rest easy. I was not born to rot in a dungeon. I am going north. As for my clothes, send them to Giacamo the baker, who lives on the road to El Deserta. He will understand. May the Holy Mother guard you should we never meet—in!

[illegible] heir in less [illegible] passed the note to Merrihew. unknown; a [illegible]'s too bad. I've taken a great water, a la[illegible] to him. It seems that the peas- without [illegible]has no chance on this side of the probler[illegible]ater. His child a painted dancer in alor[illegible] Paris and a price on his own head! c[illegible] It's hard luck. And the fellow who caused all this trouble goes free."

"He always goes free, Dan, here or elsewhere."

"Why, we'd have lynched him in America."

"That's possible. We are such an impulsive race," ironically. "Yes, no doubt we'd have lynched him, and these foreigners would have added another ounce of fact to their belief that we are still barbarians."

"I hadn't thought of that," Merrihew admitted.

Merrihew became impatient.

"Now out with it. Where and how did you learn that Kitty is in Venice?"

Hillard told him briefly.

"And so they are all in Venice, broke? By George, here's our chance—everlasting gratitude and all that! We'll bail 'em out and ship 'em home! How is that for a bright idea?"

"Let me see," said Hillard practically. "There are five of them—five hundred for tickets and doubtless five hundred more for unpaid hotel bills. It would never do, Dan, unless we wish to go home with them."

"But I haven't touched my letter of credit yet. I could get along on two thousand."

"Not with the brand of cigars you are smoking, 30 cents each."

"No; we can't bail them out, but we can ease up their bills till money comes from home. Not one of them by this time will have a watch. O'Mally will remain sober from dire necessity. Poor Kitty Killigrew! All the wonderful shops and not a stiver in her pockets!"

Merrihew paced the floor for some time, his head full of impossible schemes. He stopped in the middle of the room with an abruptness which portended something.

"I have it. Instead of going directly to Venice, we'll change the route and go to Monte Carlo. I'll risk my four hundred, and if I win"—

"Then the announcement cards, a house wedding and pictures in the New York papers. Dan, you are impossible. You have gambled enough to know that when you are careless of results you win, but never when you need the cash. But it is Monte Carlo if you say so. Two or three days there will cure you of your beautiful dream. After all," with a second thought, "it's a good cause, and it might be just your luck to win. The masquerading lady! Monte Carlo it is."

Merrihew danced a jig. Hillard stepped to the mirror and bowed profoundly. The jig ceased.

"Madame, permit me, a comparative stranger, to offer you passage money home. We won it at Monte Carlo. It is yours. Polite enough," mused Hillard, "but hanged if it sounds proper."

"To the deuce with propriety!" cried Merrihew buoyantly. "We'll start tomorrow!"

From her window Kitty looked down on the Campo, which lay patched with black shadows and moonshine. How still at night was this fairy city in the sea! There were no horses clattering over the stone pavements, no trains, no omnibuses. The stillness which was of peace lay over all things. And some of this had entered Kitty's heart.

But for one thing the hour would have been perfect. Kitty, ordinarily brave and cheerful, was very lonesome and homesick. The dismal failure of it all! She had danced, sung, spoken her lines the very best she knew how, and none had noticed or encouraged her. It was a bitter cup after all the success at home. If only she could take it philosophically like La Signorina!

And there were so many things she could not understand. Why should La Signorina always go veiled? Where did she disappear so mysteriously in the daytime? And those sapphires and diamonds and emeralds? Why live here with such a fortune hanging round her neck?

"Kitty?" The voice came from the doorway. Kitty was startled for a moment, but it was only La Signorina. Kitty furtively wiped her eyes.

Two dignified carabinieri rose quickly.

"I am over here by the window. The moon was so bright I did not light the lamp."

La Signorina moved with light step to the window, bent and caught Kitty's face between her hands and turned it firmly toward the moon.

"You have been crying, cara!"

"I am very lonely," said Kitty.

"You poor little homeless bird!" La Signorina seized Kitty impulsively in her arms. "If I were not"— She hesitated.

"If you were not?"

"If I were not poor, but rich instead, I'd take you to one of the fashionable hotels. You are out of place here in this rambling old ruin."

"Not half so much as you are," Kitty replied.

"I am never out of place. I can live comfortably in the fields with the peasants, in cities in extravagant hotels. My mind is always at one height. Where the body is does not matter much."

There was a subtle hauteur in the voice. It subdued Kitty's inquisitiveness.

"Sometimes," said Kitty, drying the final tear—"sometimes I am afraid of you."

"And wisely. I am often afraid of myself. I always do the first thing that enters my head, and generally it is the wrong thing. [illegible] old woman here [illegible] weeks yet." She [illegible] dow and called. "Pompeo!"

From the canal the gondolier answered.

"Now then!" said the woman to the girl.

Kitty threw a heavy shawl over her head and shoulders, while the other wound about her face the now familiar dark gray veil, and the two went down into the Campo to the landing.

Pompeo threw away his cigarette and doffed his hat. He offered his elbow to steady the women as they boarded, and once they were seated a good stroke sent the gondola up the canal. Under bridges they passed. They glided by little restaurants where Venetians in olden days talked liberty for themselves and death to the Austrians, and at length they came out upon the Grand canal where the Rialto curves its ancient blocks of marble.

"There! This is better."

"It is always better when you are with me," said Kitty.

For years Kitty had fought her battles alone, independent and resourceful, and yet here she was leaning upon the strong will of this remarkable woman, and gratefully too.

"Now, my dear Kitty, we'll just enjoy ourselves tonight, and on our return I shall lay a plan before you, and tomorrow you may submit it to the men."

"I accept it at once without knowing what it is."

"What a beautiful palace!" Kitty cried presently, pointing to a house not far from the house of Petrarch. The moon poured broadly upon it. The gondola posts stood like sleeping sentinels, and the tide murmured over the steps.

Pompeo, seeing Kitty's gesture, swung the gondola diagonally across the canal.

"No, no, Pompeo!" La Signorina spoke in Italian. "I have told you never to go near that house without express orders. Straight ahead."

"Who lives there?" asked Kitty.

"Nobody," answered La Signorina, "though once it was the palace of a great warrior. How picturesque the gondolas look, with their dancing double lights!"

"The old palace interests me more than the gondolas," declared Kitty. But La Signorina was not to be trapped.

From the Grand canal they came out into the great canal of San Marco, the beginning of the lagoon.

"La Signorina"— began Kitty.

"There! I have warned you twice. The third time I shall be angry."

"Hilda, then. But I am afraid whenever I call you that. You do not belong to my world."

"And what makes you think that?" There was a smile behind the veil.

"I do not know unless it is that you are at home everywhere, in the Campo, in the hotels, in the theater or the palace. Now, I am at home only in the theater, in places which are unreal and artificial. You are a great actress, a great singer, and yet, as O'Mally would say, you don't belong." Kitty had forgotten what she had started out to say.

La Signorina laughed. "Pouf! You have been reading too many novels. To the molo, Pompeo."

At the molo, the great quay of Venice, they disembarked. The whilom prima donna dropped 50 centesimi into Pompeo's palm, and he bowed to the very gunwale of the boat.

"Grazie, nobilita."

"What does he say?" asked Kitty.

"He says 'Thanks, nobility.' If I had given him a penny it would have been thanks only. For a lira he would have added principessa—princess. The gondolier will give you any title you desire if you are willing enough to pay for it."

The Piazza San Marco, or St. Mark, is the mecca of those in search of beauty. Here they may lay the sacred carpet, kneel and worship. There is none other to compare with this mighty square, with its enchanting splendor, its haunting romance, its brilliant if pathetic history.

There were several thousand people in the square tonight, mostly travelers. The band was playing selections from Audran's whimsical "La Mascotte." The tables of the many cafes were filled, and hundreds walked to and fro under the bright arcades or stopped to gaze into the shop windows.

The two women saw no vacant tables at Florian's, but presently they espied the other derelicts—O'Mally, Smith and Worth—who managed to find two extra chairs.

Through her veil their former prima donna studied them carefully, with a purpose in mind. The only one she doubted was Worth. Somehow he annoyed her. She could not explain, yet still the sense of annoyance was always there.

"Gentlemen," she said during a lull, "I have a plan to propose to you all."

"If it will get us back to old Broadway let us have it at once," said O'Mally.

"Well, then, I propose to wait no longer for letters from home. My plan is simple. They say that a gambler always wins the first time he plays. I propose that each of you will spare me what money you can, and Kitty and I will go to Monte Carlo and take one plunge at the tables."

A good stroke sent the gondola up the canal.

"Monte Carlo!" O'Mally brought down his fist resoundingly. "That's a good idea. If you should break the bank think of the advertisement when you go back to New York."

"Be still," said Worth.

"Dash it, business is business, and without publicity there isn't any business." O'Mally was hurt.

"Mr. O'Mally is right," said La Signorina. "It would be a good advertisement. But your combined opinion is what I want."

The three men looked at one another thoughtfully, then drew out their wallets, thin and worn. They made up a purse of exactly $150, not at all a propitious sum. But, such as it was, O'Mally passed it across the table. This utter confidence in her touched La Signorina's heart. She turned aside for a moment and fumbled with the hidden chain about her neck. She placed her hand on the table and opened it. O'Mally gasped. An emerald—a glorious green emerald—lay in the palm of her hand.

"I shall give this to you, Mr. O'Mally," said the owner, "till I return. It is very dear to me, but that must not stand in the way."

A glorious green emerald lay in the palm of her hand.

"Ye gods!" cried O'Mally in dismay. "Put it away. I shouldn't sleep o' nights with that on my person. Keep it. We'll trust you anywhere this side of jail. But you're a brick, all the same." And that was as near familiarity as O'Mally ever came.

She turned to Smith, but he put out a hand in violent protest; then to Worth, but he smiled and shook his head.

She put the ring away. It was her mother's. She never would smile scornfully in secret at these men again.

"Thank you," she said quietly. "If I lose your money we will all go to Florence. I have another plan, but that will keep till this one under hand proves a failure."

O'Mally beckoned to a waiter.

"Tom!" warned Smith.

"You let me alone," replied O'Mally, "A quart of Asti won't hurt anybody."

Early the next morning she and Kitty departed for Monte Carlo in quest of fortune. Fortune was there, waiting, but in a guise wholly unexpected.

How to Make a Yoke Fit Right.

Often a dress is ruined by the fit of the yoke. It hitches or rides in a way that is as uncomfortable as it is unsightly. The easiest way to remedy this defect is to have the yoke made on a fitted lawn lining which buttons around the waist. This should have a horizontal seam run just about the bust line to take in an extra fullness. If the lining seems too warm or is too much trouble to make, the yoke can be attached to a sort of harness made with a belt of tape to which are joined vertical straps attached to the bottom of the yoke. Even easier is it to sew short tabs of tape or muslin to the bottom of the yoke. These can be securely pinned to the corset without tearing the yoke itself. It is a good idea to fasten the smallest sized safety pins to these tabs so that they are always in readiness.

How to Reseat Old Chairs.

If you have old rush bottom or cane seated chairs and do not want to go to the expense of having them recaned try making a seat for them at home. Cut away carefully the caning and nail strips of girthing tightly across the opening. Cover with a piece of fine fiber matting or burlap, just the shape of the seat, but a half inch larger. Turn in the edges all around and nail to the chair with brass headed tacks for studding. If the woodwork has grown shabby buy a preparation that quickly removes and softens the varnish and scrape with pieces of glass. The chair can then be done up with any desired stain.

How to Put Stamps on Letters.

"Most people don't know how to put a stamp on a letter," said a postoffice official. "They moisten the stamp, taking off a certain amount of the mucilage by the process and making it hard to stick. The proper way is to moisten the tip of the envelope where the stamp is to go, then press on the stamp. The paper should not be soaked, just moistened on the surface, however. That stamp will never drop off in the mail bag."

How to Taper the Fingers.

Most women in trying to make their fingers more tapering will stroke them from the base to the tip. A well known manicurist has said that the process should be reversed. Clasp the tip of each finger between the thumb and first finger of the opposite hand and stroke firmly but gently backward from the tip, as when working on a glove.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

ADVANCEMENT NOTED.

WE can see how recently aviation has discarded its swaddling clothes when he remember that the St. Louis fair hung a high prize down low for any flier who would succeed in getting over the fence, and no one took it away. Those who did enter for the contest couldn't make it in three jumps.

Now the glitter of a trophy causes a flock of air navigators to gyrate aloft as buzzards circle over the carcass of a deer killed by the Roosevelt family and left behind because the hunters had all the hippopotamuses they could carry.

Yesterday we were creatures of the earth. Today we are almost in a position to have special diseases caused by excessive flying.

Their Field.

We could have saved the worry,
The fever and the flurry,
We could have saved the steam and coal
We spend in looking for the pole.
If we had been content to wait
Another would have paid the freight,
For when the state of trade was fit
The iceman would have captured it.

Her System.

"How do you make such a hit with the men, Ethel?"

"Quite easily."

"What is your method?"

"I point out to each individual masculine how much like some great men he is in certain particulars."

"Oh, I see."

"Then when he swells nearly to the bursting point I switch to some other noted individual and trace similarities."

"Beautiful!"

"This method if earnestly persisted in soon has him aviating like a wilbur-wright."

Chance For an Expert.

"I think I have discovered a new profession in an unworked field."

"Would it be profitable?"

"It ought to be."

"What is the nature of it?"

"Resting for millionaires. They need the rest badly enough and haven't time to take it, so they ought to pay one accomplished in that line to rest for them."

Distressing Effect.

"He dare not take his wife along when he is buying clothes."

"Why not?"

"Can't get a fit."

"Isn't she a good judge of such things?"

"Yes, but every time she looks at him he shrinks, so when she isn't around they are too small for him."

More Annoying.

They said the house was haunted.
Though ghosts did not abound,
But everywhere you chanced to be
A cockroach was around.

Sidestepped Them.

"Have a good season?" inquired one actor of another as they met at a booking agency to sign up for the next year.

"Yes, pretty fair. I was hit only three times by eggs, etc."

"Managed to dodge the others, eh?"

To Cure the Habit.

"He has a peculiar hallucination that he is an automobile."

"I would like to have him meet a friend of mine."

"What's his name?"

"Jim Jeffries."

One or 'Tother.

An acrobat I chanced to meet,
And these wise words he said,
"We must be light upon our feet
Or light upon our head."

Saving Labor.

"Your husband doesn't smoke?"

"No."

"Doesn't he care for it?"

"Yes, immensely. But he is too lazy to bite the ends off the cigars."

Perfectly Familiar.

Minister—Are you quite sure you know your catechism, my boy?

Boy—Sure! Dere's four ink spots on de front cover, an' de back's tore off I'd know it anywhere.

Fine Results.

"There's a man who gets fine results from his business."

"What's his business?"

"Chopping steak in a meat market."

Contrary.

It might seem very strange indeed
And quite against the code,
But reckless trainmen do not go
To make a wreckless road.

A Vacancy Filled.

Harry—I have a cold in my head.

Grace—Well, I suppose that is better than nothing.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson IX.—Fourth Quarter. For Nov. 28, 1909.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Rom. xiv, 10-21. Memory Verses, 19, 20—Golden Text, Rom. xiv, 21—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

Bishop Moule speaks of this section of this epistle from chapter xii onward as "present duties in the power of eternal facts." Some of the facts are the sin that is in man, the redemption that is in Christ Jesus for sinful man, the "no condemnation" and "no separation" of chapter viii as a result of that great redemption and the farreaching, glorious prospect for the whole creation with Israel as a righteous center bringing true riches to all nations. The effect of this upon the mind of the believer should be such a renewal that henceforth he is done with this present evil age and done with himself and determined to live wholly in the perfect will of God, as a new creature in Christ, old things passed away, all things become new (Rom. xii, 1, 2; II Cor. v, 17). Even Christ pleased not Himself, and in the epistles we are taught how we ought to walk and to please God and to let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification (xv, 1-3).

Now, it seems to me that the great point in our lesson is that each one should for himself get right in this matter and not misspend his time in seeking to get others right while he himself is all wrong. "Every one of us shall give account of himself to God" (verse 12). Therefore why judge our brother in any matter, and especially in eating and drinking, since all believers must stand before the judgment seat of God, or of Christ, for Christ is God? (Verse 10.) If we have received the Lord Jesus, then we are in Christ and are looked upon as having died with Him and risen with Him, so that our judgment for sin is past on Calvary, and we have His assurance that our sins and iniquities He will remember no more.

It is possible as His redeemed ones to walk in the light under the shelter of His precious blood and have conscious and unbroken fellowship with Him as we yield ourselves to Him moment by moment to walk in the good works He has beforehand prepared for us and to live the life of utter self renunciation which He desires us to live to His glory, making it our ambition in all things to be acceptable to Him (Eph. ii, 10; II Cor. iv, 10, 11; v, 9). Although our Lord said to His disciples at the last Passover, "I appoint unto you a kingdom, as My Father hath appointed unto Me, that ye may eat and drink at My table in My kingdom and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Luke xxii, 29, 30), yet "the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost" (verse 17), and the chief object of our thoughts here should not be what shall we eat and drink and wear, but how can we best make manifest and make known His righteousness, which He offers freely to all, and thus hasten His kingdom of peace on earth. We should think of every one on earth as "one for whom Christ died" (verse 15) and trust Him to use us to bring as many as possible to Him, that they might obtain and enjoy His righteousness and peace and then bring others to the same. When the kingdom comes and a King shall reign in righteousness, then on all the earth the work of righteousness shall be peace and the service of righteousness shall be quietness and assurance forever (Isa. xxxii, 1, 17). There can be no peace to an individual or to a nation or to nations apart from righteousness, and there is no righteousness worthy of the name except that which God has provided in Christ, the righteous one; but, believing in Him, we are thus justified and have peace with God and rejoice in hope of the glory of God.

Through the comfort of the Scriptures we wait patiently for the hope, and the God of patience and comfort gives us the mind of Christ toward others, while the God of hope fills us with joy and peace in believing, making us to abound in hope through the power of the Holy Spirit, and the God of peace is with us and gives us peace always by all means (Rom. v, 1, 2; xv, 4, 5, 13, 33; II Thess. iii, 16). If it is thus with us the minor matters of eating and drinking will keep their right place and we will never be found insisting that we may eat this and drink that, no matter what others may say; but, being filled with thoughts of His kingdom and glory, we will live for the salvation and edification of others rather than for our own gratification. As believers our self life was crucified with Christ, and now we are to reckon that old life as dead and buried and live a new life wholly unto God (Rom. vi, 6-11), not in anyway tolerating anything for which our hearts would condemn us (verses 22, 23; I John iii, 21).

All that God works in us to will and to do of His good pleasure will be approved, but all that is of or for self or to please men will prove to be wood, hay and stubble to be burned up (I Cor. iii, 11-15). This judgment seat of our lesson is for believers only, that they may be judged for their works and have their places assigned them in the kingdom, and must not be confounded with the judgment of Matt. xxv or the great white throne of Rev. xx.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements. These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

THE BEST SUMMER JOB.

In days like this,
When perspiration
Lines my brow
And desperation
Fills my soul
Because it's hot,
I yearn for jobs
That I have not,
It's much too warm
For verses solemn,
And yet I'm forced
To fill a column.

I would not care
To be a baker
In June's hot days
Nor candle maker.
In factories
I would not toil,
Nor do I long
To till the soil.
I would not be
An engineer,
Although the pay
Is good, I hear.
It's much too hot
To be a preacher.
I'd rather be
A swimming teacher.

Of all the summer
Jobs there is
His is the most Delightful biz.
His working clothes
Are few and cool.
He has the river
For his school,
And, sitting by
The water's brim,
The gentle breezes
Comfort him.
And when he works
His arm is placed
Around some lovely
Maiden's waist.

In the Natural Way.

"How is that quarrel between Jack and his wife about her staying more at home to mend his clothes?"

"Oh, that's been patched up."

Womanlike.

Mrs. Stubb—Oh, John! What in the world has happened to you? Why, you look as pale as a ghost!

Mr. Stubb—No wonder, Maria. I was out beyond my depth and went down three times before being rescued. During that time I remembered every event of my life.

Mrs. Stubb—Gracious, John! And—and did you remember that letter I gave you to mail last week?—Chicago News.

Theory and Fact.

THE SPORTING WORLD

Byrne Playing Great Ball.

Bobby Byrne, whose major league experience was limited to his engagement with the St. Louis Nationals previous to the swap that sent him to the Pirates, has been putting up a wonderful game on the far corner since Commander Clarke annexed him. Byrne had performed at only an average gait for the Cardinals. In 105 games he turned thirty-seven miscues and was swatting .269.

Since Clarke has acquired Robert the Wee he made but two errors in fifteen games, while his assists total seventy-eight and put-outs forty-five. Throughout the Pirates' invasion of the east Byrne's playing was the feature. While he hasn't been belting the sphere any too harshly, he is sticking in his hits at the right time.

Murphy Wants Schools For Umpires.

President Charles W. Murphy of the Chicago Nationals recently declared that he would make a fight before the magnates of the National league at their winter meeting for a "school for umpires."

President Murphy would compel the umpires to undergo an examination similar to a civil service examination before they are permitted to handle the indicator in a National league game. Here are some of the tests they would be subjected to:

Test by an oculist as to their ability to see.

Examinations that would prove their ability to restrain their tempers under provocation.

Proof that they were free of obstinacy and self conceit, with views broad enough to eliminate their personal feelings when two teams fighting for a pennant clash in a series that may determine a winner.

President Murphy in an interview in which he sets forth his views declared that the new umpires should be paid larger salaries than the arbiters of today get and that they should be men of a type that deserved it.

"The greatest menace to the game today is the incompetent umpire," declared the president.

Indoor Athletic Championships.

With the national outdoor championship out of the way all eyes will be trained on the national indoor meet to be held in New York Oct. 4 and 5. The coming indoor contests should show class all along the line. There will be a great many new aspirants for the honors. The result of Kiviat's first appearance in fast company is being awaited with much interest. Kiviat is the sensational New York youngster. If he can show the same class indoors as he did out, his reputation as the schoolboy wonder will stand double. Following is a list of events scheduled to be held:

Seventy-five yard run, 300 yard run, 1,000 yard run, two mile run, 220 yard hurdle (ten flights, three feet six inches), standing broad jump, running hop, step and jump, throwing fifty-six pound weight for height, putting eight pound shot, pole vault for distance, running high jump and one mile walk.

To Scull Across English Channel.

Crossing the English channel without paying fare has been the ambition and the sport of all nations for many years, taking the form of swimming, of airships, of specially designed waterproof and buoyant suits, and now a man is to try and get across on a plank. The plank is buoyed up by a couple of barrels, and he uses a pair of sculls. The voyager's name is William Westlake, and he is an old sailor. His first attempt was a failure, as he was driven back by the tide and the wind.

Navy's Football Plans.

Plans for the coming football season are being perfected by the navy gridiron authorities. Passed Midshipman Frank Slingloff, Jr., U. S. N., who played at center on the team for three years, has reported for temporary duty and will take charge of the men. Midshipmen Douglas, Dague, Land and Northcroft will assist in the coaching. Lieutenant Berrien, U. S. N., will again have full charge of the squad.

CIVIC PROGRESS.

Commercial Clubs May Take Up Municipal Problems.

Perhaps no organization has better illustrated by its activities the interest of business men in civic affairs than has the Merchants' association of the city of San Francisco. The important feature about this organization's work is that it has been for years on this high plane of civic endeavor. It was, indeed, among the pioneers in that work. The latest report, which is the fifteenth annual, recently appeared in printed form and contains the usual review by the president of the year's activities. These can be no more than summarized here. Having noted the growth in membership and the number of directors' meetings, he takes up first an "improved plan for city lighting" and says that the committee on that subject secured the services of an expert engineer, who has made a comprehensive study and plan. Next he speaks of the committee on streets, by whom an ordinance has been prepared to regulate better the opening of streets for pipes and conduits. Harbor plans, the improvement of streets leading to the docks, a Bay Shore highway and a thorough investigation of street railway conditions are the matters next touched upon in describing the work of the various committees. Then he takes up the studies that are in progress of the street cleaning and sprinkling methods, the work of the charities indorsement committee, the action which the association took as to street obstructions, choice of voting place, sidewalk repairs, race track gambling, improvement of station surroundings and selection of a city hall site with a view to creating a civic center. In addition there was at least the normal activity of a commercial body on the usual business lines. Surely no organization of business men nowadays need be afraid, if precedent counts for anything, that in taking up some purely civic as distinguished from purely commercial or manufacturing question it is getting beyond its proper sphere. And it is notable that the strongest and most successful of such organizations in the country are those that have taken up these matters.

LEGAL STATUS OF BILLBOARDS

Wilkesbarre Judge Defines Limits of Regulation by Police.

Judge Fuller of Wilkesbarre, Pa., has handed down a decision giving the legal status of billboards, against which municipal campaigns have been waged in scores of cities and towns throughout the United States. He says:

"Police regulation in this respect does not extend as far as prohibition. It may consider the ear and the nose, but not the eye of the citizen. It may guard the health, the safety and the morals, but not the aesthetic taste, of the community.

"A statute or ordinance may prohibit all billposting upon public streets or public property, but may not prohibit billposting upon private property unless the public health, safety or morals are affected. The legal test of prohibition is public nuisance, not private annoyance.

"The whisky poster in sight of a church or schoolhouse may inflict pain upon the minister or teacher, the circus poster at the very portal of a $2,000,000 courthouse may cause the judicious to mourn, and the ghastly combinations of shape and color which assault the vision on every side may agonize persons of refined tastes, but so long as the pesky things are secure against falling upon the passersby, so long as they entail no risk of fire within proper fire limits, so long as they do not smell bad or spread disease and so long as they do not offend the moral instincts of mayor and police they enjoy absolute constitutional immunity."

BUILD A TOWN TO ORDER.

Factors That Are Making Kuna, Ida., a Rapidly Growing City.

Within a few years the town of Kuna, Ida., will loom a little larger in the public eye than it does at present. It is now a city in the making, but it is growing with leaps and bounds. There are good reasons for this growth, which is not at all of the mushroom variety, but of the solid, enduring kind. Kuna is the natural trading section for one of the largest irrigation projects that have been undertaken in the state—the Boise-Payette project. Within a radius of five miles there are 35,000 acres of land under irrigation, and with the small farm units that are the rule under the United States reclamation work this means a great density of population. The government irrigation system also provides from 10,000 to 15,000 horsepower, and this will be conveyed to the town in the shape of electricity and used for manufacturing.

A Monthly Local Bulletin.

The women who compose the Civic league of Newport are energetic enough to publish monthly a paper which they call the Bulletin. Animated by as high ideals as is the league itself and in its freedom from advertising fearless as to what it says, this little paper, which is admirably written, keeps all to whom it goes in touch with local civic matters, emergencies, opportunities and duties. And it is very readable. It would be well if more town and city improvement organizations conducted such a bulletin to keep their members informed.

"Washing and Wiping Pavements."

European cities pride themselves on clean streets above all other public works, and some cities are famous the world over for the splendid condition of their public thoroughfares. One facetious writer says that in Berlin they not only wash the pavements every morning, but wipe them too.

FOR THE CHILDREN

The Syrian Wild Goat.

Wild sheep and goats are always interesting because of their resemblance to our common paper eating Billy. But one would hardly think the aoudad, or Syrian wild goat, a real member of the family of humble billygoats, so dignified and beautiful is he. Have a good look at him next time you are at the menagerie. Notice his rich sand color, his large hazel eyes and long dewlap and beard.

But it is his horns that merit attention now that he is lying down in the hot sand this warm morning. The fore feet are tucked under him goat fashion, and he is in apparent idleness tossing the sand about, digging a hole in it as if to find out hidden treasure. First on this side he digs in his horn, then on the other side, making the sand fly. But we must not judge him harshly or say, "What a silly, lazy thing!" for now you can see thousands of tiny gnats whirling around him, and a moment's thought brings respect for this Syrian prisoner. He is bothered by those gnats, whose "hot feet sting him"—that is, their tails do. And so he is simply covering his back up with a layer of sand, as we ourselves would do had we no other clothes to protect us from the gnats.

Vegetable Ivory.

The plant yielding the vegetable ivory is known to botanists as Phytelephas macrocarpa. It is a native of South America, found chiefly along the Magdalena river, in Colombia. It is a stemless, palmlike plant, the top of which is crowned with from twelve to twenty very long leaves. The fruit consists of a conglomerated head in six or seven sections, the whole being inclosed in a woody covering forming altogether a globe as large as a man's head. A single plant sometimes bears six or eight of these heads, each weighing from twenty to twenty-five pounds. When young they contain a milklike fluid which, with age, hardens until it becomes valuable as a substitute for real ivory.

Queer Policemen.

In London the policemen carry no clubs and attached to the middle of their belt, behind, is a dark lantern. The cuffs of their coats have vertical stripes, white and blue, signifying their rank and number of years they have been in the service. In Paris the police wear blue caps and coats and in the summer white trousers. They carry short swords, more as a matter of authority, but when in danger use the flat side as a club. In the rain the Paris policeman takes off his cap, hangs it on the back of his belt, then pulls the hood of his coat over his head. German policemen wear helmets and have a distinctly martial air.

Buttonhole Trick.

Pass a string about two feet long, with the ends tied together, through a buttonhole of your coat. After hooking a thumb in each loop of the string hook the little fingers into the upper strings of the opposite hand. The string will look very complicated when the hands are drawn outward. To pull out the string loose the hold of the right thumb and left little finger and draw the hands apart smartly. Then the string will appear to have been pulled through your buttonhole.

I Apprenticed My Son.

In this game the players begin by each saying in turn, "I apprenticed my son to"—any trade he may choose, say a greengrocer—"and the first thing he sold was an A." The next one asks, "Was it an apple?" "No." "Was it an apricot?" "No." Each person in turn has one question. At last one may ask, "Was it an artichoke?" "Yes." The one who guesses rightly is the next one to apprentice his son.

A Distinction.

Swamp and marsh are sometimes used without due thought as to their difference. Can you say offhand in what that difference consists? We shall help you. A swamp produces trees and shrubs, while a marsh produces only small plants and mosses. So, you see, there is a real distinction.—Chicago News.

The Candle Lighters.

This is a balancing trick. Two boys face each other, each with a candle, one of which is lighted, the other not. Kneeling on the right knee only and keeping the left leg entirely off the ground, they try to make one candle light the other.

His Letter.

Dear father and sister and mother
(Especially mother), it's night.
Scuse pen; I can't ask for another.
It wouldn't be hardly polite.
I got here at noon, and they met me—
Aunt Fannie and Teddy and Nell—
It took all the family to get me.
There's so much to tell!

For dinner we had roasted chicken
And all the ice cream we could eat
And a cake with the plums very thick in—
For me a surprise and a treat!
I wish that you all might have shared it (Especially mother—'twas fine—
I'd have begged her a piece had I dared it
Or sent to her mine).

We think we'll go swimming tomorrow.
Don't worry; there's no need at all.
Ted knows of a suit I can borrow.
I left mine at home in the hall.
This house is so big and so pretty
I wish you were here, every one
(Especially mother). A city
To live in is fun.

I shall sleep in the blue room by Teddy
Alone, but I guess I shan't care.
Aunt Fannie says: "Bedtime. Be ready."
I'll ask her to stay for my prayer.
Much love, and for all of you kisses
(Especially mother). From Bert.
P. S.—Excuse inkyness—this is
A pen that will squirt!

THE GRANGE

A GREAT GRANGE FAIR

Annual Encampment of a Pennsylvania Pomona Grange.

The Grange Owns Twenty-eight Acres of Land In a Park, and Hundreds of Farmers and Their Families Hold There a Big Fair Every September.

The Center county Pomona grange of Pennsylvania annually holds a great encampment and grange fair at Center Hall. This annual gathering is absolutely a grange enterprise and is conducted under the management of the county grange. It started as a one day grange picnic in 1874 and was converted into a three days' encampment in 1887, and in 1890 the county grange bought twenty-eight acres of land joining the borough of Center Hall and converted it into a park, known as Grange park, paying $115 an acre, the title and ownership being absolutely in the county grange, it being an incorporated body. Since the purchase of the ground there has been added to the encampment a grange fair which has been enlarged from year to year. The whole ground is thoroughly equipped with suitable exhibition buildings. The county grange also owns a large number of tents and full camp equipage, which are rented to families at $3 per tent. Several hundred farmers and their families camp every year, the attendance aggregating from ten to fifteen thousand.

The thirty-sixth annual encampment and grange fair was held Sept. 11 to 17. Leading members of the Order and people prominent in public affairs addressed the people daily in the large auditorium.

This year a large and attractive poultry building has been erected superior to any building of the kind on the largest fair grounds in the state, and the poultry exhibit was a special attraction at this year's grange fair. The general exhibition building erected two years ago has proved a great attraction and has been crowded with exhibits. The museum of relics is a very interesting feature and attracts many people. Among the most interesting exhibits in the museum is a full set of machinery for the manufacture of flax as used by our ancestors. Another feature is an old fashioned chimney place filled with the cooking utensils of our grandmothers.

FARMING IN SCHOOLS.

Opinion of Members of the Faculty of an Agricultural College.

The Mansfield (Conn.) grange has in its membership several of the faculty of the Connecticut Agricultural college, and their opinion on the subject of teaching agriculture in our common schools may be of general interest. The Mansfield grange, after due consideration, adopted the following report on the subject:

"Agriculture, while a technical, vocational subject, is so closely related to the welfare of every individual that we recognize the need for a general dissemination of information as to the conditions of country life and the relation of agriculture to the community—the conditions favorable for the conservation and development of the agricultural resources of the nation. The place for this instruction is in the higher grades of our public schools, both city and country, and the instruction should be given by teachers specially trained for the work and not by teachers engaged in the general work of instruction in the various subjects of school work.

"Before agriculture can be properly introduced into our country schools there must be a radical change in our system. The higher grades at least must be brought together into the consolidated graded township school. In this consolidated school a teacher of science could very properly be employed, a part of whose duties should be to teach agriculture. In our common country schools as at present organized we do not favor the introduction of agriculture as a part of the required work.

"In all grades we favor the use of text books which shall familiarize the pupils with agricultural terms."

New Apportionment of Delegates.

At a recent meeting of the Jefferson county (N. Y.) Pomona it was decided to support the Northern New York Development league by voting it $25 annual dues. Another important matter considered was the plan of appointing state grange delegates to be put in force at the next annual meeting in December, and the plan was adopted. It gives the various granges in the county a more equitable distribution of delegates. Six of the largest granges in the county are given one delegate each year, and the other delegates apportioned to the county are divided among the remainder of the granges according to the membership, the delegates to alternate among them. Two granges and in a few cases three granges are grouped together as a unit, and one of the three granges will be entitled to a delegate each year. Each subordinate grange entitled to a delegate will recommend a suitable candidate to the Pomona before the annual meeting, leaving the election to the Pomona.

A SNOWED-IN THANKSGIVING

By EFF HATCH

Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association

LAWRENCE GREER, looking from his bedroom window, could see nothing but snow as far as his eye traveled. It was snow on the window panes, snow on shrub and tree and hill, snow everywhere in all sorts of fantastic shapes and with yet more coming. The first big storm of the season was descending on the region whither he had come but two days before to spend his Thanksgiving vacation from city office duties in his uncle's home. Already roads and even fences were obliterated.

"Hello, Lawrence!" came the voice of his uncle from below. "Guess we'll have to dig out our end of the gully road this morning. Breakfast ready in ten minutes. Get on your heaviest togs. It's a snifter this time."

GERTRUDE CAME FORWARD WITH A GREETING.

This wasn't the first time that Lawrence had lent a hand in snow plowing and shoveling out the snowed-ins of his uncle's district. Ever since he was a boy of fifteen, ten years before, he had been making annual winter visits to this best of all his uncles and aunts, and he would have returned home sorely disappointed had he not encountered at least one deep drift experience.

At breakfast it was arranged that Lawrence, with old Jacob, should undertake the breaking through of the gully road as far as the Widow Bennett's. At that point they would undoubtedly meet the Pearson boys from a mile beyond.

Now, Lawrence had pleasant recollections of Widow Bennett's hospitable home. As a boy it had opened its arms to him, and it was there he had spent many an hour with Mrs. Bennett and her granddaughter, the brightest, black eyed, alert little girl that ever wore short skirts, rode on snowplows, called him "Uncle Law" and insisted on his own grownupness and his fitness to advise her on her reading, her studies and even her ambitions. Gertrude, however, had been away at school these later winters and Lawrence had caught no glimpse of her, although his aunt and even his uncle had much to say of her attractiveness and loveliness as evidenced in the summer life of the place.

"We ought to make Bennett's by noon and get back here by chore time," was the schedule announced by old Jacob.

"If it gets any worse later in the day don't try to get back tonight. Just bed at the Bennett farm and dig toward us in the morning," was the uncle's parting advice.

The storm did grow worse and grew worse so rapidly that by the time they had covered three-quarters of the distance to the Widow Bennett's Lawrence and old Jacob considered it advisable to detach the horses from the snowplow and, mounted one on each horse, make their way to the Bennett farm.

GERTRUDE SO WROTE.

"Worst storm ever!" said the widow as she welcomed the two. "It doesn't look as if we should get out for days. I was telling Gertrude it was mighty lucky for her that she came yesterday, for she couldn't possibly have escaped a snow blockade had she taken a train later."

Lawrence was all attention. "I say, little Gertrude isn't here, is she?" he asked.

"Well, I don't know as she is," quizzically replied the grandmother. "Little Gertrude hasn't been in evidence for some years, but Miss Gertrude isn't far away."

Soon there was a quick step and a laughing "Hello, Uncle Law!" as Gertrude came forward with a greeting that for its simplicity and heartiness and but for the ripened flower of womanhood before him might have carried him back a half dozen years.

Lawrence Greer was not one easily to be carried off his feet, but he was too evidently in the air this time even to disguise the fact cleverly.

"But I say, Gertrude, how on earth did it all happen?" looking her over from head to foot.

"Years, Uncle Law, just years and the getting into touch with new kinds of life. You said it would be just as I've found it and also that I would some day forget my Uncle Law and that he told me so. But, you see, I haven't forgotten either." And she smiled as frankly as in the days when he told her, sitting on his knee, of the world that she would go into, through the gateways of school and experience and of the society, whose doors had not then opened to her.

That she hadn't forgotten him and those talks to the child Gertrude gave Lawrence a thrill of real pleasure.

That afternoon and evening was a rare day in Lawrence's experience of life. The storm raged furiously, and Lawrence, relieved of duty, gave himself up to the spell of a renewal of acquaintance that had all the novelty, piquancy and delight of a rare and agreeable discovery.

What astonished Lawrence most were the frequently recurring and flatteringly delightful evidences that wherever she had been and however occupied during these intervening years Gertrude had kept close tab on his own career and, furthermore, had found a certain inspiration therein. To be sure, that career had not been hidden under a bushel, for he was already sufficiently in public life to make him a marked man among influential men.

Gertrude's discriminating allusions to his work as commissioner, delegate or president of the board, to his work in correcting civic evils and in his other public activities betokened a peculiarly personal interest such as Lawrence had not before met and such as he least expected in any woman. His own mother and sisters had shown no such intelligent interest in his work, and even his brother, he was willing to wager, knew far less of his career than did this mere girl whom but yesterday, as it were, he had amused as a child, but a child that he loved.

Was it possible that in shaping the ideals of life for a child he had unwittingly offered himself as an ideal to the heart of that child? If so would she find him worthy or not now that the years had proved him? Was her admiration only admiration? If more than that might it not yet be that some one else already forestalled him in her affections? How was he to know?

It was near the close of the second day and drifting winds had made necessary a still further delay in breaking out the roads that opportunity offered itself to Lawrence to gain some light on the ever more tantalizing question of possible rivals in Gertrude's affections. As for himself, Lawrence felt that his entire world was already revolving around this one young woman. Gertrude was showing him some photographs accumulated during the years of her girlhood.

"But where is his picture?" asked Lawrence, interrupting her description of the photographs.

"I have never asked him for one."

"Why so?"

"I preferred the picture in my heart to any other."

"Does he know that?"

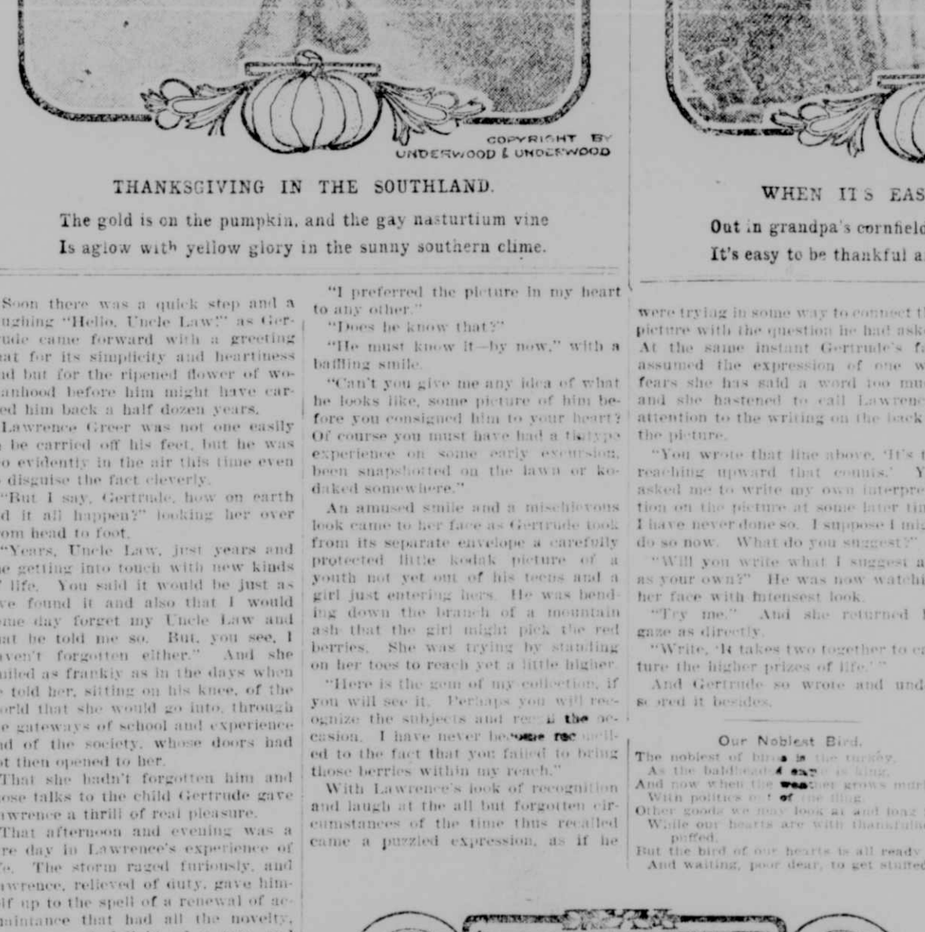
"He must know it—by now," with a baffling smile.

"Can't you give me any idea of what he looks like, some picture of him before you consigned him to your heart? Of course you must have had a tintype experience on some early excursion, been snapshotted on the lawn or kodaked somewhere."

An amused smile and a mischievous look came to her face as Gertrude took from its separate envelope a carefully protected little kodak picture of a youth not yet out of his teens and a girl just entering hers. He was bending down the branch of a mountain ash that the girl might pick the red berries. She was trying by standing on her toes to reach yet a little higher.

"Here is the gem of my collection, if you will see it. Perhaps you will recognize the subjects and recall the occasion. I have never become reconciled to the fact that you failed to bring those berries within my reach."

With Lawrence's look of recognition and laugh at the all but forgotten circumstances of the time thus recalled came a puzzled expression, as if he were trying in some way to connect this picture with the question he had asked. At the same instant Gertrude's face assumed the expression of one who fears she has said a word too much, and she hastened to call Lawrence's attention to the writing on the back of the picture.

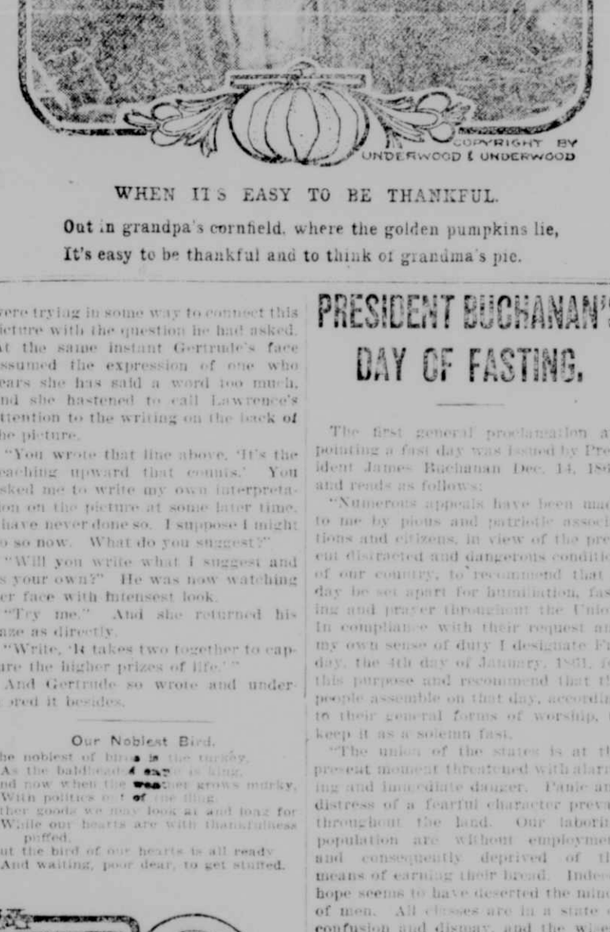


"You wrote that line above, 'It's the reaching upward that counts.' You asked me to write my own interpretation on the picture at some later time. I have never done so. I suppose I might do so now. What do you suggest?"

"Will you write what I suggest and as your own?" He was now watching her face with intensest look.

"Try me." And she returned his gaze as directly.

"Write, 'It takes two together to capture the higher prizes of life.'"



And Gertrude so wrote and underscored it besides.

And now when the [illegible] grows murky,

PRESIDENT BUCHANAN'S DAY OF FASTING.

The first general proclamation appointing a fast day was issued by President James Buchanan Dec. 14, 1860, and reads as follows:

"Numerous appeals have been made to me by pious and patriotic associations and citizens, in view of the present distracted and dangerous condition of our country, to recommend that a day be set apart for humiliation, fasting and prayer throughout the Union. In compliance with their request and my own sense of duty I designate Friday, the 4th day of January, 1861, for this purpose and recommend that the people assemble on that day, according to their general forms of worship, to keep it as a solemn fast.

"The union of the states is at the present moment threatened with alarming and immediate danger. Panic and distress of a fearful character prevail throughout the land. Our laboring population are without employment and consequently deprived of the means of earning their bread. Indeed, hope seems to have deserted the minds of men. All classes are in a state of confusion and dismay, and the wisest counsels of our best and purest men are wholly disregarded.

"In this the hour of our calamity and peril to whom shall we resort for relief but to the God of our fathers? His omnipotent arm only can save us from the awful effects of our own crimes and follies, our own ingratitude and guilt toward our Heavenly Father.

"Let us, then, with deep contrition and penitent sorrow unite in humbling ourselves before the Most High in confessing our individual and national sins and in acknowledging the justice of our punishment. Let us implore him to remove from our hearts that false pride of opinion which would impel us to persevere in wrong for the sake of consistency rather than yield a just submission to the unforeseen exigencies by which we are now surrounded. Let us with deep reverence beseech him to restore the friendship and good will which prevailed in former days among the people of the several states and, above all, to save us from the horrors of civil war and blood guiltiness. Let our fervent prayers ascend to his throne that he will not desert us in this hour of extreme peril, but remember us as he did our fathers in the darkest days of the Revolution and preserve our constitution and our Union, the work of their hands, for ages yet to come. An omnipotent Providence may overrule existing evils for permanent good. He can make the wrath of man to praise him, and the remainder of wrath he can restrain. Let me invoke every individual, in whatever sphere of life he may be placed, to feel a personal responsibility to God and his country for keeping this day holy and for contributing all in his power to remove our actual and impending difficulties.

"JAMES BUCHANAN."

Good Precedents.

The two precedents which the colonial governors had to guide them in ordering a day for thanksgiving were the national Thanksgiving held by order of good Queen Bess after the defeat of the Spanish armada and that of King James of England because the gunpowder plot failed to materialize.

THE NIGHT BEFORE THANKSGIVING

By JAMES A. EDGERTON.

I COULD dream tonight
That a world of light
Is round about me; a presence bright
Is poised above,
Like a brooding dove,
From whose wings rain over me peace and love.

I COULD DREAM.

Like a breath of balm
Is the nameless calm,
And my soul would sing an eternal psalm
In a happiness
That is limitless
And a glow of faith I cannot express.

I could almost dream,
Past the things that seem,
I can see a country eternal gleam
As I raptly stand
On the borderland
And feel about me an angel band.

My soul awake
Its thirst would slake
At a fount immortal; its bread would break
At a feast sublime
In a fairer clime
This hallowed and happy Thanksgiving time.

So wafted o'er
To a shining shore,

ABOUT ME AN ANGEL BAND.

I greet the loved ones who've gone before
And take my seat
At a banquet sweet
Where the fruits and viands of life we eat.

'Tis not afar,
Like a distant star,
The kingdom in which the eternals are.
'Tis here—its light
To an inward sight
Is gleaming—for heaven is mine tonight.

An Extra Thanksgiving.

A very notable proclamation independent of the regular autumnal Thanksgiving day, though in the official records it is designated not as a proclamation, but as "the president's address to the people for thanksgiving and prayer," was McKinley's promulgation of July 6, 1898. The president addressed his words "To the People of the United States of America." He referred to the fact that "to the yet fresh remembrance of the unprecedented success which attended the operations of the United States fleet in the bay of Manila on the 1st day of May last are added the tidings of the no less glorious achievements of the naval and military arms of our beloved country at Santiago de Cuba" and asked the people upon next assembling for divine worship "to offer thanksgiving to Almighty God, who has watched over our cause and brought nearer the success of the right and the attainment of just and honorable peace."

To the Cranberry.

Let others praise in fervent lays
The plump Thanksgiving bird,
And let them sing of leg and wing,
With old Pegasus spurred
Until his speed is great indeed
And all is blithe and merry,
But let me sing that splendid thing,
The succulent cranberry.

O humble fruit, we've long been mute
Upon thy many charms!
With nipping zest you do your best
To ward dyspepsia's harms.
Both sour and sweet you sauce the meat,
Your flavor does not vary.
Retiring, coy, yet full of joy—
O marvelous cranberry!

About you hangs a taste that tangs
The food that would be harsh.
Your plump skin's filled with dew, distilled
Above the sun kissed marsh.
No grape, I'll say, of old Tokay
Or from Oporto airy
Drips with a wine as rich as thine,
O excellent cranberry!

Of ruby hue, a jewel, too,
To grace the festal board.
With lavish heart you give your part—
Give all your spicy hoard.
When eager lipped we've sat and sipped
The juice that vies with sherry,
Ah, of the feast you're not the least,
Mellifluous cranberry!

So let them praise in lilting lays
The turkey and the pie.
But let me sing that splendid thing
That makes the heart beat high.
I would not waste one shade of taste,
I'd drain the dictionary
To find more ways to sing the praise
Of thee, O rare cranberry!

NEW FIRE EQUIPMENT HAS BEEN RECEIVED

Two Reels and Eleven Hundred Feet of Hose for Oakland Came Yesterday.

With the completion of the water system for Oakland when every portion of the town will be supplied under pressure of more than ninety pounds to the square inch, and the purchase and receipt here yesterday of the new fire equipment, the residents and property owners may well feel content and rest with more assurance when the next fire alarm is given, provided the formation of a fire company is not allowed to lag. Oakland can boast of the best fire fighters of the country equipped as they have been for years past with little or nothing, but now with the new up-to-date paraphernalia on hand they should a make name for themselves.

The new equipment which was received yesterday consists of two hose reels and eleven hundred feet of three inch hose capable of withstanding a pressure of three hundred pounds to the square inch. The reels are lightly built but strong, and are equipped with running ropes for the haulage and can be easily handled by a few men. Each reel has standards for hose nozzles, lanterns, etc. These, with the old hook and ladder truck, make ideal fire fighting apparatus and the city council is to be congratulated upon making the purchase.

Two fire stations will be established, one to be located on the hill while the other will be centrally located in the business section of town.

Court House Fight.

Preston county is now entering into a court house fight. Just recently the county court decided to build a new court house. The old one is at Kingwood in the western part of the county, but the people of Terra Alta, which is in the eastern part, think that the new building should be erected in their town and that henceforth Terra Alta should be the seat of government for Preston county. Petitions are being circulated asking that the question of location be submitted to a popular vote, and already a majority of the voters of the county have signed. Terra Alta is offering strong inducements, a free site being not the least. It is very evident that the place of location will be fought for very bitterly by both the Kingwood and the Terra Alta factions.

CONDITION OF THE ROADS.

A Correspondent Directs Attention to the State of the Highways.

There is no complaint, as far as I know, among property owners in Garrett county over the route selected for the road now being constructed under State management and control, but there is much feeling on the part of many taxpayers in and about Oakland over the condition of the roads leading into the county seat.

On a recent occasion I drove from Deer Park to Oakland and the ruts and holes gave me food for thought, and I feel it a duty to call the attention of the authorities, thus publicly, to the present conditions. At one part of the road there seemed to be a ditch across the roadway, which gave me such a jolt that I thought the vehicle would collapse on the spot. If this ditch is the work of the gas company, it is the duty of our County Commissioners to compel that company to at once put the road in condition.

Every merchant in Oakland is interested in the condition of the roads leading into the town, and all should stand together to compel the proper performance of the officials.

One of the best methods of combatting the work of the out of town dealer, with his illustrated catalogue, is to see that the roads leading into Oakland are in such fine condition that it will be a pleasure for the farmer and his family to drive into town, do their shopping, and spend their money at home, and if this state of affairs exists the home trade will increase and everybody will be benefitted.

A very bad stretch of road existed on one of the roads leading into the town of Deer Park. I submitted the matter to its progressive mayor, Mr. William Hennen, and he at once set to work to place it in the best possible condition. Mr. Hennen superintended the work himself, gave his time without cost to the corporation, and with broken stone and cinders a grand good piece of road was constructed with the expenditure of a very little money. I invite the county authorities to inspect it, and see just what can be done with a little effort. If the authorities will but use stone that can be picked up along the road without any cost to speak of, and fill up the bad places, it will help until something better can be devised.

The roads leading into Oakland today are a positive disgrace. I can safely praise everything in letters to out of town papers and to our home papers concerning Garrett county, but when it comes to speaking of the fine drives in and about Oakland, I strike a snag that cannot be removed.

I have an abiding faith in Garrett county. We do not fully appreciate the wealth within its borders, but one of the first things to do is to see that the roads leading into its county seat are roads that can be used without fear of breaking down in transit.

UNION THANKSGIVING SERVICES THURSDAY

A Large Congregation Present and an Excellent Sermon Was Delivered.

Thanksgiving Day last Thursday was observed by the Protestant churches of the city when a union service was conducted in the Presbyterian church, Rev. L. B. Hensley, pastor.

The church in which this interesting service was held was filled to its utmost seating capacity, many who attended were unable to find seats, but the interest was such that almost without exception they remained standing throughout the service.

All the local pastors were present and took part in the service. Rev. G. R. Williamson, pastor of the M. E. church, delivered a typical Thanksgiving Day sermon, which was highly fitting to the day and the occasion and he was tendered many congratulations upon the nature and appropriateness of his address. He pointed out many reasons why the people should be thankful to the Great Ruler over all; the blessings as a nation, state and community, why our people should join in a hearty thanksgiving for the many favors and manifold blessings which have come to them since the last national thanksgiving day and for the present prosperous conditions prevailing.

The pastor of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church, Rev. E. Manges, offered the closing prayer. The music was furnished by members of the Methodist, Presbyterian and Lutheran choirs. A collection amounting to a neat sum was taken which will be used for charitable purposes in and about Oakland and will be distributed by a select committee representing the churches of the town.

Recovered Damages From B. & O.

Dr. Theodore Casto, of Philadelphia, has recovered in a damage suit against the B. & O. R. R., before a court of that city, for having been put off a passenger train at Deer Park, because his ticket was not validated at Oakland. The facts brought out in the case were about as follows:

It was asserted that the plaintiff started on a trip from Washington to Grafton, W. Va. He had a season excursion ticket between the National Capital and Oakland, Md., which is east of Grafton, his destination, and also a 1,000-mileage book.

On his outward trip from Washington to Oakland he used the excursion ticket, and from there to Grafton the mileage book was used. On his return trip the conductor declared that under its terms the excursion ticket had to be validated at Oakland to allow the plaintiff to continue his return to Washington.

When the plaintiff alighted at Oakland he found the ticket agent engaged, and was unable to get his ticket stamped before the train pulled out. When the conductor again came through the train Dr. Casto persisted in his refusal to hand over the mileage or pay his fare, and was put off the train at the next stopping place, Deer Park.

As the train pulled out he grabbed hold of the platform railing of the rear coach, but he was only allowed aboard after declaring that he would pay his fare. Then the conductor took enough of his mileage book for the distance between Oakland and Washington.

It was contended that the railroad company should have provided some one at the Oakland station to validate tickets, and its failure to do so made it liable for damage to the plaintiff.

The amount of damages claimed was $10,000 and the plaintiff was awarded $350.—Cumberland News.

Mail-Order Truths.

An exchange sizes up the mail-order situation in the following terse and truthful style: If the local merchants would advertise as persistently and intelligently as the mail-order merchant, the former could snap their fingers at all the mail-order houses on earth. No man on earth will send to Chicago for goods if he can be supplied as well at home, and if he can be supplied at home it is the business of the local merchants to let the man know.

Bazaar and Supper.

The ladies of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church will conduct a Bazaar and Supper on next Thursday, Dec. 9th, afternoon and evening, in the supper room of the church. A generous assortment of fancy articles suitable for the holidays, will be on sale. Supper will be served beginning at five o'clock. Everybody invited, especially strangers who may be in Oakland attending court. Supper will be 35 cents and will consist of everything palatable.

THE NEW STATE ROADS OF MARYLAND

Interest In the Great Public Improvement.

Whenever good roads are now mentioned in Maryland listeners will be on the alert to hear what is going to be said. No comment will be made, perhaps, until the person having the information concerning this necessary public improvement is through talking.

Then question after question will be fired at him, if he posesses any knowledge of the conditions, and he had better be well informed on the subject before he begins to talk, otherwise he will soon be overwhelmed with the arguments and interrogatories of his hearers, many of whom he will find fully informed on the law and the facts.

There is no question in this State at the moment which is creating more public interest than good roads. It is discussed at all crossroads meetings on Saturdays when the farmers gather to lay in their following week's supplies. This is the one opportunity they have for exchange of neighborly views, and it is availed of to the limit. It is discussed at the Sunday church services, which affords another meeting chance to these busy laborers, and it is thoroughly thrashed over on "court days" in the county seats.

Then the subject takes on a wider range. It is no longer a matter of mere neighborhood gossip, but broadens into a county and State matters, for on these "field days" the residents of widely separated sections meet, compare notes and discuss conditions concerning the whole county, in which all are mutually interested, regardless of district or neighborhood lines.

It is often the case that at these court "field days" in county seats many from other parts of the State gather for business purposes. This makes it possible to give an extended view to all State situations as well as to matters of national import.

The Good Roads Commission has a great work in hand, on which all eyes are now focused.

This is the work which by an act of the General Assembly has been placed in the hands of the following commission: Gov. Austin L. Crothers, John M. Tucker, (chairman), Ira Remsen, William Bullock Clark, S. M. Shoemaker and Francis C. Hutton. Walter W. Crosby is chief engineer and J. C. Bowerman secretary.

This body has outlined the sections of the State it is intended to cover by the first appropriation of $5,000,000 which has been made by the Legislature, authority for which has been given to issue 3½ per cent bonds. Only about $1,250,000 of this was available up to July 30 last. For this the commission has outlined work covering about 107.75 miles of the 1,000 miles contemplated in the broad scope of this big public undertaking.

No section of the State is left uncovered. The highways are to be built on modern plans, according to those promoting them. The work is being done under the observation of skilled engineers, and is intended to give a network of good roads reaching from the Atlantic Ocean in Worcester county, to the Allegany ridge in Garrett county, county, and from the Potomac river in Charles county and the Chesapeake Bay in St. Mary's and Calvert counties to the Pennsylvania border line on the northern end of the State.

A study of the map will show that no section is neglected in this scope. It will further show that those having this gigantic task in hand have aimed to reach the settlement of a great population in all sections, from a topographical standpoint.

It is apparent that much thought has been given to the subject in these surveys. While everyone may not be pleased, still no work of great public improvement, it was pointed out, has ever been undertaken which was not subject to more or less criticism. Some think they are being ignored while their neighbors are being benefited. This is irksome and annoying to those with a grievance, and assuredly leads to complaints.

Still the commission claims to have proceeded on the theory of the greatest good to the greatest number in the selection of the routes. With it this was not a matter of bias or prejudices. The selections were not hastily made. This was done only after careful investigation and after open hearings with persons in the counties concerned. The commission reserved to itself, of course, the right of final determination in the matter, as it was the responsible body on whom the criticism—whether favorable or unfavorable—would ultimately rest. This was the statement of Chairman Tucker.

In the work as outlined, which covers little more than one-tenth of the whole project, the commission has already contracted for or arranged to spend a total of about $1,000,000. This will show an average of little less than $9,000 a mile for the work already in sight. The sum is nearly double what it was thought these roads would cost when their building was first conceived and pushed as a matter of public policy. It was supposed in the beginning that $5,000 a mile would cover all the cost and, therefore, that $5,000,000, the loan asked, would meet all requirements. The project was a favorite one of Governor Crothers, who sees great possibilities ahead for State advancement when the highways are completed. He has been deeply interested in it from the start. So much so that he had it incorporated as a plank in the Democratic national platform as a broad-gauge measure for the whole country when a member of the last Democratic National Convention at Denver.

For the use of this public improvement the act creating the Good Road Commission appropriated $5,000,000 at the session of 1908. This act also provided that not more than $1,000,000 should be expended in any one year, accounting from July 1, 1908. And for the purpose of providing for the expenditures for the establishment, construction, improvement and maintenance of the general system of public roads mentioned in the act a loan was created, called the "State Road Loan." Its issuance was provided as follows: $500,000, to be known as series "A," August 1, 1908; $1,000,000, to be known as series "B," February 1, 1909; $1,000,000, to be known as series "C," February 1, 1910; $1,000,000, to be known as series "D," February 1, 1911; $1,000,000, to be known as series "E," February 1, 1912, and $500,000, to be known as series "F," February 1, 1913. The loan is to be payable 15 years after the date of the respective series, but is redeemable at the pleasure of the State of Maryland after 10 years from date of issue.

To meet the interest of this loan and to redeem it at maturity the act directs that the County Commissioners and the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore are to levy the State taxes for the year 1909 at 2 cents on each $100 of assessable property; for the year 1910, 3½ cents on each $100 of assessable property; for the year 1911, at 4½ cents on each $100 of assessable property; for the year 1912, at 5½ cents on each $100 of assessable property; for the year 1913 and annually thereafter at 6 cents on each $100 of assessable property.

This many regard as a pretty severe tax, and unless the commission shows satisfactory results there may be some complaint of the 6 cents additional tax rate after 1913 to meet this expense.

These matters are not lost sight of either in the city or the counties. So long as results are obtained perhaps nothing will be heard from the taxpayers as this work progresses, or on its completion if it fills the wants its promoters anticipate. Should it fall short in any essential, then the taxpayers will want to know why and may begin an investigation on their own account.

Six cents additional as a tax seems insignificant. It will scarcely be noticed by the man who is only assessed for a few hundred or a few thousand dollars. To one whose property holdings run up into several hundred thousand dollars, and who does not seek to evade this just contribution to the general welfare and to the support of needed public institutions, the burden will begin to tell, and these may begin to inquire as to whether or not the annual tax contributions into the State Treasury are productive of the best results to them and to their fellow citizens.

While the law provides that not more than $1,000,000 shall be spent in any one year, accounting from July 1, 1908, there is a special provision which enabled the commission to exceed this sum this year. This is contained in Section 32K, which provides that in order that there shall be no delay in carrying into effect the provisions of the act the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated from the Treasury proper for the carrying out of the provisions of the act.

Under this section it still has a leeway of funds available to work on for the balance of this year. There is also available $1,000,000 commencing July 1 last.

DIXON & KELSO'S NEW MILL IN OPERATION

Gas Engine Driven Machinery Being Successfully Operated.

Within the past two or three weeks there has been installed in Messrs. Dixon & Kelso's large grain and feed building as complete milling outfit as can be found in the state, consisting of roller process mills, elevators, hulling machines and other machinery found only in the very best equipped plants, all being driven by a twenty-five horse power gas engine which was installed in a building adjoining the warehouse specially erected for its accommodation. That gas is the most economical fuel has been proven beyond a doubt by the operation of this engine, the power being all that has been claimed for it by the gas company and even cheaper than expected by the consumer.

The mill is in charge of Mr. Zach. Hendrickson, a miller of large experience, and he is being assisted by Mr. Samuel Aronhalt. The capacity of the machines has not yet been given a thorough try-out, but it is evident from the amount of hustle exerted by the men in charge that the grists brought to the Dixon & Kelso mill will be turned out very quickly.

Buckwheat is the principal grain being ground at this season of the year, and the product has been yielding thirty-three pounds to the bushel. The grain is put through two mills, thus getting every ounce of flour from the grain, the offal and refuse being of slight consequence. When the machines are thoroughly limbered up the product may be slightly increased.

With three excellent mills operating in Oakland the demand for flour and feed by farmers and consumers generally should be easily met.

Another Good Deed.

Two weeks ago the Journal told of an accomplishment by Col. George A. Pearre, Congressman, for Mrs. Jane Fazenbaker, widow of a Union soldier—how for years she had wrought through various agencies to obtain notice of her claim. At last someone suggested an appeal directly to the Congressman. At once an inspector was sent; her claim was heard; a favorable report was made and in a few weeks she was placed above want.

Much of the same story is true of Henry Knepp, an aged ex-soldier living in Garrett not far from this place. Mr. Knepp came in this week and asked the Journal to make a similar acknowledgment for him. He, too, had failed, but he struck the right streak at last, and one day last week—5 weeks after he saw Col. Pearre, he received $881 back pay at $6 a month to September 1st, this year, and an allowance of $8 a month thenceforward. Hence, Mr. Knepp feels like a new man. Mr. Knepp was a member of the 3rd Maryland Regiment, P. H. B.

The Journal does not make these reports as a partisan of Col. Pearre, for as such it befriends no man, but where credit is due credit must be given!—Frostburg Journal.

Obituary.

All the friends of Mr. Benjamin F. Friend, of Loch Lynn, were very much shocked by his sudden death on Thursday, Nov. 18. He was stricken with apoplexy while on his wagon and died in very short while at the home of Capt. James Hayden in Mt. Lake Park, where he had been taken when the illness seized him. He was 64 years, 5 months and 26 days old, having been born May 22, 1845.

At the age of sixteen he and four brothers enlisted in the Union army. He was married in 1876 to Miss Ethel Caroline White, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. White. To this union were born nine children, of whom eight survives: Mrs. J. T. Taylor, of Fairmont, W. Va.; Mrs. W. O. Cleveland, of Oakland; Alton, of Loch Lynn; Mrs. Morrel Jamison, of Oakland; Wm. W. Friend and Misses Birdie, Ethel and Jessie Friend, who reside at home.

He was converted at the age of fifty years at a revival conducted by Rev. Samuel Arbuthnot in Assembly Hall, in Mt. Lake Park. He united with the Methodist church in Oakland and lived a consistent Christian life until his death. His funeral was conducted by by the writer. Rev. P. Z. Musgrave assisted in the exercises. He was borne to his grave by his old comrades in arms to rest until called forth to meet his Lord. His widow and loved ones left behind have our sincere sympathy in their bereavement.

GENTRY THE GAMBLER

He Had a Heart, Although He Was an Unscrupulous Blackleg.

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE.

"Pass," said Dugan laconically, laying down his cards.

"That puts me out," remarked the lean Yankee from the Cross Triangle outfit. The third man, Davies, as he called himself, rapped the table with his knuckles indifferently. He was ahead of the game and could afford to lose the pot.

There remained old man Lorry. To him Gentry looked with surprising insouciance. Having dealt the cards, the gambler was disturbed by no doubts as to Lorry's action. He would raise, and promptly. Lorry had cut before the deal, it is true, but Gentry had reversed the cut adroitly, unobtrusively.

Nevertheless, to the gambler's surprise, Lorry was uncommonly slow. He vacillated mentally between caution and cupidity; his weak, red rimmed eyes shone feverishly behind the iron bound glasses, and he chewed nervously upon one end of his ragged, tobacco stained mustache. Finally he slammed his hand upon the table. Gentry arched his brows inquiringly.

"Out?" he asked, motioning toward the discard.

Old man Lorry swore abandonedly. "Naw!" he replied. "See yer twenty an' go yer a hundred better."

From the interior of his shirt he produced a roll of bills which the gambler appraised with amazement. He had not thought to find such rich prey. Lorry, conscious that he was creating a sensation, threw two bills upon the table with an air.

"Steddy, pop," cautioned Healy, proprietor of the saloon.

"Mind yer own business," responded old man Lorry sharply.

"And five hundred better," Gentry remarked softly.

"An' five hundred."

"Again."

Lorry glanced defiantly about the table. Healy had turned his back. As for the rest, startled out of their composure by this abrupt change in the complexion of the game, they watched breathlessly.

"Call yer!" exclaimed the old man, depositing the remainder of his fortune in the pot.

"Aces up an' queens!" he added, with an oath, as Gentry displayed his cards. "Better 'n my kings up an' jacks"— He broke off, staring blankly at the gambler as he calmly raked in his spoils and passed the cards to Dugan. The latter shook his head, with an air of finality.

"Nope," he said. "No more for me."

"None in mine," agreed the lean Yankee briefly, and Davies nodded assent to the judgment of the others.

Lorry shambled dispiritedly toward the bar. "Gimmi some 'ski, Billy," he demanded.

Gentry arose and placed a fifty in the bartender's hands. "You can pay for the drinks out of that. I'm going to take a little walk to cool off. See you later, gentlemen." He paused on the threshold, but none answered him, and he passed on out into the infinite silent peace of the mountain night.

He walked a few steps along the apology for a road which formed the main street of the half deserted mining village, then halted suddenly.

"Old fool," he muttered impatiently, comforting himself against the thought of the wrong he had done old man Lorry. "He should have known better. Well, what's his loss is my gain. If I hadn't got it some other fellow would."

Gentry lighted a cigar, stuck his hands in his trousers pockets jauntily and retraced his steps toward Healy's. But he did not stop there. Through its open windows fragments of an argument floated to his ears, punctuated with old man Lorry's voice bleating that he had been shorn. That was quite true, but the gambler did not wish to discuss the question with him since of necessity it would mean eventual bloodshed. He stepped quickly past the fan of light which the doorway threw across the road and began an ascent of the mountain trail. He would return ere long, when things were quieted, saddle his horse and ride on to the next camp.

The night air was warm and soothing with the balm of the pine scent. The gambler strolled beneath a high, broad arched, brilliant sky, fretted with bright stars. But from these he kept his face. His thoughts were too near to the earth for contemplation of the firmament. As he left the straggling village behind him he entered upon a great, sweet solitude whose essence was in the mystery of night upon the mountains. The road wound temptingly on, a forest aisle empty, dusty, now white in the glare of the heavens, now blackly shadowed by massed pines, through whose interstices the starlight fell.

Presently the gambler came upon a little clearing in which, set at a distance back from the road and surrounded by a dilapidated picket fence, was a small cabin, vine clad. Its windows shone dimly with yellow lamplight, this although the hour was past midnight. As he stopped, puffing speculatively upon his cigar, a voice hailed him—a feminine voice, singularly rich in intonation and clear—and at that he made out a slender figure swaying upon the gate of the fence. He tossed away his smoke, removed his slouch hat and approached.

"Good evening," he said courteously.

"Howdy, stranger? Be you from Hammels, down yonder?"

Gentry failed to repress a start. The uncouthness of the words, the strong touch of dialect, was so distinctly out of keeping with what the beauty of the girl's voice had led him to expect. And, now that he could see her, there was positive refinement of feature in the face, wholly charming, upturned to him.

"Yes," he answered her.

The girl regarded him with unconcealed curiosity. "An' what might be yer name, stranger?"

"Mason," he lied without wondering why he should lie, lacking a reason.

"Oh," she sighed, with evident relief. "I didn't know—from yer style yer know—but what yer might be Gentry."

"Who's Gentry?"

"Aw—a gambler what I heerd had come to town. Pappy went down early tonight to get in the game with him. Say, Mr. Mason, did yer see my pappy down there?"

"I don't know, really. Who"—

"Lorry," she interrupted. "Ole man Lorry they calls him, mostly. Did yer see him around?"

"Come to think of it, I did." He smiled blandly upon her to conceal a rising uneasiness.

"Was he drunk?" she continued frankly.

"N-no. I didn't notice that he was."

"He warn't gamblin' with that hound Gentry, was he?"

"No," said the hound heartily. "Gentry left town today, I hear."

"That's good!" She smiled at the gambler, shading her beautiful eyes with a deep fringe of upcurled lashes. "He'll only come home drunk, then," she added pensively. "I don't mind that. Never had to manage a man, did yer, stranger?"

"Only myself," he laughed.

"Then yer don't know nothin' about it—the trouble, I mean. Pappy's an ole fool. He don't know no more about playin' poker 'n a tenderfoot, an' he thinks he knows it all. He—he"—She hesitated.

"Well?" he encouraged her.

"Aw—nothin', only he made a strike a little while ago. It warn't much of a strike, only a couple of thousand, and he promised to send me back east—to the home folks, you know—next week."

"And?" said Gentry softly.

"That was the money he took to gamble with," she laughed, a trifle harshly. "Said he'd send me back in style—with his winnin's. Well, so long's Gentry ain't there I reckon I may get a chance to get some book learnin', after all, if I can keep him home till next week. Goin' already, stranger?"

"Yes. I must hit the trail early tomorrow, Miss Lorry."

"Waal, so long. If yer see the ole man start him along home, will yer? Thanks, an' good night to yer, Mr Mason."

* * * * * * *

Some distance down the trail the gambler stumbled over the prostrate form of a man. With something of a strong presentment Gentry turned the body over and lit a match to see the face.

It was old man Lorry, hopelessly intoxicated, sleeping the dead sleep of alcohol.

"There's most of my fifty," remarked the gambler grimly. "It's like throwing good money after bad. I'm a darned fool."

To prove his assertion he took from his wallet the bills of which he had robbed the miner and stuffed them in the latter's pockets. Then he helped him to his feet, meaning to see him home. To his wonder, Gentry found that the man, once afoot, was able to walk after a fashion. He lurched along unsteadily, but made progress toward his cabin.

The gambler followed him to the clearing, stepping noiselessly, then turned and went back for his horse and his last glimpse of Healy's.

A One Armed Pianist.

Count Geza Zichy, president of the National Conservatory of Music at Budapest, celebrated his sixtieth birthday on July 23. Referring to the event, a Vienna paper speaks of him as a unique figure in the musical world. "If we are justified in saying that Raphael would have been a great painter even if he had no arms," says the writer, "we may certainly say that Zichy was a great pianist, although he had but one arm. He was fourteen years old when he lost his right arm on a hunting tour, but notwithstanding this handicap he continued his study of music and became so proficient as a performer that he played with great skill the works of Chopin and other composers. In 1856 he made his first appearance before the public as a pianist and has since that time played at hundreds of concerts, always for the benefit of some charitable institution. He composed several operas and in 1891 became the director of the Hungarian Opera at Budapest."

Foam For Oil Fires.

The Germans have perfected a scheme for killing oil fires with foam. The apparatus employed consists of a simple metal cylinder provided with a long spout and divided into chambers. One chamber is charged with an aqueous solution of potash-alum and sodium sulphate, the other with a similar solution of sodium bicarbonate, sodium sulphate and licorice root extract. The cylinder is so arranged that on being reversed the two solutions mingle as they issue from the spout. The result is a prompt evolution of carbon dioxide, which, in contact with the licorice solution, forms an exceedingly stiff and persistent foam. Heads of fire departments have tested this scheme and pronounced the foam fire extinguisher a success. They say it will prove especially valuable in all places where combustible liquors are stored, such as groceries, drug stores, automobile garages and motor yachts.

ADMINISTERING MEDICINE.

How to Make Children Realize That They Must Swallow It.

Giving medicine to children is one of the most difficult problems that young mothers have to cope with, for some little ones have such a horror of a dose that they work themselves into a condition of nervous illness before the medicine gets into their stomachs, and so it frequently nauseates them, thus making successive doses harder to give.

There is no question but that if a child shows a disposition to rebel against swallowing medicine the mental tussle must be gone through with and settled first. That is, there is no use in trying to give the dose while administering admonitions. The little one's stomach must be quiet, and this cannot be if he is in tears or is screaming.

So when the child refuses it is essential to put the medicine aside and to make him understand that the cure must be taken. He must not for an instant be permitted to think that he has gained his point and need not take it. To the contrary, he is given to understand that he is obliged to and that the sooner he is quiet the better. Precisely how this is to be accomplished depends upon individual temperament and the way each parent handles the babe. Sometimes when the argument is prolonged a spanking may be required. One small girl had three doses of this maternal discipline before she became quiet and swallowed her medicine. There was never any trouble with her afterward, for she had been made to accept the fact that medicine when it was brought her was to be taken and to fuss only made the condition worse. Coaxing works with some little ones; with others punishment is required. Each parent must decide this for herself.

During the time that this matter of will contest is in progress the medicine is not administered. When the child has been conquered he must be given a few minutes to quiet sobs or temper, and then the dose must be given.

If the sick child thinks he cannot swallow medicine, no matter how much he may want to, he must be broken of this idea. He is apt to change his idea rather quickly, too, if he finds that each time he ejects the medicine a fresh dose is given. It takes a clever child only a few moments to realize that he is simply prolonging the agony.

The notion some have that they cannot swallow pills is likely to be imagination, which it is not always well to give in to. If there is a reason for paying heed to it an easy way of obviating it is to give liquid instead, for there are few prescriptions that cannot be administered in this form. The old way of giving pills in jelly does not commend itself to present ideas. The sweet, combined with medicine, is apt to upset the stomach, causing nausea.

To deceive a child about medicine and tell him it is good is a great mistake. This may work once, but he will be suspicious ever after. He should be made to understand that medicine is not a joke, but that it is less disagreeable than to be ill, and that whether he wishes it or not he must take it.

How to Restore Withered Vegetables.

For the housewife who must practice strict economy, as well as for her who lives at a distance from the market, it is well to know that cabbage, celery, lettuce and their like which have lost the first freshness may be restored by putting first into warm water, just comfortably warm to the hand, and, after fifteen or twenty minutes, taking out and covering with fresh cold water for thirty or more minutes. You will be surprised to note that it will have the original snappy crispness so much desired. Often the grocer will sell "second day" celery and lettuce at half price. The above method will absolutely freshen same and may make quite a saving of "bills" during a season.

How to Banish Dandruff.

A young man who was much troubled by dandruff tried many remedies before he was advised by an old doctor to use a cure much favored by physicians of several generations ago—a paste made of vaseline and precipitated sulphur. The ointment is made by blending a dram of the sulphur with two tablespoonfuls of vaseline. Divide the hair into strands and rub well into the roots, not getting into the long hair. The ointment should be left on several days and repeated when necessary. This treatment is equally good for a scalp that has grown dry or filled with an ugly, scaly scurf.

How to Restore Mildewed Clothes.

A cure for mildew that is the remedy of an old negro laundress is excellent for all white goods, and will not injure fine materials. Pour a quart of boiling water over two ounces of chloride of lime, add three quarts of cold water, let the mixture stand until settled, strain, and it is ready for use. The material should be steeped in the limewater for a day or over night, when the spots will be found to have disappeared.

How to Use and Make Javelle Water.

Javelle water will take out stains from linen and cotton. Take one pound of salsoda and 5 cents' worth of chloride of lime. Put them in an earthen bowl and turn over them two quarts of boiling hot soft water; rainwater is the best. Let it settle, then pour off. Bottle and keep for use. It will remove fruit stains and even take out indelible ink spots. When used, soak the stain till it disappears. Then wash it in water

DRAGGING OF ROADS.

How to Get Them In Good Shape For Winter Hauling.

DON'T WAIT UNTIL SPRING.

Much Good Can Be Done by Grading Up In Summer and Fall For Work Later On—How to Make a Drag From Split Hickory Log.

On every farm where there is a mile or more of road, unless it has been made permanent by grading properly and macadamized or graveled, there ought to be a road drag. With such a tool at hand any farmer can with little time and trouble keep his farm roads in perfect condition.

Having a large farm and over two miles of roadway, I have found a homemade drag to be a most useful implement. Of course we can get along with poor roads on the farm, but if we are the sort of farmers who take pride in having things in the best shape we will certainly take pleasure in keeping our farm roads in good condition. And I may add that it takes so little time and trouble to run over a mile or two of road when the team is already hitched to the drag that I usually go through the outside gate and work up and down the public road in front of the farm when I drag the farm roads.

HOW DRAGGING IMPROVES A ROAD

The longer I keep my drag and use it on my roads the more I appreciate it. Mine is of the red split log type. I made it of a ten foot section of a twelve inch hickory log, split in the middle, and on the front cutting edge nailed some heavy sheet iron. It works about as well as the metal ones, some of which I see occasionally.

I don't think it took me two hours to make my drag, though I did not make it strictly according to the regulation method as I have seen drags illustrated in farm papers. All of those seemed to have the two sections of log put together by having three large augur holes bored through them and round wooden bars about two inches in diameter put through to hold them parallel and rigid.

I did not have the large augur to bore holes big enough for stout wooden bars, so I merely sawed down into the upper edges of each half of the log at three places and split out the blocks, leaving a place into which I could put a piece of four inch scantling. I cut three pieces of scantling thirty-six inches long and fitted them into the cutout places and made them fast by driving spikes six inches long into them. The job seems to be as solid as those made by boring holes and putting the bars through. Some people make their drags of plank, and they do very well, but cost more and will not stand hard usage so well as the regular split log drag.

There is not, of course, so great need of the drag in summer and fall as in winter and spring, but it is a much easier and pleasanter job to make it then, and, besides, if one drags his roads a few times in summer and gets them well graded up they will remain in good shape far better than if left just as the summer hauling has made them.

Moreover, on many farms there are wet places in the roads that cannot well be worked to advantage in winter and spring. If these are graded up and drained in the fall they will no doubt stay good all the time.

There is another use I have seen the drag put to that on some farms will come in very handy. Quite a good many cattle owners find it expedient to pen up their cattle at night in summer. As a rule, no straw or other bedding is thrown over the lot, and the manure remains on the ground and dries out and on sloping ground is often all washed away. I find that if I run the road drag over the cowpen occasionally I can scrape up several loads of the best kind of manure that is well worth collecting and hauling out to thin spots on the farm.

I say with emphasis there is no small job that a farm owner can more profitably devote a few hours to when he has some leisure time after the press of farm work is over than constructing a road drag.—Missouri Cor. Farm Progress.

Hard Dirt Roads.

Kansas perhaps has the best natural roads of any state in the Union. There is practically a highway on every section line. In three-fourths of the state the dirt roads ten months of the year are as level and hard as a floor.

JUST DIGDIGS.

Too Much For the Big Man In the Purple Shirt.

The big man in the purple shirt accosted the studious little man who was waiting for the "L" train.

"Beg pardon, neighbor," said the big man as he opened his paper, "here is something I don't understand."

"What is that, sir?" asked the little man curiously.

"Why, it states here that Colonel Roosevelt shot a digdig. What is a digdig?"

The little man smiled.

"My friend, a digdig is an animal that digs. When one digdig starts to dig, the other digdigs dig deeper than this digdig. Then this digdig digs and digs and digs until"—

"Hold on! Which digdig?"

"The first digdig. The other digdigs dig and dig to catch up with the other digdig's digging. Then the first digdig digs and digs till the other digdigs"—

But the man in the purple shirt covered his ears with his hands and fled. And all day long the "digdig" rang through his brain until he vowed Teddy was an enemy to mankind to discover such an animal.—Chicago News.

The Wrong Switch.

"Little boy," said the big electrician as he unpacked his tool kit, "your mother sent for me to fix her switch. Where will I find it?"

The little boy's eyes grew round.

"Sh!" he whispered cautiously. "Mamma doesn't want everybody to know she wears a switch, but I guess you'll find it either on the bureau or on her head."

And ten minutes later the sounds that emanated from the woodshed told that there are other kinds of switches besides electrical and hair.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A Large Receptacle.

"I watched your sister fixing her hair the other day," said Mrs. Nagget, "and I must say she's not the most refined person in the world."

"No?" replied her husband, with a belligerent air. "You don't approve of her, eh?"

"Well," she retorted, with a disdainful sniff, "you'd never see me with my mouth full of hairpins."

"Of course not," he snapped. "What would you want with so many hairpins?"—Catholic Standard and Times.

Just Possible.

"I was born and raised on this farm," said the stranger, "but I haven't set foot on it for twenty years. It certainly has run down a good deal since then."

"Mebbe it has," rejoined the old former, "but I reckon it'd run down a heap sight worse if yew had stayed on it."—St. Louis Republic.

Method.

"What makes you keep on asking me if the razor hurts?" asked the man who was being shaved. "I've said yes three times, and it hasn't made any difference."

"No," answered the barber; "I was merely trying my razors out to see which of 'em wants honing."—Washington Star.

Significant.

The man Who Makes A STUDY OF HIS APPEARANCE

Is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we put into the garments give them a character that finishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the owner complete.

All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

Peach Orchard Land for Sale.

I offer for sale two farms in Hampshire county, W. Va., both in the peach belt and would make fine peach orchards.

The first contains 232 acres, forty acres cleared and the remainder in timber. About 50,000 feet of saw timber; 10,000 props and a lot of locust posts. Situated 1½ miles northwest of Springfield, on the Romney Branch of the B. & O. R. R. An orchard of sixty bearing apple trees and some peach trees on the place. About thirty acres of run bottom and five acres of this in meadow. Improved by dweeling house, well, etc.

I have been advised by good authority that this farm would make a splendid peach orchard. Convenient to churches, schools, stores, etc. Price $1,500, on easy terms.

The second farm contains about 150 acres, partly cleared and part in timber and has on it a dwelling house and some other improvements. About six acres of run bottom now in meadow. Situated about one mile west of Springfield, W. Va., on the Romney Branch of the B. & O. R. R. Convenient to churches, schools, stores, etc. Price $1,200, on easy terms. IS THE MOST POWERFUL MAN IN RUSSIA

An Adviser of the Czar Who Has Extraordinary Influence.

BERLIN, Nov. 26.—Perhaps the most powerful man in Russia at the present moment is Rector Theophan, of the Ecclesiastical Academy in St. Petersburg, known popularly as "the monk of the Czar." Theophan, a professor of theology, is, comparatively speaking, a young man, tall of stature with piercing black eyes, whose character is strongly impregnated with mysticism. Up to the present he has not come prominently before the public, but owing to the extraordinary influence that he wields over the Czar, he has become the centre of a circle of fawning courtiers and sycophants.

About a year ago Theophan was surprised to receive an invitation from Grand Duke Peter Nicchalavitch, with whom he was acquainted through Prince Putiatkin, to be presented to the Czar. From that moment a new life commenced for the monk, who found in the weak Czar an enthusiastic disciple.

The Czar was charmed with the quiet and decided manner of the young man and the conversation turned, during the course of many subsequent visits, from religion to belief, from belief to miracles, and from miracles to mysticism, a subject for which the Czar has shown a penchant of late years.

At first Theophan only visited the Czar when he was summoned, but he soon received the permission to go in and out of the Imperial Palaces when ever he desired. The entourage of the Czar soon discovered that Theophan had developed into a personage in whom the Czar placed implicit confidence, and with whom he frequently discussed matters, towards which he manifested great reserve when with his ministers.

At first only private matters formed the gist of their conversations but later on the monk was consulted concerning political affairs and was able to obtain favors that the Czar even refused his own mother.

Thus, some time ago the Czar dismissed Prince Obolenski, a youthful playmate, from the post as chief of his Cabinet. This spelled ruined to the Prince, who possesses no means. Owing to the intervention of the monk the Czar arranged that his salary of 50,000 rubles be paid till the prince dies, although he had refused the request of his mother to pension the Prince. The Czar has further made princely gifts, lately for ecclesiastical and charitable purposes, solely at the instigation of Monk Theophan.

The closest bond existing between the Monk and the Czar is that of mysticism. That the Czar is extremely accessible to such influence can be amply proved by the case of "Monseigneur Philippe," who played such an important role at Zaraskoie Selo at the beginning of the century, and who was dismissed from the court, laden with presents, after Premier Plehve had severely remonstrated with the Czar concerning the influence that the Monseigneur exerted in politics.

Grand Duke Peter and Princess Milizia Nikolajevna are responsible for the introduction of this gentleman with his seances and apparitions to the Russian court.

The extraordinary power that the "Czar Monk" has gained over Emperor Nicholas has just been evidenced anew by the fact that, whereas all ecclesiastics were debarred from being present at the laying of the foundation stone of the new regimental chapel at Zaraskoie Selo, two days before the Czar's journey, he received a special invitation to be present. It is now rumored that the protopresbyter of the Court M. J. Janitcheff, is about to retire and that the "Czar's Monk" is to succeed him. If this is the case, the vast dominions of the all powerful Monarch will at last come under the sway of the Greek Church, and the present reign of ecclesiastical intolerance will be intensified.

If it were possible to serve judicial summons on spirits in the vast deep, several of them would today have been sitting in the dock of the Dresden Criminal Court. As it is, a porcelain painter, Emil Bergmann, has to answer for their doings.

He first got into touch with the unseen world through a pre-vision of the death of his wife. This led him to attend spiritualistic seances where he received messages from the ghosts of Martin Luther, Paracelsus, and certain anonymous departed, who imparted to him that porcelain painting was a poor business and that there was much more money in the manufacture of cosmetics. They also communicated to him recipes for several toilette preparations, including a paste matchless for the preservation of the teeth. He was further instructed to give his factory the name of "Bombastus Works."

The spiritual benefactions, however, did not stop here. Wealthy frequenters at the seances were urgently advised to invest their savings in the concern and several of them responded handsomely to this appeal. Altogether a sum of between $150,000 and $200,000 was placed at the disposal of the spirits' protege.

At last the authorities got wind of the affair and instituted a prosecution, which was, however, very nearly abandoned, owing to the implicit trust of the persons who had supplied the money in the ghostly counsels, and their refusal to take the view that they had been defrauded. So far as the course of the trial has revealed it, Bergmann's defense is that everything he did was dictated to him while he was in a state of trance, and that he, therefore, bears no responsibility for it.

An extraordinary occurrence is reported from Kuska, near Grosswarde, in Hungary.

Two brothers named Frei, notorious Don Juans, have for two years great y vexed the villagers by their immoral conduct. Last week a kind of Vehmic Court was held by the fathers of the girls, who had been misled by the young men, and it was decided to put the brothers to death. This sentence was executed on Sunday night, the brothers being slain as they walked home from an inn.

So far the authorities have not been successful in finding the actual murderers, but a great many of the villagers have been arrested.

OUR SOUTHERN LETTER

The Small Towns of the South Are Growing in a Most Remarkable Way

The other day I read in the Charlotte Observer two or three little stories that interested me. One was to the effect that the furniture shops at Lexington are loading sixty cars of furniture a month, although Lexington has not been making much fuss about the furniture trade of that town.

From Rockingham, in the same paper, was a story of the tenth cotton mill starting down there with a capital stock of several hundred thousand dollars.

From another source was the statement that the cotton mills of the South this year have spun more cotton than the mills of the North, holding the advantage they gained a couple of years ago when the South took first place as a consumer of the cotton crop of the country.

Wadesboro is happy because a new railroad has started to build northward from Charleston, S. C., to Harrisburg, Pa., which means from the North to the South. A few weeks ago a new line was put into service connecting Wilmington and other Southern points with the roads that run from West Virginia north to the Ohio River.

All these things are significant. The little North Carolina towns are spending money by the millions in the erection of new factories and mills and in the development of the various industries that seem to flourish in this State. I was out in the State two or three weeks ago, and the one conspicuous thing was the amount of new building and development going on in nearly all of the smaller places and the little cities that are growing up from the villages and small towns.

The panic appears to have disturbed the progress of the State less than almost any other manufacturing section of the country for North Carolina factories are making staple things and the market is the world. North Carolina cotton goods may be sold in New York or San Francisco, or in China or Africa, and will be sold as long as people continue to want clothes. North Carolina furniture goes to Cape Town by the car load. North Carolina manufactured tobacco is found in almost every market place.

The next census, to be taken the coming summer, will be an interesting one in the disclosuse of the progress the little towns of the State have made. Railroads have extended in the last ten years, and factories have increased in a way that is almost without a parallel in the history of American industrial development. It is true that big factory towns have not been created, as has been the case around Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where some big industry picks out a piece of ground outside the city and erects a factory and a town to go with it. But what is better for the general prosperity of the whole region, the towns are all building factories for themselves, so that hardly a place can be found any more in western or central North Carolina that has not some thriving mills of some sort to employ the available people and bring wealth to the community. The little towns are growing into excellent market towns for the farmer, just as the towns in the Pennsylvania gas and coal belt have done, and the same spirit of development and expansion is in the air, differing only in one thing.

The difference is that in Pennsylvania the town that have the gas and coal are striving to offer inducements to capital to create factories there. In the North Carolina towns the people of the towns are putting their money into the improvements desired and the result is a better class of industries, and a more permanent character for them.

The North Carolina mill does not pull up its machines at some failure of gas or some sudden notion and go to some different location. It is established to stay with the community and develop and become a part of the town and of the industrial fixtures of the State.

North as well as South can rejoice over the condition of affairs, for the prosperity of the South adds infinitely to the prosperity of the North. There was never any occasion for any industrial jealousy between the two sections. The mills that are created in the South are not taking the place of any of the mills of the North. These new factory towns are merely helping to supply the increasing demands that a rapidly growing country makes and to meet the requirements of the whole earth, with its steadily increasing wants.

Every new city that is built in North Carolina stimulates business at the industrial centers of the North, and at an increasing pace the North is beginning to come after the trade of the South.

One mistake the North is making yet and that is in not sending more of her young men down in this direction to get acquainted with Southern industries, Southern towns and Southern requirements, for the acquaintance of the young men cements business relations and expands the trade between the two sections.

The value of the South as a field for mutual business has never been appreciated by the North, and one of the consequences of the indifference is the creation of new industries in the South that the North would have prevented had the North been more alert to Southern wants.

I noticed in one of my papers the enlargement of a factory that builds corn planters, for instance. It was a small affair over at Charlotte, but has added new buildings and facilities to the tune of about a hundred thousand dollars to build planters, largely because when a farmer in the South wants a planter he is instructed by the factory in the North to "write for prices," and then a lot of correspondence must be gone over with a distant Northern factory before he can get what he wants. Had Northern factories and merchants long ago learned to fish for Southern trade by having goods on the ground and somebody to sell them, many a mill that has sprung up in the South would never have been dreamed of. But now the tide is on, and the little towns of the South are rapidly becoming manufacturing cities because they have cheap water power, cheap raw material and a steadily broadening market. Still these cities are in the market for vast quantities of goods, and they are worth the notice of the North more and more every day.

TIMBER DECAY COSTS MILLIONS

Millions of feet of timber and finished lumber rot every year in railroad ties, bridges, tressles, piles, farm buildings, fences, poles and mine props. The lumber-consuming public of the United States pays perhaps $30,000,000 to $40,000,000 a year to make good the losses from wood decay.

These great drains are a source of more and more concern each year. Chemists and engineers who have to do with the uses of wood are working unceasingly on the problem. The United States Forestry Services has men who devote their whole time to it. The importance of the problem cannot be overestimated. Millions of dollars are annually saved by preservative treatment of timbers, but much yet remains to be learned.

Wood decay is caused by fungus, a vegetable growth sometimes so small that it can be seen only with the microscope. Its roots or branches, like minute hairs, force their way into the wood tissues and absorb or eat away the solid parts. The collapse which result is called decay. The timber is artificially preserved by forcing into its cells and pores certain substances which prevent the growth of fungi. As long as this substance is present in sufficient quantity the germs of decay—the threads and spores of fungus—cannot enter, and the wood is preserved. This often means doubling and sometimes trebling the life of the timber.

The United States Government considers the investigations of the preservative treatment of timber of such importance that the business of one office of the United States Forestry Service, that of wood preservation, with new headquarters at Madison, Wis., is given over entirely to the work of experiments and cooperation with railroad companies and other corporations and individuals in prolonging the life of railroad ties, mine props, bridge timbers, fence posts and transmission poles.

The lengthening of the life of timber means the saving of thousands of dollars annually through doing away with the heavy expense of labor and cost of material for renewals.

OPPORTUNITY.

We're the busy, bustling people, are we Americans. In fact we're about the busiest, dizziest bunch of citizens that ever jostled their neighbors off the sidewalk. At least we say so and there is no doubt of the fact—in our own minds. This subject has been written about so much and we have gloried over it so greatly, that it has come to be one of our unalienable rights to imagine that we go at just a little faster pace than anybody else in the world. And maybe we do, for the most part; yet, there is a lot of tommy-rot about the nerve racking speed of Uncle Sam's nieces and nephews, too. You will have found that out long ago if you ever took the trouble to make a few observations.

It really seems that a good many of us are not going so swift a pace after all. It really seems that there is a good deal of fraud about this hustling business we hear so much about. If you have any doubt about it ask the superintendent who has a hundred or so men under his direction. Ask the man who knows and he will tell you this: On every big job there are a dozen men who are hustlers. They are men with initiative—men who work with their brains as well as with their hands. And he will tell you further that the remainder, or the most of them, have to be pushed, pulled, threatened and cajoled every day they are on the job in order that the business or the contrrctor shall not lose money.

Did you ever watch the clerks in an office? How they hustle, the most of them? How anxious they are to do their work in a rapid, orderly and efficient manner? How desirous they are to fit themselves for the higher and better positions? You've seen all that, haven't you? If you have investigated, what you have seen has been more like this: A few clerks are of this kind. The others, and they are the vast majority, are slaves to the office clock. They manage to get to the office from two to six minutes late, if the management will stand for it, and they quit work on the second. They are punctual enough about that, you may gamble your last dollar. They are concerned chiefly in doing the least possible amount of work within the prescribed eight hours, and when they fail of advancement they complain that the other fellow had a "pull." They are right, too; he had a "pull"—and that "pull" came from the employment of brains and good will in the performance of his work.

You have heard people complain that "there is no chance for a fellow, anymore." Those people are right. There is no chance for them and there will be no chance for them if they live a million years. But while they are making the old, threadbare complaint, the fellows with the "pull" are climbing steadily up the ladder. They are too busy doing their work and fitting themselves for the higher positions to grumble about lack of opportunities.

There never was a time in the history of the world when there was a greater demand for real ability, for real willingness, for real initiative. The public has awakened and it is demanding better service on the part of business interests. In other words the public is getting wise. This state of affairs can have but one effect. Better service by the business interests means better and more efficient service by the employes of those interests. And in all this lie the opportunities of the present day.

THE DEATH RECORD.

JOHN S. COMBS.

Mr. John S. Combs, printer and all round newspaper man, died rather suddenly Friday morning at 3:30 o'clock, at his home in Ridgely, W. Va., aged 65 years. He had been employed in the composing room of the Evening Times, Cumberland, for about twenty years, with the exception of an interval of a year or more, during which time he was employed at Sebring, Ohio.

He left his case in this office about a week ago, at which time he complained of being unwell, but his illness did not assume a serious phase until Friday morning at two o'clock, when he became paralized, passing away at the above mentioned hour.

Mr. Combs grew up at the "printer's case." He was a son of the late John J. Combs, of Romney, W. Va., founder of the Romney Review. The son learned to "set type" when a mere youth under his father, and continued in that occupation until death marked him for a victim, with the exception of a few months spent in the Confederate army during the latter years of the Civil War.

After the war was over and having served his apprenticeship prior to that time under his father, Mr. Combs located at Piedmont, W. Va., as foreman of the Piedmont Independent, but resigned that position to accept a similar one with the Cumberland Daily News, at a time when Captain Griffith was its editor. He later went to Oakland, where he managed the Oakland Democrat for a number of years, virtually doing all the work on that paper, getting out all the copy, and setting the type, his only help being a small boy. The Democrat having changed hands, Mr. Combs came to this city and went to work setting type on this paper.

The deceased was not only a good printer, but he was a clever writer, being a natural born newspaper man. Aside from his newspraper qualifications, he was genial and sociable, and well liked by his employers, colaborers and the people generally. But he has "set" his last "take," and his spirit has gone to the one who gave it. He is survived by the following children: William Combs, of Ohio; Frank Combs, Misses Blanche, Pearl and Dewetta Combs, all of Ridgely. The funeral arrangements have not yet been completed, but will probably take place Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Combs' wife died about thirteen years ago, and one of his daughters died last April.

The following poetic effort is one of the last contributions on the part of the deceased, written at a time when things were not as smooth as they might have been:

AN OLD PRINTER.

Only a printer, old and gray;
'Tis true at times he goes astray,
Led by the tempter, under his sway,
With whom he has struggled for many a day.

"To err is human, to forgive divine,"
Is a saying trite—not words of mine.
In the gloom of this hour there's not a shine
Of the Star of Hope for me or mine.

Nothing to do but hope and wait,
Looking alone to the hand of fate.
Will the dawn ever come? At any rate
We continue to hope and wait and wait.

A moonlight night—but gloom within;
A home made sad for not a sin
Committed against kith or kin,
And only one thought—it might have been.

Out of work, with work to do.
Strange it is, but alas! too true.
Is it any wonder a man gets blue
And puts himself in a terrible stew?

But to bed I go with a heart not bad,
Trusting the world is not so sad
As to keep one out on the tag-and-rag
Because, forsooth, he got on a jag.

And in conclusion, I want to say,
Maybe there's yet a brighter day
For a printer old and feeble and gray.
And this is all I want to say:

"A man's a man for a' that."

WORK FOR CONGRESS.

Defects in Pure Food Law to be Remedied at Next Session.

When Congress meets this month one of the questions to be thrashed out will undoubtedly be the revision of the pure food laws to meet the demands of the general body of consumers for still further improvements in the methods in vogue in many food factories.

One of the points overlooked in the original acts was the treatment of peaches and apricots in canning plants. It is the practice of many canneries to immerse peaches in a boiling solution of caustic soda and allow the fruit to stew in this chemical until the skins of the fruit are eaten loose. The fruit in then put through several washings until the skins are washed away. This process is about a cent and a half or two cents a can cheaper than peeling by knife. Those who are calling attention to this chemical treatment say that the use of the lye is not the worst feature of the process, but contend that in order to use this cheap peeling process it is necessary to use green and unripe fruit for canning. Ripe fruit will not stand the lye-process but becomes discolored and disintergrated in the caustic soda. The little flavor which the unripe peaches have is killed by the lye treatment so that the result is a woody, tasteless, canned peach which depends for flavor on the syrup which is added in the canning process.

The way to tell a lye-peeled peach is to wash away the syrup and then taste the fruit. If it is tasteless and pulpy the chances are it is a lye-peeled peach.

In the several washings to which the peach is subjected after it is peeled by lye, most of the chemical is undoubtedly washed away but if any of it is left the consumer gets it with his fruit.

Congress did not mention this subject in the pure food laws, consequently the canners who use this method are not compelled to state the fact on their labels. The present agitation has for its purpose the enactment of a measure to remedy this defect.

If this movement proves successful every canner will have to state on his label if the peaches he used were peeled by caustic soda or any other chemical. That, of course, will put the question right up to the consumer. If they would as soon eat fruit which has been soaked in lye they can do so. Many, of course, will prefer to have their fruit handled in the good, old-fashioned kitchen way, by knife-peeling, which also means much for the quality of the canned fruit by keeping intact the original fruit flavor.

The last two years have seen a great advance in the methods used in various canneries and with the new law a still further advance in the direction of wholesome production will be assured. When the processes employed in canneries are known to be perfectly wholesome, there will be a greater use of canned fruits and the final result will be profitable for all concerned, including the farmer who will get a greater market for his product.

MADE WITHOUT EGGS AND VERY GOOD TO EAT

Pastry and All Sorts of Goodies For Which There Are Recipes.

"With eggs at 50 cents a dozen and my family of four clamoring for cakes, cookies, desserts and breakfast breads, egg economy was simply forced upon me," said a thrifty housekeeper "I'd always heard of eggless recipes and laughed at them, but with ruin staring me in the face I decided to make a thorough search through reliable cook books and domestic magazines until I had collected a good assortment of these eggless recipes.

"I gave up the best part of three days to looking through the cook books at one of our large public libraries and I was simply amazed at the results of my search. While some of the best authorities had not a single recipe for cake made with less than three eggs, others of equally high standing usually gave a one egg cake and occasionally an eggless cake.

"All authorities gave directions for making icings and fillings without the use of a single egg, while up to that time I'd always used at least the white of one egg for any kind of frosting. All the books gave a recipe for molasses cake or gingerbread without eggs and one or two included an eggless recipe for cookies or doughnuts.

"When it came to breakfast breads I had quite a hunt, but after a close examination of every recipe of this kind in the best books I copied half a dozen in my notebook. Most of these I've tried since and they've proved to be all that was claimed for them, eggless, but nevertheless light and nice. Some of these were so simple as to seem really ridiculous until I'd tried them. Waffles without eggs were unknown except in one book, and but one recipe could I find for an eggless griddlecake!

"Desserts without eggs seemed to offer the most promising field for my research, and I found I could not only treat my family to eggless pumpkin and lemon pies, which was a surprise to me, but I could give them a variety of puddings of the kind that usually called for two or three eggs at the very least."—New York Sun.

Spend a most delightful half hour in our store, examining this wonderful Sewing Machine.

The Free is as different from every other sewing machine as your wash machine is different from your wash board, and simply because it is "superior."

MR WILLIAM C. FREE, president of the Free Sewing Machine Co., spent the best years of his life laboring to produce in The FREE Sewing Machine, a machine which would possess all the good points of every other machine, which would eliminate all the bad points of every other machine and which would possess some 15 special improvements. He succeeded!

Here are a few of the Improvements

Which will arouse your enthusiasm:

The "Rotoscillo" Movement, Mr. Free's Invention.
The Eight Sets of Ball-Bearings.
The Beautiful French Leg Design, which does not show dust.
The Automatic Shuttle Ejector.
The Automatic Locking Drawers.
The Rotary Spool Pin, which never breaks a thread.
The Automatic Tension Release, which never breaks a needle.
The Needle which can't be put in wrong.
The Improved Head Latch.

THE FREE Sewing Machine is Insured

For Five Years, against Breakage, Wear, Fire, Tornado, Lightning and Water.

This means that if from any such cause any part, (a needle, belt attachment, etc.,) or all the machine is destroyed it will be replaced free to you.

The Free Sewing Machine Company is the only company which has enough faith in their machine to dare "insure" it.

Attachments, which go with the Free are the best and do beautiful work.

COME IN AND GET ACQUAINTED

GARRETT COUNTY CEREALS SWEEP THE STATE

At the Horticultural Society Meeting in Baltimore Yesterday.

Late yesterday afternoon THE REPUBLICAN was in receipt of a telegram from State Senator W. McCulloh Brown, president of the Maryland Horticultural Society, stating that Garrett county, as usual, was away ahead of other portions of the State in winning prizes at the Society meeting now in session in Baltimore.

Mr. Brown's telegram, while not going into details, was to the effect that Garrett county won the sweepstakes prize for wheat, first prizes for oats, buckwheat and barley and second and third prizes for corn.

Competing, as Garrett county did, against the whole state on wheat, it is indeed a source of gratification for every farmer to learn that this county has won everything for its exhibit of this staple grain, and also to know that the first prizes have been awarded Garrett county growers for oats, buckwheat and barley.

For your Christmas baking try Pillsbury Best flour. For this week only 85 cents a sack. Baumgartner's.

Mr. Philip T. Peddicord, a student at Parkersburg, W. Va., where he is taking a business course, spent Thanksgiving in Oakland with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Peddicord.

Dr. Henry W. McComas returned to Oakland Saturday night from Baltimore where he went to receive treatment for an ailment both serious and painful. He is very much better and has resumed his practice.

Miss Ellen Connell, of the Baltimore Store, went to Baltimore last Friday morning to which city she accompanied her sister, Mrs. Dennis Glover, of Hutton, who has become a patient in one of the hospitals there.

The revival services which are in progress in the Baptist church in Loch Lynn are gaining in interest daily and will be continued during this week and probably the next. The pastor is being assisted by Mrs. John E. Garrett, of Baltimore, and Rev. I. G. McEndoe, of Mt. Lake Park.

For your Christmas baking try Pillsbury Best flour. For this week only 85 cents a sack. Baumgartner's.

Mr. J. M. Crane and "Buckwheat" Jackson, both of Kingwood, the latter editor of the Preston News, were in Oakland last Friday where they attended the K. of P. District meeting. Others present from Preston county were W. W. Shoch, R. S. Hollis and several others belonging to the Rowlesburg lodge.

At the National Horticultural Society meeting held in Council Bluffs, Iowa, last week, fruits and vegetables of Maryland were exhibited and won many prizes. A gold medal was awarded for cauliflower grown by Messrs. H. Weber & Sons, the Oakland florists and gardeners, being the only prize of this character awarded at the show.

Mr. Robert C. McCandlish, treasurer of the Inter State Trust Company, spent Wednesday afternoon at Hancock with his nephew, Mr. Robert J. McCandlish, cashier of the First National Bank. Mr. McCandlish went to Berkeley Springs in the evening and spent Thanksgiving with Mrs. McCandlish, who is sojourning there.—Cumberland News.

Mr. Lincoln Callis, of Mountain Lake Park, has circulated a petition addressed to the Board of County Commissioners asking for the appointment of constable for the 7th and 14th districts. The petition has been very generously signed by many leading Republicans and will be presented to the Commissioners when that body meets next Tuesday.

Dr. B. Frank Selby returned from Baltimore yesterday morning whence he accompanied Mrs. Selby last Wednesday morning where the latter underwent a surgical operation in the Maryland University Hospital Friday of last week. Her condition when Dr. Selby left her bedside Tuesday evening was most encouraging and her speedy restoration to health is looked forward to with pleasure by her family and friends.

In a sensational attempt to enter the home of T. H. Davis, near Washington, D. C., a young man giving his name as David Fulford, supposedly a burglar, became lodged in the chimney and "all the king's horses and all the king's men" could not pull him out again. The position of the intruder was so painful that he was compelled to yell for assistance, the family being awakened by his cries. A vain attempt was made to pull him out of the chimney feet foremost. A similar unsuccessful attempt was made to haul him up by means of a rope let down from the roof. Finally masons and carpenters were called in, a part of the roof taken off and the chimney and mantel taken away. Fulford remained in his improvised prison for four hours, during which time he suffered agony, before he was released and taken to more comfortable quarters in the county jail.

REAPPOINTED CHIEF JUSTICE

Hon. A. Hunter Boyd Succeeds Himself in Court of Appeals.

Judge A. Hunter Boyd, who was re-elected Chief Judge at the recent election of the Fourth Judicial Circuit of Maryland has been reappointed by Governor Crothers Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals.

Judge Boyd yesterday morning quietly qualified before Clerk of the Circuit Court John W. Young as Chief Judge of this Judicial Circuit. He left yesterday afternoon for Annapolis to qualify as Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals before the clerk of that court. He may also qualify before Governor Crothers as is sometimes done, so that the Governor can have a record of the fact.

Judge Boyd received two commissions, one as Chief Judge of the Fourth Judicial Circuit, and the other as Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals. The former was addressed to Clerk John W. Young and the latter to Judge Boyd personally.

So quietly did Judge Boyd take his oath before Mr. Young that no one knew anything about it until it was all over. Judge Boyd kept the fact that he would qualify yesterday morning quiet so that there would not be any demonstration of any kind. After he qualified many members of the bar and others called to extend congratulations. —Cumberland News.

A non-advertiser sometimes becomes a successful advertiser, but a successful advertiser never becomes a non-advertiser. Ever think of that, Mr. Merchant? Your business can be developed by advertising. If there isn't enough profit on your goods to make it an object to sell more of them, sell out and start in a new line. The world is full of places for bigger stores as soon as the man comes along who can run them. If you can't make a small business big, the chances are that you could not handle a big business, even if it were handed to you on a salver.

Messrs. G. S. Hamill, Henry Smouse and Jonas Yutzy left for Baltimore yesterday afternoon where today they will appear before the Good Roads Commission in an effort to have next year's apportionment of the good roads money for Garrett county expended on the road leading south from Oakland toward the Red House. Interest in this movement among the residents of that portion of Garrett county which will be affected by the building of this road has been kept alive by constant agitation on the part of the landowners and farmers of the section and they have met with much encouragement.

Mr. Joseph E. Harned left Oakland Monday night for Baltimore where he will exhibit this week at the Maryland State Horticultural Society meeting about two hundred specimens of the local flora which he gathered, pressed and mounted during the spring and summer. Some of the plants are rare to this community, while others are common, but when so neatly mounted with all the colors of both leaves and flowers so perfectly preserved as in the case of many of the specimens, appeals to the lovers of nature so strongly as to awaken a deeper interest in nature and her works. Mr. Harned's collection is a very valuable one and his friends here expect him to carry off high honors at the meeting of the society.

With the last month of the year well started towards its close, Garrett county and this whole mountain top is enjoying the most remarkable weather in the memory of the "oldest inhabitant." Thus far during the winter we have had two little flurries of snow, neither lasting over two or three hours and the ground was not entirely covered. For the past two or three weeks the days have been clear and warm and the nights with just enough frost in the air to invigorate and stimulate one. The thermometer has been registering from seventeen to twenty-five above zero at seven o'clock in the morning and reaching as high as sixty-five during the day. The month of November was the warmest November during a great many years.

Fire at Bloomington.

A slight fire took place at Bloomington last Wednesday morning when the residence of Mr. George Warnick, a merchant in that town, caught fire from an overheated stove in his dining room. When discovered the ceiling was on fire but the flames were extinguished before any great damage occurred.

Notice To Delinquent Taxpayers.

Notice is hereby given to all delinquent taxpayers that if taxes now due and in arrears are not paid before January 1, 1910, I will proceed by law to collect. I refer to Sec. 50 of 566 of Acts of General Assembly of Maryland, a copy of which is hereto annexed. Please pay promptly and save cost.

SECTION 50. The said Treasurer shall during the first week in December in each and every year, give notice to all the delinquent taxpayers of said county, by advertisement inserted in two newspapers published in said county, and by hand-bills posted in five of the most public places in each election district of said county, and at the court house door, warning them that the payment of all taxes then due and in arrears will be enforced by advertisement and sale unless the same be paid before the 1st day of January next following.

W. E. HOLLINGER,
Treasurer of Garrett County.

For Women Must Work

Men who write articles on housekeeping for women's magazines are fond of telling their feminine readers not to get "fuzzyminded." Then they usually make the sage suggestion that women should get out of the humdrum routine of housework as much as possible. The advice is simple, but the wonder is that any good housewife can keep her bearings in the average cross currents of her daily life.

Think for a moment what falls to the lot of the conscientious faithful wife. The care of the children's clothes alone—the planning, buying and making over, not to mention the mending—is practically enough to use up all her time. Then there is the house to be looked after. She needs to inform herself about modern sanitation and hygiene, about the special constitution of each member of her family—what foods bring results, what tendencies and weaknesses must be guarded against. She must share in the children's school life, their special studies such as music and dancing, their sports and athletic exercises. Then there are her own personal needs, her reading, her effort to keep herself informed to be of assistance to her husband in his business, her club and parish work, the ever-present domestic problem, and most important of all, providing and preparing the meals.

It is in the intelligent preparation of the daily meals that an opportunity is presented of saving in time and labor. The secret is to do away with coal and wood, and use natural gas—where that is available. It is more sanitary, more cleanly, consumes less time and is far cheaper.

The last-named quality is one which appeals to a well known woman of Frostburg, Maryland, who, in a signed letter, shows the direct money saving effected by her in her home and millinery store through the use of natural gas. She says:

"Before we installed natural gas we paid $36 for electric light and artificial gas, and $40 for coal, a total annual outlay of $76.

"During the year 1908, I paid for natural gas $33.25, A NET SAVING OF $42.75. We have thirteen lights and four fires. IN ADDITION TO THE MONEY SAVING WE HAVE THE CONVENIENCE AND SAVING IN CLEANING AND LABOR."

CHAPTER XI.

A BOX OF CIGARS.

ON the way up to Rome Hillard and his pupil had a second class compartment all to themselves. The train was a fast one, for the day of slow travel has passed in Italy, and the cry of speed is heard over the land.

There was a change of cars at Rome and a wait of two hours.

After luncheon Merrihew secretly bought two boxes of cigars to carry along. They were good cigars and cost him $15. He covered them with some newspapers and at last station succeeded by some legerdemain in slipping them into one of his cases. Hillard would have lectured him on his extravagance, and this was a good way to avoid it. But some hours later he was going to be very sorry that he had not made a confidant of his guide.

As they were boarding the train they noticed two gentlemen getting into the forward compartment of the carriage.

"Humph! Our friend with the scar," said Hillard. "We do not seem able to shake him."

"I'd like to shake him. He goes against the grain somehow." Merrihew swung into the compartment. "I wonder why the Sandfords dropped him?"

"For some good reason. They are a liberal pair, and if our friend forward offended them it must have been something outside the pale of forgiveness. But I should like to know where old Giovanni is. I miss him."

"Poor devil!" said Merrihew, with careless sympathy.

The train started.

"Monte Carlo! Gold, gold, little round pieces of gold!" Merrihew rubbed his hands like a miner.

"Hard to get and heavy to hold," muttered Hillard. "I suppose that you have a system already worked out."

"Of course. I shall win if I stick to it."

"Or if the money lasts. Bury your system, my boy. It will do you no good. Trust to luck only. Monte Carlo, the graveyard of systems."

"But maybe my system is the one. I can't tell till I have tried it."

Soon the train began to lift into the mountains, the beautiful Apennines. By the time they arrived in Genoa, late at night, both compared favorably with the coolers in the harbor of Naples.

Early the next morning the adventurers set out for Monte Carlo—more tunnels; a compartment filled with women and children. But the beauty of the Riviera was compensation.

Ventimiglia, or Vintimille, has a sinister sound in the ears of the traveler if perchance he be a man fond of his tobacco. The train drew in. A dozen steps more and one was virtually in France. But there is generally a slight hitch before one takes the aforesaid steps—the French customs. A porter popped his head into the window.

"Eight minutes for examination of luggage!" he cried.

"Come, Dan," cried Hillard; "lively if we want good seats when we come out. We change trains."

After a short skirmish they located their belongings. They would have to be patient.

Among the inspectors at Ventimiglia is a small, wizened Frenchman with a face as cold and impassive as the sand blown sphinx. He possesses, among other accomplishments, a nose peculiar less for its shape than for its smell. He can "smell out" tobacco as a witch doctor in Zululand smells out a "devil." Fate directed this individual toward the Americans. Hillard knew him of old, and he never forgets a face, this wizened little man.

"Monsieur has nothing to declare?" he asked.

Hillard made a negative sign and opened his cases. With scarce a glance at their contents and waving aside the coupons the inspector applied the chalk and turned to Merrihew.

"Monsieur has nothing to declare?" he repeated.

Merrihew shook his head airily. "Niente, niente!" he said in his best Italian. He did not understand what the inspector said. He merely had suspicions.

"Look!" suddenly exclaimed Hillard.

Passing out of the door which led to liberty and to France, their luggage guaranteed by cabalistic chalk marks, were two women. One of them was veiled; the other was not.

"Kitty Killigrew, as I live!" shouted Merrihew, making a dash for the door.

But the inspector blocked the way, beckoned to a gendarme, who came over, and calmly pointed to Merrihew's unopened cases.

"Open!" said the inspector.

"But"— Merrihew struggled to pass.

"For heaven's sake," cried Hillard, "be patient and open the cases at once."

Merrihew handled his keys clumsily. It is ever thus when one is in a hurry. Finally he threw back the lids, feeling that in another moment he must have spouted Italian or French out of pure magic simply to tell this fool inspector what he thought of him.

"Oho, monsieur in a hurry!" mocked the inspector. "Nothing, nothing!" He took out two boxes of cigars.

"Why the devil didn't you tell me you had them?" Hillard demanded wrathfully. To find the women by this stroke of luck and then to lose them again for two boxes of cigars! It was maddening.

The inspector went through Merrihew's possessions with premeditated leisure. Everything had to come out. He even opened the shaving sets, the collar box, the pin cases and the tie bag.

"Will you hasten?" asked Hillard. "We do not wish to miss this train."

"Others follow," said the inspector laconically.

Hillard produced a five franc piece. The inspector laughed without noise and shook his head. This one inspector is impervious to money or smooth speeches. He is the law personified, inexorable.

Hillard strained his eyes, but saw neither Kitty nor the veiled lady again. Doubtless they were already on the train. Had Merrihew been an old traveler he would have left him to get to Monte Carlo the best way he could, but Merrihew was as helpless as a child, and he hadn't the heart to desert him, though he deserved to be deserted.

Ding-ding! went the bell. Whee-whee! went the whistle. The train for Monte Carlo was crawling out, and they were being left behind. Hillard swore and Merrihew went white with impotent anger. If only he could hit something! The inspector smiled and went on with his deadly work. When he was certain that they could not possibly catch the train he handed the cigars to their owner and pointed to a sign the other side of the barricade.

"What shall I do now, Jack?" Merrihew asked.

"I refuse to help you. Find out yourself."

So Merrihew, hopeless and subdued, went into the room designated, saw the cigars taken out and weighed, took the bill and presented it with a hundred lire note at the little window in the off room.

Procuring his change, he found Hillard sitting disconsolately on the barricade.

"I hope you are perfectly satisfied," said Hillard, with an amiability which wouldn't have passed muster anywhere.

"Oh, I'm satisfied," answered Merrihew. He stuffed his pockets with cigars, slammed the boxes into the case and locked them up.

"I warned you about tobacco."

"I know it."

"You should have told me."

"I know that, too, but I didn't want you to lecture me."

"A lecture would have been better than waiting here in this barn for three hours."

"Three hours?" despondently.

"Oh, there's a restaurant, but it's not much better than this. It's bad—flies and greasy plates."

And by the time they had found the Ristorante Tornaghi—miserable and uninviting—they were laughing.

"Only I wish I knew where they were going," was Hillard's regret.

"They?" said Merrihew.

"Yes. The woman with Kitty is the woman I'm going to find if I stay in Europe ten years. And when I find her I'm going to marry her."

"Sounds good," said Merrihew, pouring himself a third glass of very indifferent Beaune.

"And they may be going anywhere but to Monte Carlo—Paris, Cherbourg, Calais. In my opinion, Monte Carlo is the last place two such women are likely to go to alone."

So they sat in the dingy restaurant, smoking and laughing and grumbling till the next train was announced. At 4 that afternoon they arrived without further mishap at the most interesting station of its size in Europe, Monte Carlo.

And then into the omnibus adjoining came the man with the scar.

* * * * * * *

The Riviera, from San Remo on the Italian side to Cannes on the French, possesses a singular beauty.

Villefranche stands above Nice, between that white city and Monte Carlo. It is quiet and lovely. For this reason the great army of tourists pass it by. There is no casino, no band, no streets full of tantalizing shops. On the very western limit of Villefranche, on the winding white road which rises out of Nice, is a modest little villa, so modest that a ballerina would scorn it and a duchess ignore it.

In the balcony La Signorina reposed in a steamer chair, gazing seaward. The awning cast a warm glow as of gold upon her face and hair, a transparent shadow. She was at this moment the most precious thing upon which the eye may look, a wholly beautiful woman. Kitty Killigrew, standing in the casement window, stared at her silently, not without some envy, not without some awe. What was going on behind those dreamy eyes?

"Hilda?" said Kitty.

"Yes, Kitty."

"Who and what are you?" Kitty asked bravely.

La Signorina's eyes wandered till they met Kitty's.

"And what good would it do you to know? Would it bring money from home any sooner? You already know that I am unhappy. The adventuress always is."

"Adventuress?" Kitty laughed scornfully. "The proprietor pretends he does not know you, but I am certain he does. He forgets himself sometimes in the way he bows to you."

Kitty paused, then asked:

"Won't you tell me what the secret is?"

"How beautiful that white sail looks!"

"You know all about me," went on Kitty stubbornly.

"Because you told me. I never asked you a single question."

"Is it—love?"

"Love!" La Signorina shrugged. "Poor Kitty, you are trying in vain to make a romance out of my life. You should not read so much."

"It is not curiosity," declared Kitty. "It is because I love you and because it makes me sad when I hear you laugh, when I see you beat your hands against the chair as you did just now."

La Signorina turned again in a passion which was as fierce as it was sudden.

"There is a man,' she hissed, her eyes dilating. "But I loathe him, I hate him, I abhor him! And were it not wicked to kill he would have been dead long ago. Enough! If you ever ask another question I will leave you."

"I am sorry," said Kitty. "He was false to you and broke your heart."

"No, Kitty, only my pride."

"It is a strange world," mused Kitty. "Let us turn to our affairs. I received a letter today."

"From home?" eagerly.

"I have no home, Kitty. The letter is from a friend in Naples. Mr. Hillard and Mr. Merrihew, friends of yours, are in Italy."

Kitty could scarcely believe her ears. "Where are they? Where are they stopping?"

"That I do not know. But listen. They have started out to find us. When I tell you that Mr. Hillard is the gentleman I dined with that night before we sailed you will understand my reasons for wishing to avoid him. From this time on we must never appear on the streets without our veils. If by chance we meet them we must give no sign. It will be only for a little while. Your letter will come soon, and you may renew your acquaintance with these two gentlemen when you return home. It may be hard for you, but if you wish to stay with me my will must be a law unto you."

"Not to speak to them if we meet them?" urged Kitty in dismay. "But that is cruel of you. They are both gentlemen."

"I do not know Mr. Merrihew, but I can say that Mr. Hillard is a gentleman. As for being cruel, I am not; only selfish."

"Are you not a queen who has run away from a kingdom?" asked Kitty bitterly. "One reads about them every day in the papers."

"My dear, you are free to choose one of two paths. I shall not urge you one way or the other, but you must choose now."

Several minutes passed. Kitty looked out to sea, and La Signorina closed her eyes. In her heart Kitty knew that she could no more leave this woman than she could fly. She was held by curiosity, by sentiment, by the romantic mystery.

"I have chosen," she said at length. "I shall stay with you."

"Thanks, Kitty. And now the affairs of the company. We have played three days and have lost steadily. Tonight will be the last chance. Win or lose, tomorrow we shall return to Venice. I do not like the idea of going to Monte Carlo at night. It is not exactly safe. But since beggars mustn't be choosers we must go. Again I warn you to speak to no one while I am playing and under no circumstances raise your veil. They have begun to notice us, but it will end tonight. I was mad to think that I could win. And, by the way, Kitty, we shall not go back to the Campo Formosa."

Kitty accepted this news brightly, if there was one place she hated it was the Campo.

"Now run and dress," advised La Signorina. "Let me dream a little more while the sun sets."

She knew men tolerably well. After thirty they cease to follow visions—they seek tangible things. No, they must never meet again. It would not be wise. Her heart, galled by disillusion, might not withstand much storming. And she had no wish to add this irretrievable folly to the original blunder. She was afraid.

No; they must go their separate ways till the end. With a sigh she rose and went into the room. Kitty was busy with the finishing touches of her toilet. The older woman kissed her fondly.

"And do you realize that you are the most beautiful woman in the world?" asked Kitty.

"Little flatterer!"

"And if I were a man"—Kitty paused—"I'd fall in love with you and marry you."

La Signorina looked into the mirror.

La Signorina turned again in a passion fierce and sudden.

CHAPTER XII.

GRAY VEILS.

THE fascination of Monte Carlo is not to be described—it must be seen. Vice shall be attractive, says the mother of Satan. At Monte Carlo it is more than attractive; it is compelling. A subtle hypnotism prevails, the lure of gold. Fool and rogue, saint and sinner, here they meet and mingle and change. To those who give Monte Carlo but a trifling glance, toss a coin or two on the tables and leave by the morrow's train it has no real significance. It is simply one of the sights of Europe.

To this latter class belonged the two young men. They had no fortunes to retrieve, no dishonesty to hide, no restitutions to make, no dancers to clothe and house. It was but a mild flirtation.

They had searched Nice and Monaco and Mentone, but the women they sought were not to be found. They decided, therefore, that the women had gone on to Paris.

"My system needs a tonic," said Merrihew.

"We'll hold the funeral after tonight's play. Of all the damfool games it's roulette."

"And I can prove it." Merrihew replied. "I have just $50 left." He took out the gold and toyed with it. "Can't you hear it?" he asked.

"Hear what?"

"The swan song of these tender napoleons."

Merrihew had played the numbers, the dozens, the columns, the colors, odd and even. Sometimes he would win a little, but a moment later the relentless rake would drag it back to the bank.

"Nature has done this very prettily. Quite clever with her colors, don't you know," he drawled, plucking the down on his upper lip, for he was trying to raise a mustache, convinced that two waxed points of hair at each corner of his mouth would impress the hotel waiters and other facchini—hasteners.

"Don't be a jackass!" Hillard was out of sorts.

"You agreed with me that I was one. Why not let me make a finished product?" good humoredly.

"Well," Merrihew finally said, "you might as well let me have my letter of credit now."

"You will not set eyes upon it till we return to Genoa. That's final. I know you, my boy, and I know Monte Carlo. Even with your fifty, a watch and a ring I'm afraid to trust you out of sight."

"I can see that you will never forgive nor forget those bad cigars. Come on. We'll take a look at our Italian friend. He's a bad loser. I have seen him lose his temper too. It's my opinion that he's a desperate man."

A picture, beautiful, but false.

"They usually are when they come to Monte Carlo."

So they walked round to the entrance to the gaming halls, where the lights, the gowns, the jewels, the sparkling eyes, the natural beauty and the beauty of enamel, the vague perfumes, the low murmur of voices, the soft rustle of silks, the music of ringing gold, all combine to produce a picture as beautiful as a mirage and as false. They joined the never ending procession which passes in and out of the swinging doors day after day, year after year.

"There's the chap with the scar. He is a handsome beggar," Hillard admired. "I wonder what sort of blackleg he is. He's no ordinary one, I'm certain. I begin to recognize the face of the man with him. He's a distinguished diplomat."

The Italian played like an old hand, a number once in awhile, but making it a point to stake on the colors. Red began to repeat itself. He doubled and doubled. On the sixth consecutive turn he played the maximum of 12,000 francs and won. The diplomat touched him on the arm significantly, but the player shook his head. Ten minutes later he had won 40,000 francs. Again he refused to leave his chair.

"If he stays now," said Hillard, "he will lose it all. His friend is right."

"Forty thousand francs, $8,000!" murmured Merrihew sadly. Why couldn't he have luck like this?

Hillard was a true prophet. There came a change in the smile of fortune. The game jumped from color to color, seldom repeating, with zero making itself conspicuous. The man with the scar played on, but he began to lose—small sums at first, then larger till finally he was down to his original stake. The scar grew livid. He waited five turns of the wheel, then placed his stake on the second dozen. He lost. He rose from his chair scowling. His eye chanced to meet Hillard's, and their glances held for a moment.

"Fool!" said Merrihew in an undertone as the man strolled leisurely past them. "Eight thousand and not content to quit!"

Meanwhile the trolleys from Nice and Mentone had poured into Monte Carlo their usual burdens of pleasure seekers. On one of the cars from Nice there had arrived two women, both veiled and simply gowned. They seldom addressed each other and never spoke to any one else. Doubtless they were some sober married women out for a lark. Upon leaving the car they did not at once go into the casino, but directed their steps toward the terraces, for the band was playing. They sat in the shadow of the statue of Massenet, and near by the rasp of a cricket broke in upon the music. When the music stopped they linked arms and sauntered up and down the wide sweep of stone, mutually interested in the crowds. Once as they passed behind a bench the better to view the palaces of the prince they heard the voices of two men.

As they went on the women heard something about "those bad cigars." The men were Americans evidently. It was only an inconsequent incident, and a moment later both had forgotten it.

"At which table shall I make the stake, Kitty?"

"The center. There is always a crush there, and we shall not be noticed."

"I do not agree with you there. However, it shall be the center table. What would you do, Kitty, if I should break the bank?"

"Die of excitement!" truthfully.

"You will live through this event then." With a light, careless laugh La Signorina pressed her way to the table.

She lost steadily from the start. She gave no sign, however, that her forces were in full retreat from the enemy. She played on, and the hand which placed the bets was steady. And when the gold was all gone she opened her empty hands expressively and shrugged. She was beaten.

Behind the chair of the banker, opposite, stood the Italian. The scowl still marred his forehead. When the woman in the veil spread out her hands he started. There was something familiar in that gesture. And then the woman saw him. For the briefest moment her form stiffened.

"Kitty," La Signorina whispered, "let us go out to the atrium. I am tired."

They left the hall leisurely and found a vacant settle in the atrium.

"How cold your hands are!" exclaimed Kitty.

"Kitty, I am a fool, a fool! I have unwittingly put my head in the lion's mouth. If I had not reached this seat in time I should have fallen. I would willingly give all my rings if at this moment I could run across the hall and out into the open!"

"Merciful heaven! Why, what is the matter? What has happened?"

"I cannot explain to you."

"Was it some one you saw in there?"

"Silence, and sit perfectly still!"

A man in evening dress came out into the atrium, lighting a cigarette. At the sight of him both women were startled.

"It is Mr. Hillard, Mr. Merrihew's friend!" Kitty would have risen, but the other's strong hand restrained her.

"Kitty, remember your promise."

"Is he the man?"

"No, no! Only I have said that we must not meet him. It might do him incalculable harm. Harm!" La Signorina repeated. "Do you understand?"

Hillard blew outward a few pale rings of smoke and circled the atrium with an indolent glance which stopped as it rested upon the two veiled women. A certain curiosity impelled him toward them, and he sank on the settle with perhaps half a dozen spans of the hand between. He observed the women frankly. Not a single whisp of hair escaped the veils, not a line of any feature could be traced, and yet the tint of flesh shone dimly behind the silken bands of crape. He nodded.

The veils did not move.

"Fortune favors the brave, but rarely the foolish."

There was no response, but the small shoe of the woman nearest began to beat the floor ever so lightly. Hillard was chagrined.

Thereupon he bowed and sought another seat. The women hurried to the lobby. He would have given them no further thought had not the Italian

TO BE CONTINUED.

HINTS FOR FARMERS

Hints on Silo Erection.

Be sure that you have plenty of staves, then follow the manufacturer's directions carefully. The drying out of the staves subsequent to a season's use, followed by tightening of the hoops, may draw the walls inside of the foundation unless the full number of staves are used when first erected. It is better to have the silo larger than the foundation the first year than to have it too small later on.

When the silo has been erected it should be thoroughly stayed by four guy wires from the top hoop to a stout stake set at least thirty feet from the bottom of the silo. This will prevent racking during windy weather when the silo is empty and will greatly increase its period of service. During dry weather use especial care to keep the hoops screwed up tight and do not loosen them when filling the silo. This is undesirable and unnecessary.

Paint the staves on all sides before erecting the silo rather than to paint the exterior later on, since paint put on the outside afterward holds water in the cracks and causes the staves to decay more rapidly.—Professor Ocock, Wisconsin Agricultural College.

Around the Farm.

Weed out the scrubs and breed for type, but be sure you have a definite idea as to what type you want and why.

If the cow's teats have a tendency to get hard, keep a bottle of vaseline handy and use it occasionally to soften the parts.

The old brood sow should be kept as long as she remains vigorous. She knows better how to raise her suckling pigs than the younger mother.

If the farm is 160 acres in area it will be found more profitable to sell sheep for mutton rather than to sell them to other people to get ready for the market.

Get rid of your deadhead cattle before the winter months set in. It does not pay to carry them over. Only the producers should be permitted to stay on the farm.—Farm and Ranch.

Feeding Value of Alfalfa Hay.

It is always a good thing to have something to measure by, says Hoard's Dairyman. The department of agriculture at Washington in bulletin No. 339 gives the following judgment as to the money value of alfalfa and other kinds of hay in comparison:

Alfalfa hay, $20.16; clover hay, $14.12; timothy hay, $9.80; wheat bran, $22.80; shelled corn, $20.16.

Now take those figures as a guide line and note how widely at variance from them are the judgments of farmer feeders and general purchasers, yet we believe in the main they are correct. Most people will pay more for timothy hay than they would for alfalfa and clover.

When the farmer gets this question of feeding value down squarely in his mind he will reverse many of his judgments. Alfalfa is a wonderful plant.

Alfalfa Enriches the Soil.

Alfalfa, like corn and cotton, demands certain conditions of the soil and certain constituents in that soil. Every crop demands certain foods. All crops except alfalfa and the other legumes obtain practically all their food, including nitrogen, from the soil. The latter crops use nitrogen, but get it from the air. Alfalfa takes nitrogen from the soil only during the first few months of its growth, and thereafter not only takes its own necessary supply from the air, but a large surplus which it stores in the soil, available for whatever crop may follow. Other crops take much nitrogen from the soil, but contribute nothing to its enrichment.—From Coburn's "The Book of Alfalfa."

Profit In the Dairy Herd.

An Ohio dairyman has kept an accurate record of the cost and production of his ten cow dairy for one year, says the Homestead. The total cost for food and labor was $388.40, or an average of $38.84 per cow. There were 58,333 pounds of milk produced, from which 2,624 pounds of butter were made, which sold for an average price of 28 cents per pound, or a total of $734.72. The calves sold as veal brought within a cent of $70, and the skimmilk, which was sold at 20 cents per hundredweight, brought $98.88. The total income was $903.59, or a gross income of $90.35 per cow. Deducting the cost of keeping the ten cows leaves a net profit of $51.51 per cow.

Dehorning Cattle.

As soon as the flies are out of the way in the fall and from then until they appear in the spring is the time to dehorn cattle. To prevent horns sprout the calf when about four days old. As soon as you can feel the horns slip hair off horn place the size of a quarter dollar, wet the spot with water, then wrap a piece of stick caustic potash in paper, one end exposed; rub this on the wet skin until it looks red and somewhat raw; cover the entire spot. Then treat the other horn in same way.—Country Gentleman.

Care of Farm Tools.

One of the poorest investments a man can make is to buy poor tools. Get the best and then give them the best of care. A man would hardly leave a sum of money along the fence row, out in the weather, yet when he leaves his tools unprotected in the field it amounts to the same thing.

WHO'S HEAD OF THE HOUSE? UNCLE SAM WILL ASK YOU.

Farmers Asked To Chain Dogs When Census Taking Begins.

"Are you the head of the family, or is the head out?"

This is one of the leading questions that will be put to whoever may come to the door when the census enumerator calls next April.

It is important that the Government keep track of every head of family, and the answer, though it may cause domestic wrangling afterward, will be recorded from the one of whom it is asked. That is where the women of the family will get the best of it, as it is likely the men will be at work when the enumerator calls.

"Are you married? Have you any children? Is your mother-in-law living with you?"

These are a few of the multiplicity of questions which, beginning April 16, 1910, will be asked every housewife in the United States and its territories by Uncle Sam's army of inquisitors known as census enumerators.

From house to house all over the country these inquisitors will go. If you happen to be a housewife and answer the summons of the doorbell, and four of your five children answer it, too, do not not scold the enumerator when he asks you if you are married. Uncle Sam has not counted noses all over the country for ten long years, and it may be, as some pessimists say, the race is lessening, and if so the Government wants to know in order to determine what kind of premiums to offer for Rooseveltian families.

There is one request in particular the Government makes of people living in small cities, towns and rural districts, and that is to have all dogs chained after April 14 for at least six months.

When the enumerator calls he will begin by asking these questions:

"What street, road or avenue is ...? What is the number?"

He will then ask. "What is your name? Are you the head of a family? What is the name of each person living here on April 15, 1910? The surname and initials of every person in the abode? How many children, their names, ages, places of birth?"

If you are not the head of the family you will be asked what relation you are to the head.

The enumerators will ask the sex, color and race of every person, the age at last birthday.

Then come the questions to the women. "Are you married or single or divorced or widowed?" If you have been divorced and remarried, you will be asked the number of years of the present married life.

"How many children are you the mother of? How many children were born and how many are living?"

These questions will be asked in the order named, so do not get impatient and fretful and think the enumerator is asking questions which seem personal and impertinent. The information is for the Government. The enumerator also will ask you your nationality. The Government is particularly anxious that this question be answered truthfully.

"What State or Territory, if born in the United State? What country, if foreign born? The place of birth of the person being interrogated; the place of birth of the father of this person and the place of birth of the mother" are among the questions.

The question of citizenship will be thoroughly gone into thus:

"Were you born in the United States? Were you an immigrant? What year did you come to the United States? Have you been naturalized or are you still an alien?"

The enumerator will have to ask whether all persons enumerated speak English, and if not what languages they speak.

The trade or profession, the kind of work done by each person, such as spinner, salesman, laborer, etc., will be asked. The general nature of industry, business or establishment in which each person works, such as cotton mill, dry goods store, farm, etc. Whether an employer or employee or working on own account will be another question. If an employee, you will be asked whether you were out of work on April 15, 1910, and the number of weeks you were out of work in 1909.

Questions will be asked with a view of classifying the illiterate, those having just a common education and those having a higher education.

Other questions will show whether Americans are extravagant as they have been alleged to be. It will be asked whether the home you live in is owned by you or rented, if owned by you, if it is free of mortgage.

The last question is are there any persons in the house suffering from blindness, whether in both eyes, and if deaf and dumb?

Every citizen is asked to cooperate with the enumerators in order that no mistake will occur.

Spraying Trees and Cost of Outfit.

As the time is near at hand for fall spraying to rid trees of scale insects, and as many inquiries in regard to the lime-sulphur wash, the kind of spraying apparatus to use and cost of the same, have been received at the Division of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, the following reply by the head of the Division, Prof. H. A. Surface, State Zoologist, will suffice for all, and will be of interest to every person owning fruit trees, whether few or many:

"You can either make your own lime-sulphur solution and destroy the scale by its use, making this material by boiling together the lime and sulphur, or you can buy it ready made in the concentrated form, ready to dilute with eight times its bulk of water, and spray on the trees and kill the scale. It is cheaper to make it, but where you have only a few trees, it is more troublesome. Either form will kill the scale if applied strong enough, and neither will hurt the trees if applied at any strength whatever. The home boiled sulphur-lime is made by boiling four pounds of sulphur (either flowers or flour) with five and one-half pounds of quick lime and water enough to boil them, and afterward add enough water to make the total bulk not more than twelve gallons. Strain this well. The straining is very important. Clogging of nozzles and sloppy work is generally due to lack of proper straining. The best way to strain is to use brass wire cloth thirty meshes to the inch, setting it at an angle across the funnel, or built as a cone with the point standing upright in the strainer funnel.

"Spray the lime-sulphur wash, either home-made or commercial, directly over the trees at any time after the leaves are off, giving them two good coats, one from each side. Take advantage of an opposite wind to spray the opposite side. Repeat this in the spring when the buds are swelling.

"You can buy of most seedmen inexpensive spraying apparatus. For such trees as you have at present a complete outfit, costing not more than five dollars, would serve the purpose. Nearly all manufacturers of spraying material make these smaller and cheaper sprayer, which are generally in the form of hand sprayers, bucket sprayers, compressed air tanks or knapsack sprayers. The highest price that they should cost should not be more than ten dollars and from some manufacturers, a cheap outfit can be bought for one-third this amount. Every person growing even a few trees and shrubs should have his own spraying apparatus of the size and power adapted to his needs.

"You can not expect to keep your trees free from scale by preventative means. The point is to spray them when they are infested, and thus keep the scale under control. There is really no need of spraying for scale at a time when it is not presene. The quantity of the lime-sulphur solution to be prepared, as given above, is for the owner of a few trees. In regular orchard work, it is preferable to never make less than a 50-gallon quantity at one time, then the proportions of materials used are 17 pounds of sulphur and 22 pounds of lime, boiled together as stated above. One hour of thorough boiling is necessary."

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements. These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

LUCY'S BRAVERY.

An Awakening of Love and a Race Through a Storm.

By FRANK H. WILLIAMS.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

Lucy Hamilton, with Arthur Shaw standing by her side, watched John Strong as he waved his hand and shot out into the lake in his swift motorboat. When Strong was well out in the lake he stood up in the boat and threw a kiss to Lucy.

The girl turned to Shaw with a little laugh. There was heightened color in her cheeks.

"He's always doing something foolish like that," she exclaimed.

Shaw scowled a little as he looked after the retreating boat. He turned to Lucy suddenly.

"I believe you're in love with Strong," he declared.

Lucy exclaimed indignantly at this.

"How many times have I told you," she cried, "that I'm not in love with any man? I think both you and Mr. Strong are fine, splendid young fellows, and I like you both immensely, but as for being in love—pshaw, that's another matter entirely!"

"I'm infernally jealous," Shaw replied, with relief in his tone, "and I know that I haven't any right to be. But I'm head over heels in love with you, Lucy, and I hate to think of any other man winning you."

They had turned and were walking toward the hotel, which stood a short distance back on the bluff overlooking the lake. Surely, Lucy thought, nothing could be franker than Shaw's avowal, and yet the avowal did not particularly thrill her. Instinctively she felt that she would have been more thrilled if Strong had talked to her in this manner.

From this point Lucy firmly guided Shaw's conversation into other channels. They reached the hotel veranda. Almost immediately Shaw was called by business into the hotel, and Lucy was left alone. Half abstractedly she watched the clouds forming in the west for a storm. Her thoughts were on the two men. She did not realize how long she had been sitting there until, with a start, she was brought to a sense of the situation by the sudden spasmodic falling of rain.

Lucy jumped to her feet. It became pitch dark with surprising suddenness. As she prepared to race for the hotel entrance the sound of some one talking in the hotel near the open window by which she was standing caught her attention.

"You're sure there's no one out there—hadn't we better put down the window?" came a voice—that of Shaw.

"No," said another man; "the storm has driven every one in, and it's stifling here as it is."

"All right then," said the other. "My man on the other side of the lake will see to it that no boats are in condition to cross the lake tonight, and telephonic communication is cut. Consequently Strong can't return—he can't vote his proxies at the directors' meeting tonight, and we have everything our own way. Gad, but I'll be glad to crush him!"

Lucy, shivering in the rain that dashed in upon her, caught the conversation before the resounding thunder peals made it impossible for her to hear everything above the storm. In a flash she understood that Shaw, the man whom she had thought she might love, was planning—had planned—to injure Strong. Evidently it was imperative for Strong to attend a directors' meeting in that hotel that night if he wished to save himself, and Shaw had seemingly made it impossible for him to be there.

In a moment Lucy's mind was made up as to her course of action. Heedless of her unprotected condition, she ran, guided by lightning flashes, down the wooden steps from the hotel to the landing pier. Here her own launch was moored. She cranked it quickly. The sound of some one tearing down the steps toward her made her work the faster. As she cast off she saw by a flash that the person was Shaw. He cried to her frantically:

"Don't go! Don't go!"

But Lucy merely smiled. In a few minutes she was out in the wave tossed lake. She did not fear pursuit. No other launch on that side of the lake was as big as hers, and none, she knew, could possibly overtake her. She revolved the situation in her mind. Evidently Shaw had glanced out of the hotel window at a time when the landscape was illumined by lightning, had seen her making for the boathouse, had surmised that she had overheard the conversation and then attempted to stop her.

Lucy turned on the electric searchlight. Powerful as it was, it pierced only a short distance through the gloom. By a little pocket compass she guided her course for the opposite landing. The waves buffeted her frightfully, the wind and rain tore her and lashed her cheeks, but still she kept on.

When about halfway across she began to ring the submarine signaling bell attached to the boat. Almost instantly she received an answer from the landing for which she was making. A few signals showed her that it was Strong and that he understood the situation. Then monotonously he began repeating three words—"I love you; I love you."

Even in the frightful gloom in the heart of the storm Lucy felt the blood course into her cheeks. Never before had Strong said these words to her.

"Stop! You must not say it," Lucy signaled.

"I will say it," came the answer. "I love you; I love you."

In a few moments Strong's signal changed.

"I can see your searchlight," he signaled. "Go slow."

Soon Lucy was able to make out the lights on the landing. A few moments more and she was almost up to the boathouse. She saw Strong standing on the extreme edge of the pier. Three husky men were standing idly near him in attitudes which presaged action. Frantically Strong waved at her. Lucy understood him and, instead of making for the landing, threw the steering wheel swiftly over. It was evident that should she make a landing the three men would not allow the boat to leave.

When the boat presented a broadside to the landing Strong suddenly leaped into the water. The men ran for him, but they were too late. He swam sturdily to Lucy and in a moment climbed over the side. Lucy set the nose of the boat for the home shore, and the little vessel forged into the darkness.

Strong held out his arms to Lucy.

"Dear heart!" he said.

"Don't; there's no time!" cried Lucy. "We must work if we are to get back. The wind's changed. It's dead against us. The waves are higher."

Even as she spoke the gasoline engine missed fire several times. Strong devoted his attention to it, while Lucy was kept busy at the wheel. For an eternity, it seemed to Lucy, they battled with the elements. Then dimly she saw the lights of the hotel.

"Put out your searchlight," said Strong, "and make a landing down there on the beach about 300 yards from the hotel. They'll be waiting for us at the dock."

Lucy obeyed him. At length they came near enough to the shore to drop anchor. Strong climbed over the side of the boat and, carrying Lucy, waded to the shore. In silence they toiled up the hill to the hotel and made their entrance unobserved through a side door.

Lucy ran to her room to secure warm, dry clothes, while Strong, wet and dishevled as he was, went straight to the room where the directors were meeting.

An hour or so later, after the storm had subsided and the meeting was over, Strong and Lucy met on the veranda. No one was near them.

"You brought me back just in time," said Strong. Then he stretched out his arms. "I love you," he said.

"And I love you," replied Lucy as she resigned herself to his embrace.

Toole's Tears.

Sallies of almost childlike high spirits endeared the late J. L. Toole, the lifelong friend of Henry Irving, to all who knew him. On one occasion when the author of "Some Eminent Victorians" was spending a day in the innocent adventures which Toole was a genius in originating they went to the Tower, where they found themselves among a party of eager sightseers in the chamber where the crown jewels are disposed.

It was a woman who was explaining to the eager throng the history of the articles displayed. At the end of a long catalogue she said:

"And this is Anne Boleyn's crown."

Toole, apparently suddenly overcome, burst into a flood of tears and leaned against the wall in seemingly uncontrollable grief.

"Oh, sir," inquired the poor woman, in distress, "what is the matter?"

"Nothing! Nothing!" replied Toole in broken accents. "Don't mind me, but the fact is I have known the family so long."

No Time to Read Them.

Two men sat beside each other in a railway train. One of them, putting down a magazine, remarked:

"That series of articles, 'Books That Have Helped Me,' has engaged the attention of some of the leading literary men of the country."

"So I've heard," the other man replied.

"Have you read any of the articles?"

"No."

"But you have often thought of books that have helped you, I dare say?"

"No. I don't read books and am therefore not helped by them. I read the titles of books, but never turn the leaves."

"You must be a busy man?"

"I am," said the man who only glanced at the titles. "I am a book reviewer."—London Mail.

A FARMERS' EXCHANGE

Success In Co-operation Illustrated.

Some Interesting Statistics on Handling Crops on Co-operative Plan by a Potato Growers' Association In New Jersey.

The subject of co-operative buying and selling among farmers is increasing in interest with them every year as the advantages to be derived therefrom are being recognized. One obstacle to successful co-operation has always been the farmers themselves. Selfishness has spoiled many a combination for financial purposes. The unwillingness to trust the sale of farm products to an agent or manager has been the bar to progress. But things are changing, and we predict that the next few years will see more co-operative enterprises organized and successfully conducted than in a long time past. In this work the grange must take an active and prominent part.

There is in Freehold, N. J., a most successful potato growers' association, the Monmouth County Farmers' Exchange. It was formed about two years ago. At the annual meeting in December the report on the business done for the year showed a total of 2,011 separate shipments, containing nearly 204,000 barrels of potatoes and packages of other soil products, and the whole was valued at more than $454,000. The shipments reached 121 different customers in fifty cities and towns and eleven states. Besides this outgoing business, the society did an incoming business of nearly $45,000 in seed potatoes purchased in Maine and New York.

This report was so satisfactory that many growers who had been afraid to run risks in their own interest became members. The membership jumped from about 300 to a total now of over 500, the sales of capital stock were large, and now the exchange has about $30,000 with which to co-operate.

Besides all this, it has erected suitable buildings at the various shipping points on the two railroads running through the twenty-five or thirty miles that constitute the potato district. It has also more recently built a brick fertilizer mixing house, 150 by 32 feet, at Marlboro, on the Central Railway of New Jersey and is planning on another, 200 by 50 feet, to be on the Pennsylvania at Freehold. The capacity of these two houses will be between 4,000 and 5,000 tons of fertilizer annually. Business will be begun in these houses for the season of 1910 and an enormous saving in cost of fertilizers effected. The object is to sell fertilizer to members as near actual cost as possible.

Commenting on the requirements for successful co-operation, the American Agriculturist remarks that the foremost requisite is loyalty to the organization. Unless the grower is willing to be governed by the fundamental law of what benefits one benefits all he has no business to join a farmers' exchange, because a penny in his hand will appear more substantial to him than a dollar on the horizon will. If there are enough of such men organization will prove to be a farce, and the middleman will continue to laugh in his sleeve. Coequal in importance, there must be competent management. Again, the rules of grading must be strictly followed by each producer, so that the exchange may win a good reputation for honest packing and assets with value cannot be overestimated. Still further, the members must place implicit trust in the manager, who must not be tangled up with red tape. And this man must not be underpaid. His position is an exceedingly exacting and responsible one, especially during the busy season, at which time, if ever, he must have free rein.

Farmers' Exchanges.

We believe the time is near at hand when the state grange will find it necessary because helpful to the farmers of the state to establish a farmers' exchange, with a central office in charge of some competent person. He should be able to put into communication with one another all farmers throughout the state who wish to purchase or sell any farm products, stock, etc., to give him information about procuring farm help in season and, in short, be a bureau of information on all farm matters as relate to the exchange of farm commodities or information pertaining to the sale or purchase of the same.—Country Gentleman.

Patron and Peach Grower.

Mr. J. H. Hale of Glastonbury, Conn., is both enthusiastic Patron and peach grower. He will have 60,000 baskets of luscious fruit from his orchards this fall.

Subordinate and Pomona granges are cautioned not to sign any memorials or petitions unless they are issued or sanctioned by the state grange.

Nearly 5,000 people attended grange day at Chautauqua Lake Aug. 21. Governor Glynn of North Carolina was the chief speaker.

WHO'S HEAD OF THE HOUSE? UNCLE SAM WILL ASK YOU.

Farmers Asked To Chain Dogs When Census Taking Begins.

"Are you the head of the family, or is the head out?"

This is one of the leading questions that will be put to whoever may come to the door when the census enumerator calls next April.

It is important that the Government keep track of every head of family, and the answer, though it may cause domestic wrangling afterward, will be recorded from the one of whom it is asked. That is where the women of the family will get the best of it, as it is likely the men will be at work when the enumerator calls.

"Are you married? Have you any children? Is your mother-in-law living with you?"

These are a few of the multiplicity of questions which, beginning April 16, 1910, will be asked every housewife in the United States and its territories by Uncle Sam's army of inquisitors known as census enumerators.

From house to house all over the country these inquisitors will go. If you happen to be a housewife and answer the summons of the doorbell, and four of your five children answer it, too, do not not scold the enumerator when he asks you if you are married. Uncle Sam has not counted noses all over the oountry for ten long years, and it may be, as some pessimists say, the race is lessening, and if so the Government wants to know in order to determine what kind of premiums to offer for Rooseveltian families.

There is one request in particular the Government makes of people living in small cities, towns and rural districts, and that is to have all dogs chained after April 14 for at least six months.

When the enumerator calls he will begin by asking these questions:

"What street, road or avenue is ...s? What is the number?"

He will then ask. "What is your name? Are you the head of a family? What is the name of each person living here on April 15, 1910? The surname and initials of every person in the abode? How many children, their names, ages, places of birth?"

If you are not the head of the family you will be asked what relation you are to the head.

The enumerators will ask the sex, color and race of every person, the age at last birthday.

Then come the questions to the women. "Are you married or single or divorced or widowed?" If you have been divorced and remarried, you will be asked the number of years of the present married life.

"How many children are you the mother of? How many children were born and how many are living?"

These questions will be asked in the order named, so do not get impatient and fretful and think the enumerator is asking questions which seem personal and impertinent. The information is for the Government. The enumerator also will ask you your nationality. The Government is particularly anxious that this question be answered truthfully.

"What State or Territory, if born in the United State? What country, if foreign born? The place of birth of the person being interrogated; the place of birth of the father of this person and the place of birth of the mother" are among the questions.

The question of citizenship will be thoroughly gone into thus:

"Were you born in the United States? Were you an immigrant? What year did you come to the United States? Have you been naturalized or are you still an alien?"

The enumerator will have to ask whether all persons enumerated speak English, and if not what languages they speak.

The trade or profession, the kind of work done by each person, such as spinner, salesman, laborer, etc., ...l be asked. The general nature of industry, business or establishment in which each person works, such as cotton mill, dry goods store, farm, etc. Whether an employer or employee or working on own account will be another question. If an employee, you will be asked whether you were out of work on April 15, 1910, and the number of weeks you were out of work in 1909.

Questions will be asked with a view of classifying the illiterate, those having just a common education and those having a higher education.

Other questions will show whether Americans are extravagant as they have been alleged to be. It will be asked whether the home you live in is owned by you or rented, if owned by you, if it is free of mortgage.

The last question is are there any persons in the house suffering from blindness, whether in both eyes, and if deaf and dumb?

Every citizen is asked to cooperate with the enumerators in order that no mistake will occur.

Spraying Trees and Cost of Outfit.

As the time is near at hand for fall spraying to rid trees of scale insects, and as many inquiries in regard to the lime-sulphur wash, the kind of spraying apparatus to use and cost of the same, have been received at the Division of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, the following reply by the head of the Division, Prof. H. A. Surface, State Zoologist, will suffice for all, and will be of interest to every person owning fruit trees, whether few or many:

"You can either make your own lime-sulphur solution and destroy the scale by its use, making this material by boiling together the lime and sulphur, or you can buy it ready made in the concentrated form, ready to dilute with eight times its bulk of water, and spray on the trees and kill the scale. It is cheaper to make it, but where you have only a few trees, it is more troublesome. Either form will kill the scale if applied strong enough, and neither will hurt the trees if applied at any strength whatever. The home boiled sulphur-lime is made by boiling four pounds of sulphur (either flowers or flour) with five and one-half pounds of quick lime and water enough to boil them, and afterward add enough water to make the total bulk not more than twelve gallons. Strain this well. The straining is very important. Clogging of nozzles and sloppy work is generally due to lack of proper straining. The best way to strain is to use brass wire cloth thirty meshes to the inch, setting it at an angle across the funnel, or built as a cone with the point standing upright in the strainer funnel.

"Spray the lime-sulphur wash, either home-made or commercial, directly over the trees at any time after the leaves are off, giving them two good coats, one from each side. Take advantage of an opposite wind to spray the opposite side. Repeat this in the spring when the buds are swelling.

"You can buy of most seedmen inexpensive spraying apparatus. For such trees as you have at present a complete outfit, costing not more than five dollars, would serve the purpose. Nearly all manufacturers of spraying material make these smaller and cheaper sprayer, which are generally in the form of hand sprayers, bucket sprayers, compressed air tanks or knapsack sprayers. The highest price that they should cost should not be more than ten dollars and from some manufacturers, a cheap outfit can be bought for one-third this amount. Every person growing even a few trees and shrubs should have his own spraying apparatus of the size and power adapted to his needs.

"You can not expect to keep your trees free from scale by preventative means. The point is to spray them when they are infested, and thus keep the scale under control. There is really no need of spraying for scale at a time when it is not presene. The quantity of the lime-sulphur solution to be prepared, as given above, is for the owner of a few trees. In regular orchard work, it is preferable to never make less than a 50-gallon quantity at one time, then the proportions of materials used are 17 pounds of sulphur and 22 pounds of lime, boiled together as stated above. One hour of thorough boiling is necessary."

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements. These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

LUCY'S BRAVERY.

An Awakening of Love and a Race Through a Storm.

Sallies of almost childlike high spirits endeared the late J. L. Toole, the lifelong friend of Henry Irving, to all who knew him. On one occasion when the author of "Some Eminent Victorians" was spending a day in the innocent adventures which Toole was a genius in originating they went to the Tower, where they found themselves among a party of eager sightseers in the chamber where the crown jewels are disposed.

It was a woman who was explaining to the eager throng the history of the articles displayed. At the end of a long catalogue she said:

"And this is Anne Boleyn's crown."

Toole, apparently suddenly overcome, burst into a flood of tears and leaned against the wall in seemingly uncontrollable grief.

"Oh, sir," inquired the poor woman, in distress, "what is the matter?"

"Nothing! Nothing!" replied Toole in broken accents. "Don't mind me, but the fact is I have known the family so long."

No Time to Read Them.

Two men sat beside each other in a railway train. One of them, putting down a magazine, remarked:

"That series of articles, 'Books That Have Helped Me,' has engaged the attention of some of the leading literary men of the country."

"So I've heard," the other man replied.

"Have you read any of the articles?"

"No."

"But you have often thought of books that have helped you, I dare say?"

"No, I don't read books and am therefore not helped by them. I read the titles of books, but never turn the leaves."

"You must be a busy man?"

"I am," said the man who only glanced at the titles, "I am a book reviewer."—London Mail.

A FARMERS' EXCHANGE

Success In Co-operation Illustrated.

Some Interesting Statistics on Handling Crops on Co-operative Plan by a Potato Growers' Association In New Jersey.

The subject of co-operative buying and selling among farmers is increasing in interest with them every year as the advantages to be derived therefrom are being recognized. One obstacle to successful co-operation has always been the farmers themselves. Selfishness has spoiled many a combination for financial purposes. The unwillingness to trust the sale of farm products to an agent or manager has been the bar to progress. But things are changing, and we predict that the next few years will see more co-operative enterprises organized and successfully conducted than in a long time past. In this work the grange must take an active and prominent part.

There is in Freehold, N. J., a most successful potato growers' association, the Monmouth County Farmers' Exchange. It was formed about two years ago. At the annual meeting in December the report on the business done for the year showed a total of 2,011 separate shipments, containing nearly 204,000 barrels of potatoes and packages of other soil products, and the whole was valued at more than $454,000. The shipments reached 121 different customers in fifty cities and towns and eleven states. Besides this outgoing business, the society did an incoming business of nearly $45,000 in seed potatoes purchased in Maine and New York.

This report was so satisfactory that many growers who had been afraid to run risks in their own interest became members. The membership jumped from about 300 to a total now of over 500, the sales of capital stock were large, and now the exchange has about $30,000 with which to co-operate.

Besides all this, it has erected suitable buildings at the various shipping points on the two railroads running through the twenty-five or thirty miles that constitute the potato district. It has also more recently built a brick fertilizer mixing house, 150 by 32 feet, at Marlboro, on the Central Railway of New Jersey and is planning on another, 200 by 50 feet, to be on the Pennsylvania at Freehold. The capacity of these two houses will be between 4,000 and 5,000 tons of fertilizer annually. Business will be begun in these houses for the season of 1910 and an enormous saving in cost of fertilizers effected. The object is to sell fertilizer to members as near actual cost as possible.

Commenting on the requirements for successful co-operation, the American Agriculturist remarks that the foremost requisite is loyalty to the organization. Unless the grower is willing to be governed by the fundamental law of what benefits one benefits all he has no business to join a farmers' exchange, because a penny in his hand will appear more substantial to him than a dollar on the horizon will. If there are enough of such men organization will prove to be a farce, and the middleman will continue to laugh in his sleeve. Coequal in importance, there must be competent management. Again, the rules of grading must be strictly followed by each producer, so that the exchange may win a good reputation for honest packing and assets with value cannot be overestimated. Still further, the members must place implicit trust in the manager, who must not be tangled up with red tape. And this man must not be underpaid. His position is an exceedingly exacting and responsible one, especially during the busy season, at which time, if ever, he must have free rein.

Farmers' Exchanges.

We believe the time is near at hand when the state grange will find it necessary because helpful to the farmers of the state to establish a farmers' exchange, with a central office in charge of some competent person. He should be able to put into communication with one another all farmers throughout the state who wish to purchase or sell any farm products, stock, etc., to give him information about procuring farm help in season and, in short, be a bureau of information on all farm matters as relate to the exchange of farm commodities or information pertaining to the sale or purchase of the same.—Country Gentleman.

Patron and Peach Grower.

Mr. J. H. Hale of Glastonbury, Conn., is both enthusiastic Patron and peach grower. He will have 60,000 baskets of luscious fruit from his orchards this fall.

Subordinate and Pomona granges are cautioned not to sign any memorials or petitions unless they are issued or sanctioned by the state grange.

Nearly 5,000 people attended grange day at Chautauqua Lake Aug. 21. Governor Glynn of North Carolina was the chief speaker.

VICE PRESIDENCY AN AMERICAN ANOMALY

The Government's Fifth Wheel With Little Participation in Administration.

Speaking in general, it is common knowledge that the vice presidency has been used to "harmonize" the party by giving to the weaker faction the nomination of the second officer of the republic.

Just where does this lead? As our party system has evolved, there has been developed within every party two sets of opinion almost as violently opposed to each other as the principal opposing political parties themselves are opposed to each other. Let us suppose, then, that the immense majority of sentiment in a given party is highly conservative in economic policies, or, if economic policies are not to the front, that there is a strenuous difference of opinion as to certain foreign programs. Very well. A candidate for President, who vigorously holds to the views of the majority, is nominated by his party. Thereupon, in order to make sure the election, a Vice President is nominated who just as staunchly holds to the views of the minority of the party. Both are elected, but the President, having begun to carry out the policies the strength of which among the people secured his nomination, dies or is incapacitated. The Vice President, representing antagonism to these policies, thereupon becomes President. Immediately he reverses the policies of his predecessor, or, if not immediately, he certainly reverses them in the end.

Not only is it a fact that he does so, as is illustrated by Tyler and by Andrew Johnson, but it is nothing more than human nature that he should do so. In his heart he does not believe in the policies of his chief, no matter what he may say for political effect. More important still, he owes his nomination to that element of his party opposed to views of the element which nominated the President. Thus the will of the people can be negatived in a single moment. How grotesque that a typhoid germ or a weak heart or a bit of lead and a pinch of powder should suddenly change the designs of a great people and the course of a mighty nation!

It is plain to all thinking people that this is a weak link in our chain of government which needs strengthening. The best way to strengthen the chain—and the strongest chain is never stronger than its weakest link—is of course to abolish the office of Vice President. But that is quite out of the question. Such amendments to our Constitution are now virtually impossible.

And besides, the resourcefulness of tinkers usually finds some way of accomplishing the popular will and nullifying dangers without amending the Constitution. The abolition of the vice presidency, the taking out of this dangerous, unnecessary and illogical fifth wheel in our government, is plainly desirable, because, for the reason already given, the vice presidency is now and always has been an useless office. Moreover, the law of succession passed in 1896 renders it worse than useless, for that law provides that in case of the death of the President (and the Vice President) the Secretary of State shall succeed to the presidency, and after him the Secretary of the Treasury, and after him the other members of the cabinet in the order of establishment of their offices. If we had no Vice President this law would insure to the republic a President chosen by the chief magistrate himself, because first, of his harmony of views with the chief executive, and, second, because of his great ability, learning, patriotism and force of character.

Thus under the present law, if there were no Vice Presidents, the country would be certain, in case of the death of the President, of a successor who would faithfully carry out those policies which the President himself was elected to carry out; and there would be no reversal of the will of the people in case of a succession.

What is the next best thing to do? First, the powers of the Vice President should be enlarged, either from an executive point of view or from a legislative point of view. The office should be exalted in real importance. The Vice President should no longer be the "queen bee kept in reserve," as Mr. Oliver picturesquely described him; he should no longer be an "heir apparent" calling for the morning papers at every sunrise to find whether the events of the night have raised him to the throne and with nothing to do meanwhile except to let this corrugating thought dwarf and malform his soul. He should be given a substantial, tangible, powerful part either in the executive or legislative branch of the government. Either might accomplish the supreme purpose of compelling political conventions to nominate a Vice President with the definite thought in mind that he may become President instead of with the thought of "harmonizing" a party, and insure the nomination of a man in complete and perfect harmony with the President, whose possible successor he may become.—Century Magazine.

ONE MILLION RED CROSS STAMPS

In the Hands of Maryland's Tuberculosis Association.

The first supply of one million Red Cross Christmas Stamps has been received by the Maryland Association for the Prevention and Relief of Tuberculosis and it is expected that the people of Maryland will buy them in liberal quantities, for use as Christmas greetings on letters and packages sent to friends during December. An effort will be made to have business houses, professional men, lodges and other organizations use the stamps on their outgoing mail, not only because the stamp is attractive and carries a hearty greeting, but for the better reason, that the money from the sales goes into the Red Cross fund for the suppression of tuberculosis in this state. Every stamp sold is a bullet in the warfare against the White Plague in Maryland.

In all communities where they are known, the Christmas stamp is very popular with men, women and children and millions of them will go through the mails during the next month. The stamps sell at one cent each, which places them within the reach of every giver of a Christmas gift, and the use of the stamp will enrich the kindly sentiment which prevails everywhere at this season of the year.

An order for any quantity, addressed to H. Wirt Steele, Executive Secretary, No. 101 W. Saratoga street, Baltimore, will bring a quick response.

Road of the Future.

All road builders are now engaged in trying to devise a road which will stand motor traffic. Many new methods have been tried, with varying degrees of success, but none of them seems to be perfectly satisfactory. If broken stones is to form the wearing surface, then some means must be found to hold the binding particles so firmly that they cannot be sucked out; and sufficient strength must be given to the mass to enable it to withstand the sliding action of the wheels at bends and turns. Several kinds of tar macadam answer fairly well, but they are expensive.

It seems to me that the most promising kind of road for heavy automobile traffic is what is called Durax in England. It is a pavement of three-inch irregular cubes of hard stone, laid in small segments of circles. These stones can be cut by machinery, and are comparatively inexpensive; they are laid without grout, but there seems to be no reason for its omission except the cost. Great quantities of this kind of pavement have been laid in Germany.—Century Magazine.

Hounds Trail Barn Burner.

Bloodhounds owned by Messrs. Landis and Harris of Fairmont, followed the trail from a burned barn near Terra Alta to the home of a man 20 miles away. The barn was owned by James Freeland.

At 7 o'clock Saturday evening the barn on the Freeland farm was seen to be on fire. All efforts to put out the flames failed. The stock was taken out but about $1,000 worth of feed together with the building was completely destroyed, the total loss being about $2500. Mr. Landis with the Landis-Harris bloodhounds arrived at the scene of the fire about 10 o'clock Sunday morning. The dogs followed a clear trail for about 20 miles and gave suspicion to a prominent farmer of that section! Bad blood is said to exist between Freeland and the man pointed out by the dogs. It is said that the grand jury which meets in about a week will be asked to investigate the charges and until that time the name of the man is withheld.

BITTINGER.

Jolly Joe, our local wayside astronomer, declares he sat up every night last week and kept his eye on the moon, but failed to see the eclipse.

C. E. Ellithorp and wife, of this village, drove over to Westernport, Md., last Monday, from which place it was Mr. Ellithorp's purpose to go to Baltimore to attend to some business matters.

As a result of the all-week meetings at the Glades Mennonite church, near here, last week one new member was added to the congregation.

For a few hours' recreation on last Monday afternoon Rev. Alvin Yugel shouldered his gun and betook himself to the laurel thickets and succeeded in bagging a rabbit and a squirrel.

Mr. and Mrs. Joel Orendorf spent a few days last week visiting their daughter, Mrs. Lewis Maust, over in Somerset county, Pennsylvania.

Harvey Stark, our local photographer was gathering views of interesting places and persons in the Meadow Mountain and North Glade settlements last week.

Jonas Bittinger and wife spent last Saturday and Sunday with friends and acquaintances in and about Accident.

Miss Laura Fazenbaker, who has been employed at Grafton, W. Va., for some time past, returned to her home at this place last week.

The ladies of the Lutheran congregation at this place will hold a box supper and ice cream festival in the school house on next Saturday evening and the public is cordially invited to attend and participate in the evening's pleasure.

HOYES.

Thanksgiving Day passed very quietly at this place, and although there were no Thanksgiving services, we feel assured that every person feels thankful for the prosperous year that has just passed.

Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Dewitt gave a dinner to a number of their relatives last Thursday. We understand that Mr. Dewitt has sold his farm and will move to Oakland in the near future. We are sorry to see so many of our good citizens leave this community.

Miss Mary O'Donnell, of Loch Lynn, accompanied by Asa Callis, also of that place spent Wednesday; and Thursday with Misses Kate O'Donnell and Bernadette Mattingly, returning to Loch Lynn Thursday evening.

Mrs. Emma Dewitt left Hoyes last Saturday to visit her daughter, Mrs. John Brenneman, near Crellin.

Troy Glover and family and Floyd Fearer and family all spent Sunday at Allan Glover's.

We are informed that there are several well developed cases of scarlet fever in Flatwoods settlement. We sincerely hope it will be kept strictly confined, as it is a disease much to be dreaded.

Walter Haenfling spent last Sunday at his home at Accident.

Mrs. Allan Glover met with quite a painful accident a few days since, in removing some jars of sausage from her kitchen to the cellar. She lost her footing and fell from the top to the bottom step, breaking her collar bone in two places. She was attended by Dr. Briscoe, who made her as comfortable as possible.

Rev. H. E. Friend is conducting revival services at McHenry at this time. A great many, both young and old, from this place have been attending.

Misses Freda Dewitt and Auburn Smith went to Accident last Monday for the purpose of having some dental work done.

We feel very sorry for Mrs. John Haenfling, of near here, who was taken suddenly ill last Wednesday suffering from appendicitis. She grew worse so rapidly that she had to be taken to a hospital in Baltimore Thursday and operated on at once. The last news was that she was doing as well as could be expected. She was accompanied to Baltimore by her brother, Mr. Burkhart, and Dr. Briscoe.

Misses Eve and Mildred Welch were visiting their sister, Mrs. Bernard, several days last week.

Lakin Friend and wife, of near Mt. Lake Park, spent Monday night with Mr. Friend's grandparents, Rev. and Mrs. H. E. Friend.

Of the number of young men from this community who are away for the winter, Earl Smith is the only one who spent Thanksgiving with his parents.

Wm. Bowman is erecting a chop mill at Flatwoods and will soon be ready for business.

Mrs. Joe Keller and children were Mt. Lake Park visitors a few days last week.

RYAN'S GLADE.

Since the great political battle of 1909 is over, and the results noted in your paper, and it has all become history, we thought we might ask for a little of your space.

Indian summer weather still continues.

Rev. E. P. Idleman preached one of his ablest sermons here Sunday.

We noticed many visitors in our midst Sunday, among them being Mr. J. H. Wilson, of Short Run; Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Lish, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Moon, of Bethlehem, and Mrs. Charles Harvey and daughter, of North Glade.

Mr. J. W. White, of near Mt. Lake Park, was calling on his friend, J. B. Shockey, Sunday.

Mr. Arthur Harvey is the champion bee hunter, he having located another tree Saturday, which makes him four trees this season.

Mr. Albert Steyer and sister, Nellie, were visiting Mr. and Mrs. Allen DeBerry Sunday.

Mr. Alva Paugh, formerly of near Deer Park, but now one of Uncle Sam's soldier boys stationed at a fort in Indiana, was home on a furlough recently and called on some friends in this section. He is serving his second term of enlistment and seems to enjoy soldier life. He served two years in the Philippines and he wears the medal as one of Uncle Sam's Sharp Shooters.

The Sunday school at this place will render a program on Christmas Eve.

Mr. D. O. Harvey's new house is nearing completion.

We noticed old Fred hitched in the runabout Sunday evening, which is the same as saying that one of our young ladies who teaches in another community and who spent Saturday and Sunday at home, did not have to walk back to her school that evening.

We are sorry to report Mr. N. B. Harvey on the sick list.

Now the hunting season is over, we wonder if there are any pheasants left since W. W. Steyer was in the woods so much with that new Winchester shot gun.

We hear people talking about migrating, some to the northwest and others to Florida or New Mexico, but as for us right here in old Garrett, where we have an abundance of pure water, maple syrup, buckwheat cakes and sausage, is good enough.

FITS OF PURE ANGER.

How to Know and Check This Dangerous Tendency.

There is many a young mother who admires secretly the little outbursts of anger that baby gives vent to and thinks they are funny and cute until by the time the child is two or three years old she awakes to the sad realization that her baby has grown into a willful and spoiled child who is thought anything but lovable and cute by other people. She then begins to see what lack of discipline has done for the baby. Every mother, out of justice to the child as well as to herself, should check these outbursts of anger when the child first shows an inclination to indulge in them. But when the mother finds that the outbursts have taken a firm hold on the child and seem to occur periodically she should set about the tedious task of overcoming them.

The little one should be punished, but her will must not be broken by repeated "spankings," for these seldom fail to give the child a moody, sulky disposition. It takes time and patience to effect a cure. The best cure for those fits of anger is to shut the child in a room by itself whenever they occur. A particularly successful method of making a naughty child good is to divert its attention from unpleasant things. Children often have as much to make them irritable and cross as a grown person, and when a mother notices that a child is fretful it takes but a minute to find an untried toy or a new book or to suggest a new and interesting occupation that will brighten the child's mood and prevent an outburst of anger before the child can be aware of its existence.

How to Make a Lily Pond.

Aquatic plants for the home garden are not grown as much as they should be. Amateurs who hesitate for fear of failure are wrong, for water lilies require far less care than tender bedding plants and are less expensive. Any swampy or boggy ground can easily be converted into an aquatic garden. Flowering shrubs, trees and ferns will grow luxuriantly near a pond. When you decide on the location of your pond, which should be at the lowest point of the garden, dig out the soil from eighteen inches to three feet deep, depending on the severity of the winters in your locality. The lilies must be planted deep enough to prevent them freezing. An inexpensive way to make the pond hold water is to line it with common clay. Cover the bottom and sides of the pond with this clay three or four inches thick and beat firmly until solid and even. The best method is to plant the water lilies in boxes or tubs. Use very rich soil, as coarse as possible. Rough pieces of sod and lumps of earth should be mixed in. Boxes holding five or six cubic feet will accommodate strong growing plants, and others holding half that much will be large enough for the weaker growing plants. If the pond is large the soil may be placed on the bottom and the plants set out in it, but in smaller ponds under this method the roots of the stronger plants will quickly cover the bottom, crowding out the weaker.

How to Clean a Light Wool Skirt.

To clean a light wool skirt take one pail of warm soft water. To this add one pint of gasoline and one-quarter bar of naphtha soap (dissolved). Put the skirt to be washed into this and wash carefully. Rinse in water the same temperature as water used in washing the skirt. This is an excellent method and never fails to make the skirt look like new.

Lesson X.— Fourth Quarter, For Dec. 5, 1909.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, II Cor. viii, 1-15. Memory Verse, 9—Golden Text, Acts xx, 35—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

The opening chapters of this epistle are very much on the lines we have recently been studying, those of suffering for Christ's sake and denial of self that His life may be manifest and that we in His stead may plead with man to be reconciled to God. We cannot thus plead unless we are showing something of God in our own lives. So when Paul speaks of and makes manifest the comfort which he has found in Christ and is heard saying, "Thanks be unto God, who always causeth us to triumph in Christ" (ii. 14), we feel like listening to one who can thus testify. Then when he tells us that this sufficiency is wholly from God and in no sense from us (iii. 5) we are encouraged, for we know that He is no respecter of persons. But when we hear him say that to manifest the life of sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty we must be separate from all unbelief and unrighteousness and darkness and cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit (vi. 14-18; vii. 1) we begin to wonder if we really mean to give ourselves to such a life.

The lesson today on "The Grace of Giving" includes chapters viii and ix, though we have but a few verses assigned us in the former. The heart of it seems to be in the memory verse viii. 9, with which we should put ix. 15, "Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable gift." Nothing can win us to a life of self denial and cheerful submission or work in us the grace of giving but the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, though He was rich, for our sakes became poor, that we, through His poverty, might be rich. How few consider that the familiar benediction, "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you," is really a prayer that we may be as willing to become poor for the benefit of others as He was to humble Himself even unto death for us. "Beloved, if God so loved us we ought also to love one another" (I John iv. 11).

It is written of certain Macedonian believers that they "first gave their own selves unto the Lord," and then, though very poor and greatly tried, the abundance of their joy caused them to abound in liberality (verses 1-5). No giving counts in the sight of God that is not from those who have first given themselves to Him. He may respect the gifts of those who are seeking Him, as Cornelius did, but He will surely send to such somehow increased light that they may truly know Him. Paul would stimulate the Corinthians by the example of the Macedonians, and yet he comforts them by the assurance that if they have a willing mind God will give them credit for all that they would do if they had the ability (verse 12). I am often comforted by the assurance that what He expects us to do or to give He will not fail to give the ability for the service, so it is ever an application of I Sam. x. 7, "Do as occasion serve thee," or as in the margin, "Do as thine hand shall find." But there is a word in Eccles. ix. 10, which is also pertinent, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." In the matter of giving we have the same principle in II Cor. ix. 7, "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give not grudgingly or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful (hilarious) giver."

When we remember that whatever we are able to give to God we are giving Him only that which He first gave to us we can readily see that there is no room to boast of our giving. Listen to David as he gave his millions to the temple and saw his people offer so willingly: "Who am I and what is my people that we should be able to offer so willingly after this sort, for all things come of Thee, and of Thine own have we given thee?" (I Chron. xxix. 14.) Ask him why and how he did it and hear his reply: "Because I have set my affection to the house of my God; * * * I have prepared with all my might for the house of my God" (I Chron. xxix. 2, 3). See the Israelites giving for the building of the tabernacle until Moses had to restrain them from bringing, for the stuff they had brought was sufficient and too much.

How great an illustration there is everywhere of sowing sparingly and reaping sparingly, but how few seem to understand the sowing bountifully and the reaping bountifully (ix. 6). I have for many years associated in my mind viii. 9, and ix. 8, the one telling of His grace that saves us and makes us rich to all eternity and the other of the all grace that He will make to abound toward us, that we may have all sufficiency in all things for every good work. In I Cor. xvi. 2, there is a good plan suggested in reference to giving. "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him," but I have found so much blessing for over twenty years in giving to the Lord at least one-tenth of all He sends me that I must commend Mal. iii. 10, to all who will receive it. But the tithe might be considered only our duty and only that which is above the tithe our real offering. Yet there must be no bondage. It must be done cheerfully, not with any grudge, whatever is done. Let it be hilarious, with a glad "Praise the Lord for the privilege" and a hearty "Of Thine own do we give Thee."

MESSAGE READ TO CONGRESS

No Tariff Revision For the Present.

NICARAGUAN TROUBLE.

Irresponsible Nations Not Protected by Monroe Doctrine.

A DEFICIT OF $73,075,600.

Legislation Urged Against Injunctions Without Notice.

Washington, Dec. 7.—In his annual message, read to congress, President Taft said:

To the Senate and the House of Representatives:

The relations of the United States with all foreign governments have continued upon the normal basis of amity and good understanding and are very generally satisfactory.

Europe.

The American rights [in the fisheries on the north Atlantic coast] under the fisheries article of the treaty of 1818 have been a cause of difference between the United States and Great Britain for nearly seventy years. The interests involved are of great importance to the American fishing industry, and the final settlement of the controversy [by the permanent court of arbitration at The Hague] will remove a source of constant irritation and complaint. This is the first case involving such great international questions which has been submitted to the permanent court of arbitration at The Hague.

Negotiations for an international conference to consider and reach an arrangement providing for the preservation and protection of the fur seals in the north Pacific are in progress with the governments of Great Britain, Japan and Russia. The attitude of the governments interested leads me to hope for a satisfactory settlement of this question as the ultimate outcome of the negotiations.

The Near East.

The quick transition of the government of the Ottoman empire from one of retrograde tendencies to a constitutional government with a parliament and with progressive modern policies of reform and public improvement is one of the important phenomena of our times. Constitutional government seems also to have made further advance in Persia. These events have turned the eyes of the world upon the near east. In that quarter the prestige of the United States has spread widely through the peaceful influence of American schools, universities and missionaries. There is every reason why we should obtain a greater share of the commerce of the near east since the conditions are more favorable now than ever before.

Latin America.

One of the happiest events in recent pan-American diplomacy was the pacific, independent settlement by the governments of Bolivia and Peru of a boundary difference between them, which for some weeks threatened to cause war and even to entrain imbitterments affecting other republics less directly concerned.

Our Citizens Abroad.

This administration, through the department of state and the foreign service, is lending all proper support to legitimate and beneficial American enterprises in foreign countries, the degree of such support being measured by the national advantages to be expected. A citizen himself cannot by contract or otherwise divest himself of the right, nor can this government escape the obligation, of his protection in his personal and property rights when these are unjustly infringed in a foreign country. To avoid ceaseless vexations it is proper that in considering whether American enterprise should be encouraged or supported in a particular country the government should give full weight not only to the national as opposed to the individual benefits to accrue, but also to the fact whether or not the government of the country in question is in its administration and in its diplomacy faithful to the principles of moderation, equity and justice upon which alone depends international credit in diplomacy as well as in finance.

The Monroe Doctrine.

The pan-American policy of this government has long been fixed in its principles and remains unchanged. With the changed circumstances of the United States and of the republics to the south of us, most of which have great natural resources, stable government and progressive ideals, the apprehension which gave rise to the Monroe doctrine may be said to have nearly disappeared, and neither the doctrine as it exists nor any other doctrine of American policy should be permitted to operate for the perpetuation of irresponsible government, the escape of just obligations or the insidious allegation of dominating ambitions on the part of the United States.

My meeting with President Diaz and the greeting exchanged on both American and Mexican soil served, I hope, to signalize the close and cordial relations which so well bind together this republic and the great republic immediately to the south, between which there is so vast a network of material interests.

I am happy to say that all but one of the cases which for so long vexed our relations with Venezuela have been settled within the past few months and that, under the enlightened regime now directing the government of Venezuela, provision has been made for arbitration of the remaining case before The Hague tribunal.

On July 30, 1909, the government of Panama agreed, after considerable negotiation, to indemnify the relatives of the American officers and sailors who were brutally treated, one of them having, indeed, been killed by the Panaman police this year.

This government was obliged to intervene diplomatically to bring about arbitration or settlement of the claim of the Emery company against Nicaragua, which it had long before been agreed should be arbitrated. A settlement of this troublesome case was reached by the signature of a protocol on Sept. 18, 1909.

Many years ago diplomatic intervention became necessary to the protection of the interests in the American claim of Alsop & Co. against the government of Chile. The government of Chile had frequently admitted obligation in the case and had promised this government to settle it. There had been two abortive attempts to do so through arbitral commissions, which failed through lack of jurisdiction. Now, happily, as the result of the recent diplomatic negotiations, the governments of the United States and of Chile, actuated by the sincere desire to free from any strain those cordial and friendly relations upon which both set such store, have agreed by a protocol to submit the controversy to definitive settlement by his Britannic majesty Edward VII.

The Nicaraguan Trouble.

Since the Washington conventions of 1907 were communicated to the government of the United States as a consulting and advising party this government has been almost continuously called upon by one or another and in turn by all of the five Central American republics to exert itself for the maintenance of the conventions. Nearly every complaint has been against the Zelaya government of Nicaragua, which has kept Central America in constant tension or turmoil. The responses made to the representations of Central American republics as due from the United States on account of its relation to the Washington conventions have been at all times conservative and have avoided, so far as possible, any semblance of interference, although it is very apparent that the considerations of geographic proximity to the canal zone and of the very substantial American interests in Central America give to the United States a special position in the zone of these republics and the Caribbean sea.

I need not rehearse here the patient efforts of this government to promote peace and welfare among these republics, efforts which are fully appreciated by the majority of them who are loyal to their true interests. It would be no less unnecessary to rehearse here the sad tale of unspeakable barbarities and oppression alleged to have been committed by the Zelaya government. Recently two Americans were put to death by order of President Zelaya himself. They were officers in the organized forces of a revolution which had continued many weeks and was in control of about half of the republic, and as such, according to the modern enlightened practice of civilized nations, they were entitled to be dealt with as prisoners of war.

At the date when this message is printed this government has terminated diplomatic relations with the Zelaya government for reasons made public in a communication to the former Nicaraguan charge d'affaires and is intending to take such future steps as may be found most consistent with its dignity, its duty to American interests and its moral obligations to Central America and to civilization. It may later be necessary for me to bring this subject to the attention of the congress in a special message.

In the Far East.

In the far east this government preserves unchanged its policy of supporting the principle of equality of opportunity and scrupulous respect for the integrity of the Chinese empire, to which policy are pledged the interested powers of both east and west.

By the treaty of 1903 China has undertaken the abolition of likin with a moderate and proportionate raising of the customs tariff along with currency reform. These reforms being a manifest advantage to foreign commerce as well as to the interests of China, this government is endeavoring to facilitate these measures and the needful acquiescence of the treaty powers. When it appeared that Chinese likin revenues were to be hypothecated to foreign bankers in connection with a great railway project it was obvious that the governments whose nationals held this loan would have a certain direct interest in the question of the carrying out by China of the reforms in question. The administration deemed American participation to be of great national interest. Happily, when it was as a matter of broad policy urgent that this opportunity should not be lost, the indispensable instrumentality presented itself when a group of American bankers of international reputation and great resources agreed at once to share in the loan upon precisely such terms as this government should approve. The chief of those terms was that American railway material should be upon an exact equality with that of the other nationals joining in the loan in the placing of orders for this whole railroad system. After months of negotiation the equal participation of Americans seems at last assured.

In one of the Chinese-Japanese conventions of Sept. 1 of this year there was a provision which caused considerable public apprehension in that upon its face it was believed in some quarters to seek to establish a monopoly of mining privileges along the South Manchurian and Antung-Mukden railroads and thus to exclude Americans from a wide field of enterprise, to take part in which they were by treaty with China entitled. After a thorough examination of the conventions and of the several contextual documents the secretary of state reached the conclusion that no such monopoly was intended or accomplished. This government made inquiry of the imperial Chinese and Japanese governments and received from each official assurance that the provision had no purpose inconsistent with the policy of equality of opportunity to which the signatories, in common with the United States, are pledged.

Our traditional relations with the Japanese empire continue cordial, as usual. The arrangement of 1908 for a co-operative control of the coming of laborers to the United States has proved to work satisfactorily. The matter of a revision of the existing treaty between the United States and Japan which is terminable in 1912 is already receiving the study of both countries.

The Department of State.

I earnestly recommend to the favorable action of the congress the estimates submitted by the department of state and most especially the legislation suggested in the secretary of state's letter of this date whereby it will be possible to develop and make permanent the reorganization of the department upon modern lines in a manner to make it a thoroughly efficient instrument in the furtherance of our foreign trade and of American interests abroad.

Under a provision of the act of Aug. 5, 1909, I have appointed three officials to assist the officers of the government in collecting information necessary to a wise administration of the tariff act of Aug. 5, 1909. As to questions of customs administration they are co-operating with the officials of the treasury department and as to matters of the needs and the exigencies of our manufacturers and exporters with the department of commerce and labor in its relation to the domestic aspect of the subject of foreign commerce.

As a consequence of section 2 of the tariff act of Aug. 5, 1909, it becomes the duty of the secretary of state to conduct as diplomatic business all the negotiations necessary to place him in a position to advise me as to whether or not a particular country unduly discriminates against the United States in the sense of the statute referred to.

Government Expenditures and Revenues.

Perhaps the most important question presented to this administration is that of economy in expenditures and sufficiency of revenue.

The report of the secretary shows that the ordinary expenditures for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, will exceed the estimated receipts by $34,075,620. If to this deficit are added the sum to be disbursed for the Panama canal, amounting to $38,000,000, and $1,000,000 to be paid on the public debt, the deficit of ordinary receipts and expenditures will be increased to a total deficit of $73,075,620. This deficit the secretary proposes to meet by the proceeds of bonds issued to pay the cost of constructing the Panama canal. I approve this proposal.

The Panama Canal.

The policy of paying for the construction of the Panama canal not out of current revenue, but by bond issue, was adopted in the Spooner act of 1902, and there seems to be no good reason for departing from the principle by which a part at least of the burden of the cost of the canal shall fall upon our posterity, who are to enjoy it, and there is all the more reason for this view because the actual cost to date of the canal, which is now half done and which will be completed Jan. 1, 1915, shows that the cost of engineering and construction will be $297,766,000 instead of $139,705,200, as originally estimated. In addition to engineering and construction, the other expenses, including sanitation and government and the amount paid for the properties, the franchise and the privilege of building the canal, increase the cost by $75,435,000 to a total of $375,201,000. The increase in the cost of engineering and construction is due to a substantial enlargement of the plan of construction by widening the canal 100 feet in the Culebra cut and by increasing the dimensions of the locks, to the underestimate of the quantity of the work to be done under the original plan and to an underestimate of the cost of labor and materials, both of which have greatly enhanced in price since the original estimate was made.

Government Economy.

In order to avoid a deficit for the ensuing fiscal year I directed the heads of departments in the preparation of their estimates to make them as low as possible consistent with imperative governmental necessity. The result has been, as I am advised by the secretary of the treasury, that the estimates of the expenses of the government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911—that is, for the next fiscal year—are less by $55,633,000 than the total of appropriations for the current fiscal year and less by $94,000,000 than the estimates for that year. So far as the secretary of the treasury is able to form a judgment as to future income, there will be no deficit in the year ending June 30, 1911, but a small surplus of $712,000.

In the present estimates the needs of the departments and of the government have been cut to the quick.

For the purpose of securing information which may enable the executive and the legislative branches to unite in a plan for the permanent reduction of the cost of governmental administration the treasury department has instituted an investigation by one of the most skilled expert accountants in the United States. The object of the investigation is to devise means to increase the average efficiency of each employee. There is great room for improvement toward this end, not only by the reorganization of bureaus and departments and in the avoidance of duplication, but also in the treatment of the individual employee.

Under the present system it constantly happens that two employees receive the same salary when the work of one is far more difficult and important and exacting than that of the other. Superior ability is not rewarded or encouraged.

Civil Pensions.

As the degree of efficiency in all the departments is much lessened by the retention of old employees who have outlived their energy and usefulness it is indispensable to any proper system of economy that provision be made so that their separation from the service shall be easy and inevitable. It is impossible to make such provision unless there is adopted a plan of civil pensions. We cannot, in view of the advancing prices of living, hope to save money by a reduction in the standard of salaries paid. Indeed, if any change is made in that regard an increase rather than a decrease will be necessary, and the only means of economy will be in reducing the number of employees and in obtaining a greater average of efficiency from those retained in the service.

Frauds In the Collection of Customs.

I regret to refer to the fact of the discovery of extensive frauds in the collection of the customs revenue at New York city, in which a number of the subordinate employees in the weighing and other departments were directly concerned and in which the beneficiaries were the American Sugar Refining company and others. The frauds consisted in the payment of duty on underweights of sugar. The government has recovered from the American Sugar Refining company all that it is shown to have been defrauded of. The sum was received in full of the amount due which might have been recovered by civil action against the beneficiary of the fraud, but there was an excess reservation in the contract of settlement by which the settlement should not interfere with or prevent the criminal prosecution of every one who was found to be subject to the same.

Criminal prosecutions are now proceeding against a number of the government officers. The treasury department and the department of justice are exerting every effort to discover all the wrongdoers, including the officers and employees of the companies who may have been privy to the fraud. It would seem to me that an investigation of the frauds by congress at present, pending the probing by the treasury department and the department of justice, as proposed, might by giving immunity and otherwise prove an embarrassment in securing conviction of the guilty parties.

Maximum and Minimum Clause In Tariff Act.

Two features of the new tariff act call for special reference. In order that the maximum duty shall be charged against the imports from a country it is necessary that the executive shall find on the part of that country not only discriminations in its laws or the practice under them against the trade of the United States, but that the discriminations found shall be undue—that is, without good and fair reason. No one is seeking a tariff war or a condition in which the spirit of retaliation shall be aroused.

Tariff Readjustment.

The new tariff law enables me to appoint a tariff board to assist me in connection with the department of state in the administration of the minimum and maximum clause of the act and also to assist officers of the government in the administration of the entire law. I believe that the work of this board will be of prime utility and importance whenever congress shall deem it wise again to readjust the customs duties. If the facts secured by the tariff board are of such a character as to show generally that the rates of duties imposed by the present tariff law are excessive under the principles of protection as described in the platform of the successful party at the late election I shall not hesitate to invite the attention of congress to this fact and to the necessity for action predicated thereon. Nothing, however, halts business and interferes with the course of prosperity so much as the threatened revision of the tariff, and until the facts are at hand, after careful and deliberate investigation, upon which such revision can properly be undertaken, it seems to me unwise to attempt it.

War Department.

In the interest of immediate economy I have required a reduction in the estimates of the war department for the coming fiscal year which brings the total estimates down to an amount forty-five millions less than the corresponding estimates for last year. This could be accomplished only by cutting off new projects and suspending for the period of one year all progress in military matters. For the same reason I have directed that the army shall not be recruited up to its present authorized strength. These measures can hardly be more than temporary, for I am sure that the interests of the military establishment are seriously in need of careful consideration by congress.

The secretary of war calls attention to a number of needed changes in the army, in all of which I concur, but the point upon which I place most emphasis is the need for an elimination bill providing a method by which the merits of officers shall have some effect upon their advancement and by which the advancement of all may be accelerated by the effective elimination of a definite proportion of the least efficient.

The military and naval joint board have unanimously agreed that it would be unwise to make the large expenditures which at one time were contemplated in the establishment of a naval base and station in the Philippine Islands and have expressed their judgment, in which I fully concur, in favor of making an extensive naval base at Pearl Harbor, near Honolulu, and not in the Philippines.

The Navy.

The return of the battleship fleet from its voyage around the world in more efficient condition than when it started was a noteworthy event of interest alike to our citizens and the naval authorities of the world. The marked success of the ships in steaming around the world in all weathers on schedule time has increased respect for our navy and has added to our national prestige.

It is a regrettable fact that the higher officers are old for the responsibilities of the modern navy, and the admirals do not arrive at flag rank young enough to obtain adequate training in their duties as flag officers.

Owing to the necessity for economy in expenditures, I have directed the curtailment of recommendations for naval appropriations so that they are thirty-eight millions less than the corresponding estimates of last year, and the request for new naval construction is limited to two first class battleships and one repair vessel.

The secretary of the navy has inaugurated a tentative plan involving certain changes in the organization of the navy department, including the navy yards, all of which have been found by the attorney general to be in accordance with law. I have approved the execution of the plan proposed because of the greater efficiency and economy it promises.

Department of Justice—Expedition In Legal Procedure.

The deplorable delays in the administration of civil and criminal law have received the attention of committees of the American Bar association and of many state bar associations as well as the considered thought of judges and jurists. In my judgment, a change in public procedure, with a view to reducing its expense to private litigants in civil cases and facilitating the dispatch of business and final decision in both civil and criminal cases, constitutes the greatest need in our American institutions. I do not doubt for one moment that much of the lawless violence and cruelty exhibited in lynchings are directly due to the uncertainties and injustice growing out of the delays in trials, judgments and the executions thereof by our courts.

I therefore recommend legislation providing for the appointment by the president of a commission with authority to examine the law and equity procedure of the federal courts of first instance, the law of appeals from those courts to the courts of appeals and to the supreme court and the costs imposed in such procedure upon the private litigants and upon the public treasury and make recommendation with a view to simplifying and expediting the procedure as far as possible and making it as inexpensive as may be to the litigant of little means.

The platform of the successful party in the last election contained the following:

Injunctions Without Notice.

"We believe that the rules of procedure in the federal courts with respect to the issuance of the writ of injunction should be more accurately defined by statute and that no injunction or temporary restraining order should be issued without notice, except where irreparable injury would result from delay, in which case a speedy hearing thereafter should be granted."

I recommend that in compliance with the promise thus made appropriate legislation be adopted. Moreover, every such injunction or restraining order issued without previous notice and opportunity by the defendant to be heard should by force of the statute expire and be of no effect after seven days from the issuance thereof or within any time less than that period which the court may fix unless within such seven days or such less period the injunction or order is extended or renewed after previous notice and opportunity to be heard.

Anti-trust and Interstate Commerce Laws.

The jurisdiction of the general government over interstate commerce has led to the passage of the so called "Sherman anti-trust law" and the "interstate commerce law" and its amendments. The developments in the operation of those laws call for a discussion and some suggestions as to amendments. These I prefer to embody in a special message.

Postoffice Department — Second Class Mail Matter.

The deficit every year in the postoffice department is largely caused by the low rate of postage of 1 cent a pound charged on second class mail matter, which includes not only newspapers, but magazines and miscellaneous periodicals. The actual loss growing out of the transmission of this second class mail matter at 1 cent a pound amounts to about $63,000,000 a year. The average cost of the transportation of this matter is more than 9 cents a pound. The statistics of 1907 show that second class mail matter constituted 6.59 per cent of the weight of all the mail and yielded only 5.19 per cent of the revenue.

The figures given are startling as show the payment by the government of an enormous subsidy to the newspapers, magazines and periodicals. A great saving might be made, amounting to much more than half of the loss, by imposing upon magazines and periodicals a higher rate of postage.

Postal Savings Banks.

I believe postal savings banks to be necessary in order to offer a proper inducement to thrift and saving to a great many people of small means who do not now have banking facilities and to whom such a system would offer an opportunity for the accumulation of capital. They will furnish a satisfactory substitute, based on sound principle and actual successful trial in nearly all the countries of the world, for the system of government guaranty of deposits now being adopted in several western states which, with deference to those who advocate it, seems to me to have in it the seeds of demoralization to conservative banking and certain financial disaster.

Ship Subsidy.

Following the course of my distinguished predecessor, I earnestly recommend to congress the consideration and passage of a ship subsidy bill.

Interior Department—New Mexico and Arizona.

The successful party in the last election in its national platform declared in favor of the admission as separate states of New Mexico and Arizona, and I recommend that legislation appropriate to this end be adopted.

Alaska.

With respect to the territory of Alaska, I recommend legislation which shall provide for the appointment by the president of a governor and also of an executive council, the members of which shall during their term of office reside in the territory and which shall have legislative powers sufficient to enable it to give to the territory local laws adapted to its present growth. I strongly deprecate legislation looking to the election of a territorial legislature in that vast district.

Conservation of Natural Resources.

In several departments there is presented the necessity for legislation looking to the further conservation of our national resources, and the subject is one of such importance as to require a more detailed and extended discussion than can be entered upon in this communication. For that reason I shall take an early opportunity to send a special message to congress.

The White Slave Trade.

There is urgent necessity for additional legislation and greater executive activity to suppress the recruiting of the ranks of prostitutes from the streams of immigration into this country—an evil which, for want of a better name, has been called "the white slave trade."

Bureau of Health.

There seems to be no reason why all the bureaus and offices in the general government which have to do with the public health or subjects akin thereto should not be united in a bureau to be called the "bureau of public health."

Political Contributions.

I urgently recommend to congress that a law be passed requiring that candidates in elections of members of the house of representatives and committees in charge of their candidacy and campaign file in a proper office of the United States government a statement of the contributions received and of the expenditures incurred in the campaign for such elections and that similar legislation be enacted in respect to all other elections which are constitutionally within the control of congress.

Conclusion.

Speaking generally, the country is in a high state of prosperity. There is every reason to believe that we are on the eve of a substantial business expansion, and we have just garnered a harvest unexampled in the market value of our agricultural products. The high prices which such products bring mean great prosperity for the farming community; but, on the other hand, they mean a very considerably increased burden upon those classes in the community whose yearly compensation does not expand with the improvement in business and the general prosperity. Various reasons are given for the high prices. The proportionate increase in the output of gold, which today is the chief medium of exchange and is in some respects a measure of value, furnishes a substantial explanation of at least part of the increase in prices. The increase in population and the more expensive mode of living of the people, which have not been accompanied by a proportionate increase in acreage production, may furnish a further reason. It is well to note that the increase in the cost of living is not confined to this country, but prevails the world over, and that those who would charge increases in prices to the existing protective tariff must meet the fact that the rise in prices has taken place almost wholly in those products of the factory and farm in respect to which there has been either no increase in the tariff or in many instances a very considerable reduction.

ZELAYA THE DICTATOR OF NICARAGUA

Sketch of His Stormy Career—A Bully and a Strategist.

The internal and international quarrels in which the Zelayan government of Nicaragua is now involved have brought forcibly to the attention of this and other governments the arrogant ruler of that turbulent Central American republic—Jose Santos Zelaya—who for nearly a score of years has been one of the most troublesome figures in international affairs.

That the latest difficulty in which he has become involved, through the execution of Groce and Cannon, citizens of the United States, will result in his final elimination from the field of politics, is now generally believed by diplomats in Washington. The long list of insults to which various nations have been subjected by this troublesome executive, and which culminated in the killing of Leonard Groce and Leroy Cannon, American residents of Nicaragua, will undoubtedly be avenged by Uncle Sam. While a substantial indemnity undoubtedly will be demanded for their deaths, the intervention of this nation is expected to result in the success of the present revolutionary movement under General Juan Estrada. This would mean Zelaya's deposition as president and undoubtedly his exile from Nicaragua.

For nearly a score of years this autocrat has ruled Nicaragua with an iron hand, substituting military force where moral sausion proved ineffective, and sowing the seed of discord among the other Central American states, which would ultimately be harvested to his advantage. All industries, whether native or foreign, have been compelled to pay toll to this avaricious ruler, who supports his various military movements with the proceeds. The most profitable of these, such as sugar, tobacco and coffee, are controlled by him or his rep esentatives, and the vast returns have made him immensely wealthy. One source of revenue, however, he has been unable to get control of, namely the vast mineral wealth on the eastern coast. Yankee ingenuity has developed this section, and despite the heart-breaking tariff and various other Zelayan schemes, the Americans have managed to retain their hold.

Zelaya has blamed the Americans for the many revolutions stirred up against him, and when the recent and most riotous uprising broke out in the Bluefields district, it did not serve to increase his affection. This has been the basis for the report that the execution of Groce and Cannon was purely a matter of personal revenge on the part of the Nicaraguan executive. Zelaya is a man with a purpose, and for many years, even before his advent to the presidency, has had in mind the union of the Central American states, with himself at the head. Born of wealthy parents, very little is known of his early life except that he is of "unmixed" blood. The date of his birth is fixed between 1845 and 1850. According to the best information obtainable, his early days were spent in the dirty little city of Managua, the capital of Nicaragua, where, with his indolent companions, he passed his time in gambling and cock fighting. As military service is compulsory, young Zelaya entered the army at an early age. This marked the beginning of his career. The energetic qualities of his character, which had long laid dormant, now asserted themselves.

The enormous power of the army in the affairs of the state formed a blazed path for his stormy career. He quickly recognized the vast undeveloped mineral and agricultural wealth of the Central American states, and the deterrent effect the revolutionary character of the inhabitants had on the country's future. His prophetic eye discerned the vast revenues that would ensue when the five states were formed into one harmonious nation. But he was also keen enough to appreciate his deficiencies. He knew he must possess a thorough knowledge of state and military affairs in order to realize this dream of empire. So with this end in view, he left his native country and spent ten years in traveling in Europe and the United States, where he studied the various forms of government and military training.

Fully equipped for his new enterprise he returned to Nicaragua, where his superior knowledge of military tactics won him a place at the head of the army. Then he waited for his opportunity. This came in 1893, when, after he had suppressed a revolutionary movement, he made himself president. The dramatic details of this event furnish a good illustration of Zelaya's character.

President Saracasa, who was then in office, and the members of his cabinet were seated in the council room of the capitol at Managua to welcome the victorious general. When Zelaya, summoned by his officers, strode majestically into the room, the president began his little speech of thanks, praising the conqueror for his great victory. But the expression in the piercing gray eyes of the stalwart soldier caused the words to die in his throat. Then drawing a revolver from his belt, Zelaya advanced to the table, while all present, with the exception of his escort, turned pale.

"The revolution is dead!" he said. "Long live the revolution! I am the revolution. Do you think I won the victory for you? No!

"My army holds the town and the country. The soldiers are devoted to me. It is useless for you to protest or resist.

"Today you must all leave the city under escort for the coast, and you will depart to the United States or Europe by the first steamer. It you refuse you will be shot."

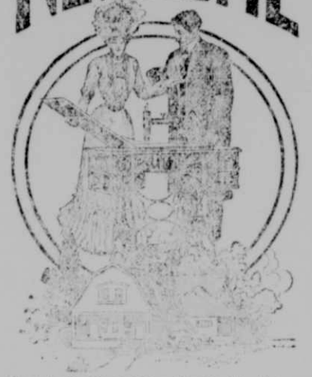
They went. Zelaya had now achieved the first step of his ambition. With a well equipped army, he quickly silenced all opposition, for as he was wont to say, "Opposition is anarchy, and anarchy must be suppressed." Soon after he assumed control, he issued a proclamation incorporating Mosquito Coast, which lies on the Atlantic side, under protest from the British consul, who was clapped into jail because of his persistency England immediately jumped in and brought Zelaya to his senses by forcing him to pay an indemnity of $75,000. In 1894 he drafted a new constitution, but, from a Zelayan point of view, there was a serious defect in it, which provided that a president could not succeed himself. He had this remedied by an amendment in 1896.

In the meantime, he had begun his active campaign against Honduras. The settlement of this was not satisfactory and was soon followed by another. His campaigns became so frequent that the Nicaraguan army was spending the greater part of its time marching across the state line. On the slightest pretext old troubles were revived, and when there was nothing else to fight about Zelaya would select the boundary line as an excuse, this being a never failing source of dispute since the states were first formed. Finally, with the aid of the United States, Mexico and Central America, a Peace Conference was held in Washington in 1897 and each republic signed an agreement not to interfere with the government of the others and agreed to refer all to a court of arbitration at Costa Rica. Under the watchful eye of this country and Mexico, this agreement has been fairly well carried out, although Zelaya has been charged several times with trying to destroy the Costa Rican Court.

His military efforts curbed by this agreement, Zelaya began exercising diplomacy and in August, 1898, he induced Honduras and Salvador to join a federation known as the United States of Central America. It soon became evident, however, that Zelaya wanted to be the president of the new republic, and govern it as autocratically as he had his own. The two states immediately protested and the federation was dissolved in November of the same year. But the international entanglements of Nicaragua were not the questions in which this ingenious ruler was most successful. His enemies were numerous and when the quadrennial election period came around he had to see to it that they were carefully removed. He developed a system of espionage which rivals that of Russia, and thousands of citizens, whose only crime was their opposition to the administration, were forced into exile, and their estates forfeited. Others were clapped into jail until the election was over, while some of the more dangerous element were placed against a stone wall as targets for a file of soldiers.

In one of the elections a unique scheme was devised by this clever politician to deceive the ignorant provincials and insure his election. It consisted in the printing of three names on the ballot—Jose, Santos and Zelaya—all candidates for the presidency. The result showed the election of all three; or, in other words, Jose Santos Zeyala was unanimously re-elected. By such methods Zelaya has managed to be thrice re-elected, in spite of his enemies.

Many attempts have been made to assassinate him, and in 1902 his palace at Managua was blown up and 150 soldiers killed, but the wily executive escaped unharmed. His undisputed bravery and many miraculous escapes from death have led the more superstitious of his enemies to believe that he is in league with the devil.



In one instance he learned of a plot that was being organized against him, in which several of his officers were involved. Through his spies he discovered their meeting place and determined to surprise them. The conspirators were gathered around a table discussing the details of the plot when there came a knock on the door. When the summons was answered, the officers were dumfounded to see the president standing in the doorway.

"Good evening, gentlemen," he said, advancing towards the table. "I heard you had a party here this evening and thought I would look in and share the fun. Quite a distinguished gathering of my officers! You all seen serious. Discussing military matters, I suppose?" He took his seat with the party and chatted affably for about a half hour, while the conspirators stirred uneasily in their seats. Finally, filling his glass with wine, he raised it and said: "I will give you a toast. Here's long life to the President of Nicaragua and confusion to traitors!" He then dashed his glass against a window a squad of soldiers entered and placed the conspirators under arrest. When they were brought up for trial, however, he was unusually lenient with them. Some were imprisoned for long terms while others were deported.

Thus, for nearly twenty years, this strange mixture of courage avarice and illimitable ambition has been in supreme power in the hot bed of revolution. Although he has installed modern methods of transportation, lighting heating, etc., all improvements have been made with a view to increasing his revenue and filling his coffers. His courage and purpose won for him the title of the Napoleon of Central America when he first came into power; but his unpolitic methods and unsatiable avarice have changed this to the Castro of Nicaragua.

Present indications are, however, that he has reached the end of his rope, and his fate will probably be the same as that of the Venezuelan tyrant. The present revolutionary movement, is by far the strongest that has ever been organized against him, and the late news dispatches report that thousands of Nicaraguan exiles are returning to their native land and enlisting under the standards of General Juan Estrada, the revolutionary leader.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1909.

CONGRESS.

The Sixty-first Congress was called into extra session for a special purpose—the readjustment of the Dingley tariff schedules. The regular session will take up the legislative routine where it was laid down by the preceding Congress. There are many important questions of legislation left unsettled by the Sixtieth Congress which the Sixty-first will be obliged to take up. The President has made it plainly understood by various public declarations that he favors certain amendments to the Interstate Commerce Law such as he believes to be necessary to the realization of the Rooseveit policy of a larger degree of federal control over railroad rates. He is also known to favor some form of marine-subsidy enactment that will prove effective in establishing American shipping lines in the foreign trade. What are known as the conservation and development policies are prominently in the public thought, and Congress must take up various phases of these for consideration and definite action.

Notwithstanding the large amount of talk that has has been afloat concerning what certain members of the majority representation in the House will endeavor to accomplish in the way of readjustment of the newly framed tariff schedules, there is no reason to expect that the regular session will consume time in an attempt to reformulate the work of the extra session. The public mind is in no frame to contemplate patiently a reraising of tariff questions. Whether the Payne law is, as Speaker Cannon declares it to be, the best tariff law which has ever been enacted, or whether it be as defective as those who are attacking it represent it to be, the plain common-sense view is that it should be given a fair trial. Thus far, judged in its broad and general effects, it seems to be operating in a way calculated to promote activity in all branches of industrialism and trade. The insurgent movement, based as it seems to be upon opposition to the tariff schedules, is not likely to prove a formidable demonstration.

THE DEATH RECORD.

ISAAC KUYKENDALL.

Capt. Isaac Kuykendall, one of the best known of the older residents of Hampshire county, W. Va., died at his home at the Blue place near the Wire Bridge on the South Branch of the Potomac. He was 70 years old and was ill but a short time. He was captain of Company F, Seventh Virginia Cavalry, in the Confederate Army during the Civil War, having won promotion by deeds of daring and bravery. He was a devout member ot the Presbyterian church for many years. He was a brother of James, William and Thomas Kuykendall, all well known in Hampshire county. He is survived by his wife and several children, all grown.

JOHN LIPSCOMB.

Died, at his home in Oakland, Tuesday afternoon, after months of suffering with dropsy and a complication of diseases, John Lipscomb, aged fifty years, leaving a widow and several children. The funeral took place yesterday afternoon at two o'clock, with interment in the Oakland cemetery.

NANCY ELLEN KISNER.

Mrs. Nancy Ellen Kisner, wife of Mr. Jefferson Kisner, died very suddenly at her home in Hutton last Thursday at noon as she was engaged in preparing the midday meal for her husband and children. For a number of years the deceased was subject to periodical attacks of heart disease, which ultimately resulted in her sudden demise. She was a member of St. Paul's M. E. church in Oakland, from which edifice she was buried Saturday after services conducted by the pastor and Rev. J. M. Davis. She was highly esteemed by all who knew her and leaves besides her husband four children, her mother, four brothers and one sister. She was a sister of David Stephens, of Oakland. The interment was made in the Oakland cemetery.

Prizes for Flowers.

At the Maryland State Horticultural Exhibit in Baltimore last Thursday and Friday, the exhibit of monnted and pressed wild flowers, prepared and exhibited by Mr. Joseph E. Harned, of Oakland, was awarded the premium. The exhibit comprised 200 specimens of native wild flowers and filled four tables. It created much interest and was much admired.

Messrs. H. Weber & Sons, of Oakland, took first prize for light pink carnations, also first prize for variegated carnations and second prizes for dark pink and red carnations. They also took second prize for the fines vase of sweet peas.

STATE ROADS COMMISSION AND ITS WORK

Nearly a Hundred Miles of New Public Highways Being Built.

Chairman Tucker, of the State Roads Commission, has prepared a summary of the work done by the State Roads Commission during the year, and shows that contracts have been awarded for 87 30-100 miles of highways, and in addition to this the Commission is directly engaged in the construction of 20 45-100 miles of road, the work being done by county officials under the direct supervision of the State without a contract. In this mileage is embraced almost every conceivable kind of road construction, one of the objects being to devise some means whereby the cost of road building can be reduced.

Governor Crothers believes that ways can be devised whereby the cost will be greatly lessened, estimating the reduction, providing the necessary legislation is secured, at possibly one-third.

The total of the contracts awarded by the Commission amounts to $856,-188.65, and this, augmented by the work being done directly by the State, will bring the sum up to $1,000,000.

In addition to the method of general supervision the State Commission also permitted the County Commissioners of Wicomico to bid in their official capacity for roads in that county, so the savings on the contract will be paid directly into the county treasury to be used in continuing road improvement. Under this plan the profits of the contractor go directly to the county, guaranteeing to that county the expenditure of Wicomico's full allotment on the Wicomico roads.

Macadam is the standard road-building material for the counties. Departures from this rule were made in Charles, where gravel was used, and the contracts for Calvert and Anne Arundel counties simply call for grading, draining, bridging and widening the roads. These thoroughfares were little more than cattle paths, the width of the road often being no more than eight feet. On such roads one vehicle must draw up to the side while another passes.

Special plans were deemed necessary for the roads in the immediate vicinity of Baltimore city, because of the volume of traffic that passes over them. Pitch macadam was the material selected for the Philadelphia and Hartford roads and vitrified brick for the Falls road. Such improvements cost heavily, as the contract price shows, for the additional cost of the pitch preparation was only a part of the expense. The macadam had to be laid deeper and the road bed made wider.

Under the law by which the State Roads Commission is working $500,000 was allowed for disbursement during the first year and $1,000,000 for every subsequent year until the $5,000,000 loan was exhausted. During 1908 only about $100,000 was spent, so the Commission had practically $1,400,000 at its disposal at the beginning of this year.

Summing up of the work actually done was completed by the Commission on October 15. The percentage of roadways completed varied greatly. Since then there has been six weeks of ideal weather for road building. It is now estimated that 10 per centum of the contracts have been completed. If the weather continues open the contracts will be in a fair way to completion by Christmas

Contracts have been awarded for work by the contractors under the supervision of the State Roads Commission for 1909 as follows:

DECEMBER PLEASANT

Weather will be Fair and Dry for Most of the Month.

Peter R. Smith forecasts the weather for December as follows:

December will open under the influence of the last storm of November, which will be in a cold wave. The temperature will change to much warmer on the 4th or 5th.

Cloudiness and high winds will be the advance messengers of a renewal of a wave of weather disturbance, which will be attended with light rains and some snow flurries on the 6th and 7th, touching most parts of the country. Behind the storm clearing cold weather will show up on the 8th, 9th and 10th.

On the 10th or 11th the temperature will moderate and a storm wave of much force will center on the 12th. Waves of disturbance are from 20 to 36 hours earlier in forming and starting in the west than they are here. This disturbed wave will touch most parts of the country either in rain, wind or snow. The period is in the winter solstice, which is an exciting factor due to certain relations of earth and sun from the 10th of the month to its close. The period in question from the 12th to the 15th will embrace severe winter storms both on land and sea; also it will be followed by a very cold wave, which will wind up the period about the 15th.

More stormy weather will center on the 16th, 17th and 18th. The disturbing effect of the winter soltice will be manifest in snow flurries at this and all the following periods of the month.

A storm period centers on the 22nd, 23rd and 24th. The deepest snows of the winter are most likely to fall at the center of the period embracing the shortest days. The period will wind up with a blizzard from the northwest and a cold spell of weather.

The last period of the month embraces the 27th, 28th and 29th. On these days renewed storms of rain, sleet and snow will pass over most parts of the country, and on the northwestern tangent of the wave blizzards of much force will prevail, which may spread far into central parts.

December is likely to be above the usual average of the month for dry, fair and pleasant weather till much of the month is past.

Last Meeting of Old Board.

The retiring Board of County Commissioners held its last meeting as such Monday and Tuesday of this week with all members present, when several matters of business was transacted. The members of this body go out of office with an excellent record for painstaking and diligence in looking after the welfare of the tax payers of the county. The new board will meet and organize sometime during the first week in January next. Mr. Fike, a member of the retiring board, will retain his office for two years longer, he having been elected two years ago for four years. Mr. Friend and Mr. Smith are the two retiring members and will be succeeded by Mr. D. M. Dixon and Mr. Walter M. Lowdermilk.

Honor Roll of the Bittinger School.

The following named pupils of the Bittinger school made an average of 90 per cent. in daily recitations and merited 100 per cent. in deportment for November, 1909:

Fourth Grade—Hulda Stark, Lena Keller, Oscar Hetrick, Lester Hetrick and Dewey R. Wiley.

Fifth Grade—Ruth Beahm, Estelle Beahm, Edward Buckle and Roy Hetrick.

Sixth Grade—Leonora Wiley, Myrtle Emory, Naomi Orendorf, Harrison Wiley, and Clyde Broadwater.

J. C. BEAHM, Principal.

Capt. Harrison to Retire.

Captain George W. Harrison, of Piedmont, W. Va., who has been with the railroad company now known as the Western Maryland from the time it first went into operation as the Cumberland and Piedmont railroad, and later as a part of the West Virginia Central, will be retired January 1, 1910, as the oldest employe of the company in point of age and service.

What Became of the Six Little Roosters.

Did you ever hear the story of the six roosters, the six pullets and the Methodist conference? A friend of mine had the nicest little hen house. Then some of the colored brethren in the neighborhood held a Methodist conference. The six little roosters all disappeared. So when the colored Methodist Bishop came by my friend asked him if he knew anything about her six little roosters. The Bishop winked and said "he guessed they had all gone into the ministry, as he didn't think they would make good laymen."

DAVIS HARDWARE.

BOY ACCIDENTALLY SHOT BY YOUTHFUL COMPANION

Charles Leonard East Died As a Result of the Wounds He Recived.

Another of those unfortunate and wholly unexpected gunning accidents has been added to the great list in Garrett county, whereby another young man lost his life and two families have been plunged into the depths of despair.

Last Thursday about noon two youths, Charles Leonard East and William Collier, aged sixteen and fifteen years respectively, both of Friendsville, were at the home of the latter's uncle, Mr. T. O. Collier, at the Cove, and went from there to the woods for the purpose of hunting rabbits. While seated on a log in the woods the boys heard an engine on a lumber road approaching and with one accord they jumped to their feet and started toward the road when the gun in the hands of young Collier exploded, the charge of shot entering his companion's leg just below the knee, making a terrible wound. In this condition and with the help of the Collier boy young East made his way to the home of Mr. Collier, more than a mile distant, when a physician was summoned and upon his arrival all that was possible to be done to save the sufferer's life was resorted to, but his condition, by the great loss of blood sustained, was such that death ensued half an hour afterward.

The remains were taken to Friendsville and there the funeral occurred Saturday afternoon at two o'clock from the Lutheran church, of which the deceased was a member.

The following resolutions of respect were adopted by the Lutheran Sunday school of Friendsville, of which the deceased young man was a member, and are published by request of the committee:

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Heavenly Father, in his wise and loving providence, to call out of our midst Charles Leonard East, one of our number, the teacher of the infant class, hence we, the officers and teachers of the Sunday school, do offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we hereby give expression to the esteem and regard in which we have ever held our young brother.

Resolved, That we note with pleasure that he was seldom absent from his place in the school, and that he was willing and anxious to do all that was required of him.

Resolved, That we will ever cherish the memory of his genial and sunny ways of speech and action, and especially his kindness and courtesy to his parents.

Resolved, That we hereby extend to his parents and the rest of the family our sincere sympathy in their irreparable loss, and have reasons to believe that their loss is his gain.

Resolved, That we invoke the blessing of God upon them, and that it is our prayer that He may strengthen and comfort them in this their hour of sorrow.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the family, and also sent to the Oakland papers and to the Turkeyfoot News for publication.

Steven's Rifles,

The Best Advertised and Best Known Boys' Rifle on the Market.

Every time you pick up a magazine you wonder how much money the Stevens Arms & Tool Company pay for advertising. They surely do put it on thick. Every boy knows this rifle. How your boy's eyes will stick out if he finds one of these among his Christmas presents. You can bet he will drop all the rest and hang on to his rifle. The right kind of a boy takes to a rifle like a duck to water. Beware of the boys who don't like guns. There is something unnatural about them. Give the boy a Steven's rifle.

DAVIS HARDWARE.

Your Share Is $34 98.

Every person in the United States should have a stake of $34.98 if the money in circulation on December 1, were evenly divided. This is based on the treasury's estimate that the population of the United States is 89,524,000 at this time.

The monthly circulation statement, which was issued by the treasury department the other day, shows that the general stock of money in the United States on December 1, was $3,428,602,-048, which is an increase of $712,935 since a month ago, Of this total there was in circulation $3,131,310,934, an increase of $6,631,877 over a month ago, and of $13,749,901 over a year ago. This is in striking contrast to the $816,-266,721 in circulation on Janurry 1, 1879, for which comparative figures are given.

The treasury held as assets of the government on December 1, last, $397,-291,114, which does not include the $35,951,787 of deposits of public money in national bank depositories to the credit of the United States treasury.

GIVE THEM A START

The New Year is rapidly approaching. This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

One Dollar opens an account and entitles the depositor to one of our Savings Banks.

COME and SEE THE FREE Sewing Machine

Spend a most delightful half hour in our store, examining this wonderful Sewing Machine.

The Free is as different from every other sewing machine as your wash machine is different from your wash board, and simply because it is "superior."

MR. WILLIAM C. FREE, president of the Free Sewing Machine Co., spent the best years of his life laboring to produce in The FREE Sewing Machine, a machine which would possess all the good points of every other machine, which would eliminate all the bad points of every other machine, and which would possess some 15 special improvements. He succeeded!

Here are a few of the Improvements

Which will arouse your enthusiasm:

The "Rotoscillo" Movement, Mr. Free's Invention.
The Eight Sets of Ball-Bearings.
The Beautiful French Leg Design, which does not show dust.
The Automatic Shuttle Ejector.
The Automatic Locking Drawers.
The Rotary Spool Pin, which never breaks a thread.
The Automatic Tension Release, which never breaks a needle.
The Needle which can't be put in wrong.
The Improved Head Latch.

THE FREE Sewing Machine is Insured

For Five Years, against Breakage, Wear, Fire, Tornado, Lightning and Water.

This means that if from any such cause any part, (a needle, belt attachment, etc.,) or all the machine is destroyed it will be replaced free to you.

The Free Sewing Machine Company is the only company which has enough faith in their machine to dare "insure" it.

Attachments, which go with the Free are the best and do beautiful work.

GARRETT COUNTY WHEAT TOOK SWEEPSTAKES PRIZE

At the Recent Meeting of the State Horticultural Society in Baltimore.

Garrett county has come off with the the best prizes for cereals at the State Horticultural Society meeting held in Baltimore last week when the sweepstakes prize for wheat was awarded a Garrett countian and first prizes were given for oats, barley and buckwheat. This record for cereal crops, taken in connection with the prizes awarded Garrett county last year for apples, brings our native county to the fore and the publicity which will ensue warrants us in the statement that Garrett county will before many years stand at the head of the state in agriculture and other necessaries making for the benefit of mankind.

The sweepstakes prize for wheat was awarded Mr. George T. Porter, of Oakland, on his exhibit of the Fultz variety.

Other prizes awarded Garrett countians were as follows:

On yellow corn for the Mountain district Mr. A. P. Enlow, of Hoyes, was awarded second premium, and Ridder Bros., of Oakland, third.

Prizes for Oats—First, Geo. T. Porter, Oakland; third, Thomas E. Bishoff, Hoyes.

Prizes for Spring Barley—First, H. Weber & Sons Co., Oakland; second, Thomas E. Bishoff, Hoyes; third, Nicholas Merrill, Oakland.

Buckwheat—First prize, Geo. T. Porter, Oakland.

Messrs. H. Weber & Sons Co. took a first and second prize for two different varieties of cauliflower.

For Garrett county potatoes the following awards were made:

Rural New Yorker—First prize, Urias McKenzie, Finzel.

Prosperity—First prize, W. McCulloh Brown.

The ladies of the Lutheran church will serve supper this afternoon and evening and have on sale a large assortment of fancy and useful articles. You are cordially invited.

Mr. E. J. Fringer, who spent the past several months at Fayetteville, W. Va., returned to his home in Oakland Tuesday night and will remain here during the balance of the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Bush and daughter, Miss Ora, who were on a driving trip through portions of West Virginia, including Petersburg and Hartmonsville, returned to their home in Oakland Tuesday afternoon.

Dr. B. Frank Selby went to Baltimore Monday night with the expectation of accompanying Mrs. Selby to her home in Oakland this morning, but last night she suffered a sudden relapse and it was deemed inexpedient by the surgeons at the hospital to allow her removal, much to the regret of the lady's many friends here.

Mr. John Lee Harne, cashier of the Banking and Trust Company of Bluefield, W. Va., spent Saturday and Sunday in Oakland as the guest of his father and other relatives. For several months past the elder Mr. Harne has been extremely ill, suffering with asthma and has been confined to his home almost all the time since he was taken sick.

Capt. A. N. Pritchard, of Mannington, W. Va., who died a few months ago at his summer home in Mountain Lake Park, was a rich man, according to the records in the county clerk's office at Mannington. The estate left by the deceased was scheduled as being worth $137,333.04. Of this $101,957.99 was in personal property; $34,035.05 in realty, and the residue, $1,340, in royalty interests.

GAS COMPANY NOT RESPONSIBLE

For the Condition of the Oakland-Deer Park Road.

To the Editor of The Republican:

We beg space in your paper to reply in part to the "Correspondent Directs Attention To The State Of The Highways" of last week's issue.

In part, the letter reads as follows: "At one part of the road there seemed to be a ditch across the roadway, which gave me such a jolt that I thought the vehicle would collapse on the spot. If this ditch is the work of the gas company it is the duty of our County Commissioners to compel that company to at once put the road in order."

We desire to say to your correspondent and the public that there is no such ditch of the gas company's working, between Deer Park and Oakland. We have been very careful to refill and tamp all road crossings. A personal inspection of very recent date shows our two crossings on the Deer Park road to be in excellent condition. We have been especially careful in looking after the matter of road crossings and and stand ever ready and willing to make any and all repairs of our ditches on any highway. Information regarding defective ditches though of the slightest nature, will be thankfully received and immediately looked after.

We desire the public to know this, and to know that it does not require newspaper publication or compulsory action of the County Commissioners to secure repairs of our ditches.

We appreciate very highly the road franchises granted by the County Commisssioners, and it is not our desire to violate or abuse this right in any manner. We consider it unfair and very unjust for anyone to insinuate or imply that any mudhole or ditch across the highway is the work of the gas company. This is not only an implying charge on the gas company, but also on the County Commissioners. We believe the writer of this implied charge wrote it thoughtlessly. We cannot think his writing was malicious We know he wrote about a matter upon which he had not given the slightest investigation, for had he investigated he would have found that the ditch was not one of the gas company's working, and with that knowledge we do not believe he would have implied the charge which places the County Commissioners and the gas company before the public in an unjust light.

Suggestions for Christmas Presents

On a cold winter night, when the wind is whistling outside, nothing can beat a bright, open fireplace. It is great for the family to sit around the fire with Grandpa and Grandma, Mom and Pop and all the kids and tell stories and pop corn or toast marshmallows. These fireside re-unions will be remembered for many, many years when the family is all scattered. The fireplace of today is all changed, instead of wood fuel we have the natural gas logs and open polished coppered front stoves that give the finishing touch to the home.

Natural Gas Savings.

THE H. B. Shaffer Company of Frostburg, Maryland, in a testimonial has this to say:

"We have been using natural gas for lighting our general store room on Main Street during the past year. Our bills for the same totaled $30.25 and for maintenance, $10; total $40.25. During the year prior to the installation of natural gas we paid $72 for artificial gas, so THE SAVING TO US WAS $31.75 FOR THE YEAR. It cost us $60 to make the natural gas installation."

Mr. D. E. Shaffer, whose home is at 126 East Main Street, Frostburg, Maryland, says it cost him $21.50 for natural gas used in his home during the year 1908. The gas was used for heating, lighting and cooking. Formerly he paid $40 a year for heating and cooking alone, so he saves $18.50 by using natural gas and VIRTUALLY GETS HIS LIGHTING FOR NOTHING, and, in addition to all this, as he himself adds, he HAS THE GREAT CONVENIENCE OF LESS LABOR AND DIRT.

Mr. J. C. Weiser, of J. C. Weiser & Son, Frostburg, Maryland, says regarding his experience with natural gas:

"I used natural gas for the past year, 1908, for cooking, heating and lighting in my residence and store, No. 149 East Main Street. I paid for the entire year $59.50 for gas and $5 for maintenance, a total of $64.50.

"During the year prior to this natural gas installation I paid for electric light, $48; coal, $24; total $72. The SAVING to me for the year WAS $17.50, BESIDES GIVING ME A BETTER LIGHTED STORE ROOM AND CONVENIENCE, LESS THE DIRT AND LABOR CONNECTED WITH THE USE OF COAL."

The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Copyright, 1908, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

with the scar appeared, eyed the retreating figures doubtfully and then started after them. That he did not know them Hillard was reasonably certain. He assumed that the Italian saw a possible flirtation. He rose quickly and followed.

The four departed from the casino and crossed toward the Hotel de Paris, the women in the lead. As yet they had not observed that they were being followed. The car stops at this turn. As the women came to a stand one of them saw the approaching men. Instantly she fled up the street. The other hesitated, then pursued her companion. Whatever doubts the Italian might have entertained, this flight dissipated then. He knew now—he knew! With a sharp cry of exultation he broke into a run. So did Hillard. People turned and stared, but none sought to intercept any of the runners. In Monte Carlo there are many strange scenes, and the knight errant often finds that his bump of caution has suddenly developed. And there were no police about; they were on the casino terraces or strolling through the gardens.

"A lady? Grace of Mary, that is droll!"

Past the park the quartet ran. Then came a stretch of darkness between one electric lamp and another. And then, as if whisked away by magic, the foremost woman disappeared. The other halted, breathless. She started again, but too late. The Italian caught her roughly and quickly tore aside the veil.

"Kitty Killigrew!" Hillard cried.

He sprang forward and grasped the Italian by the shoulders. The Italian struck out savagely, but Hillard seized his arm. Each man could hear the breathing of the other, quick and deep.

"You meddling dog!" gasped Hillard.

"Take care lest the dog bite, signor. Release my arm and stand aside!"

"Presently. Now, that way is yours," said Hillard, pointing.

"Are you certain?" the Italian hissed.

"So certain that if you do not obey me I shall call the police."

"I should like nothing better," replied the Italian, with a coolness which dumfounded Hillard.

"Do you know these ladies?"

"Do you?" insolently.

"My knowing them does not matter. But it is any gentleman's concern when a man gives pursuit to a lady who does not wish to meet him."

"A lady? Grace of Mary, that is droll!"

Hillard released the imprisoned arm. There was a patent raillery, a quizzical insolence which convinced Hillard that the Italian had not given chase out of an idle purpose.

"We shall meet again," the Italian said softly.

"I hope not," replied Hillard frankly. "However, you may find me at the Hotel de Londres."

The Italian laughed again. "You understand the language well," debatingly.

"And the people too." Hillard had no desire to pass the time of day with his opponent.

"Well, I have said that we shall meet again, and it must be so."

"And your hat, as well as mine, is still in the casino. The night is cold."

The Italian permitted his glance to wander over Hillard critically. He swung round on his heel and walked rapidly down the street. Hillard turned to reassure Kitty. Kitty had CHAPTER XIII.

MANY NAPOLEONS.

MERRIHEW sighed with perfect content. The pretty woman sitting opposite smiled at him tenderly, and he smiled back abstractedly, as a man sometimes will when his mind tries to gather in comprehensively a thought and a picture which are totally different. Before him in neat little lustrous stacks stood 7,080 francs in gold, 350 effigies of "Napoleon the Little"—7,000 francs, $1,400, more than half the sum of his letter of credit!

He counted off ten coins and placed them on the second dozen. The ball rolled into No. 23. He leaned back again with a second sigh, and the pretty woman smiled a second smile, and the wooden rake pushed the beautiful gold over to him. He was playing a system, one bet in every three turns of the wheel in stakes of $40 and $80. To be sure, he lost now and then, but the next play he doubled and retrieved. Oh, the American Comic Opera company should be well taken care of! Two more bets and then he would pocket his winnings and go. He laid 40 francs on No. 26 and 400 on black, leaned upon his elbows and studied the pretty woman, who smiled. If she spoke English—he scribbled the question on a scrap of paper and pushed it across the table, blushing a little as he did so. She read it, or at least she tried to read it, and shook her head with the air of one deeply puzzled. He sighed again, reflecting that there might have been a pleasant adventure had he only understood French.

Twenty-six, black and even!

Merrihew slid back his chair and rose. He swept up the gold by the handful and poured it into his pockets, casually and unconcernedly, as if this was an everyday affair and of minor importance. But as a matter of fact his heart was beating fast, and there was a wild desire in his throat to yell with delight. Eighteen hundred dollars, 9,000 francs! A merry music they made in his pockets—jingle, jingle, jingle! And then he saw Hillard coming across the hall. Instantly he forced the joy from his face and eyes and dropped his chin in his collar. He became in that moment the picture of desolation.

"Is it all over?" asked Hillard gravely.

"All over!" monotonously.

"Come over to the cafe, then. I've something important to tell you."

"Found them?" with rousing interest.

"I shall tell you only when we get out of this place. Come."

Hillard put out a friendly hand.

"I am sorry, boy. I wanted you to win something. Cheer up! We'll shake the dust of this place in the morning."

"Oh, for a vacant lot and a good old whooper-up! Feel!" cried Merrihew, touching his side pockets.

"What is it?" asked Hillard.

"What is it? It is 450 napoleons!"

"What?" sharply, even doubtfully.

"That's what! Eighteen hundred dollars! My system will have no funeral tonight."

He caught Hillard by the sleeve and fairly ran him over to the cafe.

"Nearly two thousand!" murmured Hillard. "Well, of all the luck!"

"It does seem too good to be true. I say, what's the matter with your cravat?"

Hillard looked down at the fluttering end and reknotted it carelessly.

"I saw Kitty tonight," he said.

To Merrihew it seemed that all the clatter about him had died away suddenly. He breathed deeply. "Where is she?"

"I'll explain what has happened."

Merrihew listened eagerly.

"And why did you bother about the Italian?" he interrupted. "Why didn't you hold on to Kitty?"

"I confess it was stupid of me, but the gentleman with the scar was an unknown quantity. Besides, why should Kitty run away from me of all persons? And why, when I spoke to them in the casino, did they ignore me completely?"

"It's your confounded prima donna. She's at the bottom of all this, take my word for it. Something deliberately wrong. Trying on masks and hide in the confusion for a lark. Why didn't you run down?"

"I wanted to, but it wasn't the psychological moment. You can't run a man down when he practically surrenders."

"You're too particular. But what's the matter with Kitty? I don't understand. To see you was to know that I was round somewhere. She ran away from me as well as from you. What shall we do?"

"Start the hunt again or give it up entirely. There are some villages between here and Nice. It must be in that direction. They were about to board the car for Nice. If you hadn't been gambling, if you had been sensible and stayed with me"—

"Come, now, that won't wash. You know very well that you urged me to play."

"You would have played without any urging."

"And who is this Italian anyhow?" asked Merrihew. "And why did he run after your prima donna?"

"That is precisely what I wish to find out," answered Hillard.

"I'm afraid that Kitty has fallen among a bad lot. I'll wager it is

He swept up the gold by the handful some anarchist business. They are always plotting the assassination of kings over here, and this mysterious woman is just the sort to rope in a confiding girl like Kitty. One thing if I come across our friend with the scar"—

"You will wisely cross to the opposite side of the street. To find out what this tangle is it is not necessary to jump head first into it."

"A bad lot."

"That may be, but no anarchists, my boy."

Hillard was a bit sore at heart. That phrase recurred and recurred: "A lady? Grace of Mary, that is droll!" The shadow of disillusion crept into his bright dream and clouded it—to build so beautiful a castle and to see it tumble at a word! The Italian had spoken with a contempt based on more than suspicion.

"Kitty doesn't wish to meet us," Merrihew bitterly observed. "So we'll light out for Venice in the morning. I'm not going to be made a fool of for the best woman alive."

In the meantime the lamps in the casino had been extinguished. In the harbor the yachts stood out white and spectral. The tram for Nice shrieked down the incline toward the promontory. At the foot of the road which winds up to the palaces the car was signaled, and two women boarded. Both were veiled. They maintained a singular silence. At Villefranche they got out. The women stopped before the gates of a villa and rang the porter's bell. Once in the room above, the silence between the two women came to an end.

"Safe! I am so tired. What a night!" the elder of the two women sighed.

"What a night truly! I should like to know what it has all been about. To run through dark streets and alleys, to hide for hours, as if I were a thief or a fugitive from justice, is neither to my taste nor to my liking."

"Kitty," she began sadly, "in this world no one trusts us wholly. We must know why. Loyalty must have reasons; chivalry must have facts. You have vowed your love and loyalty a hundred times, and still when a great crisis confronts me you question, you grow angry, you complain, because my reasons are unknown to you. It was blind terror which made me run. I counted not the consequences. I shall tell you why I am lonely, why the world, bright to you, is dark. I am proud, but I shall bend my pride." With a quick movement she lifted her head high, and her eyes burned into Kitty's very heart. "I am"—

"Stop! No, no! I forbid you!" Kitty put her hands over her ears. She might gain the secret, but she knew that she would lose the heart of the woman it concerned. "I am wrong, wrong. I have promised to follow you loyally, without question. I will keep that promise. I am only angry because you would not let me speak to Mr. Hillard. He is very handsome," Kitty added thoughtfully. "He is strong too."

"Strong and cruel as a tiger. How I hate him! But thank you, Kitty; thank you. Sooner or later, if we stay together, I must tell you. The confidence will do me good." Kitty approached, and La Signorina drew her close. "I have wrought harm to no one. But on my side they will tell you that I have been terribly wronged. And all I wish is to be left alone, alone. It was cruel of me to forbid you to speak to Mr. Hillard. But I wish him to recollect me pleasantly, as a whimsical being who came into his life one night and vanished out of it in two hours."

"But supposing the memory cuts deeply," ventured Kitty. "Men fall in love with less excuse than this."

"Nonsense!" La Signorina opened the window to air the room. She lingered, musing. "You are very good to me, Kitty."

"I can't help being good to you, you strange, lovely woman, for your sake as well as for mine. Now I am going to write a letter."

La Signorina still lingered by the window.

Merrihew was pocketing currency in exchange for his gold when Hillard passed an open letter to him:

My Dear Mr. Hillard—Do not seek us. It will be useless. If Mr. Merrihew is with you, tell him that some day I will explain away the mystery. But this please make plain to him—if he insists upon searching for me he will only double my unhappiness.

KITTY KILLIGREW.

Merrihew soberly tucked the letter away. "I knew it," he said simply. "She is in some trouble or other, some tangle, and fears to drag us into it. Who left a letter here this morning?" he asked of the concierge.

"A small boy from Villefranche."

"Just my luck," said Merrihew. "I said that it would be of no use to hunt in the smaller towns. Well, we had better take the luggage back to the rooms. I am going to Villefranche."

"You will be wasting time. After what happened last night I am certain they will be gone. Let us respect their plans, hard as it may seem to you."

"But you?"

"Oh, don't bother about me. I have relegated my little romance to the garret of no account things, at least for the present," said Hillard, with an enigmatical smile. "Make up your mind—we have only twenty minutes."

"Oh, divine afflatus! And you lay down the chase so readily as this?" Merrihew was scornfully indignant.

"I would travel the breadth of the continent were I sure of meeting this woman. But she has become a will-o'-the-wisp, and I am too old and like comfort too well to pursue impossibilities."

"But why did she leave you that mask?" demanded Merrihew. "She must have meant something by that."

"True, but for the life of me I can't figure out what."

"But I don't like the idea of leaving Kitty this way without a final effort to rescue her from the clutches of this fascinating adventuress."

"I admit nothing, my boy, save that the keenness of the chase is gone. As for Kitty, she's a worldly little woman and can take good care of herself. Her letter should be sufficient."

"But it isn't. A woman's 'don't' often means 'do.' If Kitty really expects me to search for her and I do not she will never believe in me again."

"Perhaps your knowledge of women is more extensive than mine," said Hillard.

But this flattery did not appeal to Merrihew. "Bosh! There's something you haven't told me about that makes you so indifferent."

This was a shrewd guess, but Hillard had his reasons for not letting his friend see how close he had shot. "A lady? Grace of Mary, that is droll!" He could not cast this out of his thought. He floated between this phrase and Mrs. Sandford's frank defense of her girlhood friend.

Hillard espied a beggar leaning over the parapet.

"Time flies," he warned. "Which is it to be?"

"We'll go on to Venice. It would be folly for me to continue the hunt alone."

At 7 that evening they stepped out of the station in Venice—the blue twilight of Venice that curves down from the hollow heavens, softening a bit of ugliness here, accentuating a bit of loveliness there. Here Merrihew found one of his dreams come true, and his first vision of the Grand canal, with its gondolas and barges and queer little bobtailed skiffs, was never to leave him. Hillard hunted for his old gondolier, but could not find him. So he chose one Achille, No. 154. With their trunks, which they had picked up at Genoa, and small luggage in the hotel barge they had the gondola all to themselves.

Instead of following the Grand canal Achille took the short cut through the Ruga di San Giovanni and the Rio di San Polo.

Out into the Grand canal again. As they swept under the last bridge before coming out into the hotel district Hillard espied a beggar leaning over the parapet. The moonlight shone full in his face.

"Stop!" cried Hillard to Achille.

The beggar took to his heels, and when Hillard stepped out of the gondola the beggar had disappeared.

"Who was it?" asked Merrihew indifferently.

"Giovanni!"

CHAPTER XIV.

O'MALLY SUGGESTS.

IN a bedroom in one of the cheap little pensiones which shoulder one another along the Riva degli Schiaboni sat three men. All three were smoking execrable tobacco. The castaways of the American Comic Opera troupe were on the anxious seat.

"O'Mally, what's your opinion of La Signorina?" said Worth.

"What about her?"

"What do you think of her? She's not one of us; she belongs to another class, and the stage is only an incident."

"Well, I don't know what to think. I've pumped Killigrew, but she seems to be in the dark with the rest of us. That ring and the careless way she offered it as security convince me that she doesn't belong. But what a voice!"

"She is without exception one of the most beautiful women I ever saw or care to see," rejoined Worth.

Smith and O'Mally exchanged a swift, comprehensive look.

Worth rose to go to Cook's office for possible letters, but abruptly returned to announce that the two ladies had returned from Monte Carlo. The actors proceeded to the parlor and greeted the prima donna and Kitty.

"We lost," explained the latter.

"I was very foolish," said the erstwhile prima donna. "I might have known that when one is unlucky one may become still more unlucky. But I did so wish to win. I wanted to bring back enough gold to send you all to America."

"But what was to become of you?" asked Worth.

The question was not expected. "Oh, Italy is my home. I shall find a way somehow. Put me out of your thoughts entirely. But I am sorry to bring you this bitter disappointment, for it must be bitter."

"There is one thing I wish to understand thoroughly," put in Worth slowly.

"You have guaranteed our credit at this hotel. By what means?" Worth held her eye with courage.

"With my word," she answered.

"I know something of these foreign hotel managers. Words must be backed by vaines." Worth's eye was still steady and unwavering. "If, as I believe, you guaranteed our credit with jewels we must know."

"Is it from a sense—a misguided sense—of chivalry?" she asked, her lips suggesting a smile.

"You are evading us," went on Worth.

"You insist, then?" coldly.

"Positively insist. If you do not tell us we shall be forced to take our chances elsewhere." Worth pressed a button. A servant appeared. "The manager at once."

La Signorina dropped her veil and sat stiffly in her chair. Kitty moved uneasily. The manager appeared. He bowed.

"Madame here," began Worth, indicating La Signorina, "has guaranteed our credit at your hotel."

"Yes. Is not everything satisfactory?" asked the manager eagerly.

"What security did madame advance?"

"Security?" The manager looked at La Signorina, but she rendered him not the least assistance. "I have given my word to madame not to tell."

"Then three gentlemen shall leave. Make out our bill at once!"

The manager appealed to the lady.

"You are foolish men," spoke La Signorina. "If the manager wishes to tell you he may do so."

The manager brought forth a fat wallet and opened it. Out of this he took a flat object wrapped in tissue paper. Very tenderly he unfolded it. The treasure was a diamond pendant, worth at least $1,000.

"I was to keep this simply till madame chose to reclaim it. Nothing has been advanced against it." A new thought came into the manager's mind, and he turned slightly pale. "If it is not madame's"—

"It is mine," said La Signorina. She was very angry, but her sense of justice admitted that Worth was perfectly right. "Once more I ask you not to make me miserable by forcing this trinket back upon me. Will you do me the honor to wait till tomorrow morning?"

The three men exchanged looks.

"Till tomorrow morning, then," said Worth. The manager was glad to escape.

La Signorina raised her veil. From her girdle bag she took a letter. "This letter is from a friend I have always known. Has any one of you ever heard of the Principessa di Monte Bianca?"

Her audience leaned forward attentively as she read the letter:

My Dear—I was very glad indeed to hear from you, and I shall be only too happy to offer you the temporary assistance you desire. You will recollect that I possess a villa just outside of Florence, a mile or so north of Fiesole. The villa is furnished and kept in repair by an ancient gardener and his wife. You and your friends are welcome to occupy the Villa Ariadne as long as you please. Of course you will find all the chests, bureaus, sideboards and closets under seal, for I have not been there since the death of my father. None of the seals may be removed till I occupy the villa legally. However, the gardener and his wife have silver and linen and china, and with these you will be able to get along nicely.

LA PRINCIPESSA DI MONTE BIANCA.

"The question is, Shall we accept this offer?" She refolded the letter. "This was the plan I had in mind when we went to Monte Carlo, and a much better plan too."

"Of course we shall accept it," said Worth.

"But what's the matter with your playing the princess to the neighbors?" suggested O'Mally, his eyes laughing. "I'll be the concierge, Smith the steward and Kitty your maid."

"And I?" asked Worth.

"Oh, you can be her highness' private secretary."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson XI.—Fourth Quarter, For Dec. 12, 1909.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, II Tim. iv, 1-18. Memory Verses, 6-8—Golden Text, Phil. 1-21—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

In our last study for the present on the life of Paul it would seem wise to glance at the whole epistle rather than only at the last chapter. He is still of the same mind as when he wrote I Cor. ii, 2, determined to know nothing save Jesus Christ and Him crucified, for in this brief letter he mentions the Father, Son and Holy Spirit forty-eight times. His mind is stayed upon the Lord, concerning whom he says, "I know whom I have believed and am persuaded that He is able to keep."

Our lesson chapter opens with a solemn charge in view of the judgment, and we are reminded of Eccles. xi, 9; xii, 14, "Know thou that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment;" also of Matt. xii, 36, "Every idle word that men shall speak they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." Let us remind ourselves that "the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son, that all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father" (John v, 22, 23). Believers who have died and who are resting from their labors, along with all living believers who shall be in a moment changed, shall appear for judgment at the judgment seat of Christ for believers only. Then there will be the judgment of living nations when He shall come with His saints to establish His kingdom, and a thousand years later the judgment of the rest of the dead at the great white throne. In due time and in due order there shall be a resurrection both of the just and the unjust and a judgment of all that have ever lived.

As His witnesses, His messengers, we are therefore to "preach the word" (verse 2), to preach the preaching which He bid us (Jonah iii, 2; Jer. i, 7; Ezek. ii, 7; iii, 11), being warned, as were the prophets and apostles, that many will not endure it, but, loving pleasure more than God and being satisfied with a form of godliness without the power (iii, 4, 5), they will prefer lying, deceit and delusion to the truth of God (Isa. xxix, 13; xxx, 8-12). The word for the faithful witness is, "Watch, endure, fulfill thy ministry," "Please Him who hath chosen you," "Study to show thyself approved unto God" (verse 5; ii, 4). Many things look different when we come to the hour of our departure, but if by His grace we have fought the good fight of faith and have kept the ... (verse 7; I Tim. vi, 12) we may have boldness even in the day of judgment (I John iv, 17). Fitness to meet it depends wholly upon His great and all sufficient sacrifice for us. But we will not be approved as His redeemed ones unless we have run the race well and been good soldiers of Jesus Christ. Our safety depends upon Him alone; our reward depends upon our faithfulness. The crown here spoken of—the crown of righteousness—was not for Paul only, but for all who love His appearing (verse 8). The crown of life is for patiently enduring, the crown incorruptible for self denial, the crown of rejoicing for winning souls, the crown of glory for feeding the flock—four different lines of service. But this one is for an attitude of soul in all our service. Many saved ones do not love His appearing, and many postmillennialists would be glad to see Him and may be said to love His appearing, although not looking for Him so soon or in the same way as some others. If we receive one or more of these crowns it will be that we may cast them at His feet and give Him all the glory (Rev. iv, 10, 11). These crowns, or rewards, are not given us when we die, although it is a common saying, "He has gone to his reward," but, as Paul says, "at that day," concerning which see Rev. xxii, 12; I Pet. v, 1-4. Then notice that Paul was not thinking of dying quietly in one's bed with kind friends about him, but he was ready to be offered as a sacrifice in any way His Lord might appoint.

In verses 9-15 note how some are taken captive by the world and some openly withstand the word. But note also how some at one time considered unprofitable may later become profitable. The closing verses of the lesson teach us to find our encouragement where Paul found his—in the Lord alone—and, though all turn away from us (verse 16 and i, 15), "He hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee," so that we may boldly say, "The Lord is my helper; I will not fear what man shall do unto me" (Heb. xiii, 5, 6). "The Lord stood with me and strengthened me" makes us think of an experience of David when in a time of great distress his faithful God turned against him and spake of stoning him, but it is written, "David encouraged himself in the Lord his God" (I Sam. xxx, 6). No one could be more alone than our Blessed Lord, but His comfort may be seen in these words: "The living Father hath sent Me, and I live by the Father." "He that sent Me is with Me; the Father hath not left Me alone, for I do always those things that please Him" (John vi, 57; viii, 29). Notice Paul's one great occupation, "that the preaching might be fully known and that all the gentiles might hear," and remember that Christ hath sent us as the Father sent Him to be His witness.

DIRECTOR DURAND ISSUES INSTRUCTIONS

Methods of Selecting Enumerators, the Duties of Supervisors and Other Features of Census Taking Outlined.

The general instructions to supervisors of the census have been issued by U. S. Census Director Durand. They embrace the scope of the census, the period of enumeration, the duties of the supervisors, the formation of enumeration districts, the appointment of enumerators, the employment of of interpreters, the compensation and allowances of supervisors, the penalties for nonperformance of duties, and conclude with a personal paragraph intended to promote prompt and whole-hearted cooperation.

The instructions point out that there is nothing in the census act making women or persons under 21 years of age ineligible for appointment as enumerators. It is stated that a considerable number of women were employed in the Eleventh and Twelfth censuses. It is suggested that it is undesirable to employ enumerators who are too immature, either in experience or appearance. The supervisors are cautioned to exercise their judgment in each individual case.

It is suggested that, as they are particularly likely to be good enumerators, the supervisors employ crop reporters of the U. S. Department of Agriculture; officers and leading workers in farmers' organizations, live stock associations, cooperative creameries, etc.; progressive farmers and their sons and daughters, and especially young men and women who have attended agricultural colleges or agricultural experiment stations; physicians, former enumerators, school teachers and substitute teachers, college and high school students, persons who have passed federal, state or municipal civil examinations for clerical positions or for mail carriers, substitute letter carriers, local, state and municipal officers, and particularly town and village clerks and recorders.

The supervisors are cautioned that in no case should any person who is directly or indirectly concerned in the assessment of property for taxation or in the collection of taxes be designated as an enumerator.

The instructions call attention to section 19 of the Census Act and state it provides that all appointments shall be made solely with reference to the fitness of the appointees and without reference to political party affiliations.

The supervisors are informed that after proper enumeration districts have been established it will be their duty to designate a suitable person in each district to perform the actual work of enumeration.

The director is emphatic upon this point and says it is their most important duty. They must exercise the greatest possible care to secure competent persons. Their success as supervisors and the success and value of the census as a whole are, he states, absolutely dependent upon the thoroughness, accuracy and promptness with which the enumerators perform their duties.

The instructions state that the enumerators should be active, energetic persons of good address. They must be thoroughly trustworthy, honest, and of good habits. They must have at least ordinary education, and be able to write plainly and with reasonable rapidity. In general preference should be given former enumerators, if they are at present physically able to perform the duties.

It is hoped, the director states, that in many cases they will be able to secure the services of persons who do not care for the positions on account of the pay involved, but who are willing to do the work in the public interest.

While not required by law, the enumerator should live in the district he is to canvass. Only in case a competent resident cannot be found should a selection be made of a person living elsewhere.

The instructions state that in order to determine the fitness of the enumerators the director will at a later date provide for an examination, the form of which will be prescribed by him, and the examination papers will be passed upon by the Census Bureau. This examination will be of a practical character, consisting chiefly or wholly of the filling out of a sample schedule of population from data furnished, and, in the case of enumerators whose work will be in rural districts, the filling out of a sample schedule of agriculture. Applicants who are unable to pass this examination will be rejected, and it will be necessary for the supervisors to designate others. The utmost precautions will be adopted by the director to obtain an examination which will accurately reflect the individual fitness of the applicants, and which, also, will be surrounded by every possible safeguard to prevent any of the applicants from resorting to collusion or from obtaining assistance in the preparation of the sample schedule.

"It will be a mark of your fitness for the position you hold," state the instruction, "to make your selections in such a way that the number who will be unable to pass this examination will be as small as possible. You will later be fully informed as to this examination."

The circular states that applicants should understand that their entire working time will be required during the period of enumeration, and if they accept such appointment and qualify they can not, under the law, "without justifiable cause," refuse or neglect to perform the duties of the position. Having assumed the office, they cannot retire at their own pleasure. The supervisors are advised to have in view substitute enumerators.

It is stated that in enumeration districts where the population is largely of some particular foreign nationality, the supervisors ought to be able to obtain members of that nationality with sufficient intelligence and education to act as enumerators. The employment of such persons as enumerators will also tend to dispell any prejudice that may exist against the census among the foreign population. It would also reduce the cost of the employment of interpreters.

The supervisors are informed that the regular form of appilcation for appointment as enumerator; a circular setting forth the duties and qualifications of census enumerators; a blauk form to contain the designated names, and a circular stating precisely the rates of compensation to be paid enumerators, will be furnished later on.

Applications should be addressed to the individual supervisors and not to the Census Bureau. It is understood that the filing of applications will be permitted to continue until about January 15. The population and agricultural schedules will not be forwarded the supervisors until a few weeks before the enumeration begins. It is estimated more that 65,000 enumerators will be employed, of which number 45,000 will carry both the population and farm schedules.

Notice To Delinquent Taxpayers.

Notice is hereby given to all delinquent taxpayers that if taxes now due and in arrears are not paid before January 1, 1910, I will proceed by law to collect. I refer to Sec. 50 of 566 of Acts of General Assembly of Maryland, a copy of which is hereto annexed. Please pay promptly and save cost.

SECTION 50. The said Treasurer shall during the first week in December in each and every year, give notice to all the delinquent taxpayers of said county, by advertisement inserted in two newspapers published in said county, and by hand-bills posted in five of the most public places in each election district of said county, and at the court house door, warning them that the payment of all taxes then due and in arrears will be enforced by advertisement and sale unless the same be paid before the 1st day of January next following.

W. E. HOLLINGER,
Treasurer of Garrett County.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

SUB-GRADE MAKING.

Treatment of This Important Factor In Road Building.

KIND OF MATERIAL TO USE.

Nothing but the Best Obtainable, Says Highway Commissioner—Surfacing Is Also a Prominent Feature That Demands Strict Attention.

A well built road's chief characteristic is not unlike a well constructed house, at least in one respect. Both will have a similarity—namely, a tight roof and a dry cellar. Such a road must have the ability to sustain and hold up into position it should occupy the wearing surface of the road, whether it be two inches or two feet in depth. Any yielding of the sub-grade will be fatal to the road. The whole question of dust laying and road preservative requirements of the hour is simply relegated to a secondary position when compared with this very important feature of the construction, and the remarkable aspect of this important part of road building is that it is not so much the expense, for the same principle can be adopted in the simple turnpiking of a road as that which will have to be employed in the most expensive construction that we are called upon to build today.

GETTING THE GRADE READY FOR STONE.
[From Good Roads Magazine, New York.]

The first principle to follow in every case is to properly drain the section of road to be improved, after which you then take up the question of sub-grade, or foundation upon which to build your road. I have found the best material with which to construct a sub-grade is sand or gravel. Disintegrated rock, with an admixture of light loam, makes a capital sub-grade.

Sprinkling the sand before rolling, using a light roller before using the steam roller or lightening the roller by relieving the boiler of one-half its water capacity is a great assistance in firming the road, as the sand will not then creep before the roller, thus making the sub-grade firm. A little subsoil placed on top of the sand is a very good practice. This will prevent the material from being pushed ahead of the roller, and it will make a good sustainment for the stone or gravel. If something is not done to make a sandy foundation firm it will shift.

Slighting the sub-grade is sometimes practiced by contractors, with the result that they do not gain anything, for the contractor has to pay in the end an increased expense owing to the fact that there will be a greater shrinkage in the stone.

The wisest contractor is the man who will spend more time with his 15 cents an hour help in forming the sub-grade and thereby require less stone or gravel and other incidental expenses. This is often the reason why the tonnage of stone per mile has been largely exceeded over the original estimate of the contractor. This is very easily demonstrated by taking the cost of the stone per ton, with freight, the haul from the cars, the time consumed in applying the stone on the road, to say nothing about the expense of watering and rolling required to get the road into a perfect bond—firm and unyielding.

But you will ask naturally, "Is not the road better by reason of the fact that more stone has been used?" Not at all. This would be true if a uniform depth of stone were on the road. But it is an intermittent depth. In some places there may be four inches of stone, while in other places there may be eight inches. The influence of the roller is not uniform where the sub-grade is not sufficiently hard and firm. Wherever there is an intermittent depth of stone the road will develop a weakness because the pressure of the roller on the road has not been uniform.

You must have a good, well built, substantial foundation as well as a good surface—a roof to your road. I do not and never have believed that the surface of the road can ever become an accomplished fact until this all important and necessary adjunct to a good road—the foundation—is taken care of.

Antedating the surface must come directness to your road, then the reduction of these grades to a minimum, then the question of drainage. Of these the most important is under and surface drainage, after which comes the question of surfacing, the least important of all things connected with road building. You want directness to your road to shorten the distance and minimize the danger and to carry the surface water to its nearest and best exit point. It is not enough to get the water off and out from the road, but it must be got away from the road. When we have done this we can commence to properly construct the sub-grade, and not before.

As a general proposition, in accomplishing a well built sub-grade it is always well to remove all loam, roots and vegetable matter from the proposed travel part of the road; also everything of a springy nature or anything found in excavating for said roadway that will be liable to heave or settle and fill all such places with clean sand or gravel.

Where it is necessary to fill to bring the sub-grade up to the height required I have found in my practice where the filling exceeds one foot in depth that the filling should be deposited in courses not to exceed twelve inches in depth, loose measurement, and require that each course shall be extended across the entire fill and completed before commencing another course, no matter if the fill be two or twenty feet. And this method should be followed with each succeeding course until the established grade is reached. The constant traveling over each of the courses by the teams employed in handling the material will remove the possibility of ever having a cracked fill or one that will slide after the road has been constructed. This is a very important matter, I find, and I have used it in my work in my own state. I also find that in the cuts it is well not to plow down below that point that is to be the finished grade of the sub-grade, but to keep it a sufficient height above that so that when the roller is placed on the work it will make a good solid foundation, and you will not have to resort to filling in the cut to bring the sub-grade up to the grade desired. These two principles of cut and fill will be found to work to great advantage in the proper construction of a road.

The shape, or contour, of the sub-grade has been somewhat a matter of controversy, some engineers holding to the level line foundation and putting on an extra depth of stone or material in the center to make the contour or shed from the center line of the road to the berms, or shoulders, while other engineers have given the sub-grade or foundation upon which the wearing material is to be placed the same contour as the finished road. I have used this latter method in my own work in my state by reason of the fact I believe it makes a better foundation and that the uniform depth of stone at the shoulders will assist in holding the crown of the road in shape and furnish a sustainment at the shoulder line better than to have a less depth of stone at the shoulders and a greater depth at the center of the road. It also assists in case of a breaking up of the road or a fracture or other developments in draining to the side, or shoulder, of the road.

The forming of the shoulders is a very important matter. They are really the support of the road. It has always been my practice when making a shoulder in the fills to lay out my road and put the newly added material ten or twelve inches into the new travel path, tamping it down firmly and then cutting back to the line, thereby making a good, firm shoulder to work to and to hold in place the stone or gravel in the travel path of the road.

It is a difficult matter to treat this question as intelligently through the medium of the written word as it would be with charts, but if these principles are followed in building the sub-grade a good foundation upon which to put the wearing surface will result.—James H. MacDonald, State Highway Commissioner of Connecticut, in Good Roads Magazine, New York.

CONVICT ROAD BUILDERS.

Inmates of Georgia Prisons Beautifying Highways.

The roads of Swainsboro, Ga., are fast being converted from veritable sand beds into beautiful turnpike clay roads. The county chain gang, which is now about fifty strong, including thirty felony convicts, Emanuel's quota of the state convicts, is doing fine work in road building, under the supervision of M. B. Boatright, who has had much experience in practical road building.

However, the people of the county, while awakening somewhat to the fact that they must be up and doing in matters pertaining to roads if they would keep apace with their neighboring counties, still do not show the proper interest in the construction of their roads, or, rather, in the keeping up of the roads after they are built by the chain gang. There seems to be an idea abroad that it is the chain gang's province to keep up the roads as well as to construct them, and this idea must be eliminated before a thorough good road movement can be installed and substantial improvements made on the county's highways.

Object Lesson In Good Roads.

A Glastonbury (Conn.) rural free delivery carrier became tired of traveling the dirt roads on his route and, finding that he had no right to dictate to road officials in regard to needed repairs, took a little of his spare time and had the fourth postmaster general advised on the subject. That official replied that if the roads were not put in repair at the earliest possible date—thirty days—the carrier can deviate from those portions of his route that are out of repair and inform the families residing on these roads that the department will not maintain rural service over any road that cannot be traveled by the carriers with facility and safety at all seasons of the year.

THANKSGIVING CAKE.

How to Make a Seasonable Treat For the Children.

Bake two fruit cakes of the same stock, using tin or porcelain vegetable bowls with rounded bottoms for molds. The cakes should be at least six inches deep and from ten to twelve inches in diameter and look like symmetrical hemispheres. Keep in paraffin paper a few days or even a week, and then scoop out one of them on the flat side until you have a hollow about the size of an individual soup bowl. Fill this with stuffed dates, candied pineapple and choice bitter sweets. By laying on the other hemisphere the cake will have the proportions of an average pumpkin.

Coat the entire surface with a frosting made of the yolks of six eggs, to which a pound of confectioner's sugar and two ounces of cornstarch have been added. Beat well and test before using. Do not apply thickly the first time, as it is sure to run on the rounded sides, but spread thinly in the beginning, let dry, and then add a second and third coat. In this way you can get a good imitation of the vivid yellow surface of a pumpkin.

On to one side of the cake press eight red candy beans in a straight row to imitate teeth. Above these place a large red candy heart for a nose and two large red bulging gumdrops to represent eyes. Model a stub end of green sealing wax and set on top of the cake.

The hostess will cut the upper half only, sinking the knife at the green stub end and cutting outward in straight lines. When all these upper pieces are disposed of the candy in the lower half, being in full view, will suggest the next course.—Chicago Tribune.

How to Serve Christmas Breakfast.

In one home where there are several half grown children last year's Christmas breakfast will always be remembered. The plain baked apple which was at each plate when the family sat down wore a holiday look simply because atop of each was a tiny dab of thick cream in which was set a large red candied cherry. It was unusual, and everybody noticed it.

With the cereal was passed, instead of the sugar of every day, a low glass dish filled with curly shavings of maple sugar. These had simply been cut from a cake of rather soft maple sugar with a sharp knife. It was the first time it had ever been so served in the family, and the little folks especially were delighted. Though nothing but boiled eggs formed the principal dish, these came to the table cuddled down in a nest made of Christmas greens—in reality, little sprays left from the trimming of the house. It was arranged on a medium sized meat platter, the green sprays being piled sufficiently high at the edges to make the nest quite realistic. You can imagine how it delighted the children.—Delineator.

How to Make a Coat Cover.

Take a wire coat hanger and pad with cotton on both sides, with a little favorite sachet sprinkled on it. Then whip together two pieces of white satin ribbon about three inches wide and cover the padded hanger; then wrap the handle with ribbon and tie a large bow; also take two lengths of about one and a half yards of white linen. Shape the top for the shoulders and cut a small opening so it can be slipped over the hanger. Brier stitch the seams, and in the left hand corner embroider a monogram. This is to be slipped over the garment on the coat hanger to keep out dust and avoid creasing. This makes a pretty gift.

How to Eradicate Dandruff.

A hair tonic which is excellent when bothered by dandruff is made of five ounces of bay rum, half an ounce of tincture of cantharides and half an ounce of glycerin. This should be applied to the scalp every night before going to bed. It is well to remember in applying any tonic to the scalp that it is not so much the amount you spat on your scalp that counts as it is the amount you force your pores to absorb. If you will stroke and spat the scalp gently you will notice that it will respond to the treatment and absorb more of the liquid than if you merely wet the scalp thoroughly and permit the solution to soak in and dry.

How to Wash Spinach.

If housewives and cooks would only remember to wash spinach in scalding water they would not only get it much cleaner, but kill all insects and worms which may happen to be clinging to the under part of the leaves; also the process is a much quicker one than when clean cold water is used, and the spinach itself takes on a fresh greenness that is unexpected considering the temperature of the water. It should not, however, be washed until immediately before putting into the saucepan.

How to Cleanse the Teeth.

It is more important that the teeth be cleansed thoroughly at night before retiring than at any other time. A good alkaline mouth wash should be used. Rinse it thoroughly through the mouth and force it through the teeth by means of the tongue. Hold the liquid in the mouth two or three minutes. The mouth with this treatment is put in an antiacid condition and offsets to a large degree injury to the teeth from acids. Use a fairly stiff toothbrush.

How to Cook Venison Steak.

Fry until almost done in a small piece of butter. Season with salt and pepper and then add a cupful of sweet cream. Let boil until it thickens.

The Free Sewing Machine

Think of it! and all this in the year 1909, when husbands have automobiles, automatic adding machines, automatic locking desks—you, Mrs. Housewife, are compelled to be satisfied to sew for your husband and family with a sewing machine that hasn't been improved for 25 years. Wouldn't you be interested in a 20th century improved sewing machine which completely removes every objection you have to any sewing machine? That's The Free Sewing Machine. Of course it is impossible to explain all this here. The Free is insured for five years against breakage, wear and tear, fire, tornado, lightning and water. No other sewing machine company dares to insure their machine.

New Paper Appears.

Fairmont's new daily paper, to be known as "The Independent," made its first appearance Wednesday evening, being a bright and newsy sheet. J. Harvey Vaneta is the manager of the concern and other local men are interested stockholders. It is stated that George McIntosh, of Fayette county, will be there early in January to be editor of the paper.

One of our salesmen has a very bad heart. He always has a touch of heart trouble just when coon hunting is at its best. While we write these lines he is laying off suffering with his heart. We are wondering if we will get any 'coon for Christmas. Now, brother, we carry almost every load under the sun, both in black and nitro powder and can fill your order without delay. The way business is going to chilled shot reminds us of a story that was told on one of our competitors. A customer said they were so cold that all the shot was chilled. This was not in Oakland; we are all warm here.

Married.

LIPSCOMB—SCHOOLEY.—At the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Joshua B. Lipscomb, near Deer Park, on Thanksgiving Day at 11 a. m., a quiet wedding took place, the contracting parties being their daughter, Miss Huldah Lipscomb, and Mr. William Schooley, of Coshocton, Ohio. Rev. Johnson, of Loch Lynn, performed the ceremony in the presence of the immediate family and a few relatives of the bride. The bride wore a handsome suit of gray silk and the groom was very becomingly attired. After spending some time with relatives and friends in this section the happy couple will go to Ohio, where they intend to make their future home. They have the best wishes of their many friends for a long and happy life.

BITTINGER.

Thus far December has brought us exceptionally fine weather, much to the delight and profit of the farmer, who is using it well in preparing the ground for the early spring seeding.

A number of persons from this settlement attended the funeral of Mrs. Katie Miller, of Springs, Pa., whose funeral occurred at Grantsville on last Sunday afternoon.

Miss Estella Reckner, who spent two weeks among relatives and friends here, returned to her home near Swanton last Sunday.

J. T. Lohr and Joseph Deem, of this district, are spending this week at Oakland, as jurors of the Circuit Court.

The box supper and ice cream festival held in this village on last Saturday night by the ladies of the Lutheran church is reported to have been a success.

Charles Sechler, of this place, drove over to Keim, Pa., last Sunday for a short visit with his parents.

Thomas Brenneman is having a new porch built to his residence. Messrs. Simon Brenneman and A. J. Oester are doing the carpenter work.

The Lutheran Sunday school of this village is planning to have a very attractive Christmas entertainment in the church on the evening of Dec. 24th. The children are now being trained and a pleasant time is anticipated.

It Is Our Way Of Thinking.

There is nothing more useful than our line of NICKLE WARE. If we were in the advice-giving business, we would say to our young friends who are just starting out in life, buy a few things and buy them good. A good piece of Nickle Ware is more useful than a room full of cheap bric-a-brac; one good picture than a wall full of chromos. Take our advice be poor in many things, but rich in a few.

They Will Get Married.

You know it is an interesting thing to study the people at a wedding—the bachelors and the buds, the young married people and the old married people. Every old lady is interested in weddings. There is no joke about that. We are interested in selling the wedding presents. Silver Knives and Forks, Tea Spoons, Table Spoons, Butter Knives, Sugar Shells, Cream Ladles, etc., are useful and suitable presents for Wedding or Christmas gifts.

FOR A CLOSER UNION

County Commissioners Will Hold Meeting Next Month.

Mr. Henry P. Mann, of Baltimore county, who is chairman of the State Association of County Commissioners and Treasurers, says that he will probably issue a call for the second conference of these officials in Baltimore, during the second week in December. The first conference was held last spring and attracted leading public officials of the several counties. The conference was held at the suggestion of Governor Crothers, who made a speech in which he urged greater economy in county affairs, including a reduction in court expenses, earlier adjournment of the grand jury, and a better system in public road building and improvement.

The suggestions advanced by the Governor and others were referred to a committee, of which Mr. Mann, who is one of the commissioners of Baltimore county, was made the chairman. This committee will meet prior to the general meeting of the commissioners and treasurers and will prepare a report to be submitted to the general meeting. Mr. Mann has already had one conference with Governor Crothers relative to the subjects to be considered. He will have another conference with him, when a date of the meeting will be agreed upon and a tentative program prepared. The subjects to be discussed at the meeting will have a prominent place in the proceedings of the next legislature.

The commissioners and treasurers agree that there ought to be a new assessment of property. In two or three counties, including Somerset and Worcester, there has been a reassessment. A reassessment is now in progress in Baltimore. It is desired to make the reassessment general, so that no county will have an advantage over another county in paying less State taxes. General reassessment is approved by the city officials, who recognize the fact that an increase in the basis of taxation in the counties will mean larger tax receipts from that source and a consequent lessening of the State burden resting upon Baltimore.

If the reassessment is made it will be made next year. Democratic leaders differ as to the advisability of the step. While they appreciate the party advantage to be gained by the employment of an army of assessors, they also foresee the disgruntlement to follow increases in valuations. They well understand the political effect of this disgruntlement.

At the coming conference the question of another loan for public road improvement will also be discussed. It is generally conceded that the loan of $5,000,000 authorized by the last General Assembly will be inadequate for the improvement of roads on the scale proposed.

To Do Business Right

You must be organized right. You can't do a time saving business in a store of the vintage of 1864. Let us repeat what has been said so many times, "Show Goods." If the jobber does not show his goods to the salesman, the salesman will not sell them. If the salesman does not show samples to the retailer, the retailer will not buy them. If the retail merchant does not put them to the front where the consumer can see them the goods will not move. The man from Missouri says, "Show me." So come and see our Christmas line.

TRUSTEE'S SALE
OF VALUABLE
Real Estate
In Garrett County, Md.

Under and by virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, sitting in Equity, dated the 5th day of November, 1909, and passed in a cause standing as No. 1619 Equity on the Docket of said Court, wherein Mary Lohr and others are complainants and Peter Lohr and others are the defendants, the undersigned was appointed Trustee to make sale of the real estate in said cause mentioned and hereby gives notice that on the 1st Day of January, 1910,

SATURDAY,

at the hour of 1 o'clock P. M., of said day in front of the National Hotel in the town of Grantsville, Maryland, he will offer at public sale to the highest bidder, the following described real estate situated in Garrett county, Maryland, about 2½ miles north of Bittinger on the public road leading from Bittinger to Grantsville:

1. All that part of a tract of land called "Palestine" containing 148⅝ acres, more or less.

2. All that other parcel of land, adjoining the above tract, containing 1 acre, more or less, the above constituting the home farm of the late Eli Lohr.

About 60 acres of this farm is clear and under cultivation.

The timber upon said land with the exception of the sugar trees and about 2 acres of other timber, belongs to Jenning Brothers and will be excepted from this sale.

The other improvements consist of a new dwelling house, two stories high, containing 7 rooms and a good cellar; the outbuildings upon said farm are only ordinary.

Upon the farm is an excellent sugar camp in which about 500 sugar vessels can be set, also two valuable orchards.

This property is underlaid with valuable seams of coal.

Terms of Sale, as prescribed by said decree—One half of the purchase money to be paid in cash on day of sale, and the balance in six months from the day of sale; the deferred payment to be secured by the note of the purchaser with security to the satisfaction of the trustee, and to bear interest from the day of sale, or the entire purchase money may be paid in cash at the option of the purchaser or purchasers.

TRUSTEE'S SALE
OF VALUABLE
Real Estate
Situate in Grantsville, Md.

Under and by virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court of Garrett County, passed in a cause wherein Nellie M. Broadwater, et al., are plaintiffs, and Russell Broadwater, et al., are defendants, the undersigned, as Trustee, will sell by public auction on the premises, on the 18th Day of December,

1909, beginning at 2 o'clock p. m.,

All that valuable fee simple lot of ground situated in the town of Grantsville, on the North side of the National Road, and being Lot No. 22 on the plat of said town of Grantsville, and contains about one-fourth of an acre, more or less;

Said Property is improved by a good substantial Store House, Ware House and Blacksmith Shop, and is the same property that was occupied by the late Noah Broadwater as a general store. Also all that other fee simple lot of ground situated in said town and on the South side of said National Road, and is known and designated as Lot No. 1 on the Plat of said town. Said Lot is unimproved, but is nicely located, and would make a very desirable building lot for anyone contemplating the erection of a building in said place.

TERMS OF SALE—One-third cash, one-third in six months and one-third in twelve months for all cash at the option of the purchaser; the credit payments to bear interest from the day of sale, and to be secured by the note or notes of the purchaser or purchasers, endorsed to the satisfaction of the Trustee.

VOLUME 33. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1909. NUMBER 42

SINCELL

A Cut-Price Sale in December affords you a great advantage over such a sale at any other month of the year. We are going to reduce our stock one-half by January 1st, and in order to do so we will place before you such bargains as never before offered you in our line.

This store is recognized as the best store with the best line of Clothing, Shoes, Furnishings and Fancy Goods in Garrett county, or we may say this part of the country. From now until January 1st we offer you our high-class HART, SHAFFNER and MARX Clothing at prices far below that which you pay for the ordinary kind.

You may buy your clothing wherever you choose of course; you have the right to; but it is worth something to any man to do business where quality is the standard of excellence; where this superior all-wool fabrics; this perfection of style and tailoring, and this absolute security of satisfaction are added inducements. A CHRISTMAS LONG DELAYED.

Hart, Shaffner and Marx

Woman's Loyalty Recompensed After Many Weary Years.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

[Copyright, 1908, by American Press Association.]

She was just a common, everyday sort of woman, a woman of the people, a product of poverty and yet a heroine as noble as ever was immortalized by poet's pen. Her wasted form was scarcely hidden by the limp, angular folds of her scanty calico skirt and the shawl about her shoulders. Her name was Mary, and as for her other name—it does not matter. She had hardly dared to use it for eighteen long years, and she thought of this as she drew near the big stores which were filled with happy Christmas shoppers.

She could just faintly remember that first sad Christmas thirty years before when her father, mother and herself were taken to the city pesthouse. She never saw them after that day, for when she left the hospital she went away alone. Mary was only six years old then, and her life seemed to have begun in her uncle's tenement, where the health officer had left her. It was even then a life of poverty and hunger. Her uncle was a strange man and before she came had lived all by himself.

When she was a little older he sent her out upon the streets to beg and then cursed her because she was so timid and got so little. She was begging one night by the Common when she met her first friend, a very kind young man, who took her hand and told her she mustn't beg. He took her down into Pie alley and gave her supper there with the newsboys and promised that she should become a news girl herself next day, which was better than begging. "Mary the news girl" they called her then.

Her second friend was a new neighbor's girl, who moved into the same house where she lived. This neighbor's girl worked as a "cash" in a big store, and when Mary's uncle disappeared one night and did not come back the neighbor's girl lent her a dress, found her a place also as cash girl and persuaded her mother to take the orphan into the family. Then began the best part of Mary's life. Dora and her mother were honest, if poor, and they gave Mary as good a home as they could for her meager wages. But the hours of work were long and weary, with no money for finery and no time for play. It was scarcely easier when Mary became a clerk, with better pay, but with greater expenses for board and decent clothes. She was old already at seventeen, a pale, shy girl, when she came to know Tom Haley, who was a janitor in the store. It seemed very strange that Tom, who was several years older, should care for her and should want to take her to walk on Sunday afternoons, but when they knew each other better and after Tom had asked her to marry him he said that the reason he liked her was because she was so good. That did not clear the mystery for Mary, but she worshiped Tom.

She promised to marry him, and yet she held with timid obstinacy that there was a great deal to be done before then. Homeless as she had always been, a waif of the street, she knew that Tom was scarcely better off than herself, yet she could not bear to think of marrying without a home. A home was her great ambition, and it could not be realized without money—a great deal of money, as it seemed to her, at least $500. And her lover came to share that ambition.

"MARY, MARY, ARE YOU MAD?"

Late one Saturday night when Mary and Dora went home together to the tenement down in the Cove district they saw a fierce looking man sitting on the doorstep. His rough hands stopped Mary as she tried to pass, and she felt the return of the old sickening fear as she recognized her uncle. He did not say why he had deserted her or tell where he had been, but harshly ordered her to pack her "duds" and go with him. The thought of Tom Haley was the first that came to her mind, and it gave her courage to say that she would not go. Then as the tears started to her eyes she jerked away her hand and ran up the stairs, breathless and sobbing. A little later the uncle followed and told Dora and her mother that he was Mary's guardian and was going to have his rights. Mary had locked herself in an inner room, and, although her supposed uncle swore that he would have the law on them all, he finally left the house defeated.

Tom Haley came that Sunday afternoon, as usual, and when he found what had happened he was pale with anger. He and Mary talked the matter over with the hopeless calm of people who are accustomed to misfortune. It did not seem impossible that Mary's uncle might have the law on them, as he threatened. They could not help sharing the fear that all the old neighbors felt for the man. It seemed to Tom that the only thing they could do was to be married at once. But Mary would not listen to this proposition.

It was eighteen years since all this had happened, yet it did not take Mary a moment to remember it all. She had been wrong. She ought to have listened to Tom's pleadings, and, once married, they might both have escaped the misery that followed. The faded woman drew her ragged shawl closer and shivered from something sharper than the December wind. She was living it all over again. She had not dared to leave the house on that Sunday long ago, not even to take her accustomed walk with Tom. Before he left her lover had promised to protect her on her way home the next night if she would wait outside until he had closed the store. That night she had waited and let Dora go home alone. When Tom appeared they walked together down to the Cove district, and, as they had feared, Mary's uncle was waiting in the doorway of the tenement. He scowled as they stopped before him.

"Who is that man?" he demanded of Mary.

"I am the man she is going to marry," said Tom, answering for her. Mary clung to her lover's arm. She felt a thrill of pride in Tom, followed by a nameless dread of what might happen to him. Her uncle's quick anger was aroused. He cursed Tom as a liar and abused Mary in the vilest way. Suddenly he stopped and, slouching down the steps, said to Tom: "If you are going to marry her I've got something to say to you first. Meet me at Jones' place, and we will have it over."

He brushed them as he passed and disappeared around the corner of the court. Tom's hands were clinched, and he would have followed at once had not Mary hung so heavily upon him. She was more frightened than before, it was so strange, so unnatural. Tom was eager to go to the saloon around the corner and find out what her uncle had to say. He had nothing to fear, he said, and would be right back. When he had gone Mary bolted the door and sat waiting fearfully in the dark. Then the minutes dragged more heavily, because she thought it was time for Tom's return, and she breathed more freely when she heard a man's step upon the stairs and a bold knock upon the door.

"Is that you, Tom?" she said. She hardly noticed that his voice sounded strange when he answered. She drew the bolt, but it was her uncle who put his foot against the door and forced his way into the room. Seizing the almost paralyzed girl by the arm, he held up a bottle which she could just see in the dim light.

"It's vitriol," he hissed. "It will burn like a flame and eat like a tiger. Now, come along and don't make any fuss."

She dared not resist, but went along with him, wondering, with sickening dread, what terrible thing he had done to the man she loved. When they got into the court by the flicker of a street lamp they saw Tom coming toward them.

"Tell him you are going with me and won't have anything more to do with him, or I'll give him the acid," muttered her uncle. Mary, half stupefied with fear and wishing to save Tom from her uncle's fiendish threat, obeyed. She coldly passed Tom by and told him "not to bother her" then, as she had important business with her uncle.

"Mary, Mary, are you mad?" Tom cried, but she walked on, leaving him standing as if he had been stung. Her uncle chose the quietest streets, and they walked rapidly across the city toward the north end. She thought many times of calling for help, but the bottle of liquid fire was still in his hand, and she knew only too well that he would use it. The real terror of the situation seized her when they came to an old wooden rookery that had once been a mansion, but was now dark and empty. Her uncle opened the street door and almost dragged her up the three flights of old fashioned stairs. "I'll have you safe enough in a minute," he said as he fumbled with the key. It was too much for Mary's weakened nerves. She lost all sense of fear and control and, crying, "Tom, help!" slipped from her uncle's grasp to the floor. As the old man bent over her he heard quick steps coming up the stairs and a voice he recognized saying, "Yes, Mary, I'm coming!" Tom had followed them unseen to learn just what the mystery of Mary's coolness meant and was on hand to rescue her. But the thought of the dreadful bottle in her uncle's possession aroused Mary, and, seizing her uncle's hand, she screamed: "I'm all right, Tom! Go away!"

"What does this mean?" asked the panting Tom as he burst into the room and glared at Mary's uncle. The old man was cursing under his breath and, clearing himself from Mary's grasp, sprang savagely toward him.

"The vitriol, the vitriol!" was all that Mary could say. It was all over in a moment. The men grappled. Tom bent the old man over the banisters, only half realizing the danger, while Mary wrenched the bottle from his grasp and threw it away. Suddenly the old banister broke, and with a gasp of horror Tom and Mary saw the old man topple headlong heavily to the floor below.

When Tom reached him there was no sign of life. The man's neck had been broken, and Tom had just made sure of this fact when a policeman put his head in the door and asked in a gruff voice what was the matter. Why Tom Haley attempted to escape he could never tell. Terrified and dazed, he made a blind rush for the back door, but found himself in a yard surrounded by a high fence with the policeman at his heels. The hand of the officer was on his collar, and his struggles to free himself were soon quieted with stinging blows on his head.

There were long months in jail until the indictment was brought against Tom and more delay before the case finally came to trial.

Oh, justice had been blind! The revolver Tom had in his pocket he had borrowed "for an old man," as the lender testified. Jones said that he had been to his place "looking for an old man." A neighbor had seen Mary's cold greeting as she started away with her uncle and had heard Tom's threat of vengeance afterward. The policeman had seen Tom entering the house and had found him bending over the dead man.

All hope had left Mary's heart when she heard Tom sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment. Even the assurance that it would not be over eighteen years with good conduct on Tom's part failed to brighten her despair, for that term seemed almost a lifetime. The thought of the jail haunted her everywhere, and instead of trying to get back into the store where she had worked with Dora she found a place as waitress in a restaurant down by the market, but she was recognized even there, and when she found that men came to see her as a curiosity she would not stay. She no longer dared to be a waitress and for years lived as dishwasher in restaurants and cheap hotels. The pay was scarcely enough to keep her alive, yet she saved a few cents week by week, never failing in her hope and her trust for Tom. When his time was nearly up she was more feverishly eager to save, for after all her hardships she had but little, scarcely $200, in all these weary years. Then she had a long sickness of typhoid fever that in three months swept all her precious savings away.

* * * * * * *

This was her first day out after her convalescence. She was still very weak and without a dollar. But what did it matter? This was Tom's day of delivery. She knew the hour when he was to be set free.

She wanted Tom, and the long deferred hope of a happy home seemed a slight thing compared to her great longing. The great prison which she knew so well was almost in sight. At last she reached the shelter of the high wall and looked up the passageway that led to the entrance. She felt a sudden consciousness of her ragged clothes, of the limp calico skirt and of the holes in her shoes. She would not disgrace Tom by going inside, but would wait in the street where no one could see her.

What was she bringing her lover after all these years? She had neither youth nor health nor money nor home. She almost dreaded to see him in the new clothes that she knew the state would give him. He was coming. She heard his footsteps on the walk, but she could not bear to put him to the test yet and tremblingly crouched by the great wall.

He came to the street and looked about him. How old and gray he seemed, but how handsome still! Dejectedly he walked away from where she was hiding, failing at first to recognize her. Her weakness and her longing overcame her and, huskily crying "Tom, Tom!" she staggered out before him.

"Mary!" he gasped and ran to her as she was sinking to the pavement.

"I worked for you, Tom, but was sick and lost it all. I have no money for our home," she said.

She was fainting on his shoulder, and the big tears rolled from his eyes and his voice choked him as he replied:

"God bless you, Mary! You're too good for one like me."

And from the churches of the city came the peal of the bells ringing the chimes of Christmas eve.

TO KEEP EGGS FRESH.

How to Preserve Them For at Least Eight Months.

Fresh eggs in cold storage at 34 degrees F. undergo little if any change, for this temperature is sufficient to limit the activities and prevent the growth of the more common bacteria.

The problem of preserving eggs by excluding air has brought forth numerous methods. According to American Medicine, German investigators several years ago conducted a series of tests, keeping the eggs for about eight months in some twenty different ways, and found that immersed in brine all were unfit for use:

	Per cent bad
Wrapped in paper	80
Packed in bran or coated with paraffin	70
Immersed in salicylic acid	50
Coated with shellac or collodion	40
Packed in wood ashes	20
Coated with vaseline or immersed in a solution of water glass or limewater, none bad.

From these experiments as well as many others it has been found that a solution of water glass offers about the best method of preserving eggs aside from cold storage. Water glass is the common name for potassium or sodium silicate and is obtained in the shops in the form of a thick liquid something like glycerin. One part of this to nine of sterile water makes a preserving fluid of the proper strength.

The eggs should be packed in a clean, sweet vessel and the solution poured over them until they are well covered. Preserved in this way in a cool place, they will keep for months and often cannot be distinguished in appearance from the fresh article. It is generally conceded that they lack the flavor of new laid eggs, but are in no way inferior in nutritive value.

How to Seal Bottles and Jars.

When sauces and pickles are bottled for winter use care should be taken that the bottles and jars are perfectly airtight, and this fact cannot be assured if the corks are simply fitted into the necks and tied down in the usual manner. The corks should first be dipped into a mixture of one-quarter pound of beef suet and one-half pound of wax, melted down over a slow fire, and be dried at the fire afterward, this process being repeated several times. Then press the corks into the bottles and dip the heads and rims into a solution of one-eighth of an ounce of beeswax melted down with one-quarter pound of sealing wax and the same quantity of black resin. When making this mixture it is a good plan to stir it with a long tallow candle, the wax preventing it from sticking to the bottom of the pan. Sauces, liniments, etc., bottled in this way will be kept free from the inclusion of air or dust.

How to Prevent Bruise Discoloration.

Many people with a delicate, thin skin bruise from the slightest bump or fall, and as bruises, besides being disfiguring, are often painful it is well to know how to treat them. Wring a cloth out of warm water and apply it to the bruise, continuing this treatment until pain ceases. The moisture and heat liquify the congealed blood and send it back to its proper channels. The hot compresses should be applied as soon as possible and should be hot or warm and never cold. This also prevents any discoloration of the parts. Salt is also a valuable remedy for bruises. Saturate cloths with a strong solution of it and apply to the injured part.

How to Have Lovely Hair.

A woman of sixty-five years who has a head of hair few girls could boast says the secret of it is her constant brushing. She has her head shampooed much less frequently than is the present fashion, but preserves a clean scalp by both wet and dry brushing. Twice a week she dips the brush in water and works all over the scalp with it, following it up by a dry brush. Once in ten days or two weeks she substitutes witch hazel for water. The alcohol in it acts as a cleanser and cuts the oil in the hair.

How to Freeze With Chemicals.

Ice cream can be frozen in five minutes and for an expenditure of 2 or 3 cents. If the preparation desired to be frozen is placed in a tin bucket or other receptacle it can readily be congealed by putting it in a pail containing a weak dilution of sulphuric acid and water. Into this throw a handful of common salt, and the resulting cold is so great that a bottle of wine immersed in the mixture will be frozen solid in a few minutes.

How to Preserve Color of Ivory.

To clean and preserve the color of ivory ornaments place the articles in a bowl of cold water and allow them to remain for twenty-four hours. Take them out of the water at the end of this time and lay on a soft cloth. Do not dry them. They must dry in the open air. If any water remains in the carvings of the ivory blow it off. If it were allowed to settle on the ivory the color would be destroyed.

How to Remove Stains From Porcelain.

Wash them frequently with a mixture of turpentine and salt, both ingredients of which are easily procured. This will remove all stains and leave the surface smooth and spotlessly white. The proportions are one cupful of salt to one quart of turpentine. Wet a rag and rub over the porcelain. Stiff brushes should never be used on such a surface.

How to Prevent Bluing Spots.

If a couple of tablespoonfuls of sweet milk are added to a tub of hard water before putting in bluing it will surely prevent the bluing from lodging in the clothes in unsightly spots.

CARE OF GLOVES.

How to Keep Them and Lengthen Their Lives.

Snugly fitting gloves unless properly cared for and with a view to let a stitch in time save nine generally begin to show gaps at the seams, particularly between and at the tips of the fingers, in a short time. As glove seams are invariably sewed with an external buttonhole stitch they should be mended with the same stitch and a corresponding quality of thread or silk.

When such mending is done it is best to strip the glove on your hand, and, while wearing the right hand glove, let some one ply the needle for you. With the glove stretched snugly on your hand, uneven drawing or ruffling of the kid is not possible.

Should the kid split in the palm of your hand because of too much tension, instead of sewing up the rent seamwise insert an angle of kid from some other glove of which you may have lost the mate. Fold under the ends of the rent above the patch about one-sixteenth of an inch, and sew down close to the edge at least two times with the machine.

When kid gloves begin to wear out uniformly, growing thin and tattered through much contact, it doesn't pay to waste time or thread in improving them. But where the thumb or forefinger wears out ahead of the rest one may prolong their use by cutting out the worn portion, turning the finger inside out and setting a small piece of kid against the gap with liquid glue.

Most housekeepers discover a handy article in a soft, worn and weathered glove as a protection for the hands on cleaning day or in overnight cures of tan and freckles.

When kid gloves begin to look shabby an application of glycerin or the thinned part of the white of an egg rubbed on sparsely and allowed to dry without wiping will revive a certain luster.

Silk gloves, unless they are getting threadbare, should be submitted to some one who has special skill with a darning needle. Suede and chamois gloves are more durable than kid and get shabby before they show holes. They must be sent to the cleaners frequently, but if you would avoid the expense you will find this simple method most effective:

Saturate thoroughly with gasoline, rub until stains and soiled spots disappear, then put them on and allow fifteen minutes to evaporate. When thoroughly dry brush vigorously with cornmeal if your gloves are of a light shade. Use an unused brush when you are ready to completely brush off the powder. The cornmeal adds freshness and eliminates odor.

How to Care For Gas Stove Irons.

When a gas stove is used for heating the irons the irons will become rough despite the best of care, and the only way in which they can be kept smooth is by constant care. Irons frequently should be washed in warm water and soap. The water should be free from any grease, and the irons should be washed with a clean cloth. Irons that become rough on the gas stove can be made smooth by rubbing them briskly on a piece of sandpaper. The sandpaper should be nailed to a small piece of wood, and this should be kept with the irons, so that it will be ready for use whenever it is wanted. The irons should be rubbed on a piece of paraffin to make them smooth and so that they will iron easily. With proper care irons can be kept so smooth and nice that it is a pleasure to work with them.

How to Clean Silverware.

To clean silverware, either solid or plated, use a weak solution of ammonia (twenty parts water to one of ammonia) and soap. Rub with a brush and rinse in alcohol. This is for bright or polished finish. For satin or frosted finish use the weak solution of ammonia and baking soda. Wet the brush, rub on the soap, then dip brush into dry baking soda and scrub the article thoroughly. Repeat if necessary. Do not use soda on gray silver. It will make it all the same color.

How to Freshen White Furs.

White furs can be cleaned at home. Lay the fur upon a clean white cloth and sprinkle with alcohol until damp all over; then rub French chalk well into the hairs. Roll up in a cloth and lay aside for twenty-four hours, more if much soiled; then take out and shake, rub well between the hands until every particle of chalk is removed and comb the fur with a clean comb, preferably steel.

How to Make Wringers Hold.

The popularity of the galvanized tub, due to its light weight and durability, is the cause of a great many people discarding the wringer on account of their inability to fasten it to the tub securely. If a piece of heavy cloth is hung across the tub where the wringer fastens to it, you will find that it will fasten and hold as securely as to the old fashioned wooden tub.

How to Thread With Yarn.

Most people have a great deal of trouble in getting wool through the eye of the darning needle. To do this easily put your wool over the head of the needle and slide it down toward the point, pinching it closely with finger and thumb. In this position press it in the needle's eye, ready for work.

How to Pick a Fowl Quickly.

An easy way to remove down from a duck or pinfeathers from a chicken is after the fowl has been well scalded to take a rough towel and rub the fowl. This method saves much time and a tedious task.

OUR HIGH IDEALS.

Is the Grange Measuring Up to the Standards Set by Its Founders?

[Special Correspondence.]

The question has been asked, "Is the grange measuring up to the high ideals of its founders?" Ideals are perfection. Results are reality. Ideals are spiritual. Results are human and because they are human are seldom perfect. Ideals mean higher and better things. "He aims too low who shoots beneath the stars."

The founders of the grange placed its ideals high, and that it has "measured up," "made good," that the realization of its ideals in results is apparent in the higher and better things for rural life, is proved by the oft repeated remark, "They builded better than they knew."

One of its ideals was to perfect for the first time in history an organization of tillers of the soil "united by the strong and faithful ties of agriculture," nation wide and perhaps as extensive as the world. This ideal has been largely realized, and well nigh a million members are now within its fold, while other farm organizations are following the lead of the grange and keeping step with millions more.

Other ideals were "meeting together, selling together, working together, buying together, talking together and in general acting together for mutual protection and advancement, to bring producers and consumers, farmers and manufacturers into the most direct and friendly relations possible, to develop a better and higher manhood and womanhood among ourselves, to enhance the comforts and attractions of our homes and strengthen our attachments to our pursuits, to encourage education, that practical agriculture, domestic science and all the arts which adorn the home be taught in our schools, encourage honesty in business and politics, to support temperance and promote 'peace on earth, good will toward men,' and stand for a proper equality, equity and fairness, protection for the weak, restraint upon the strong—in short, justly distributed burdens and justly distributed power." All worthy ideals these for the sons and daughters of our American republic. One of its highest ideals was to place woman in her proper place—the full equal with man—the first organization in the world to do so, and thereby to inculcate a proper appreciation of her abilities and her sphere.

Through the working out of its ideals it has made tens of thousands of men and women better—better to each other, better to their neighbors and better to their God. It has made brighter and better homes, bringing about the real uplift in rural life. It is securing better and more just laws, purer politics, curbing monopolies, electing better men to office, and if its ideals are kept bright and remain high and if its members work for these ideals and not for personal ambition or other selfish purposes millions more will rise up and call it blessed.

GRANGE BANKS.

Pennsylvania Has Twenty of Them, With Resources of About $3,000,000.

Through the grange organizations in the state of Pennsylvania there has been worked out a practical demonstration of the fact that farmers are able to have and successfully operate their own financial institutions. In the short space of about three years, says Past Master Hill, some twenty banks and one trust company have been organized. The capital stock of these institutions is considerably over $1,000,000, and their resources at this time approximate $3,000,000.

There are about 3,000 shareholders in these various institutions, and while the institutions all receive the usual examination by the state and federal authorities they are also audited and thoroughly examined at frequent intervals by private auditors specially employed for this purpose by the institutions themselves. They are so organized that not one of them is in any way responsible for the operation of another, nor is there any liability attached to the state grange as an organization. This movement has, however, done much to popularize the grange and indicates the progressive character of the membership in the state.

A Woman State Inspector.

Miss Dora Ellis, who holds the office of pomona in the Ohio state grange, is one of the women visitors or inspectors of workshops and factories. She spent most of the winter in Columbus. She was called to Cincinnati for six weeks' work and then sent to Columbus for the third week in April. She next visited Marion and Delaware in her official capacity.

Fire and Tornado Insurance.

The Kansas Patrons' Fire and Tornado association has decreased the cost of insurance to grange farmers of that state by fully one-half. It is now carrying $8,280,000 in risks on something over 4,000 policies. The cost on each $1,000 for 1908 was $2.17. The president and treasurer each draw the munificent salary of $50 each.

The business agent of the Ohio state grange reports combined purchases by the members in that state last year of $16,000 worth of binder twine.

ALL WOMEN ARE JUDGED BY THEIR TASTE IN DRESS

A Bad Impression Is Given by Loud and Flashy Clothes.

No one woman in the world can afford to be indifferent to dress.

Men are properly supposed to be indifferent to women's dress, and so they are, as far as fabric is concerned. But a man is always conscious of the fact when a woman is inappropriately dressed.

If a woman dresses in a loud, flashy manner she is very apt to be misjudged.

A well-bred, modest woman never dresses in such a manner as to attract attention. A dress that is loud in color or that fits too tightly is bound to attract unpleasant attention.

Gay colored stockings are in the worst of taste. The other day I sat opposite a woman in the subway. She was young and good-looking, and at first sight I thought very well dressed. She wore a handsome street suit and a smart hat. Her furs were good. A glance at her feet dispelled the illusion. Her shoes were shabby and looked as though they had not been blackened in weeks. They were also run over at the heels. Just that one thing utterly spoiled her appearance.

The woman who is "getting on" and beginning to show the wrinkles cannot afford to dress like a young girl. She must give up the brilliant colors and be content with grays and whites and lavenders.

A youthful hat can make a middle-aged woman look ridiculous. So can curls and puffs and pompadours. Don't wear an unbecoming hat simply because it happens to be the style. This season's hats may be very unbecoming to you. If so, be wise and get one that while not in style may nevertheless be most becoming to you. As a rule it is fatal for a woman to get it into her head that she is picturesque. She tries to dress to her style and the result is far from pleasing.

I once went to a dinner where all the husbands looked as though they lived on canned foods and nuts. A man does not care a whit about your looking picturesque, but he does like you to look neat. That is one reason why most men admire hospital nurses—they always look the picture of dainty neatness.

Try to wear the colors that suit you. If your eyes are blue or gray do not wear brown, and if they are brown do not wear dark blue. If your hair is fair and your color bright, red will not suit you. If you are sallow, avoid greens and pinks. Conspicuous stripes and plaids are never in good taste.

If you are stout, always choose a dark shade and have your clothes as plain as possible. The white ruche at the neck, while pretty enough, is not becoming to one person in fifty. As a rule men dislike large hats. They like turbans and toques that set close to the head.

Every woman has visions of herself in a picture hat, but the reality is not always as lovely as the vision. It is a woman's duty to dress as well and as becomingly as her means permit. A plain woman can improve her appearance tenfold by suitable dressing, and a pretty woman can greatly enhance her beauty.

To wear becoming clothes and then to forget about your looks is the secret of a good appearance.—Baltimore Star.

It Is Our Way Of Thinking.

There is nothing more useful than our line of NICKLE WARE. If we were in the advice-giving business, we would say to our young friends who are just starting out in life, buy a few things and buy them good. A good piece of Nickle Ware is more useful than a room full of cheap bric-a-brac; one good picture than a wall full of chromos. Take our advice—be poor in many things, but rich in a few.

A YORK PASTOR ON GAMBLING.

Says Churches That Allow It Are To Be Condemned.

In his sermon Sunday night, Rev. Jacob A. Gohn, pastor of the First United Brethren Church, one of the largest in York, Pa., denounced gambling in the home and the social clubs in strong terms.

The discourse, it is said, was a direct slap at certain social organizations of women in that city, also church societies which exist by conducting games of chance in houses of worship.

Rev. Gohn said, in part.

"The mothers of our American homes who play cards in their homes and in the clubs are responsible for the great majority of the wretched gamblers in our land. Ninety per cent. of the gamblers declare that they learned to play the game in their own homes and 80 per cent. of these say that their parents were church members.

"If the accursed gambling is not kept out of some societies, calling themselves churches, this country will grow worse and worse. The soldiers raffling for the Saviour's garment is the same principle as is involved in the sale of grab-bags and other articles in the church.

"When gambling, is brought into the house of God to support public worship or some charity it is time for every Christian to repeat his Master's words, 'My house shall be called the house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves.' I would as soon take a coal of fire and let it burn its way through my hand as to take money raised by gambling for my support.

"I would just as soon be pastor of a bunch of stock gamblers and racetrack gamblers as a bunch of parlor gamblers, club gamblers and church gamblers. If I could indorse card playing in the home and the club by church members, and raffling in the church, then I would invite all gamblers to become members of my congregation.

"A church that must depend upon members who play cards had better die. I don't believe that societies which flourish by gambling will bring five cents in h——.

"I have heard men make the statement that there is no harm in the social card game. You might just as well put burglar tools in the hands of your son and teach him how to use them as to put a deck of cards in his hands and teach him the games."

WILSON LAW UNDER FIRE.

Republicans Take Legal Steps To Test Validity of Disfranchising.

With the view of testing the legality of the election in Charles county, at which Republicans claim they were disfranchised through the medium of a ballot so arranged as to render it practically impossible for hundreds of them to vote, a petition was filed last Monday in the circuit court for Charles county in which Benjamin B. Compton, Republican candidate for sheriff, contests the election of his Democratic opponent, Alexander Haislip. Gen. L. A. Wilmer is the counsel of record, but with him are associated former Attorney General Bonaparte, John C. Rose, U. S. District Attorney, and Mr. John Philip Hill, of Baltimore.

This is the second attack made upon the Wilson law ballots used in counties to which the act applies, a suit somewhat similar, but in which the allegations differ, having been entered in Queen Anne's county.

In the very near future charges will be filed with the Governor, it is reported, against the Democratic supervisors in these counties, also in Somerset and St. Mary's. The specific charges are that these officials violated the law, and evidence will be submitted to sustain this allegation.

Ever since the election, the Republican organization has been investigating the conduct of the election officials, and they claim to have in their possession evidence which they regard as conclusive to prove to the court that the law was not observed, and that methods were used which render the elections invalid.

General Wilmer was in Baltimore last Monday and conferred with Messrs. Bonaparte and Rose. The bill, as prepared, was carefully considered.

The petition, after reciting the fact that Benjamin B. Compton was a candidate for sheriff against Alexander Haislip, states that the returns show that Haislip had received 1009 votes, while Compton was credited with 704. It then goes on to aver that Mr. Compton received a majority all legal votes cast, and that the result arrived at was owing to "irregularities, errors and wrongful acts of the supervisors of election and judges of election in failing to furnish legal ballots to the voters, and in the judges of election counting illegal ballots for the defendant and refusing to receive and count properly marked ballots offered and marked for the petitioner."

Not only does the petition attack the election, as conducted, but it questions the constitutionality of the Wilson law, which imposes an educational qualification. It is not expected that the decision of the lower court if adverse will be accepted by either side, and an appeal is certain to follow.

Notice To Delinquent Taxpayers.

Notice is hereby given to all delinquent taxpayers that if taxes now due and in arrears are not paid before January 1, 1910, I will proceed by law to collect. I refer to Sec. 50 of 566 of Acts of General Assembly of Maryland, a copy of which is hereto annexed. Please pay promptly and save cost.

SECTION 50. The said Treasurer shall during the first week in December in each and every year, give notice to all the delinquent taxpayers of said county, by advertisement inserted in two newspapers published in said county, and by hand-bills posted in five of the most public places in each election district of said county, and at the court house door, warning them that the payment of all taxes then due and in arrears will be enforced by advertisement and sale unless the same be paid before the 1st day of January next following.

COMMISSION DRAFTS UNIFORM GAME LAW

State Is Divided Into Three Districts and License Fixed at $1.

Uniform game laws for the whole State, a license fee for gunners and a game limit constitute the essential features of the work of the Game and Fish Commission, which assembled last Friday in the State's offices in the Union Trust Building in Baltimore to pass on proposed legislation embracing the ideas of the members of it. Represented on this Commission, which has State Senator Milbourne for its chairman, is every county in Maryland.

Legislation dealing with the questions that the Commission is trying to settle has always created a furor at Annapolis, but the Commission, after developing some of the contentious attitude that characterizes legislators, settled down to agree. They seem to have succeeded. Every effort will be made to induce the lawmakers to see the situation as they view it.

In providing for a uniform game law the state was divided into three districts. Garrett, Allegany and Washington counties in Western Maryland include one; the Eastern Shore and Southern Maryland counties another, and the middle counties the third. In the first district the gunning season is to extend from November 10 to December 31, and in the second and third from November 15 to December 24.

The size of the bag is to be the same for all the counties. The limit is 15 partridges, 12 rabbits, squirrels and woodcocks each and 6 pheasants. Killing of deer is limited to one each season.

The gunner's license is $1; non-residents must pay $10. Any taxpayer can, however, invite a friend from out of the State to hunt over his property without being compelled to pay the license fee.

Maryland now has a law for fishing in the Potomac river, this legislation having been enacted jointly by Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia. This cannot be interferred with. In regulating fishing in other Maryland waters the Commission sought to protect the waters by providing that fish of each kind less than a specified size cannot be caught.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1909.

THE JOYS OF TOYLAND.

How old are you? This is not an impertinent question, nor yet a query put by the census man; it is asked for the purpose of bringing you to a realization that you should be only as old as you feel—and at this season of the year you should feel young indeed! Can you go through the crowded shopping districts of the city today and see the big-eyed, rosy-cheeked little folks rushing from one gorgeous shop window to another "Oh-ing" and "Ah-ing," without feeling a few of your years drop off? If you can, then hie yourself back to your office or your home and spend half an hour getting the grouch out of your system! For Christmas time is child time, and there is no place for the knit brows and the mouth that is turned down at the corners in the holiday scheme of things.

Walk through the toy department and stores some time at noon. You will be jostled and stepped on and kicked by small feet, poked in the ribs by eager elbows, and hear whispered exclamation of wonder as the beauties of toyland unrolled their fascinations before delighted eyes. Here are thousands of homeless little and big dolls waiting to be adopted, here are steam engines and electric cars, innumerable games, sleds and wagons, animals of every description (guaranteed city broke and perfectly gentle;) here are Noah's Arks, Santa Claus and doll houses in wonderous profusion. Clasping each other's hands, the children parade awestruck up and down the aisles, or rush madly from one attractive spot to another; the ragged and the soiled of face mingle with the well-dressed and clean—for Christmas time is a great leveler.

Stand back and watch the passing show of Liliputians, who hold the center of the stage from today until the dawn of another year. Do you hark back in your memory to the time when the simpler toys brought the keenest joy to you? When a miniature piano of eight illy-tuned notes or a doll with staring eyes—she was the grandmother of the one who later on opened and shut hers obediently—meant Christmas and happiness to you? Do you recall the gorgeous red sled and the skates that Santa Claus, after many penciled appeals, delivered the night before Christmas? If you do—if you remember what Christmas meant when you were young in years, then you understand what it means to these little folks who get in your way on the streets, who pressed their noses against the show-windows (leaving numerous small grease spots there,) who are painfully good day after day, because Santa Clause is keeping a check on them in his home up North.

If, on the other hand, the thronged street, the crowded stores, the glittering show-windows, and all the other suggestions of the children's Greatest Day, do not cause a reminiscent smile and a warmer feeling in your heart, you are indeed, old! Then it behooves you to make yourself go into the highways and gather some of the spirit that makes this old world worth living in.

The adage, "Men are but children of a larger growth," is merely a statement of what we ought to be; don't let it be changed in your particular case to "Men are but children with a grouch." If needs be, force yourself a bit and become a child in spirit—a child in the dreamy delights of toyland!

FINE FARM DISPLAY.

Few states of the Union can show such a diversity of farm products as the State of Maryland, with its high altitudes and its bay shores. A visit to the Fifth Regiment Armory last week, where the products of the Maryland farms were to be seen in vast quantities and with fine display effect, would have proved an agreeable experience to many who do not quite realize the extent and intelligence of the farm industry in this State. It was altogether creditable and inspiring, and the men who stand behind the plow give celerity to the state through their labors, for Maryland produce goes to all parts of the country—of the world, indeed. The farm and the cannery unite to make this distribution complete.

The various societies which cooperated in the armory exhibit did their level best to make it a signal one and with success. Whether one was interested in the exhibits of the Maryland horticultural society or in the culture of bees or any one of a half-dozen other related concerns, he found at the armory more points than he could secure by years of experience in the practical work that the various exhibits represented. The exhibitors deserved wide credit, as did the officers of the various societies that affiliated. All who attended the display gave the fullest measure of praise for the success of the enterprise.

KEEP YOUR TOWN ALIVE.

A town is very much like an individual. To be flourishing, it must have energy and enterprise. The people in a town should remember that the individual prosperity depends to a large extent upon the character of the place in which their business is located. Every public measure should be liberally supported by all, especially the business men. At the present day there is as much competition between towns as there is among persons and business enterprises. A man seeking a location will invariably select a town that is up to the times, and is eagerly in favor of every modern improvement. A town in these modern times can't afford to be peopled with old fogies or antediluvian fossils who are continually kicking at every enterprise. To make a flourishing town you must believe in its future and work for it, encouraging every improvement. Make a special effort to exhibit some evidence of improvement in your work and character. Help every worthy man, help every enterprise and encourage every good man to locate in your town.

PLAIN TALK BY RAYNER ON ZELAYA.

Diplomatic usage and reasons of state may prevail against carrying into effect the resolution of Senator Rayner instructing the President to capture President Zelaya of Nicaragua and place him on trial for the butchery of two American soldiers of fortune. That is a question which depends somewhat upon developments and further information. In the meantime, however, there is satisfaction and heartening inspiration in witnessing the dressing down which Mr. Rayner has administered to the Central American outlaw.

Senator Rayner, speaking on his resolution for the apprehension and punishment of Zelaya for murder in the death of the two Americans which was brought about by his orders, laid the ax at the root of the tree. He left no no doubt as to the temper of the Marylander, a temper widely reflected in the Senate, and especially by Senator Lodge. With the question of fact established and the position of international law upon the side of the government, with the inducement of necessity for protection of the lives and property of Americans at issue, there is no inherent reason for the State Department to defer drastic action, whatever questions of expediency may be involved.

It may be objected that it would be impolitic to take the severe course recommended by Senator Rayner but the fact remains that the United States must vindicate the facts of justice and right; nor will it secure any more respect from the other Latin-American republics by refraining than by action. It is more likely to win respect by firm action well within the scope of its undisputed rights. Should Zelaya retire from the presidency or be captured and punished for his crimes by the insurgents this country would be relieved of responsibility and intervention.

The government at Washington could not, of course, respond to the appeal of the insurgent leader for its endorsement of the military policies being pursued. This is out of its scope, but it would be glad to have Zelaya captured so as to be relieved of the disagreeable task of punishing him in its own behalf.

ANOTHER STATE TO WORK CONVICTS ON HIGHWAYS.

The State of Kansas passed a law some time ago permitting convicts to be worked on the roads, but no use of the permission has been made. It is stated, however, that the warden of the penitentiary proposes to take advantage of the law in the near future. This is further precedent, if more were needed, for the passage of a law in this State authorizing the employment of convicts for this purpose.

It is possible to place convicts at work under ideal conditions in this State. Aside from the fact that their use may result in the building of roads that might not otherwise be constructed, there can hardly be question of the advantage to the convict, physically, mentally and morally. Confinement within four walls must in time take the spirit and will out of a man. Whatever ambition to turn over a new leaf may animate the prisoner, the barrenness of his existence must prey upon his mind, weaken his determination and undermine his good resolutions. Putting him outdoors, where he can get fresh air and better food and feel again the rest which comes from labor under normal conditions, cannot but be a helpful regimen.

In all the discussion of the employment of convicts on road-building in this State no reasonable objection has been advanced why it should not be done, and we hope the next Legislature will enact the necessary legislation. Humanitarianism as well as practical economy urges action.

THIRTY DAYS IN JAIL FOR ASSEMBLYMAN GREEN

And a Fine of $25 and Costs Imposed by Judge Henderson.

One of the most interesting of the several criminal cases tried in the Circuit Court at the present term was that of Lawrence F. Green, ex-Assemblyman from Garrett county, which was concluded yesterday morning, when Judge Henderson, sitting as a jury, rendered a verdict of guilty and sentenced the traverser to serve thirty days in jail and pay a fine of $25 and costs.

It will be remembered that prior to the campaign last fall Green was a candidate for the nomination for the House of Delegates, but withdrew from the race, claiming that he was not receiving fair treatment at the hands of the leaders of the party. He then prepared and had printed a circular attacking the private character of Mr. Harvey J. Speicher, who sought the nomination for the Senate. This circular was given some publicity in several of the districts of the county and contained the most infamous and scurrilous attacks not only upon Mr. Speicher but also another prominent resident of the county. It was not a hard task to connect Green with the authorship of the circular and his arrest followed. He waived a hearing before Justice Teats and gave bond for his appearance at the Circuit Court. The trial followed with the above result and Green's attorneys, after the verdict and sentence had been pronounced, entered an appeal to the Court of Appeals which was granted by Judge Henderson, the bond being fixed at $500. This has been filled and Green is at liberty.

The State had but few witnesses in the case, while the defense summoned nearly forty. No one except Green testified on the part of the defense and in his testimony he attempted to fix the authorship of the circular upon Mansfield Frazee, now of Connellsville, Pa., but at the time the circular was written employed in the Friendsville Bank as a bookkeeper. Frazee was arrested at the time the circular was put into circulation and was tried and fined by the Justice at Friendsville. Later he had a hearing before the Federal authorities and was released through the intervention of Mr. Speicher and others.

During the hearing of the case in court yesterday the court room was crowded by spectators and others interested. A plea was made by Judge Williams, counsel for Green, for clemency, requesting the Court to impose a light fine, but this the Court refused to do, holding that the crime committed by Green was outrageous and that the circular issued by him was libelous in the highest degree; that the charges as set forth against Mr. Speicher were false in every particular and that no matter what was said in Green's behalf the Court had a duty to perform which would be just to all concerned and thereupon sentence was pronounced.

Judge Williams and Mr. Gilmor S. Hamill appeared for Green, while the State was represented by Messrs. Renninger & Offutt and Mr. A. A. Doub.

DR. HENRY W. McCOMAS FOR GRAND PRELATE

His Candidacy Being Pushed by Western Maryland Pythians.

Dr. Henry W. McComas, of Oakland, a member of Garrett Lodge No. 113, Knights of Pythias, has been nominated for the office of grand prelate of the Grand Lodge of Maryland, and is being opposed by an Eastern Shoreman for the position.

Dr. McComas stands high in Pythianism and has devoted much time and energy in building up the organization not only locally but throughout the jurisdiction. He has the backing of the many lodges in Western Maryland and should his election ensue at the meeting of the Grand Lodge to be held shortly it will be an honor bestowed upon a deserving and true Pythian.

In connection with the meeting of the local lodge next Friday night Dr. McComas will be host at the social session which will convene immediately after the lodge adjourns.

Entertained Fellow Workers.

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Ferguson, of Locust avenue, entertained the members of the local crews of the Fairmont & Clarksburg Traction Company at a supper given at their home last Wednesday evening. Mr. Ferguson who is a local conductor is very popular with the employees of the line and there was a large attendance of his friends. While oysters formed the principal dish yet all manner of the season's viands were served and the supper was an excellent one. The house was tastefully decorated for the occasion and all present enjoyed the evening greatly.—Fairmont Times.

War For County Seat.

The fight for the county seat of Preston county, W. Va., is growing bitter. Kingwood, the present county seat, threatens that in case Terra Alta gets the courthouse transferred there to secede and secure the division of Preston into two small counties. There is some question as to whether the buckwheat county could be divided, as it does not have the requisite area under the West Virginia law, but the threat is being made nevertheless that Kingwood will remain a county seat even if a new county must be created for that purpose.

Those opposed to the removal of the courthouse have resorted to ridicule, the favorite method being to secure the publication of letters from every crossroads in the county offering free sites, free stone and other inducements. Tunnelton, Aurora, Rowlesburg, Bretz, Reedsville, Masontown, Morgan's Glade, Corinth, Bruceton, Albrights and Zar have all put in their claims.

A Very Heavy Sleet.

Sunday night a rain which turned to ice the moment it struck the ground and trees gave everything in this section of the country a beautiful appearance, made walking slippery and extremely dangerous even to those of sure feet and did great damage to fruit trees, shrubbery, telephone and telegraph wires. The lines of the Garrett County Telephone Company were down in all directions, and along the National road pole after pole fell and in some places made travel over that thoroughfare hazardous. One good effect of the weather, however, has been to make sleighing and sledding very good and the farmers and teamsters are using the snow to good advantage. Should the weather continue cold ice cutting will begin at Mountain Lake Park in a day or two, the ice on the lake now being of considerable thickness.

Suggestions for Christmas Presents

On a cold winter night, when the wind is whistling outside, nothing can beat a bright, open fireplace. It is great for the family to sit around the fire with Grandpa and Grandma, Mom and Pop and all the kids and tell stories and pop corn or toast marshmallows. These fireside re-unions will be remembered for many, many years when the family is all scattered. The fireplace of today is all changed, instead of wood fuel we have the natural gas logs and open polished coppered front stoves that give the finishing touch to the home.

THE TELEPHONE AT CHRISTMAS

THERE is no need for you to be worn out by holiday preparations if you make good use of your telephone.

The Bell Telephone Companies have found that just before Christmas the number of daily connections is the highest for the year. The telephone has become a necessity of the holiday season, because without it most people would not have time to do what they have planned.

Christmas cheer extends beyond the city limits, and the universal Bell System helps to carry it throughout the land.

The Free Sewing Machine

Think of it! and all this in the year 1909, when husbands have automobiles, automatic adding machines, automatic locking desks—you, Mrs. Housewife, are compelled to be satisfied to sew for your husband and family with a sewing machine that hasn't been improved for 25 years. Wouldn't you be interested in a 20th century improved sewing machine which completely removes every objection you have to any sewing machine? That's The Free Sewing Machine. Of course it is impossible to explain all this here. The Free is insured for five years against breakage, wear and tear, fire, tornado, lightning and water. No other sewing machine company dares to insure their machine.

NATURAL GAS SUPPLY FAILED SUNDAY AFTERNOON

Break in the Main Near Fort Pendleton Was the Cause

Sunday afternoon about three o'clock the supply of natural gas coming into Oakland suddenly ceased and until the cause was made known and assurance given that the necessary repairs would be made and fuel would again be on tap by eight o'clock many householders in Oakland, Loch Lynn, Deer Park and Terra Alta were somewhat perturbed.

The cause of the gas going off was a break in the main near Fort Pendleton, ten or twelve miles south of Oakland on the old Northwestern Turnpike, where the pipe, on account of contraction, drew apart. The trouble was located within a very short time and in less than ten minutes afterward men and the necessary materials for making the repairs were on the road to the point where the trouble occurred.

The repairs to the line were made in record time and a few minutes before eight o'clock in the evening the fears of the patrons of the company were allayed when the gas came on, since which time no interruption in the service has occurred.

The local officials deserve much credit for the promptness in making the repairs to the main, thus eliminating much inconvenience and hardship upon those who depend entirely upon gas as a fuel as well as a means of illumination.

The bazaar and supper last Thursday afternoon and evening, conducted by the ladies of the Lutheran church, was patronized very generously by members of all denominations. The supper room was crowded from five o'clock until the close. The net proceeds was more than $90. The ladies desire to express their thanks for the generous patronage extended.

The morning service in St. Paul's M. E. church last Sunday was brought to a sudden termination when the flue from the furnace became clogged with soot and as a consequence the auditorium was filled with dense smoke, rendering it impossible to continue the service. The congregation was dismissed by the pastor. Service was conducted Sunday evening, the obstacle in the flue having been removed meanwhile.

Mr. S. A. Nally has completed the removal of the two one and a-half story buildings which occupied the Alder street frontage of his lot to the frontage on Second street. The sites thus made vacant by the removal of the buildings will be utilized in the spring by erecting thereon a cement-block building for public purposes, including, so it was stated by Mr. Nally, flats above, and a skating rink and moving picture theatre on the ground floor.

Mr. J. A. Blackiston, a well known engineer on the 17-mile grade, had the misfortune to have his foot mashed Saturday evening about 6 o'clock, while on duty. The engine was standing at Altamont, when in some manner he got his foot caught while oiling the engine. He brought his engine to Piedmont, where it was found necessary to amputate a toe. Dr. Shuey and Kalbaugh performed the operation at his home Sunday morning and he is getting along nicely at this time.—Piedmont Herald.

Over two thousand laborers are needed in the mines and other industries along the line of the Western Maryland railroad, West Virginia division. During the recent business panic and consequent shutdown of industries in that vicinity many foreign laborers returned to their homes, while many of the American laborers drifted to other points of the country. The shortage is more particularly in the mines, but other industries are also affected by want of help, and in some cases the shortage is said to be so serious as to affect the successful operation of mills and mines.

Wind, sleet, snow, thunder, lightning and sunshine, all within a period of eighteen hours, was the portion of Oakland Monday which is rather an unusual occurrence. In fact, the "oldest residents" declare that they have not heard thunder and seen lightning in December since the year the "woods burned," which is somewhat indefinite. Chronologically Monday, December 13, brought the entire combination of weather to Oakland. Peter Arc Smith, the Kingwood weather prognosticator, may have been responsible for this conglomeration of weather, or the fact that it arrived on the 13th may be an excuse for its visit. However, it was here and its visit is still fresh in the minds of many who received sudden jolts and sundry bruises upon parts of their anatomies unaccustomed to such usage. The lightning Monday evening about six o'clock was extremely vivid in the northwest sky followed in a short time by a copious downpour of rain which came in good time to replenish failing wells and almost entirely dry springs.

A Sure-Thing Game.

THAT nickle grab-game which is a feature at most church fairs and is one of the chief delights of the children is a sure-thing game, for you're always sure of getting something for your money. It beats most business investments for the reason that you are sure when little freckle-faced Jimmie or curly-haired Jennie makes a "grab" there will be a nickle's worth of fun for the little one. In other words, you get the full return for your money.

But even you, Mr. Solid Business Man, will have to admit that the grab-bag game isn't in it for good substantial returns on the amount invested with a proposition where you can get back ten times the amount you lay out. Yet that is what one of the best-known firms of Cumberland, Maryland, did, and we have their letter to prove it. For personal reasons, the members of this firm do not wish to have their names used. Otherwise, they are willing that EVERY ONE SHOULD KNOW ALL ABOUT HOW THEY SAVED $1,516.25 IN A SINGLE YEAR after they began using natural gas. The letter is as follows:

"We have used natural gas since its introduction into Cumberland. Our bills for both our Baltimore Street and Centre Street stores, for lighting and cooking, for the year 1908 totaled $223.75. For the year previous to our natural gas installation, to get the same results, we paid $1,200 for electric light, $180 for artificial gas and $360 for anthracite coal, a total of $1,740. THIS MADE A NET GAIN TO US FOR THE YEAR OF $1,516.25, BY THE INTRODUCTION OF NATURAL GAS INTO CUMBERLAND."

To get these results this firm paid $139.40 for the installing of four arc lights, one outside arc light, two service lines, connections with two artificial lines, and burners in the stoves used in the firm's business. The company's letter over the firm's signature is on file in our office.

HALF MILLION SOLD

Red Cross Stamps Find a Ready Sale in Maryland.

Of the one million Red Cross Christmas stamps consigned to the Maryland Association for the Prevention and Relief of Tuberculosis, the first half million have now been disposed of and it is confidently expected that the Christmas enthusiasm in the next two weeks will call out the other half million. Every street car in Baltimore now has a large placard on its dash-board saying, "Everybody helps. Red Cross Christmas stamps. For sale everywhere."

The demand for the little stickers for use on holiday correspondence and Christmas parcels is more widespread than last year, when 125 stations throughout Maryland had them for sale. They are now on sale at 200 stations. Nearly every county has its group of people interested in their sale and use and these groups are not only helping to develop the real Christmas spirit of "Good will toward men," but are just as surely adding to the revenues which will enable the State Tuberculosis Association to carry forward the work of prevention for another year.

The stamps, which are of a pretty design, sell for a penny apiece. Each one is a square inch of clear conscience for the person who buys and uses it. It is also a bullet in the fight against consumption.

If there is not a station convenient to any citizen in Maryland, a request to the Maryland Tuberculosis Association, No. 101 W. Saratoga St., Baltimore, Md., will bring any number of the stamps asked for by return mail.

New Sheriff To Take Charge Monday.

Mr. Andrew Shartzer, sheriff-elect, will assume his official duties Monday morning when he will take the oath of office, he having filed his bond which was approved by the Orphans' Court judges at a recent session. Mr. Brown, the retiring sheriff, is having his household effects moved from the sheriff's residence to his private home on Second street where he will reside in the future. To Mr. Shartzer we extend our best wishes for a successful tenure of office.

A Slight Fire.

Last Friday morning fire at the residence of Mr. E. A. Browning, on the outskirts of Oakland, had its origin beneath the gas range in the kitchen which was communicated to the floor by the excessive heat in the oven, the stove being of such construction as not to allow the circulation of air beneath it. Considerable excitement was occasioned by the alarm. The only damage resulting was a badly seared board in the kitchen floor, a shock to the nerves of Mrs. Tunny, who is occupying the house with Mr. Tunny and their little daughter, and a fright to those who resided nearby.

Worth looked at O'Mally, who looked at Smith, who looked at Kitty; then all four looked at La Signorina.

"Are you not lightening our trials by joking?" asked Worth dubiously.

"Call it madness, if you like. I shall go as the princess."

"But the authorities! It will be prison."

"I am sufficiently armed for any event. It all depends upon your courage."

"Oh, if you take that tone," said O'Mally, coloring, "why, the thing is done. No one can call me a coward."

"I shan't desert you in a strait like this," remarked Worth quietly. "Only I think La Signorina rather cruel to force such a situation upon us when it was entirely unnecessary."

"It is agreed, then," continued La Signorina, "that tomorrow we depart for Florence as the Principessa di Monte Bianca and suit?"

* * * * * * * *

It is in early morning that one should discover the Piazza San Marco. Few travelers, always excepting the Teutonic pilgrims, are up and about. The doves are hungry then, and they alight on your hands, your arms, your shoulders and even your hat. In a moment they are fluttering about you like an autumn storm of leaves, subsiding quickly.

It was such a picture Merrihew and Hillard, his guide, came upon the morning following their arrival. They had not visited it during the night. They had, with the usual impatience of men, gone directly to the Campo Santa Maria Formosa for the great reward. They had watched and waited till near midnight, but in vain.

Suddenly Hillard stopped. He gave a sharp exclamation and darted to one side to grasp the arm of a neat little woman who was buying corn. It was Bettina. But the maid refused absolutely to reveal the hiding place of her mistress, La Signorina, and Kitty.

Hillard offered her a hundred lira note ($20).

Bettina, strongly tempted, finally refused the bribe. She threatened to call the carabinieri, moreover, if Hillard followed her.

Hillard rejoined Merrihew, discouraged.

As they passed out of the quadrangle a man accosted them. It was Giovanni, with a week's growth of beard on his face, his shoes out at the toes.

"Follow me," he said softly.

He led them through tortuous streets, over canal after canal, toward the Campo San Angelo. He came to a stop before a dilapidated tenement. The three mounted the dusty, worn stairs of stone to the third landing. Giovanni opened a door and bade them enter.

Seated by the window which overlooked the little canal was a young woman. Her hands lay passively in her lap, and her head was lowered.

"You have found her!" whispered Hillard, a great pity swelling his heart.

At the sound she turned her head. Her face, thin and waxen, was still beautiful, ethereally beautiful, but without color. She was perhaps three and twenty.

"I have brought an old friend to see you," said Giovanni.

She stood up.

"We are going back to the Sabine hills, Enrichetta and I." The old man rubbed his hands joyously. "Eh, carissime?"

"Yes, father," with a faint smile.

Giovanni pushed his friends into another room, closing the door.

"I found her," he said in English, the chords in his throat standing out. "And, mother of Christ, how I have suffered! She was dancing. She had to sit at tables and drink with the men—that or the Seine. When she saw me she gave a great cry and fell. She has not been like herself, but that will pass away in time. Now she sits in silence and broods. I went to the Italian ambassador. He heard my story in full. He wrote personally to the king. Today I am free. I have had to walk from Milan almost. I had little money. That letter of credit—so you call it—is with my cousin in Sorrento."

"And the man?" Hillard could not refrain from putting this question.

Giovanni looked down. "The signor told me never to speak of that again."

"So I did," replied Hillard. "But all is changed now.

"Go back to your hills with your daughter and leave vengeance in the hands of God. Forget this man who has wronged you. Forget."

"If he does not cross my path and if she lives. I have suffered too greatly to forgive and forget. I promise not to seek him."

The old man went down to the street with them. They were so kind. He hated the thought of losing them. They waved their hands cheerily and vanished from sight. They never saw Giovanni again, yet his hand was to work out the great epoch in Hillard's destiny.

CHAPTER XV.

THE ARIA FROM "IL TROVATORE."

"SHALL we take a look into the Campo Formosa again tonight?" asked Merrihew, stepping into the gondola.

"It will be a waste of time. Bettina will have warned them. What's the Italian coming to, anyhow? She refused a hundred francs. But I can see that Mrs. Sandford had a hand in this latest event. She has probably written that we might look for them in the Campo."

"All right. We'll listen to the music," grumbled Merrihew. He wanted to find Kitty right away. Hillard's indifference annoyed him.

"To the barges of the troupes!" said Hillard to Achille.

In the great canal of San Marco the scene was like a water carnival. Hundreds of gondolas, with bobbing lights, swam slowly round the barges of the serenaders, who, for the most part, were fallen operatic stars or those who had failed to attain those dizzy heights.

What was that? Hillard was no longer lethargic.

From a gondola on the far side of the barge, standing out of the press and just beyond the radiance of the lanterns, came a voice which had a soul in it, a voice which broke into song for the pure joy of it—clear, thrilling—a voice before which the world bows down. The prima donna in the barge was clever; she stopped. The tenor went on, however, recognizing that he was playing opposite, as they say, to a great singer. Hillard's heart beat fast. That voice! There could not be another like it. And she was here in Venice!

"Quick, Achille!" for the far gondola was heading for the Grand canal.

Merrihew understood now.

"Follow!" commanded Hillard. "Ten lire if you can come up alongside that gondola. Can you see the number?"

"It is 152, signor—Pompeo. It will be a race."

At each stroke Merrihew swung forward his body. The end of the race came sooner than any one expected. A police barge nosed round an elbow. By the time Pompeo was off again the ferrule of the pursuing gondola scraped past Pompeo's blade. Pompeo called, and Achille answered. There was a war of words, figure of a dog, name of a pig. Achille was in the wrong, but 10 lire were 10 lire.

Hillard caught the gondola by the rail and cried. The race was over.

"Signorina," said Pompeo, boiling with rage, "shall I call the police?"

"No, Pompeo," said his solitary passenger.

"To the Campo, Pompeo. Mr. Hillard, will you kindly follow? I would speak to you alone, since there is no escape."

The way to the Campo Formosa was made without further incident.

The gondolas became moored. Hillard jumped out and went to assist La Signorina, but she ignored his outstretched hand.

"What is it you wish?" she asked.

"One look at your face," he answered simply.

She slowly removed the veil. Then, for the first time, he looked upon the face of this woman who had burdened his dreams. The face was not like any he had conjured. It seemed to him that Vecchio's—Paola Vecchio's—Barbara had stepped down from her frame—beauty, tranquil, flawless beauty. A minute passed. He was incapable of speech; he could only look.

"Well?" she said in the same expressionless tone.

"Let us begin at the beginning," he replied.

"Since this is to be the end."

"Why did you permit me to dine with you that memorable night?"

"A regretiable impulse."

"And why, after all had come to an apparent end—why did you send me that mask?"

"It is unanswerable. Truthfully I do not know."

"Who is that man—the Italian with the scar?"

"I will not answer that."

"'A lady': Grace of Mary, that is droll!"

"Why do you say that?"

"I am only quoting the man with the scar. Those were the words he used in regard to you."

"Perhaps he is right. Perhaps I am not a lady according to his rights." But she laughed.

"Do not laugh like that. What you are or have been or might have been to him is nothing to me. Only one fact remains clear, and that is I love you."

"No, Mr. Hillard, you are only excited. I may be a fugitive from the law."

"I do not believe it."

"There may be scars which do not show," she faltered—"in the heart, in the mind. I am sorry, terribly sorry. Heaven knows that I meant no harm. Forget me!"

"Forget you! Tell me what prevents friendship between us."

"You say you love me. Is that not answer enough? Give up all idea, all thought, of me. You will only waste your time. Come, is your love strong enough to offer a single sacrifice?"

"Not if it is to give you up. Oh, do not worry about persecution! I shall only seek to be near you."

"Good night," she said, "and good by!" She wound the veil round her face, took half a dozen steps, halted and turned, then went on into the dark.

* * * * * * * *

The Villa Ariadne rested upon a small knoll half a mile or more north of and above Fiesole, from which the panoramic beauty of Florence was to be seen at all times, glistening in the sun, glowing in the rain, sparkling in the night.

Life ran smoothly enough at the Villa Ariadne. La Signorina at the very last moment surrendered to the entreaties of Kitty. She agreed not to pass herself off as the princess. Among themselves each played the role originally assigned. La Signorina seemed to enjoy the farce as much as any one. It was a great temptation not to steal a look into the marvelous chests and sideboards, bulging as they knew with priceless glass and silver and linen and laces. But La Signorina each day inspected the seals and uttered solemn warnings.

They had now lived in the Villa Ariadne for two weeks, a careless, thoughtless, happy go lucky family.

Today was warm and mellow. On the stone bench by the porter's lodge hard by the gate sat the old Florentine and O'Mally. From some unknown source O'Mally had produced a concierge's hat and coat, a little moth eaten, a little tarnished, but serviceable.

"Pietro," said O'Mally, "I've got an idea. If any tourists come today I propose to show them around the place."

Pietro's eyes flashed angrily. "No, no! Mine, all mine!"

"Oh, I am not going to rob you! I'll give you the tip. What I want is the fun of the thing."

Pietro understood. That was different. If his excellency would pay over to him the receipts he could conduct the tourists as often as he pleased.

They shared a flask of wine.

The porter's bell rang loudly.

"Tourists!" whispered O'Mally. He settled his cap on straight and went to the gates. A party of five Americans stood outside—two men, two women and a girl.

"This is the Villa Ariadne?" asked one of the women.

"It is," said O'Mally, touching his cap.

"He speaks English!" cried the woman, turning joyfully to the others. "We wish to see the villa and the park."

"The villa is now occupied, signora," replied O'Mally, "but you are permitted to see the park and gardens."

"How much?" asked one of the men.

"Cinquanty," said O'Mally, then correcting himself, "for each person."

"Ten cents? Two lire fifty? Why, this is downright extortion!" declared the woman.

O'Mally gave vent to a perfect Italian shrug and put a hand out suggestively toward the gates.

"Oh, come, dear, protested one of the men wearily, "you've dragged us up here from Fiesole, and I'm not going back without seeing what's to be seen!"

Solemnly Pietro watched them pass, wondering what the terms were. O'Mally led the party to the fountain.

"This," O'Mally began, with a careless wave of the hand, "is the famous fountain by Donatello. It was originally owned by Catherine d'Medissy. The Borgias stole it from her, and Italy and France nearly came to war over it."

"The Borgias?" doubtfully. "Were

She slowly removed the veil.

these two families contemporaneous?"

"They were," scornfully.

The quintet consulted their guidebooks, but before they had located the paragraph referring to this work O'Mally was cunningly leading them away. He passed on to the antique marbles, explaining how this one was Nero's, that one Caligula's, that one Tiberius'. He lied so gracefully that the tomb of Ananias must have rocked.

"Do you know," said the woman, who had not yet spoken, "you speak English with an accent I do not understand."

O'Mally shivered. Was she going to spring dago on him? "I am an Italian," he said solemnly. "I was born, however, in County Clare. My father and mother were immigrants to Ireland."

"Ma," whispered the girl, "ask him for one of those buttons."

The stage whisper was overheard by O'Mally. "These buttons," he explained, "cost a lira each, but if the signorina really wishes one"— And thus another lira swelled the profits of the day.

At the gates O'Mally received his pourboire (tip) of 20 centesimi and returned to Pietro.

"Quando!" he cried.

O'Mally handed him the exact amount, minus the lira for the button.

"Santa Maria! All theos? How? No more I take dem! You!"

O'Mally sat down on the bench and laughed. It was as good a part as he had ever had.

Early evening. La Signorina leaned over the terrace wall, her hand idly trailing over the soft cool roses. Stretched out on either hand, white and shadowy, lay the great road. She was dreaming. Presently upon the silence came the echo of galloping horses. Two horsemen came cantering toward the Villa Ariadne. She heard their voices.

"Jack, this has been the trip of my life. Verona, Padua, Bologna and now Florence! This is life. Nothing like it."

"It has been enjoyable, Dan. I only hope our luggage will be at the hotel."

La Signorina's hand closed convulsively over a rose and crushed it.

"A last canter to Fiesole!"

The two went clattering down the road.

La Signorina walked slowly back to the villa. It was fatality that this man should again cross her path.

CHAPTER XVI.

KITTY DROPS A BANDBOX.

"WHAT'S the matter, Jack? Whenever you smoke your cigar goes out. You read a newspaper by staring over the top of it. You leave your watch under the pillow and have to hike back for it. You are absent minded. Now, what's the matter?"

Hillard sighed heavily.

"There you go again!" laughed Merrihew. "You tack that sigh to everything you say.

Hillard was human. He might be deeply in love, but this had not destroyed his healthy sense of humor, so he laughed at himself.

"It's a curious business—the dinner, the mask, the veil, the mystery," went on Merrihew. "I tell you frankly, Jack, something's wrong, and we shall both live to find it out."

"But what? Heaven on earth, what? Haven't I tried to figure it out till my brain aches? I haven't gone forward a single inch."

"What shall you do?"

"Nothing. When we have seen Florence we'll drop down to Perugia and Rome, then up to the Italian lakes, after that home, if you say."

Hillard looked at his watch.

"Only 9," he said. "Let's go over to Gambrinus' and hear the music."

The Hotel Italie was but a few blocks from the Piazza Vittorio Emanuele. They found the Halle crowded, noisy and interesting. From the Halle they went downstairs and through the billiard room. Under the arcade they found a small table. Presently two officers, one in the resplendent uniform of a colonel, went past. Hillard's pulse was tuned to a quicker stroke.

"I hope he doesn't see us," he said, tipping his panama over his eyes.

Merrihew scowled fiercely.

"So long as he doesn't observe us," said Hillard. "I have no interest in his affairs." Had he none? he wondered.

"He is coming this way again, Dan."

Hillard changed his mind. He pushed back his hat. If the man with the scar saw him and spoke he would reply. The colonel, glancing at the pair, halted. He turned and spoke to his brother officer. The man with the scar stepped over to the table and leaned with his hands upon it. There was a savage humor in his dark eyes.

"Did I not tell you that we should meet again?" he said to Hillard.

"Are you speaking to me?" asked Hillard. Every muscle in his body was alert and ready.

"Certainly I am speaking to you. This is the fellow," speaking to his companion, at the same time drawing off his gloves.

"I object to the word fellow," said Hillard. "Besides, I don't know you."

"Ah, discreet!" sneered the man with the scar.

"Colonel!" cried the subaltern as his senior smoothed the gloves and placed them carefully in his left hand.

"Oh, I am calm! But I have been dreaming of this moment. Now!" The colonel readdressed Hillard. "You meddled with an affair that night in which you had no concern."

"Are you quite sure?"

"Yes, I am sure. And yet as I think it over, as I recollect the woman," went on the colonel, with a smile which was evil and insinuating. "In Monte Carlo I was practically alone. Here it is Florence. Doubtless you will understand." He struck out with the gloves.

But they never touched Hillard's face. His hand caught the assailant's wrist and with a quick jerk brought him halfway across the table. The Italian cried faintly. Hillard spoke tensely:

"Listen carefully, signor. I understand perfectly, but I shall fight no duel. It is an obsolete fashion. A blackguard I know you to be. If you ever address me again I promise to give you a whipping which will have a lasting effect upon your future actions. If that will not serve I shall appeal to the police."

Through the crowd the ever present carabinieri shouldered their way. The colonel motioned them to stand back, which they did with a sign of respect. This sign gave Hillard some food for thought. His antagonist was evidently a personage of some importance.

Hillard laughed.

The scar was livid on the Italian's cheek. His companion laid a restraining hand on his arm. He nodded, and the two made off. Merrihew was for going back to the hotel. Hillard agreed.

Hillard spoke tensely.

"I wanted you to give him a good stiff punch," said Merrihew.

"We should have slept in the lockup overnight if I had. If our friend is left handed he'll be inconvenienced for a day or two. I put some force into that grip. You see, Dan, the Italian still fights his duels. It would have been a fine joke if I had been fool enough to accept his challenge. He would have put daylight through me at the first stroke."

"Did you notice how respectful the carabinieri were?"

"It set me thinking. Oh, I've a premonition that we haven't seen the last of this distinguished gentleman!"

After luncheon the next day they were entering the Via Tornabuoni when a young woman came out of a little millinery shop. Immediately Hillard stepped to one side of her and Merrihew to the other.

"You cannot run away this time, Kitty Killigrew!" cried Merrihew joyously.

* * * * * * * *

In the Villa Ariadne the wonderful fountain by Donatello was encircled by a deep basin in which many generations of goldfish swam about. Forming a kind of triangle about the basin were three ancient marble benches such as the amiable old Roman senators were wont to lounge upon during the heat of the afternoon. A maiden sat on one of these benches, her arms thrown out on either side of the crumbling back, her chin lowered and her eyes thoughtful.

Merrihew stole up from behind with all the care of a practiced hunter. Then he put his hands over her eyes. She struggled for a brief moment, then desisted.

"It is no puzzle at all," she declared. "I can smell horse, horse and again horse. Mr. Merrihew"—

"Yes. I should have fetched along a

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson XII.—Fourth Quarter, For Dec. 19, 1909.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, a Comprehensive Quarterly Review—Golden Text, II Tim. iv, 7—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

LESSON I.—Paul a prisoner—the arrest, Acts xxi, 27-39. Golden Text, II Tim. ii, 3. "Thou therefore endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." Paul knew that bonds and afflictions waited for him everywhere (20-23 margin), but whether he unnecessarily ran into some of them or not we cannot say. This was probably one of the three times that he was beaten with rods (II Cor. xi, 25). He accepted all as being in the will of that Just One for him and coveted only to be His faithful witness.

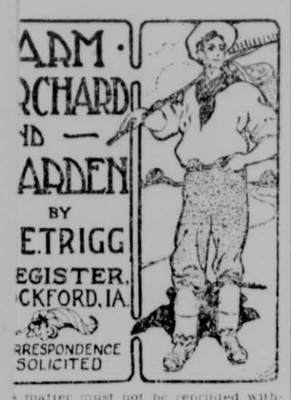
LESSON II.—Paul a prisoner—the plot, Acts xxiii, 11-24. Golden Text, Ps. xci, 2. "I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress, my God; in Him will I trust." Beaten and his life sought by the mob, liable to be pulled in pieces by the frenzied Jewish council, how comforting must have been the visit of the Lord to him that night with those words: "Be of good cheer, Paul; thou hast testified of Me."

LESSON III.—Paul a prisoner—before Felix, Acts xxiv, 10-27. Golden Text, Acts xxiv, 16. "Herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offense toward God and toward men." The topics of this chapter are the faith in Christ, righteousness, temperance and judgment to come, the hope of Israel, the resurrection of just and unjust and believing all things written in the law and in the prophets.

LESSON IV.—Paul a prisoner before Festus and Agrippa, Acts xxvi, 19-32. Golden Text, II Tim. i, 12. "I know whom I have believed and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day." For the third time the story of Paul's conversion, the resurrection of the dead and the future glory of Israel, the present forgiveness of sins through Jesus Christ for all who will turn from the power of Satan unto God and the eternal inheritance.

LESSON V.—Paul a prisoner—the voyage, Acts xxvii, 13-26. Golden Text, Ps. xxxvii, 5. "Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in Him, and He shall bring it to pass." Paul's advice to tarry at Crete is unheeded. A two weeks' storm follows in which all expect to be lost—probably all except Paul and his party—but again the Lord comes to Paul either personally or by an angel and assures him that no life shall be lost and that he must be brought before Caesar.

LESSON VI.—Paul a prisoner—the shipwreck, Acts xxvii, 39, to xxviii, 10. Golden Text, Ps. xxxiv, 22. "The Lord redeemeth the soul of His servants, and none of them that trust in Him shall be desolate." Death and its master pursue Paul most relentlessly. The soldiers advise killing all the prisoners, and, that being avoided and all having escaped drowning, a deadly viper threatens his life, but the Lord delivered and used him to bless many during the three months' stay in Malta.



LESSON VII.—Paul a prisoner in Rome, Acts xxviii, 11-31. Golden Text, Rom. i, 16. "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." We now see Paul dwelling two whole years in his own hired house as a prisoner and continually preaching the kingdom of God and teaching the things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ out of the law and the prophets and from morning till evening.

LESSON VIII.—Paul's story of his life, II Cor. xi, 21, to xii, 10. Golden Text, II Cor. xii, 9. "He said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee, for my strength is made perfect in weakness." It seems a strange portion to be entitled "Paul's life story," but it does tell a marvelous experience of "a man in Christ," who suffered all but death, or, as he says, "deaths oft" and finally a martyr's death, for Christ's sake. The appearances of Christ to him on the way to Damascus and afterward were most exalting, and this one above the rest.

LESSON IX.—Paul on self denial, Rom. xiv, 10-21. Golden Text, Rom. xiv, 21, "It is good neither to eat flesh nor to drink wine nor anything whereby they brother stumbleth." The believer, being a citizen of a kingdom of righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost and being filled with all joy and peace in believing, is supposed to live far above the mere eating and drinking for which so many live and be ready to deny himself any selfish gratification which might offend another.

LESSON X.—Paul on the grace of giving, II Cor. viii, 1-15. Golden Text, Acts xx, 35, "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how He said, It is more blessed to give than to receive." Again the lesson is one of being so conquered by Him who gave Himself for us that we cannot help giving ourselves wholly to Him for the benefit of others, even at the cost of becoming poorer by doing so, if only we can commend Him to others.

LESSON XI.—Paul's last words, II Tim. iv, 1-18. Golden Text, Phil. i, [illegible] is gain." What shall we say of giving when we see Paul at the close of a life of untold suffering saying, Now I am ready to give myself a sacrifice, a martyr, for Him whose I am and whom I serve? He could look back over a life of self denying service since that great Damascus day, and he could look forward to a kingdom of eternal glory in the ages to come.

THE GUNNISON TUNNEL.

ne first as well as the most remarkof the great irrigation projects ertaken by the United States reclation service under terms of the ey irrigation act is the Gunnison nel, which carries the turbulent ers of the lower Gunnison river by ore 11 by 13 feet through six miles solid mountains. The work was rted several years ago, following urvey of the river by a courageous neer who made the trip down the ing stream on a rubber raft. But oy months preceding were coned in building a wagon road which necessary machinery and plies could be transported to the e of the work. In constructing tunnel through the mountains a iety of rock and earth formations encountered, besides natural gas, mineral waters and underground s. The tunnel is lined throughout h cement and is practically indeictible. The main canal, which res the water from the tunnel, is ty feet wide at the bottom, eighty e feet wide at the top, and the rage depth of water is ten feet, the capacity being 1,300 cubic feet of water per second. The tunnel was formally opened Sept. 23 at Montrose, Colo., on the occasion of President Taft's visit. The cost of the tunnel and distributing canals will be $5,000,000. The government will be reimbursed by the sale of perpetual water rights to actual settlers at about $35 per acre, ten years' time being allowed for payment without interest. The system will redeem and give a value of from $75 to $500 per acre to 150,000 acres of land that without water would not be worth $10 an acre. The land is marvelously fertile and with the water which the system will provide will blossom like a garden.

MAKING VINEGAR.

As often as the apple harvest comes round recurs the question of a conversion of the unsalable cull stock into vinegar. After the juice of the apples has been squeezed out the barrels in which the first fermentation is to take place should be filled about two-thirds full and the bunghole filled with a cloth plug to keep out dirt and flies. When the "working" has ceased the clear portion of the liquid should be poured out and strained, if necessary, the barrels carefully rinsed out and the contents replaced, together with a couple of gallons of old vinegar with some mother in each barrel. If a few cakes of commercial yeast are added the process will be hastened, while if the original apple juice lacked in sweetness a few pounds of coffee A sugar will help matters along. When the second step in the process is completed—the conversion of the alcohol into vinegar—which sometimes takes place in six months and sometimes requires a couple of years, the barrels should be filled full and plugged tightly to prevent further chemical changes. Cider changes to vinegar most rapidly and with best results under a temperature of about 60 or 70 degrees F.

WATERWITCHING.

Although the world is getting along in years and the days of witchcraft and spooks are supposedly outgrown, yet not a few folk believe firmly in waterwitching as a reliable method for selecting a place for a well. A forked stick cut from a plum or other tree is held in the hand, a fork in each hand and the V of the crotch elevated slightly. Those who have faith in the plan contend that when the person carrying the stick comes to a place where a vein or supply of water is this elevated crotch will bend toward the earth, often with sufficient force to twist the bark from the portion of the branches held tightly in the hands. In the absence of a single physical law or principle which could possibly be cited to account for such a remarkable phenomenon the average person of inquiring mind, like the gentleman from Missouri, would have to be shown before he would believe and even then might not be fully satisfied.

IS IT GRAFT?

A leading northern agricultural journal speaks in a sarcastic vein of the benefits conferred by the Gunnison tunnel because 100,000 acres of the land to be watered belong to private parties and will be worth from $75 to $300 per acre as soon as the water is turned on, belittles the pride which government officials feel in the completion of the tunnel and closes with: "Talk about graft—but what's the use? It is love's labor lost to paint the lily." The discerning reader will likely say that this graft—if graft it is—is not essentially different from that perpetrated when the government sold land fifty or sixty years ago for $1.25 an acre which has benefited individual proprietors to the tune of $100 an acre.

Georgia has 19,000,000 peach trees, and 13,000,000 of them are said to have been in bearing the past season.

Kerosene poured through the drains will not only cut accumulated grease and filth, but make it hard sledding for the bugs and bacteria that may be in them. It's cheap too.

If the cold storage egg fellows clean up a profit next spring on eggs which have been laid by at from 18 to 22 cents per dozen during the past six months, the consumer will be entitled to public sympathy.

There is seldom a cat so black but some tiny white spot may be found in its coat and rarely a person so depraved but the divine spark of moral sense and capacity to do better exists in him somewhere if one but look closely.

Of all cheap things that a fellow should keep shy of are serums for the treatment of animal diseases. The federal government has a force of men who do little else than hunt down frauds of this character, but findings are published too late to be of help to fellows who have already taken the bait.

An advantage of early fall plowing that is often overlooked lies in the fact that the greener the weeds and trash on the land when turned under the larger is the number of seeds which will be killed, while the decomposition of the growth turned under will be more complete. Weeds that do germinate and show head above ground will be nipped by the frost.

The continued difficulty found in securing sufficient help to properly handle quarter section farms and larger is pointing inevitably to a reduction in farm areas as about the only effective way out of the difficulty. When this comes it will mean a more thorough cultivation of the remaining acres, more satisfaction in doing the work and as large a net income when the books are balanced at the end of the year.

If that row of celery cannot be sufficiently protected from the cold by covering it with straw or other litter where it is, it should be dug up with good roots and packed in earth in a box in the cellar. After being placed on a thin layer of soil in the bottom of the box the roots should be moistened and enough earth sprinkled in between the stalks to prevent drying out and to complete the bleaching process.

The women folk should not overlook the matter of tastiness and neatness in their house dresses, for the reason that they are seen in these more than in their street or company gowns. If the kitchen dress looks like a meal sack or worse, with a string at the middle, John can hardly be blamed if he thinks Mary is not quite as careful as she used to be. It might be added, however, that this shoe fits the former as well as the latter.

The question is now and then discussed whether bees do primary damage to fruit—that is, whether they have the ability to make a puncture of the skin and thus render fruit liable to further injury by themselves or other insects. The best opinion seems to be that bees cannot from the formation of their mandibles puncture the skin of fruit, though it is conceded that they will suck the juice from fruit which has already been punctured.

There is some compensation after all in the way climate and temperatures are distributed. From May 1 until Nov. 1 north state folks have a season that could hardly be improved upon, while those of the southwest have dust and dryness and those of the southeast heat and humidity. During the winter months the tables are changed, and the latter have their innings, while their northern neighbors are harassed with coal bills, frozen water pipes and frosted noses. It is perhaps well so if the country is to be uniformly peopled.

A difference of 15 degrees in average winter temperatures as between two localities is a factor which will largely determine whether certain shrubs, fruits and flowers can be successfully grown or not. In latitudes or sections where a winter temperature of 20 below, F., for a considerable period is likely the pear, peach, European plum, many choice varieties of roses and other shrubs are virtually proscribed. In rare instances this lower temperature may come for thirty-six hours in a latitude where the warmer temperatures usually prevail, and as a result havoc is wrought with the tender things.

A long step will be taken ahead in the matter of a discriminating public charity when laws are passed applying to all the country making it an offense to give to the professional tourist beggar. In nine cases out of ten if they are physically able to gad about the country, eating all kinds of grub and drinking all kinds of water, they would be able to stay where they were raised and earn an honest livelihood without prostituting their self respect by launching into the field of confirmed beggary. The eyes of those whose tenderness of heart leads them to give to such folk would be opened could they see the snug sums which they convert into drafts every Saturday night—in many instances more than the weekly wage of those who contribute to them. If travelers of this type want to work for a meal, feed them; if not, direct them to the town or township trustees, who have an arrangement for providing for such folk.

Bonemeal, crushed oyster shell or plaster should be provided so that the fowls can have a feed of it at least once a week.

A pig is a long way better off with hog cholera at three months than a boy is with the cigarette habit at thirteen. Circumstances don't justify one in indulging in very heavy speculation in either case.

The present is distinctively an era in which experts in some one line are winners. In no realm is there greater demand for the expert, the one who is equipped and tried, than in agriculture, and in no fields is toil more healthful or reward for effort more sure.

The eyes and teeth of young people are entirely too precious physical assets to be neglected in the shameful way in which they so often are. If boys and girls doubt the truth of this statement, let them question those who are helpless without their glasses or can't properly chew a square meal without store teeth.

The conditions existing in the cow stable, coupled with the care given the utensils in which the milk is kept, are the chief factors in determining whether the butter product resulting from the dairy operations is gilt edged "western extra" or rancid stuff that is barely fit for food. It is just a matter of filth and bacteria or absence of it that largely determines butter quality.

Owing to conditions of drought prevailing during the growing season in many of the western and southwestern states corn is grown but little and that only where irrigation is possible. Another condition in the coast states that is unfavorable to the proper maturity of a corn crop is the almost universal cool night, the result of the invigorating breezes which set in from the ocean just before sundown.

Land worth from $150 to $250 an acre in France and Germany devoted to forestry is so scientifically and wisely managed that it gives a nice interest return on this valuation. In America the landowner begrudges devoting even fifty dollar land to the growing of trees and thinks it is poorly used at that. It is evident that we have much to learn from the foreigner along the line of forestry.

A headache is nature's warning that something is wrong in the physical economy, the pain being the danger signal; hence the taking of any of the so called headache medicines, whose opiate properties kill the pain, do not go to the root of the difficulty at all, but merely patch it up, often working more permanent harm than they accomplish of temporary benefit. The proper course is to right the disorder which is responsible for the ache.

Among other good habits which young people should develop in the formative years is the habit of work—the ability to take hold of a job and carry it through with thoroughness and persistence. There are lots of youngsters who are not bad in the way of having bad habits, yet are not worth a continental when it comes to doing anything definite and positive. In striving to be good there should be a definite purpose to be good for something.

Whether land prices in the newer fruit sections of the west are being boomed beyond a reasonable limit can be pretty readily ascertained by consulting bankers in such localities and finding out just how much per acre they will lend you on a given piece of land after it comes into your possession. If they tell you little or nothing, it is evidence of their belief that in practical operation the land will not give a return which represents a fair interest rate on the price which you are asked to pay. If they are willing to lend generously on the proposition, it is likely not in the boom class.

A whole lot of town and country dogs rush out on passersby as frequently as they do because they are ill bred and either don't know or have not been taught any better. If they were collared two or three times returning from such jaunts as these and taken out behind the woodshed and given a good larruping with a lath, they would soon cultivate better manners. It's all right for a dog to bark and advance toward a stranger when he comes into the yard, but when he chases out into the road and scares passing teams he is an all round nuisance.

There's many a man with gray coming in his hair today who will tell you with all seriousness that he would give almost anything if he could be a boy again and have the opportunities for schooling which he once had, but did not prize and take advantage of. A sad thing about such regrets is that they seldom come until it is too late to rectify the loss. The right time to fully prize the educational opportunities is when the boy is going to school and still has in his hands the saying of whether that which he gets out of them will be much or little. Parents who appreciate their lack advantages along this line or who did not make use of opportunities that were theirs should do everything in their power to make their boys realize the high value of school days and the wisdom of making the most possible of them.

HER RED RABBIT.

It Brought the Knight to the Princess He Was Seeking.

By VIRGINIA BLAIR.

[Copyrighted, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

The small girl set the red cotton rabbit in the open window with his nose in a flowerpot.

"He's eating grass," she announced triumphantly.

"That's nice," said the weary woman at the sewing machine, "only don't let him fall out."

"Of course not," said the small girl. "He'd fall and fall and fall if he did, wouldn't he?"

"Yes, and you'd have to walk and walk downstairs to get him."

"And I'd have to walk and walk up again," said the small girl.

She stopped her singsong and leaned out.

"There's a man down there," she remarked, "a man in a gray hat, and he comes every day."

"Does he?" Her mother's voice was absentminded, she was so busy. The sun shone on her bent bronze head and brought out the golden lights in the little curls on her broad white forehead. The small girl's mother was very young, but her eyes were sad.

The small girl made the rabbit prance back and forth and back and forth, and still the man with the gray hat stood on the corner idly.

Then suddenly a dreadful thing happened. The red rabbit, being moved too rapidly on his red cotton legs, lost his balance and fell out.

"Oh," the small girl shrieked, "he's hit the man with the gray hat!"

"You'll have to go after him," said her mother, "and come right back."

"I'll walk and walk and walk," sang the small girl as she started.

On the lower landing she met the man in the gray hat. He was big and tall, and the small girl thought that his eyes were beautiful.

"I was coming up," he said.

"Well, you needn't now," the small girl told him, "and thank you for my rabbit."

She held out her hand for it. "Thank you," she said gravely when she had it safely tucked under her arm.

She turned to make the long climb upward, and then, struck suddenly by

"I AM HUNTING FOR THE CASTLE WHERE THE PRINCESS IS IMPRISONED."

a thought, she asked him, "What makes you come and stand on the corner every day?"

He laughed. "I'm looking for some one," he said, "some one who is hidden in some of these big houses on this big street, and I can't find her."

"Oh, is it a fairy story?" asked the small girl eagerly, and she sat down on the step and spread out her small short skirts sociably.

"Yes; it's a fairy story," he said, and sat down beside her, "and I am hunting for the castle where the princess is imprisoned, and I'm the poor knight who has wandered and wandered and can't find her."

"But some day you will find her," comforted the small person, "and you'll give her a kiss, and you'll live happy ever after."

"I'm not so sure," said the rueful knight, "that she'll let me kiss her."

"Why not?"

"Well, you see, the princess and the knight quarreled awfully, and the princess ran away from him and said she would never come back."

"Oh," gasped the small girl, "that's different from any fairy tale I ever heard!"

"Yes; it is different."

"Did the princess have golden hair?" the small girl demanded.

"No, but it was brown with golden lights and with little curls on her forehead."

"Like mother," said the small girl happily.

"Like"— He caught his breath and looked at her closely.

Then he put a finger under her chin and turned her little face up to him—such a baby face, but with the firm chin, the deep gray eyes, the broad, low brow of the woman he had loved!

"Baby," he whispered, "what is your name?"

"Lucile Dudley Morse."

"My God!" He was crushing her in his arms, red rabbit and all, until she gave a little squeal of protest.

Then he said "Beg pardon" and set down.

"Come," he took the small hand in his; "we will go up and see your mother."

But the small girl shook her head. "You mustn't," she said. "Mother doesn't have time for visitors, she's so busy. If she doesn't sew we can't have supper, you know. At least mother can't, but just the red rabbit and me, and we only have bread. But when she sews hard all day we have soup sometimes and meat, and one day we had tarts."

He stood looking down at her a moment. "What are you going to have tonight?" he asked.

"I'm not sure," said the small girl, "but I guess it's just bread."

"You run along up to your mother," he told her abstractedly. "Goodby. I'll see you again."

"He said he'd see me again," the small girl told her mother, who was waiting anxiously at the top of the stairs.

"Who?"

"The man with the gray hat. He's a knight looking for a princess, and they quarreled, and she ran away, and he hugged me when I told him my name."

Her mother caught her breath quickly. "What did he look like?"

"He had nice eyes," said the small girl meditatively, "and he was big and tall."

"Oh"—the little mother's face was white—"he mustn't come here—he mustn't."

But he did come, and behind him a colored waiter bore a tray loaded with good things.

The little mother stared at him like one who sees a ghost. "Why have you come?" she asked.

"Hush!" He glanced at the man who was setting the tray on the table. "Let me give the child a feast, and after that, if you think best, I will go."

The small girl clapped her hands. "Mother, mother," she cried, "there's chicken and everything!"

They ate and drank, the small girl rapturously stuffing herself and the red rabbit, the other two with little appetite.

And when they had finished the woman said, "You must go now—at once."

"I shall not go," he said "until I speak of the lies that have been told you."

"Lies?" Her startled eyes questioned him.

"Oh, my dear," he came over and took her hands, "why didn't you trust me? Why didn't you come to me and tell me the stories that those relatives of mine had told? Couldn't you see that if they got my wife out they could combine to live on my money and have the comforts I had always provided?"

"But they said you loved—some one—else."

"I have loved only you," he said, and his eyes met hers very gravely. "They told me things of you, too—that you did not care for me, and that was why I let you go. And you did not tell me of the child."

"Oh, no," she breathed; "I could not!"

"And so for five years you have struggled." His voice broke. "And I believed that you did not care until last month. When I shut up the big house after my sister's death I came across your little diary far back in your desk, and in it I read—what you have thought—how you have loved me—dear."

She was sobbing now in his arms, and the sound attracted the attention of the small girl, who, with the red rabbit, had been finishing the sweets.

"You've made her cry," she reproached him.

"But we are going to be happy ever after," he said as he clasped her close. "I have found my princess, baby."

Lost Himself.

An absentminded professor was much annoyed by the trouble he experienced every morning in hunting for his clothes, for he never could remember where he had put them the night before when he undressed. So he devised the plan of writing down on a sheet of paper where each article of clothing was placed as he took it off, and this is what he wrote:

"Coat on third peg, left hand corner of room; waistcoat and trousers on chair by bed; collar on door handle; tie through key of door; vest on floor by window; cuffs on knobs by bedstead; shirt on portmanteau; socks on gas bracket; boots outside door; professor in bed."

Next morning this plan seemed to answer admirably. He collected his garments rapidly, and when he came to the last item on the list he went over to the bed and, to his great disgust, found it empty.

"Ah!" he cried in bewilderment. "Now the professor is lost! This plan is not good. What shall I do now?"

Proving His Love.

They were "sitting out" the dance when Miss Luvliwun glided silently by, waltzing most gracefully.

"Oh, Algy," said the girl, "don't you think Miss Luvliwun quite the nicest girl in the room?"

"Why, yes, May, darling, if you think so."

"And her eyes—aren't they just delightful?"

"Perfectly, pet!" Algy agreed.

"And hasn't she the prettiest mouth and the sweetest face imaginable?"

"Simply charming!" quoth Algy.

"And don't you think she's awfully clever too? Knows French, and—ho-ho—oh-o-o!"

Poor Algy's face went ghastly white.

"Why, darling," he exclaimed, "whatever's the matter? Are you ill? Shall I"—

"Oh-o," sobbed May, "I—thought you—loved me—you loved me best, Algy!"

"So I do, darling!"

"W-w-well, how can you ta-talk so about that ugly, vulgar Luvliwun girl?"

ome to Western Maryland, young an, and grow up with the country. If ou prefer to invest in agricultural nds or fruit lands, you will find prices anging from five to fifty dollars per re, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also vite factories and industries of all nds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

GRAND JURY REPORT

That Body Completed Its Labors Thursday and Was Discharged.

A record for quick and efficient work was established by the recent grand jury which adjourned last Thursday morning at 10 o'clock after less than three days' actual service, its report to the Court being as follows:

To the Honorable, the Judges of the Circuit Court for Garrett county.

The Grand Jury for the December Term of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, beg leave to report that we have now finished our labors and have to the best of our ability performed the duties devolving upon us as members of this body, and we now desire to report our proceedings and receive our discharge.

We have had before us and have examined 79 witnesses and have found 17 presentments and bills of indictment. We have found presentments in all cases which we believe the evidence justified and have ignored trivial cases and those cases in which the evidence did not appear to warrant presentments.

There has been no crime of a very serious nature committed in this county since the last term of the Circuit Court.

In accordance with the provisions of the law we have inspected the public records and visited the county public buildings. We were pleased to note the excellent manner and the neatness in which the records are kept, and much credit is due E. Z. Tower, Esq., the Clerk of the Court, as well as the other county officials keeping the same and having them in charge.

We desire to make the following recommendations:

First, That lockers for hats and coats be placed either in the ante-room leading to the grand jury room or in the grand jury room. It appears that a similar recommendation has heretofore been made by a previous grand jury but that the recommendation has not been carried out.

Second, We recommend the laying of concrete pavements around the court house lot on Alder and Third streets, and further recommend a walk of the same material and also steps to be made of at least twenty feet wide to lead from Third street to the main entrance of the court house.

Third, We further recommend that the outside wood work of the Sheriff's residence be painted and the spouting be repaired, and the porch also needs some repairs. The grounds in the rear of the court house should be graded and a retaining wall placed near the side of the jail building.

We desire to express our thanks to the court and the several officers of the county for the courtesy shown us while in the discharge of our duties.

We desire to express our thanks to our able State's Attorney, Mr. Julius C. Renninger, for the valuable aid and assistance given us in the course of our investigations.

We now beg to be discharged.

Respectfully submitted,

GEORGE A. FRALEY, Foreman.

SKATES

Splendid Christmas Presents.

We have seen graceful skating, and skating on ice is graceful, but we never could see anything graceful about the child performing on a pair of his grown-up brother's skates. But take home a pair of skates for Christmas for that little boy or that chip of the old block and the expression in his eyes will be your reward.

MILL FOREMAN KILLED.

Thomas Krauser, Well Known in Oakland, Killed Saturday Last.

Thomas Krauser, of Bayard, West Va., well known in Oakland by many business men, and employed as mill foreman by the Whitmer-Lane Company at Laneville, W. Va., was killed at the mill on Saturday last while engaged in oiling the machinery. Mr. Krauser was accidentally caught in the machinery and before it could be stopped he was ground to a pulp. He leaves a widow and one son. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity at Davis, West Va.

At You Service—The People's Red House Store.

We are now ready with a general stock of merchandise to serve you. Accept our thanks in advance for your trade. Bring us your produce—everything in this line and receive the highest market prices for it.

Yours to serve,

CURTZ CHAPEL.

Rev. E. P. Idleman is holding a series of meetings at this place.

Mr. Sidney Harvey is having a shed built to his barn by W. W. Harvey and George Hardin.

Mr. Will Beckman has been running his saw mill at full speed.

Mr. George Harvey was helping Mr. Wayman Beckman haul logs last week.

Messrs. Jesse and Geo. White are cutting timber for Henry Harvey.

Our school is making good progress with Miss Odessa Harvey as teacher.

Misses Jane Hardesty, Bessie Moon and Arta Lish were visiting Mrs. Z. H. Moon last Sunday.

Mr. Will Steyer, of Ryan's Glade, was seen driving a fine horse and rig in this community recently.

Mr. James Lish and family were calling at Moon Bros. Sunday.

Mr. Geo. Fuller has been adding many improvements to Mr. J. B. Lipscomb's house.

Mr. R. Menke and son returned home Saturday from Blaine, W. Va., where they have been employed in a mine.

Ammunition.

One of our salesmen has a very bad heart. He always has a touch of heart trouble just when coon hunting is at its best. While we write these lines he is laying off suffering with his heart. We are wondering if we will get any 'coon for Christmas. Now, brother, we carry almost every load under the sun, both in black and nitro powder and can fill your order without delay. The way business is going to chilled shot reminds us of a story that was told on one of our competitors. A customer said they were so cold that all the shot was chilled. This was not in Oakland; we are all warm here.

DAVIS HARDWARE.

GRANTSVILLE.

Rev. Friend will begin his meeting at New Germany this week. We hope there may be much good done.

Every body is busy getting ready for Christmas.

The Methodists will have a Christmas service on Saturday night, the 25th. Come out and enjoy the service.

The Reforms will also have a service on Sunday night, the 26th.

The school will give an entertainment on Wednesday evening, the 22nd, which I am sure will be enjoyed by all.

The first quarterly meeting of this charge will be held in Grantsville on January 1 and 2.

Mr. Jonas Beachy, one of Garrett county's best citizens, was stricken with paralysis one day last week. We hope tor his recovery.

Mrs. Joel Beachy, who has been dangerously ill, we are glad to note, is convalescing.

Miss Maggie Brown left for Cumberland and Hagerstown, where she will spend the winter.

Miss Ethel Broadwater has returned from Cumberland.

The horses of Mr. Ward Beachy, who was returning home from Oakland, took fright in the west end of Frostburg and ran away, throwing him out, who, while not seriously injured, was badly bruised.

We are sorry to loose Mr. Englehart and family, and hope they are happy since their return to the old home.

Mr. Younkin has returned from Chicago and other points of interest and reports of good time.

The question is often asked, has local option done any good for the town? From the bottom of our hearts we answer, yes, it certainly has. Our town has never been known to be more quiet and peaceable nor our merchants more busy.

We certainly wish the editor and family a very happy Christmas.

THE DEATH RECORD.

NORMAN DURST.

Mr. Norman Durst, of Shades Mills, Garrett county, died at his home Sunday evening from a paralytic stroke, aggravated by stomach trouble. He was aged about fifty years. He is survived by his wife, one son and four daughters. The funeral took place Tuesday afternoon from the home. Interment was made in Blocher's cemetery.

To Do Business Right

You must be organized right. You can't do a time saving business in a store of the vintage of 1864. Let us repeat what has been said so many times, "Show Goods." If the jobber does not show his goods to the salesman, the salesman will not sell them. If the salesman does not show samples to the retailer, the retailer will not buy them. If the retail merchant does not put them to the front where the consumer can see them the goods will not move. The man from Missouri says, "Show me." So come and see our Christmas line.

DAVIS HARDWARE.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Winter weather is on in earnest and the ice is now about five inches thick on the lake. Mr. Garthright has already housed a quantity from the Alderson lake, and we understand that the Association will commence cutting next Monday should the cold weather continue.

"The Invincibles" of the M. E. Sunday have leased the Yoder office to be used as a reading room. The library was moved from the bowling alley and other books, papers and games will be added.

The usual Epworth monthly business meeting and social was held at the residence of Mr. Edward Chance Tuesday evening of last week. The affair was greatly enjoyed by members of the League. Sherbet and cake were served at the close of the meeting.

"The Invincibles," and the Young Ladies' class of the M. E. Sunday school held their regular monthly social at the residence of Mr. E. E. Friend Friday evening of last week. Sandwiches and salads were served.

The joint meeting of the U. B. and M. E. churches at Pleasant Valley is still going on with an increasing interest. Many have professed conversion and the outlook is bright for the future of the meeting

A joint meeting will be held at Loch Lynn and Mountain Lake Park by the same churches immediately after the holidays.

The latest advices report the condition of Mr. Wesley Rudisill as much improved. He will likely return home with his mother about the holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Willett are at home in the Willett Cottage.

Mrs. Shaw last week purchased the Whetzell Cottage in Loch Lynn. She had intended to purchase a home in Mt. Lake Park, but the failure to secure natural gas in the Park, was the reason for her going to Loch Lynn. Mrs. Shaw conducted a boarding house in the Baumgardner Cottage here two years ago.

The saw mill on the grounds is in operation. Mr. Bosely has charge of the mill instead of Mr. Scott Gilpin, as announced in a former letter.

Loch Lynn has contracted with the gas company for street lights.

Mr. P. J. Murdock, of the Park, who was the guest of Mr. John Speir, of South Cumberland, last week, discovered fire on the roof of a building in Ridgely as he was passing along the street last Friday morning and with some water and an axe he succeeded in extinguishing the flames before much damage was done. The house was occupied by three elderly ladies.

BITTINGER.

A storm of rain and snow visited this section last Monday, during which a heavy coating of ice was formed on trees, wires and fences, and as a result many fruit trees were broken down and telephone lines were broken down to such an extent that communication with the outside world was completely broken for some time.

Prof. J. C. Beahm, principal of our public school, was obliged to close his portion of the school for a few days this week, as he was summoned to attend court as a witness.

Miss Lizzie Orendorf, who is in charge of the primary department of our village school, was unable to keep her school open last Monday on account of sickness.

Miss Maud Lininger, of Jennings, was visiting friends in this neighborhood a day or two last week.

Miss Fannie Brenneman spent the early part of this week visiting friends near Salisbury, Pa.

James O'Brien, of North Glade, was a business visitor to this settlement on Saturday of last week.

Merchant Joel Deal, of Accident, purchased a fine lot of turkeys in this community last week, paying sixteen cents per pound live weight.

We had zero weather last week for the first time this winter.

Lesson XII.—Fourth Quarter, For Dec. 19, 1909.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, a Comprehensive Quarterly Review—Golden Text, II Tim. iv. 7—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

LESSON I.—Paul a prisoner—the arrest, Acts xxi, 27-39. Golden Text, II Tim. ii. 3. "Thou therefore endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." Paul knew that bonds and afflictions waited for him everywhere (20-23 margin), but whether he unnecessarily ran into some of them or not we cannot say. This was probably one of the three times that he was beaten with rods (II Cor. xi, 25). He accepted all as being in the will of that Just One for him and coveted only to be His faithful witness.

LESSON II.—Paul a prisoner—the plot, Acts xxiii, 11-24. Golden Text, Ps. xci, 2. "I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress, my God; in Him will I trust." Beaten and his life sought by the mob, liable to be pulled in pieces by the frenzied Jewish council, how comforting must have been the visit of the Lord to him that night with those words: "Be of good cheer, Paul; thou hast testified of Me."

LESSON III.—Paul a prisoner—before Felix, Acts xxiv, 10-27. Golden Text, Acts xxiv, 16. "Herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offense toward God and toward men." The topics of this chapter are the faith in Christ, righteousness, temperance and judgment to come, the hope of Israel, the resurrection of just and unjust and believing all things written in the law and in the prophets.

LESSON IV.—Paul a prisoner before Festus and Agrippa. Acts xxvi, 19-32. Golden Text, II Tim. i, 12. "I know whom I have believed and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day." For the third time the

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 33. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1909. NUMBER 43

SINCELL

A Cut-Price Sale in December affords you a great advantage over such a sale at any other month of the year. We are going to reduce our stock one-half by January 1st, and in order to do so we will place before you such bargains as never before offered you in our line.

This store is recognized as the best store with the best line of Clothing, Shoes, Furnishings and Fancy Goods in Garrett county, or we may say this part of the country. From now until January 1st we offer you our high-class HART, SHAFFNER and MARX Clothing at prices far below that which you pay for the ordinary kind.

You may buy your clothing wherever you choose of course; you have the right to; but it is worth something to any man to do business where quality is the standard of excellence; where this superior all-wool fabrics; this perfection of style and tailoring, and this absolute security of satisfaction are added inducements. The special sale we are making on HART, SHAFFNER and MARX Clothes is a saving to you of $5.50 to $6.75 on each suit.

The famous GRIFFIN brand clothes which we have been handling for the past ten years and which have never failed to give entire satisfaction, are included in this sale, and we are in a position to save you a goodly sum in the purchase of any of these strictly high-grade suits over the price you have been paying for the ordinary kind.

The little fellow who dons a new Suit on Xmas morning is the best pleased and feels that he has been better treated than any member of the family. You can please these little fellows with a suit made by one of the best concerns in the world for a cost not exceeding Two Dollars

If you see a lady on the streets of Oakland with a nice fitting, stylish made, refined Coat or Suit you are safe in saying it is a

"SUNSHINE" Garment

purchased from Sincell. Our Coat and Suit Department is well filled with this noted line and we are determined to close out every garment within the coming three weeks. Come in, look them over and the price marked will compel you to take them home with you

In doing your Christmas buying come to SINCELL'S, where you will find all that you could wish for in the way of handsome and useful articles which go to make the hearts of your loved ones happy.

CHRISTMAS ON THE POLLY.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association

IT was the good ship Polly, and she sailed the wintry sea,
For ships must sail though fierce the gale, and a precious freight had she.
'Twas the captain's little daughter stood beside her father's chair
And illumined the dingy cabin with the sunshine of her hair.

With a yo heave ho and a yo heave
ho!
For ships must sail
Though fierce the gale
And loud the tempests blow.

The captain's fingers rested on the pretty, curly head.
"Tomorrow will be Christmas day,"
the little maiden said.
"Do you suppose that Santa Claus will find us on the sea
And make believe the stovepipe is a chimney just for me?"

Loud laughed the jovial captain and
"By my faith," he cried,
"If he should come we'll let him know he has a friend inside!"
And many a rugged sailor cast a loving look that night
At the stovepipe where a lonely little stocking fluttered white.

With a yo heave ho and a yo heave
ho!
For ships must sail
Though fierce the gale
And loud the tempests blow.

"DO YOU SUPPOSE THAT SANTA CLAUS WILL FIND US ON THE SEA?"

On the good ship Polly the Christmas
sun shone down
And on a smiling little face beneath a golden crown.
No happier child he saw that day on sea or on the land
Than the captain's little daughter with her treasures in her hand.

For never was a stocking so filled with curious things.
There were bracelets made of pretty shells and rosy coral strings,
An elephant carved deftly from a bit of ivory tusk,
A fan, an alligator tooth and a little bag of musk.

Not a tar aboard the Polly but felt the Christmas cheer,
For the captain's little daughter was to every sailor dear.
They heard a Christmas carol in the shrieking wintry gust,
For a child had touched them by her simple, loving trust.

With a yo heave ho and a yo heave
ho!
For ships must sail
Though fierce the gale
And loud the tempests blow.

The Truth About Santa Claus.

I write myself down as one who still believes in Santa Claus. Don't you? Are you one of those very literal folk who have their doubts whether they ought to let their children cling to the beautiful old myth?

Without imagination, without dreams, without poetry, this old world of ours would be a very wearisome place. Its road would be steeper than it is—much like sleighing over bare ground would our progress be as compared with sleighing over deep, hard packed snow.

The poetic myth of the old saint, with his reindeer and his jingling bells and his bulging pack of toys and bonbons, has charmed a thousand generations. The stocking hung by the chimney on Christmas eve, the children staying awake until sleep pounced on them like a strong man armed, the presents filling them from top to toe in the morning, the rush of the bare feet hurrying fast across the floor, the merry uproar, the bubbling laughter, the shouts of joy—the whole of this family pageant belongs to dear Santa Claus. We owe it to him. Gradually, as the golden mists of childhood clear before the sun and the "trailing clouds of glory" fade, our small men and women discover that Santa Claus is not one, but ten thousand; that he is better than they knew, being just the spirit of love, good will and beautiful unselfishness that makes the world a beautiful place to live in now and makes it a good starting point for heaven by and by. For you and me there is hope that we may do our duty in this world lovingly while we keep the child heart and believe in Santa.

WAYNE HOLT.

On Christmas eve the children, all gathered around the fire,
Discuss the probabilities until they must retire.

'Tis then the fateful wishbone, kept over from Thanksgiving day,
Is brought to light and broken in the traditional way.

With their fair, expectant faces and eyes with light aglow
They await the anxious moment when all of them shall know

Who is to be the favorite of fortune and whose choice
Is sure to bring fulfillment fit to make the heart rejoice.

THE CHRISTMAS BEARS.

By GERALD PRIME.

Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association

ISABEL was having it out with her father. It was only a few days before Christmas, and she should have been at peace with herself and all mankind in general, but she wasn't. She had been telling herself all this particular day that as soon as her father came home she would put her case before him in a light so convincing that he would be brought to admit that he had been a little too arbitrary. Her scheme had not worked. She was beginning to realize painfully that her effort to gain her point had resulted in confirming her father in his opinion that it was a man's privilege to rule in his own house, especially when the woman of it was his only daughter, a girl of twenty, who could not be expected to know her own mind.

"You know perfectly well," said Isabel, with a final heroic attempt to snatch victory from the jaws of defeat, "that Jack and I have been—have been good friends for a long time. The only reason he hasn't spoken about it—to you—is because he has been waiting until he was in more of a position to do so."

"Then it's mighty lucky for him that he concluded to postpone it," declared Tom Truesdell testily. "Romance is all very well for those who can afford it, but Jack Goodale doesn't belong to that class. I pay him a fair salary, and I admit he earns it. But I don't see how he expects me to accept him as a son-in-law. How could he ever provide for a wife as extravagant as you? Absurd!"

"He has a little money, and he may make a lucky deal some day," she persisted in spite of the forlornness of her hope.

"Do you mean that the young man intends to gamble in wheat?" he asked ironically.

"Why shouldn't he? You do, don't you?"

Tom Truesdell snorted impatiently. "No," he retorted, "I do not gamble. A gambler risks his property. I never risk anything. I know how the market is going because I make the market. There is a difference, Isabel."

Driven to desperation, Isabel played her last trick. "The man you want for a son-in-law," she said, "is no better off financially. He has nothing but his debts to distinguish him."

He smiled sardonically. "If I want him for a son-in-law," he returned decidedly, "I am well enough off to afford him. I grant you Gerald Van Ingen has very little means, but he has something that the Truesdell family needs a good deal more. He has position."

"He's an empty makeshift," declared Isabel wrathfully.

"He isn't very brainy, I suppose," her father admitted. "He'll be all the easier to manipulate on that account. That ought to appeal to you, Isabel. But I haven't made up my mind yet. Mr. Van Ingen is coming to lunch with me tomorrow, and I shall make a study of him. He certainly ought to do great things for us socially."

Van Ingen was punctual at Truesdell's office on the following day. As he entered the busy place he found the bustle very disquieting to his nerves. Tape machines clicked, clerks were shouting perplexing fractions into telephones, and there was an uproar quite unfamiliar to the young man's ears. All at once Truesdell rushed into view, almost overturning his distinguished visitor, and without even an apology shouted in a voice that seemed peculiarly disagreeable:

"Here, Goodale! Get a move on and sell all you can—10,000,000 bushels today. Keep a cool head, man."

Having given his commands, Truesdell turned to his visitor. "You'll have to excuse me," he said. "I expected a quiet day, but the bulls are on the warpath, and I'm having the fight of my life. Goodale will be back presently, and he'll tell you all about it. Come in tomorrow and I'll blow you to that luncheon—if I have money enough left to pay for it."

The excited operator was away before the startled young man could put in a word. He couldn't understand why so rich a man as Truesdell was supposed to be should agitate himself over his business. What was amiss? The idea was so irritating that he found a trifling consolation in the fact that his wooing had gone no further.

Just then Goodale returned, and Van Ingen felt it due to himself to learn something of the condition of affairs. His ideas of business were exceedingly vague, but he nerved himself for the undertaking.

"Mr. Truesdell seems to be unusually excited today," he began. "I can't help thinking something must be up."

"Something is up," Goodale admitted quietly. "Wheat is down."

"Oh, I see," said his rival, with a dazed look which belied his assumption of intelligence. "Mr. Truesdell has been dealing very heavily lately, I believe."

"Very heavily indeed," Goodale agreed promptly.

"Many people will be very hard hit."

"Very hard indeed."

Van Ingen concluded that he had solved the problem. He thanked his informant, rose languidly and proceeded to his club, inwardly grateful that he had escaped a terrible possibility.

While he was eating his luncheon a man whom he knew emerged from behind his paper and came over to his table.

"Beastly panic in the wheat market," he observed rather dolefully. "Hope you're not scorched, Van."

"No money to play with, dear old chap. I've just left a man up to his eyes in it—Tom Truesdell. Know him?"

"Well, rather!" the other replied. "I have just dropped a cool $10,000 in the pit. If your man Truesdell has been equally out of luck he must be looking forward to a rather gloomy Christmas. It means millions to him."

An hour later Van Ingen went into the writing room and penned a note to Mr. Truesdell to the effect that some unexpected and important business would compel him to forego the pleasure of a further discussion of the contemplated alliance.

On Christmas eve Goodale and Van Ingen met face to face on the street. The latter would have passed without a sign of recognition, but Goodale grasped his hand and greeted him cordially.

"I am afraid you people must have come out of your deal rather badly," Van Ingen stammered.

"Not at all," declared the other radiantly, with a final wring of his one time rival's hand which made him wince. "We were bears. The lower the price went the more we made. About a million is the figure."

Van Ingen smiled feebly and murmured his congratulations.

Christmas.

Sing holly now and mistletoe
And all resentment from your heart;
Sing the accessories which show
And in this joyous day have part;
Sing help to him you fain would wrong
And good to him you would deride;
Lift up your heart in joy and song
And sing the Christ back to your side

"Nor would I if I could dissolve the melancholy
That makes her so adorable—my lady of the holly!"

SOMETHING NEW FOR CHRISTMAS.

By ELIZA ARCHARD CONNER.

Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association

WE lash our brains to chase up something new to give our friends at Christmas. In like manner they lash their brains to think of something to give us. We say to ourselves, "Rich old Aunt Rachel ought to put up something handsome this year, the old curmudgeon!" Rich old Aunt Rachel in her turn says of us: "I suppose those beggarly nieces of mine will send me some fool trash they themselves can make and expect me to give them gifts worth forty times as much. They're a nuisance. Every way I turn there's somebody expecting me to put up a Christmas present. I wish these hungry hangers on were at the north pole."

The whole scheme of Christmas giving has been perverted till it now means only one of three things—either barter, unwilling almsgiving or tipping. Servants, deserving or otherwise; poor relatives, charity societies, people too lazy and shiftless to earn comfort for themselves, all "expect" something. The effort to fill these expectations causes a drain that makes most people look forward with dread from one Christmas to the next. Seven out of ten Christmas presents are nowadays forced from the grudging donor just because the receivers "expect" something. Mortal mind can sink to no meaner level than to "expect" a Christmas present.

Yet with all earth's giving there is one thing nobody ever thinks to bestow unless it is some man or woman, usually a woman, who has been tried in all ways by sorrow, hardship and affliction, who has looked on this world's treasures and seen them melt away and has learned there is nothing in them. To such a true, sweet, tested soul has come the full knowledge that the only Christmas present worth while is the one the Christ Child came to earth to bring. Still the Christ Child's gift is on the earth, 1,900 years after the holy Nativity. It is to be had by every human being, it is the most precious offspring human being can either give or receive, yet in our so called Christian world today naught is so scarce as this one thing.

What was it the Christ Child came to bring? "Peace on earth, good will to men!" Down the centuries the tidings of this priceless offering have sounded, and they sound still, but now faint and afar off to the worldling sense. For weeks the atmosphere has been confused and lashed with the vibrations of Christmas buying and selling. Christmas scramble and expectancy; it is overborne and heavy with the awful weariness of the Christmas makers. Who has time to send forth the glorious gift which is the very foundation stone of Christmas itself—peace and good will?

How would it do alike for those overtaxed with giving and those too poor to give anything at all simply and quietly to bestow the Christ Child's gift on all mankind? After presenting the few material gifts one really offers for the pleasure of it, how would it do to make everybody around us happy as we can all day long, being cheerful, merry, loving and helpful to every member of our household, thinking not at all of our own deserts or disappointments, but giving forth joyfully the best that is in us—if, widening and softening our souls, we would weed from our consciousness all our pitiful little grudges against others and infold even those we dislike most in the loving thought of Christmastide?

BOBBY'S CHRISTMAS PLAINT.

By WILLIS HAWKINS.

I'M awful tired o' bein' rich.
I think it was a pity
We come into the money which
Enticed us to the city.
I wish that we was poor again
An' back in Pawpaw Center
A-livin' as we ust to when
We was so much contenter.

Pa didn't have that worried look
An' ma was never nervous
Before we had a chef to cook
An' a butler man to serve us.
I'd ruther be the way we was,
All feelin' fine an' happy,
With simple cookin' such as ma's
That never made us scrappy.

An' then the lugs the girls put on!
I think it's awful silly
That Mary Jane is "Marie Zhon"
An' Nellie is "Natilie."
But, gracious, they git mad at me
When I say "Nell" or "Mary,"
Though that was what they ust to be
When they was 'tendin' dairy.

"I THINK IT'S AWFUL SILLY."

Them days I knew a lot o' boys
That I could play an' fight with
An' swap my marbles an' my toys
Or go an' stay all night with.
But now that I'm a rich man's sc
There'd be a great sensation
If I should play with any one
Beneath my lofty station.

An' now that Chris'mus time is near
An' Santy Claus is comin'
I don't see how he'll git in here
Unless it's through the plumbin'.
Instead o' chimneys we have wires
Where 'lectric currents sizzle,
An' I guess where you don't have fires
Your Chris'mus is a fizzle.

Santa Claus on the Street.

In the larger American cities of late years Santa Claus has come to be pretty well known to everybody who frequents the business streets during the two or three weeks preceding Christmas. The Volunteers of America, organized by Ballington Booth, formerly of the Salvation Army, supply Santa Clauses in considerable numbers.

The traditional chimney idea is put to practical use. A member of the Volunteers rigs himself up in true Kris Kringle costume, with long coat, flowing white beard and fur cap. He stands beside a miniature chimney set on the sidewalk, on top of which is a large placard requesting passersby to drop in a coin to help send Santa Claus down the chimney with a big Christmas dinner for the poor or to carry shoes, clothing or other supplies to the city unfortunates.

Christmas Family Advice.

To Papa—Remember the myth of Santa Claus, to keep it holy.

To Mamma—Don't worry about the molasses candy getting on the parlor rug. Christmas comes but once a year, and the stores will sell you a parlor rug any day.

To Miss Belle—It is not necessary to stand under a bunch of mistletoe if you look at him the right way.

To Little Willy—Don't be envious of Jimmy Jones because Santa brought him a cannon. Next year you may get a disappearing gun. (It will disappear mysteriously shortly after you begin to make a noise with it, and maybe mamma can explain.)

To Baby—Be good, dear child, and let who will be clever.

Old Folk at Home Remembered.

A good many hundred thousand dollars have been shipped home to Europe for Christmas, through the banks, foreigners employed in America. This year, probably because of the high rates of wages, the banks have been busier with this class of exchange than usual. The bulk of the drafts go to England and Ireland. Servants send most of this money, and none is apparently so poor or ragged that he or she has not at least the equivalent of a pound sterling to send home to the old folks.

Peacocks For Turkeys.

Peacocks formerly took the place of turkeys on the Christmas table.

BROWNSVILLE MAN KNOWS NICARAGUA

Arthur H. Ghrist Tells of Conditions Under the Despot Zelaya.

Three months in Nicaragua as a daily associate and intimate friend of Leonard W. Groce, who was put to death recently by order of President Zelaya, were spent in 1906 by Arthur H. Ghrist of Brownsville, Pa., who is able to enlighten his friends to a very great extent on conditions in that country of tension and turmoil. Mr. Ghrist is a brother of W. D. Ghrist, the harness dealer of Uniontown.

As master mechanic of the same mining company by which Groce was employed as superintendent, Mr. Ghrist was thrown into very close contact with the man who was to die like a martyr, and Friday morning in speaking of Groce he said:

"A better hearted man than Grove never lived. He would give you the clothes off his back is he thought you needed them. He was too easy and too liberal to become wealthy, although he did accumulate considerable property. He owned two gold mines and people said he would be wealthy if he hadn't let others steal from him. He would let others work his mines and keep the proceeds.

"Groce was very popular with the natives all through the section where we were, and they looked up to him more than to any other man they knew. He would get them to do anything he wanted in the way of work. He was fitted for a splendid organizer in time of revolution, and I think that is one reason why Zelaya wanted to have him killed.

"They told me that Groce had been the Indian judge for a number of years, a sort of government official who passed on disputes affecting the Indians. All the east coast of Nicaragua had been the property of the Miskito Indians, but had been taken away from them by the Spaniards, one thing about Bluefields that was causing a great deal of trouble was that the titles given by the Indians were not respected by the Spaniards. This had a great deal to do with Zelaya's unpopularity. Zelaya is the king of grafters and next to Castro he stands ace high.

"I don't remember of Groce talking about the government, but at Bluefields and other places some of the natives asked me why the United States didn't come down there and straighted out the country like we had done in Cuba. In Bluefields while I was there the report came that Zelaya was coming to the town on a visit, but the people said, 'Zelaya will never come here, for if he does he will never go back.' The government was called a republic, but Zelaya was really a dictator. Zelaya stays at Managua, the capital. It is on the west coast and Bluefields is on the east coast."

A revolver which Mr. Groce possessed and used for years in now in the keeping of Mr. Ghrist at Brownsville and will be exhibited in the window of Frank B. Theakston's jewelry store. This revolver was presented to Groce on his 21st birthday by his father and he kept it 20 years or more, when he asked Mr. Ghrist to bring it to the United States to have it repaired.

This revolver is a Smith & Wesson hammerless and is a beauty. It has a pearl handle with the inscription, "Leonard W. Groce, Cuicuina, Nicaragua, C. A.," which was carved by a native with a piece of sharpened umbrella wire. Mr. Ghrist brought the revolver here and sent it to the Smith & Wesson factory at Springfield, Mass., and had it repaired.

"After leaving the mine Ghrist wrote three letters to Groce, two before he left Nicaragua and one after he reached home, but did not receive any reply. Groce was employed at the mine of the La Luz and Los Angeles Gold Mining Company, composed of Pittsburg men, and Ghrist took the revolver to the Pittsburg office of the company to request them to send it to Groce, but was informed that Groce had left their employ. Mr. Ghrist has had the revolver ever since and will keep it now at least until hears from Groce,s relatives. Groce came originally from Galveston, Texas, and was about 45 years old at the time of his death.

"Groce was a fine revolver shot," said Mr. Ghrist, "and people told me they had seen him take this revolver and picked off a humming bird which was balanced on a flower. I never neard of Cannon while I was there, but if he was like Groce I don't understand how the natives ever captured them. If the two Americans had pistols they could lick a whole regiment of natives.

"When you go to Nicaragua you are watched closely and not allowed to take any firearms except a pistol into the county. This precaution was to prevention. However, unless the times were revolutionary you might get to take a rifle or shotgun if you knew how to work the wire. I took with me to Nicaragua a Colt's automatic 32 calibre which I bought here for $12 and I sold it there to Groce's foreman for $100 native money, which is $46 our money.

"The arms I saw the soldiers have there were old breech loading muskets, which would shoot only one time, and were more primitive than our old Springfieids. They were big, awkward guns with large hammers. The newspapers say that the insurgents captured some guns sent there from America. The natives were very poor marksmen, but probably many foreigners—white people—are with the insurgents."

At his Brownsville home Mr. Ghrist also has a cedar chest which Mr. Groce had built for him. It is a large chest and is proof against moths. Cedar wood is plentiful in Central America and valuable. It is light in weight and is used for making Spanish cigar boxes. Mr. Ghrist also has jaguar skin and several rosewood sticks and other mementoes which he secured there. Mr. Ghrist knew General Estrada, present leader of the revolutionists, by sight, but not being able to speak Spanish, he did not become acquainted with the general.

The mine where Groce and Ghrist were stationed was near Cuicuina, where Groce owned property and made his home with a native family. Other Americans at the mine were a man from Mississippi, one from Boston and Mr. Lebaron and his wife from Ohio, Mrs. Lebaron being the first white woman who had ever been in that neighborhood. Most of the laborers at the mine were natives of Spanish descent, but there were some Indians.

Mr. Ghrist left Pittsburg May 5, 1906, expecting to spend a year in Central America. He landed at Bluefields, which is about 1200 miles from New Orleans by sea. He spent three weeks there and then received orders to go to the mine, about 300 miles in the interior. He went up the coast to mouth of the Pinzapulca river and then 200 miles up the river in a canoe made of cedar logs, which is the only means of transportation for man and freight.

This boat was 40 feet long. There were seven Indians in the crew of oarsmen and 13 days were required to go the 200 miles up the river. Freight, mining machinery and everything have to be transported in canoes, some of which are 70 and 75 feet long. himself under difficulties. After recovering he left the mine September 26 to return home.

"The climate down there is very unhealthful," said Mr. Ghrist. "I never saw it really rain in my life until I get to Bluefields. The rainfall in that town the year before I was there was 171 inches. The rainy season is from June to December, but the natives work right through the rain. We had houses to live in, but the atmosphere was very damp and we had to cover our clothes every night or they would be saturated with moisture the next morning.

"I always shook my clothes in the morning to guard against scorpions which were likely to crawl into them at night, even if they were hanging on the wall. I killed nine scorpions which I shook from my clothes. I was bitten once by a scorpion. I used bay rum and also ammonia promptly on the wound, but the bite brought on an attack of fever.

"Insects were very troublesome and I scratched from the time I entered the country until I left it. There were a great many mosquitos along the coast and for 100 miles up the river. We had to beware of trantulas. Red bugs, chiggers and army ants were fierce. There are poisonous snakes, but they were not as numerous as I expected to find.

"The temperature varies. We had to sleep under a blanket every night; then the sun would come out hot and get as hot as 100 degrees in the shade, and then it would rain and get cold by night. The hot season is from December to June.

"Dense forests cover the entire eastern half of the country. There are no roads through the forest and only occasionally a trail. The rivers are the principal highways. The undergrowth in the forest is so dense that if you get off the trail you have to chop your way with a machete. Every native carries a machete.

"Beans and rice formed our principal diet at the mine, and we had a native Indian hunter employed all the time to furnish meat. It is so thick in the bush that you can't see game 20 feet away, and the only way the Indians get game is by imitating the calls and getting the birds or animals to come near. There are deer, the peccary and warrie species of wild hog, besides wild turkeys and small animals resembling rabbits. In the towns the native Spaniards are great meat eaters when they have money to buy it. Meat, however, is very expensive and I saw a meat dealer at Cuicuina sell three pounds of beef for $2.00. There are fish in the rivers and the Indians use wild figs for bait.

"Minerals in great abundance are found in that country, but as yet no attention has been paid to anything but gold. Free milling and placer gold mining are all they bother with. There are rich silver and copper deposits and I heard reports of coal also.

"Some of the timber is very valuable and mahogany and cedar form the principal kinds for export. Rosewood is so heavy that it sinks when efforts are made to transport it down the river. All tropical fruits grow in the country, but the natives are too lazy to develop the fruit raising industry as it should be pushed. Bananas are the principal export from Bluefields, a great deal of the supply being brought from the plantations at Rama and Cukra. Rama is one of the towns where fighting has been going on during this revolution."—Uniontown News.

A Buddha of Ill Luck.

An example of the malevolent influences of an inanimate object upon the fortunes of its possessors, similar to that of the Hope diamond, is recorded by Lady Dorothy Nevill in her "Reminiscences." From the day a miniature Buddha from Burmah of charming workmanship entered her house everything went amiss. Its installation in the drawing room "was followed by a perfect avalanche of catastrophes."

Within a week a son failed in business. Household pets came to tragic ends. A favorite pony was suddenly paralyzed—"and this on the very eve of an election in which it was to assist by conveying conservative voters to the polls"—from which it is to be inferred that the Buddha was not favorable to the Tory party. A few days later a neighboring chimney crashed down upon a wing of Lady Dorothy's house, doing much damage. Shortly afterward the Buddha was sent on loan to the India Museum, where after some minor disturbances it settled quietly down and has since remained.—London Chronicle.

A CHRISTMAS THOUGHT.

For this day is born to you a Saviour who is Christ, the Lord.—Luke ii, 11.

Soon we shall be keeping the anniversary of the greatest day that ever dawned on the human race—the birthday of Chirst. The day will recall the the memory of the most momentous fact that ever wove itself into the web of human history—the fact that the Son of God came in the lowliness of human nature to save humanity.

Christmas Day links together all the dispensations of God in his merciful dealings of mankind. The old order was a time of preparation; the new one, of fulfilment. The one shows the finished pedestal, the other the faultless statue. What was promised to patriarch and prophet was fulfilled for us. What they longed for we have. The star which they stretched forth to see has arisen and shines upon the pathway of our lives in Him whose birthday we keep. One thing is plainly written down in the record of man's doings before the Messiah came, and this is that evil abounds everywhere. The very nations which marked the limits of civilization were sunk in the lowest depths of depravity, and the power of their statesmen, the songs of their bards and the wisdom of their sages could only lead to lower depth yawning to engulf them. Rome had lost almost every trace of sanctity of family life, and Greece, with her Plato and Aristotle, could not measure or understand the dignity of simple motherhood. The aged, the suffering, the helpless of every class and condition cried in vain to Rome and Greece for aid in their distress. Slavery was like a weed growing apace, whilst there seemed on earth no power to check its growth or curb its enormities. And in truth there was none.

Meanwhile God, in the sublime height of unassailable purity, was thinking thoughts of peace. The iniquities of earth cried to Heaven for justice, but the bountiful goodness of God sent forth winged mercy, not to strike, but to offer terms of peace and to save. And so justice and mercy met and kissed in the union of love, and the outcome was the birth of Christ, God and man—man to pay the penalty of man's misdeeds and God to make the payment of infinite value.

If there be today a spot on earth on which honor is held in esteem and virtue wins its reward, if there be in the heart of man a throb which beats in pity for the suffering, the aged, the helpless, it is to Christmas Day it owes its birth.

Christmas then is a day of gladness and mirth. Our watchword is Merry Christmas. Christmas is a day when wrongs should be forgiven and griefs buried, when the glad tidings should ring through every heart and through every homestead that God has come down to man, that man may go up to God.

WORLDWIDE CHRISTMAS

Something over 2,000 years ago from the great dome of the universe where swing the bells of destiny there sounded a chime. Simple, as are all things great; melodious, as are all things harmony, that chime, first heard on the hillsides of Bethlehem, has sounded through the earth from end to end—"Peace on earth, good will to men." The sentiment that came clear as the very essence of truth upon the ears of simple shepherds was the annunciation that the world had waited to hear. During all the ages of history, from times already remote, when the Shepherd Kings sat upon the throne of Egypt, the world had been preparing for the epoch when the strife should give place to the notes of peace and the world should turn from its captains to the release of its captives.

Perhaps the greatest lesson to be derived from the Christmas theme is the stroke of destiny it sounded in the affairs of men in relation to the great subject of human rights. Prior to the angel jubilation over Christ's birth there had been no recognition given the poor and unfortunate. The weak and the distressed received no consideration. The world was held for the strong. They should possess the earth; they should secure the trophies. Whatever place the weak had in the world was by the grace of the mighty. The rule of the captains ranged back to the foundations of society. But when the carol of the angels was heard upon Judea's hillsides the rights of the captives came into recognition. The one who was born in a manger was the Prince of Peace. He came to set the captives free. This was something new in the history of the world. It was destined to be the great revolutionizing principle of all the ages. Those trained in the school of the Infant who became the Great Teacher were taught that they that are strong should bear the infirmities of the weak. Those who were not disposed to accept the responsibility were given to understand that in the new dispensation the rights of all men would be secured at every hazard. Jesus was not an equalizer in the sense of reducing all men to the same material estate. He was the equalizer in raising all men up to the same plane of divine compassion. He swung wide the door of opportunity, and, taking the weak lamb as a symbol of necessitous human creatures, He exalted the poor and struggling members of the human family to a place in the economy of God, of equal regard with the more fortunate.

Christmas is world wide, not in the extent of its recognition, but in the extent of its influence. It is world wide in the weight of principle it established. It is world wide in the personalty of the Founder of the Christian faith. As the wise men with their eyes fixed upon the star that rose in the East journeyed toward the theater of the world's great drama, so the wise men of the present age turn their eyes toward the light of the Life that star heralded. Science has its votaries, and they derive their freedom of intellect from the liberty that came with Jesus. Medicine has its followers, and they derive their healing ministries from the example of the Great Healer. Philosophy has its savants, and they take their position for or against the position established by the world-framing doctrines of Jesus. Literature finds in the Holy Scriptures its great models, and poetry delights to follow out the theme of human interest that was impossible in the ages in which human interest, as now understood, was an unknown sentiment.

The Christmas star was a worldwide omen in that it was significant of the pure undimmed light of truth, of charity, of brotherhood. No other principles so appeal to the world as those that came with Jesus, or, at least, which were made by Him the cornerstone of the Kingdom of God among men. "Ye shall know the Truth and the Truth shall set you free." "When the Spirit of Truth shall come He shall lead you into all truth, for He shall take the things of Mine and show them unto you." Where has there been any other teacher who dared to affirm himself the incarnation of truth, who ventured to assert in himself the principles of charity and of brotherhood? Yet these are things that have moved the lives of men ever since the great day of the world's faith.

It is inconceivable that religion should become provincialized with Jesus as its exponent. It is impossible that truth shall ever be made the depository of a cult while He is its conservator. It is incredible that brotherhood should ever become constricted with Him filling the place anciently held by the pagan god of boundaries. Christmas, the festival of the church, the day of grace, the high feast of humanity, stands at the very portal of modern advance as the day that symbolizes the progress of the race in all that is holy, uplifting and potent. It is the one day that can never have a duplicate, for it bore to the earth the Divine One who was made in the fashion of a man, and who has ever since been fashioning men in forms divine.

The Shortest Day of the Year.

Tuesday was the shortest day in the year. From sunrise to sunset there was just 9 hours and 24 minutes of sunshine. Six months hence and the longest day will be at hand, when the hours of sunshine will be 14 in number, not to mention a matter of some 54 minutes besides.

Tuesday was the shortest day on the calendar, yet there was but slight difference between it and yesterday, when the difference could be spaced by a scant half dozen seconds. In fact, there is but six minutes difference between December 13 and December 29, the period when the sunshine in this locality is registered at 9 and 4-10 hours.

The weather forecast is for continued cold weather, and there is very little sign for anything other than a white Christmas. The continual cold spell has caused joy in the hearts of the youths and maidens and many are to be seen daily hurrying to the river to skate where red noses or cold toes do not hinder them from having a good time.

JUDGE M. L. KEEDY NARROWLY ESCAPED BULLET

Stepped Out of Line of Fire Just Before Pistol Was Discharged.

Judge M. L. Keedy narrowly escaped being accidentally shot in the courthouse at Hagerstown Monday morning. He had been in the sheriff's office conversing with several officers and had just left the room when Deputy Sheriff John B. Huyett opened a drawer in a desk disclosing a pistol, which was picked up by John Flaugher with the remark: "Is it loaded?"

His words were drowned by the report of the weapon, and the bullet sped in a direct line where Judge Keedy had been sitting in a chair and lodged in a door.

The incident occurred in less than a minute after Judge Keedy had walked out. R. J. Hamilton and Detective Charles Burnett, who had been standing behind Judge Keedy, directly in the course of the bullet, had just passed out the door.

DECEMBER COURT CLOSED SATURDAY

After a Session of Two Weeks Presided Over by Judge Henderson.

The December Term of the Circuit Court for Garrett county terminated Saturday afternoon, after a session of two weeks.

Judge Robert R. Henderson sat during the entire term and the jury was not discharged until court adjourned, as a removal case from Allegany county in which a jury was wanted, held the jurors.

Since our last report the following cases were disposed of:

CRIMINAL APPEALS.

6. Michael O'Brien; assaulting an officer; plea of guilty; House of Correction for three months.

CRIMINAL TRIALS.

1. State vs. A. J. Beavans; keeping gaming table; tried before Court; verdict not guilty.

5. State vs. John Miller; forgery; plea of guilty; one year in Maryland Penitentiary.

6. State vs. Parley Diehl; statutory rape; tried before Court; not guilty.

7. State vs. same; bastardy; nolle prossed.

8 and 9. State vs. Geo. Mills; larceny; plea of guilty; paroled upon condition that the transgressor pay costs of prosecution and restore to the owner the stolen goods or the value thereof within six month.

10. State vs. John Bergman; non support of wife; tried before Court; verdict not guilty.

11. State vs. B. E. Conn, Walter Bratney and Frank Howard; burglary; plea of guilty; B. E. Conn, sentenced to four years in the Maryland Penitentiary; Bratney, two years; Howard 18 months in the same institution.

12 and 13. State vs. same; larceny; stet; by order of State's Attorney.

15. State vs. Edward Williams; larceny; one year in House of Correction upon plea of guilty.

17. State vs. Frank and Joseph Davis; polluting streams of water; continued.

TRIALS.

13. Yough River Oil & Gas Company vs. J. W. Alderton; tried before Court; judgment in favor of defendant.

14. Same vs. Galbreaith & Hewitt; tried before Court; verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $10, it being nominal damages; exceptions noted to the ruling of the Court in sustaining demurrer to defendant's set off.

25. Mary M. Mills vs. Harry Rodeheaver; slander; tried before Court; verdict for plaintiff for $25.

30. Nicholas Paugh vs. Andrew C. Rawlings; damages; tried before Court; verdict for defendant.

89. Gilmor S. Hamill vs. Benjamin H. Sincell; dismissed by order of plaintiff.

90. Central Foundry Co. vs. William Tunney; dismissed by order of plaintiff's attorney.

91. A. D. Naylor & Co. vs. same; same entry.

97. James W. Manuel vs. Mayor and City Council of Cumberland; removed from Allegany county; jury trial; jury drawn and sworn; jury withdrawn and case continued because of absence of witnesses.

Oakland Volunteer Fire Dept.

All members of the Oakland Volunteer Fire Department are requested to meet at Council Chamber, First National Bank building, on Tuesday evening, Dec. 28th, at 7.30 o'clock, for the purpose of adopting constitution and by-laws and transacting other important business. Every member who has signed the roll is expected to be present.

TRUMAN WEST, President.

A Train Over a Mile Long.

What is said to be the longest railroad train ever pulled by a single engine left Roanoke for Norfolk over the Virginian railway. The train consisted of 120 steel coal hoppers, each 44 feet long, and each loaded with 50 tons of coal. The train from cowcatcher to the rear of the caboose was six feet over a mile long, and the coal was valued at $180,000.

CHRISTMAS IN THE CHURCHES.

Sunday Schools Will Have Their Annual Entertainments.

In the several churches of Oakland the usual festivities of the Christmastide will occur, when the little folks will be both the attraction and the attracted ones.

In the Lutheran church the Christmas services will be conducted Friday evening when a program, literary and musical, will be rendered, after which Santa Claus will appear and distribute to the members of the school little remembrances.

In the Methodist and Presbyterian churches the usual treats for the members of those Sunday schools will take place Saturday evening when programs of music and songs will be rendered.

In St. Peter's Catholic church mass will be celebrated Christmas morning at five o'clock.

PRISONERS TRANSFERRED

Four to the Penitentiary and Two to House of Correction.

Monday morning Sheriff Austin Brown took to the Maryland Penitentiary the four prisoners sentenced by Judge Henderson to serve terms varying from one to four years in that institution, and yesterday morning Mr. Brown took to the House of Correction the two prisoners sentenced by the Court to serve time in the big workshop of the State.

Three of the prisoners taken to the penitentiary were B. E. Conn, Walter Bratney and Frank Howard, convicted of burglary. These are the three men caught near Tunnelton, W. Va., several weeks ago with household effects stolen from a summer home at Sang Run. The men had shipped the goods from Swanton, to which place they had hauled them from Sang Run, and were keeping house near Tunnelton, Conn's wife being in charge of the establishment. Conn will serve four years; Bratney two years, and Howard eighteen months. The other prisoner taken to the pen by Mr. Brown was Edward Miller, who confessed to having forged the name of Orval Speelman to a check for $50. He will serve the State one year.

The prisoners taken to the House of Correction were Michael O'Brien, who entered a plea of guilty for having assaulted an officer, and will serve three months at the Cut, and Edward Williams, who was convicted of having stolen goods from the Mountain Lake Park Hotel last summer, and who will serve one year.

ICE HARVEST IS ON

Vast Quantities Being Cut at the Park and on Ponds and Streams.

The past week of extremely cold weather when the thermometer hovered almost the entire time about the zero mark, has had the effect to form ice from eight to ten inches in thickness on streams, ponds and the lake at Mountain Lake Park.

Monday the ice harvest commenced in all directions and Tuesday and yesterday remained ideal for the purpose. Local houses generally were or are being filled with an excellent quality of ice. At the Park a contract for upwards of ten thousand tons for Baltimore and Ohio Railroad company use, is being filled as fast as steam and men can cut and handle the ice. Tuesday ten car loads were shipped from that point to Brunswick and more than a hundred tons were stored in the Association's ice house on the shore of the lake.

Suggestions for Christmas Presents

On a cold winter night, when the wind is whistling outside, nothing can beat a bright, open fireplace. It is great for the family to sit around the fire with Grandpa and Grandma, Mom and Pop and all the kids and tell stories and pop corn or toast marshmallows. These fireside re-unions will be remembered for many, many years when the family is all scattered. The fireplace of today is all changed, instead of wood fuel we have the natural gas logs and open polished coppered front stoves that give the finishing touch to the home.

THERE is no need for you to be worn out by holiday preparations if you make good use of your telephone.

The Bell Telephone Companies have found that just before Christmas the number of daily connections is the highest for the year. The telephone has become a necessity of the holiday season, because without it most people would not have time to do what they have planned.

Christmas cheer extends beyond the city limits, and the universal Bell System helps to carry it throughout the land.

The Free Sewing Machine

Think of it! and all this in the year 1909, when husbands have automobiles, automatic adding machines, automatic locking desks—you, Mrs. Housewife, are compelled to be satisfied to sew for your husband and family with a sewing machine that hasn't been improved for 25 years. Wouldn't you be interested in a 20th century improved sewing machine which completely removes every objection you have to any sewing machine? That's The Free Sewing Machine. Of course it is impossible to explain all this here. The Free is insured for five years against breakage, wear and tear, fire, tornado, lightning and water. COMMISSIONERS ASSUME OFFICE

Messrs. Dixon and Lowdermilk Took Oath Before Clerk Tower Saturday.

Last Saturday morning Mr. D. M. Dixon, of Oakland, and Mr. Walter M. Lowdermilk, of Selbysport District, who were elected last fall for the term of four years, went before Clerk of the Circuit Court E. Z. Tower, where they took the oath of office as Commissioners and received from Mr. Tower their commissions as public officials.

Mr. Lowdermilk came to Oakland from his home near Selbysport Friday afternoon and after he had transacted the business which brought him to the county seat he returned to his home.

With Mr. Fike, the hold-over member of the Commissioners' Board, and Messrs. Dixon and Lowdermilk as the other members of that body, Garrett county may well congratulate herself in having her financial affairs in such good hands.

A rather peculiar coincidence with respect to the members of the Commissioners' Board is that all three members were born and reared in District No. 2. Mr. Fike left his home district but a few years ago and moved to his present home. Mr. Dixon came to this part of the county while quite a young man, first engaging himself in the employ of Mr. P. T. Garthright, later coming to Oakland, where he has been one of our most progressive citizens and enterprising business men. Mr. Lowdermilk is still a resident of his native district where he is engaged in farming and its kindred pursuits.

Read the handsomely illustrated Christmas page appearing elsewhere in this paper today. It is the product of the best newspaper illustrators of the age.

Rev. L. B. Hensley, who attended the meeting of the Baltimore Presbytery which was held in Baltimore last week, returned to Oakland Friday afternoon.

Miss Anna Gonder returned to her home in Oakland Monday evening from St. Mary's Seminary, St. Mary's county, where she will spend the holidays with her mother.

Bibles in great variety for Christmas at very reasonable prices, in English or German, can be secured of J. A. Enlow, colporteur for the Maryland Bible Society, who resides at Mt. Lake Park.

Mr. Stuart Hamill returned to Etam, West Va., Monday morning after a week spent at his home here owing to an injury he sustained when a heavy plank at his mill fell upon his foot and incapacitated him from work.

Mrs. S. A. Kendall, of Crellin, was in the city Tuesday morning on his way from his winter home in Washington to Crellin, where he spent a day or two, returning to Washington this morning to remain with his family during the holidays.

The Deer Park Band will attend the fair for the benefit of Mountain City Band one night. Don't fail to hear them.

Mrs. Grover Stemple left Oakland Monday afternoon for Wheeling where she will visit her parents, Rev. and Mrs. J. B. Workman, during the holidays. Mr. Stemple will go to Wheeling tonight where he will also be the guest of Rev. and Mrs. Workman.

Miss Beulah Loughridge, teacher of one of the primary grades in the Oakland school, was taken ill last Sunday and consequently the scholars of her department are having an enforced holiday. Miss Loughridge was quite ill for several days but is somewhat better now.

Recently a second epidemic of whooping cough has struck Oakland during the present year. That which now has Oakland in its grip is no respecter of persons, attacking old and young alike. Some of its victims are upwards of seventy-five years of age and others are tiny babies.

For your toys and candies come to Baumgartner's.

Messrs. C. E. Ellithorp, of Bittinger, and Mr. E. R. Boucher, of Centreville, Pa., were Oakland visitors last Saturday when both gentlemen made this office brief though pleasant visits. Mr. Boucher is a son of Mr. H. C. Boucher, a former Garrett countian, and a nephew of Mr. Ellithorp.

Mr. Daniel Hinebaugh arrived in Oakland Saturday from Morgantown, where he spent several weeks, and after visiting relatives here a few days left for Hagerstown where he and Mrs. Hinebaugh will be the guests during the holiday season of their daughter, Mrs. T. S. Claggett.

Mrs. R. E. Sliger and son Robert, arrived home Saturday afternoon after a week spent in Baltimore, where the boy underwent a surgical operation for a nervous affection with which he was afflicted for some months. The operation was very successfully performed and the patient's ultimate restoration to normal health is almost assured.

Mrs. Calvin H. Echard suffered a fright and her little daughter, Anna May, a slight injury last Friday morning, when the mother, attempting to ascend the stairway at her home with the child in her arms, slipped and fell. The baby was retained in its mother's arms, who fell upon it, and its foot was somewhat bruised but not seriously injured.

MOUNTAIN CITY BAND FAIR

Organization Will Conduct Supper and Bazaar Three Nights Next Week

The Mountain City Band, which promises to be the best musical organization in Western Maryland, judging by the strides it has made during the few months it has been in existence, feeling the need of finances and claiming the support of the public, will conduct a bazaar and supper in the Knights of Pythias Hall in Oakland next Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights, when fancy work will be on sale and supper will be served to all who may desire to partake of the evening meal. Competent managers will be in charge.

In addition to the above, amusements of various kinds will be provided and the public generally is urged to attend.

The members of the band recently received very handsome new uniforms from a New York firm and they will make their first appearance in public at the fair to be held as indicated above.

The Deer Park Concert Band will be in attendance one night during the fair.

Considers It a Crime.

Dr. Charles J. Fazenbaker, formerly of Swanton, but now a practicing physician at Westernport, considers the removal of the appendix a crime. He said in a recent issue of the Cumberland Times:

"An operation for appendicitis should be called a criminal operation and should be prohibited by law. I have been a practising physician for more than fifteen years, and have not found one case demanding the knife, but have stopped the operation when the operating table was ready, and cured the patient. This is based on proof.

"I have been following the records of appendicitis operation ever since this unnecessary form of surgical work started, and I firmly believe that the day is coming when the people will realize that the cutting out of the appendix is a criminal operation. Also if I was a member of the Maryland Legislature I would bring before that honorable body a bill to prohibit by law the cutting out of human life unnecessarily."

THE DEATH RECORD.

MRS. ZILPHA JARBOE.

Mrs. Zilpha Jarboe died at the home of her brother, Mr. G. A. Shirer, on Oak street, Friday morning, Dec. 17, 1909. She was the widow of the late William Jarboe, who died about twelve years ago. The funeral services occurred Sunday afternoon, Rev. L. B. Hensley, of the Presbyterian, of which she was a member, officiated. Interment was made in the Odd Fellows' cemetery.

CHARLES G. ROTH.

Charles G. Roth, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Roth, of near Gnegy church, Garrett county, Md., was born Sept. 21, 1881, and departed this life December 14, 1909, aged 28 years, 2 months and 23 days. Mr. Roth was one among our best young men, honored and respected by all who knew him. He lived with his father and mother—was never married. He will be greatly missed not only in the home but throughout the community. An older brother of his, Mr. Edward T. Roth, who lived near Terra Alta, W. Va., died but a few weeks ago. On the 16th of December the funeral services were conducted by the writer in St. John's Ev. Lutheran church at Red House, Md., of which Mr. Roth was a worthy member. The very large gathering of people attending the funeral services for a day so very stormy and cold evidenced the fact that Charlie had many friends. He leaves a father, mother, two brothers, David O. and Oscar Roth, who live in the community, and one sister, Mrs. Smith, of Cumberland, Md., with many relatives and friends to mourn their loss. May the Lord comfort and console the bereaved. D. J. WADE.

WILLIAM F. KAMP.

William F. Kamp, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Kamp, of Friendsville, died at Connellsville, Pa., where he was engaged in the blacksmith business, on last Thursday. His remains were shipped to Friendsville the following day and on Saturday the funeral took place at Accident. He was aged twenty-eight years and was an excellent young man.

WILLIAM PRICE, SR

Mr. William Price, Sr., died at Kitzmiller, of stomach trouble, at the age of 59 years. He is is survived by a widow, four sons—H. L. Price, merchant and postmaster, Kitzmiller; William Price, Jr., Eighteenth Infantry, Fort Leavenworth, Kansas; Russell and Madison Price, Kitzmiller—and two daughters—Mrs. W. W. Davis, Luke, and Miss Esther Price, Kitzmiller.

An idea of the variations in costs of installation and saving effected is given in some of the letters received.

Mr. A. H. Northcraft, of Cumberland, Maryland, spent $20 for running his pipe lines, connecting with old line and providing heaters, lights and light-cooking facilities. He writes:

"I have used natural gas for a couple of years and have never regretted the installation. Mr. George P. Geatz, also of Cumberland, Maryland, spent $42 to run his gas lines and to provide heating stove, inside arc light, small lights, outside arc light and light-cooking facilities. He says:

"I have been a consumer of natural gas since its introduction into Cumberland. My bills for lighting and heating my place of business, No. 9 Baltimore Street, for the year 1908, totaled $25.25. During the year previous to my natural gas installation my bills were for electric light, $42; coal, $12; total cost $54, SAVING ME BY MY CHANGE, $28.75, BESIDES THE CONVENIENCE AND LESS DIRT AND LABOR."

WEST VA. WESLEYAN COLLEGE

What the Great Methodist School is Doing.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Everybody is busy at the Wesleyan now cramming for exams.

Looking back over the work of the term that is now fast approaching its close we can truly say it has been the most successful term in the history of the school. The reasons for saying this are many. First, the enrollment is the largest it has ever been; the students are of the very best quality, the new members of the faculty have made good. They have more than fulfilled the expectations of the students. We consider ourselves very fortunate. We congratulate the management of the College in procuring such a good line up of instructors.

Our football squad has achieved greater success than any previous team. Our fellows have met the best teams of West Virginia and Ohio, and out of eight games this season they won six. Even such teams as that of Ohio University, Scio and Bethany colleges went down in defeat before our "eleven."

The football season came to a pleasant and successful close on Thanksgiving Day, when the members of members of the team and a few friends were banqueted at the New Arlington Hotel. After the turkey and other appropriate dishes had been stowed away, and after many good toasts had been delivered, Coach Price was presented with a miniature gold football, properly engraved, and each member of the team with a silver football, engraved with the name of the player, his position, and "W. V. W. C., '09."

The success that has met our athletics has been repeated by our literary societies and Christian associations. It is a well known fact that these organizations are doing better work and achieving greater success than those of any other school of the State.

With all these facts we are constrained to believe that the prospects for the West Virginia Wesleyan College are the very brightest.

Big Field of Potatoes.

A story of a farmer in Wicomico county who raised a $10,000 crop of white potatoes this year on a farm for which he paid $1,150 is one of the features of the report of Superintendent W. Frank Hines, of the State Bureau of Immigration, which has just been issued in pamphlet form. The yield approximated about 200 bushels to the acre, which, the report says, while not at all extraordinary, simply shows what Maryland soil will do without any great forcing. By intensive effort, the report states, as much as 400 bushels have been grown on a single acre.

These are busy days at the Baltimore and Ohio depot in Oakland, and the accommodating agent and his gentlemanly assistants are kept continuously on the move. The great amount of freight and express goods, not to mention baggage, handled there every day is now more than doubled on account of the holiday season. Tuesday afternoon three large truck loads of express goods were shipped west on train No. 55, while a similar amount went east on a train half an hour later. This is repeated some five or six times every day, and then the incoming express is also extremely heavy. Yesterday goods were shipped from the Oakland station to many points in the far west, including towns in Illinois, Indiana and Iowa, besides large shipments to nearby points.

A COUPLE OF STUDENTS.

Buckhannon, W. Va., Dec. 20, 1909.

Big Field of Potatoes.

A story of a farmer in Wicomico county who raised a $10,000 crop of white potatoes this year on a farm for which he paid $1,150 is one of the features of the report of Superintendent W. Frank Hines, of the State Bureau of Immigration, which has just been issued in pamphlet form. The yield approximated about 200 bushels to the acre, which, the report says, while not at all extraordinary, simply shows what Maryland soil will do without any great forcing. By intensive effort, the report states, as much as 400 bushels have been grown on a single acre.

These are busy days at the Baltimore and Ohio depot in Oakland, and the accommodating agent and his gentlemanly assistants are kept continuously on the move. The great amount of freight and express goods, not to mention baggage, handled there every day is now more than doubled on account of the holiday season. Tuesday afternoon three large truck loads of express goods were shipped west on train No. 55, while a similar amount went east on a train half an hour later. This is repeated some five or six times every day, and then the incoming express is also extremely heavy. Yesterday goods were shipped from the Oakland station to many points in the far west, including towns in Illinois, Indiana and Iowa, besides large shipments to nearby points.

sachet powders. I remember but one thing, Kitty, and that's you." He sat down beside her. "There's no doubt that I reek of the animal. But the real question is, How much longer are you going to keep me dangling on the string? I've been coming up here for ten days now."

She had dressed expressly for this moment, but Merrihew was not going to be told so.

"But am I to be blamed if, after having refused twice to marry you, you still persist?" Kitty assumed a judicial air.

"But you haven't refused me this time."

"Because I wish to make it as easy as possible for you." Which of the two meanings she offered him was lost upon Merrihew.

"Come, let us be sensible for ten minutes."

Merrihew laid his watch on the bench beside him.

Kitty laughed rollickingly, for beneath her furbelows and ribbons and trinkets she was inordinately happy and light of heart. Her letter had come. She was only waiting for the day of sailing.

Merrihew reached out and caught her hand.

"Oh, I said let us be sensible for ten minutes!" she demurred.

"Kitty, will you marry me?"

"Could you take care of me?"

"I'll work."

"Oh, if you were only rich!"

"You don't mean that, Kitty."

"No," relenting, "I don't. But you bother me."

"All right. This will be the last time. Will you marry me? I will do all a man can to make you happy. I love you with all my heart. I know. You're afraid. You've an idea that I am fickle. But not this time, Kitty; not this time. Will you?"

Then without further hesitance, indifferent to the future or the past, conscious only of the vast happiness of the present, Kitty laid her hand in his. He would have drawn her into his arms had not they both seen O'Mally pushing through the box hedge, followed by some belated tourists. Merrihew swore softly, and Kitty laughed.

On the terrace the tea table dazzled the eye with its spotless linen, its blue canton and its bundle of pink roses. Hillard extended his cup for a second filling. La Signorina vaguely wondered where Kitty was. She needed Kitty at this moment.

How inexplicable were the currents and cross currents of life! She had met a thousand men handsomer, more brilliant. They had not awakened more than normal interest. And yet this man, quiet, humorous, ordinarily good looking, aroused in her heart discord and penetrated the barriers to the guarded sentiment. Why? Always this query.

She gathered up a handful of the roses and pressed them against her face, breathing deeply.

"If I were a poet, which I am not"—He paused irresolutely.

"You would extemporize on the beauty of the perspective," she supplemented. "How the"—

"I was thinking of your hair," he interrupted. "I have never seen anything quite like it."

She had recourse to the roses again.

"You have not told me the real reason why you sang under my window that night."

"Have I not? Well, then, there can be no harm in telling you that. I had just signed the contract to sing with the American Comic Opera company in Europe. I saw the world at my feet, for it would be false modesty to deny that I have a voice. More disillusions. The world is not at my feet," lightly.

"Will you answer a single question?"

"I can make no promise."

"Is there another man?"

Silence, which grew and lengthened.

"What do you mean?" she asked evenly.

"In Venice you told me that there was a barrier. I ask now if this barrier be a man."

"Yes."

A wrinkle of pain passed over his heart. "If you love him"—

"Love him! No, no! I had hoped you would not speak like this. I relied upon your honor."

"Is it dishonorable for me to love you?"

"No, but it is for me—to permit you to say so!"

He was pale, but not paler than she.

"I offer you nothing, Mr. Hillard, nothing—no promise, no hope, nothing. A few days longer and we shall separate finally."

Merrihew and Kitty came into view.

"It is all over," said Merrihew ex-

Then La Signorina rose to her feet. She took the card from Kitty's fingers, tore it into many pieces and flung them over the wall.

"We have been betrayed!" she cried, a storm in her eyes.

"Betrayed? In what manner?" asked Hillard.

"Her highness has had no hand in this, I know. Some one with malice has done this."

La Signorina, her arms folded, her lips compressed into a thin line of scarlet, the anger in her eyes unabated, began to walk back and forth.

O'Mally gripped Smith by the arm and pointed to the gates.

Two carabinieri and an inspector of seals, dusty, but stern of countenance, came up the path. The inspector came on. Without touching his cap—a bad sign—he laid upon the tea table a card and a newspaper, familiar now to them all.

"Signora," he said politely, but coldly, to the whilom prima donna, "will you do me the honor to explain this? We have some doubts as to the authority upon which this invitation was issued."

She spoke evenly, almost insolently. "The invitation is perfectly regular."

Everybody experienced a chill.

This time the inspector bowed. "Then her highness will occupy her villa?"

"She is already in possession. I am the Principessa di Monte Bianca," calmly.

Had an earthquake shattered the surrounding hills and gulfs opened at their feet it could not have spread terror more quickly among the transient guests at the Ville Ariadne than this declaration. They knew that she was not the princess, and here, calmly and negligently, she was jeopardizing their liberty as well as her own. She was mad.

The keen eyed inspector took mental note of these variant expressions.

"Your highness," he said, his cap setting the dust on the stones flying, "a thousand pardons for this disagreeable intrusion. It was not officially known that your highness was here."

"It is nothing," replied the pseudo princess. "Only I desired to remain incognito for the present."

"And the seals?" purred the official.

"We shall go through that formality the morning after the ball. At present I do not wish to be disturbed with the turning of the villa upside down, as would be the case were the seals removed."

"That will require the permission of the crown, your highness."

"Then you will set about at once to secure this permission."

The air with which she delivered this command was noble enough for any one.

"You will telegraph to Cranford & Baring, in the Corso Umberto Primo, Rome. They will supply you with the necessary details and information."

The inspector spoke to the carabinieri, and the trio marched to the gates.

Loud were the exclamations of dismay from the unfortunate Americans, and only Hillard and Merrihew showed faith in La Signorina and her protestation that she would straighten out the tangle without any additional misfortune coming to her former associates in the opera troupe.

Kitty, O'Mally and Smith, however, were convinced that a dirty Italian prison would be their ultimate resting place.

"Suppose we go and break the news to Worth," remarked Smith.

O'Mally assented, stopping a moment in front of La Signorina.

"We have all been together for many weeks," he said, "yet who you are none of us knows."

The shadow of a smile lay upon her lips and vanished. "My name is Sonia Hilda Grosvenor." And her voice was music.

"Tomorrow," said Merrihew, "I'm going to look up the jail and engage rooms ahead. It might be crowded."

Both he and Hillard rode back to their quarters for the night, but they found that sleep was practically out of the question.

The morning sun poured over the hills, throwing huge shadows in the gorge below. O'Mally sniffed. As the wind veered intermittently there came to him the perfume of the locust trees, now in full bloom. Pietro rocked, his legs crossed, his face blurred in the drifting tobacco smoke.

"No more tourists, Pietro?"

"No," Pietro sighed.

"Did you ever see La Signorina before? Do you know anything about her?"

"Never! No!" answered Pietro, with the perfect candor of an accomplished liar.

"Have you ever seen"—

"Zitto! She come!" Pietro got up with alacrity.

La Signorina was as daintily fresh in her pink frock as a spring tulip. Her eyes were shining, but her color was thin.

"I have been looking for you, Mr. O'Mally," she said. "I have just received a telegram from her highness."

O'Mally accepted the yellow sheet. "I can make out a word or two," he said. "It's in Italian."

"I forgot," apologetically.

Briefly, La Principessa di Monte Bianca gave Sonia Hilda Grosvenor full authority to act as her proxy in giving the ball. As for the invitation, she knew absolutely nothing about it.

This last statement rather staggered the erstwhile concierge. If the princess hadn't issued the invitation, who the deuce had?

The dreamy, pleasurable days at the Villa Ariadne were no more. The spirit of suspicion now stalked abroad. And there were a-coming and going of the many needed extra servants, a to and froing of extra gardeners and carpenters and the sound of many hammers. The ballroom and the dining room were opened and aired and the beautiful floors polished.

In Florence there was a deal of excitement over the coming affair, for the Villa Ariadne had once been the scene of many a splendid entertainment. There had always been a mystery regarding the Principessa di Monte Bianca. Many doubted her actual existence. But the prince was known all over Europe as a handsome spendthrift. And the fact that at this precise moment he was quartered with the Eighth corps in Florence added largely to the zest of speculation.

As for Hillard, well indeed he understood now why Mrs. Sandford had warned him. He understood now what the great mistake was.

He was always at her heels now, but speaking no more of his love. She understood and was grateful. Once she plucked a young rose and gave it to him, and he was sure that her hand touched his with pity, though she would not meet his eyes.

At 4 o'clock on the afternoon of the day before the ball, now that the noise had subsided and the servants were in their quarters, La Signorina went into the gardens alone. An hour earlier she had seen Hillard mount and ride away, the last time but once. There seemed to bear down upon her that oppression which one experiences in a nightmare of being able to fly so high, to run madly and yet to move slowly, always pursued by terror. Even now there was a single avenue of escape, but she knew that she could not profit by it and leave these unfortunate derelicts to shift for themselves. Love! She laughed brokenly and struck her hands in suppressed fury. A fitting climax this! All the world was mad, and she was the maddest in it.

Some one was coming along the path. She wheeled impatiently. She wanted to be alone. And of all men Worth was not the one she cared to see. But the sight of his pale face and set jaws stayed her words. She waited restlessly.

"I have something to say to you," he said, "upon which your future welfare largely depends."

"I am listening." She showed surprise.

"There has been a tremendous wonder, as I understand, about this ball in regard to the strange manner in which the invitations were issued."

"Have you found out who did it?" she demanded.

"Yes." The light in his eyes was feverish.

"Who was it?" fiercely.

"I issued those invitations."

"You!" Her lips parted.

"Yes. I am the guilty man. The list was the main obstacle. I represented myself as secretary to her highness."

"And you have the effrontery to confess your crime to me!" her fury blazing forth.

"Call it what you please."

"What purpose had you in mind when you did this cowardly thing?"

"I had a definite purpose. An imposture like yours is a prison offense. You have seen that I love you, yet always ignore me. You must marry me."

"You are hiding a threat."

"I shall hide it no longer. Marry me or I shall disclose the imposture to the police."

"Oh!" Then she laughed the laughter of one in deadly anger. "Mr. Worth, do you suppose, even had I entertained some sentiment toward you, that it would survive a circumstance like this?"

"I am waiting for your answer. Yes or no?"

"No!"

"Take care!" He advanced.

"I am perfectly capable of taking care. And, Mr. Worth, you will leave this villa at once. And if you do not go quietly I shall order the servants to put you forth."

"You speak as though you were the princess," he snarled.

"Till Thursday morning I am!" La Signorina replied proudly.

A man who loses his last throw is generally desperate. He seized her roughly in his arms. She struck him across the eyes with full strength. He gasped and released her.

"If I were a man," she said quietly, but with lightning in her eyes, "you should die for that!" She left him.

Worth burst into tears. He went to his room, got together his things and drove secretly into Florence.

On the night of the ball there was a brilliant moon. Rosy Chinese lanterns stretched from tree to tree. The orchestra was playing Strauss, the dreamy waltzes from "The Queen's Lace Handkerchief." Bright uniforms and handsome gowns flashed by the opened windows.

Leaning against the door which gave entrance to the ballroom from the hall were two officers negligently interested in the moving picture.

"Shall we go?"

"No, no! The prince himself will be here at 11. He was, singularly enough, not invited, and, knowing the story as I do, I am curious to witness the scene."

Hillard, peering gloomily over their shoulders, overheard. The prince! Oh, this must not be! There could be only one prince in a matter of this kind. He pushed by the Italians without apology for his rudeness, edged around the ballroom till he reached La Signorina's side. He must save her at all hazards.

"The prince himself will be here at 11," he whispered.

"What prince?"

"Di Monte Bianca. Come; there is no time to lose. I have been holding my carriage ready."

"Thank you, but it is too late." She smiled, but it was a tired and lonely little smile. She had long since armed her nerves against this moment.

He stepped back, discouraged. He would wait, and woe to any who touched her!

At precisely 11 the music ceased for intermission. There was a lull. Two carabinieri pushed their way into the ballroom. Tableau!

"Which among you is called the Principessa di Monte Bianca?" was asked authoritatively.

"I am she," said La Signorina, stepping forth. "What do you wish?"

"You are under arrest for imposture. You are not the Principessa di Monte Bianca."

Hillard, wild with despair, started to intervene.

As the carabinieri were about to lay hands upon La Signorina a loud voice from the hall stopped them.

She struck him across the eyes.

"One moment!" An officer in riding breeches and dusty boots entered and approached the dramatic group. Hillard and Merrihew recognized him instantly. It was the man with the scar.

"This woman," explained one of the carabinieri, saluting respectfully, "is posing as your wife, highness. We are here to arrest her."

"Do not touch her!" said the prince. "She is the Principessa di Monte Bianca, my wife!"

CHAPTER XVIII.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

SILENCE invested the Villa Ariadne, yet a warm and mellow light illumined many a window or marked short pathways on the blackness of the lawn. A solitary saddle horse rattled his bit, pawed restively and tossed his head worriedly from side to side, as if prescience had touched him with foretelling.

On the other side of the wall, lurking in the dark niches, was a tall, lean, gray haired old man, who watched and listened and waited. He was watching and listening and waiting for the horse. Seven years! It was a long time. He had not hunted for this man. He was breaking no promise. Their paths had recrossed. It was destiny.

The leaving of the guests had been hurried and noisy. In truth, it resembled a disorderly retreat more than anything else. The denouement was evidently sufficient. They had no desire to witness the anticlimax, however interesting and instructive it might be. His highness the Principe di Monte Bianca, Enrico by name, strode up and down the floor, his spurs tinkling and his saber rattling harshly. Occasionally he glanced at the group on the opposite side of the room. He laughed silently. Oh, he would enjoy himself tonight. He would extract every drop of pleasure from this unexpected moment. Had she been mad, he wondered, to give him this longed for opportunity? A month longer and this scene would have been impossible. At last he came to a stand in front of La Signorina, who was white and weary.

"So," he said, "after five years I find you, my beautiful wife! What a devil of a time you have given me across oceans and continents! A hundred times I have passed you without knowing it till too late. And here, at the very moment when I believed it was all over, you fling yourself into the loving arms of your adoring husband! I do not understand!"

"Be brief," she replied, the chill of snows in her voice. Her hate for this man had no empty corners. "Say what you will and be gone."

"I shall telegraph the attorneys in Rome to partition the estates, my heart!" he mocked her. "The king will not add to his private purse the riches of Colonel Grosvenor and the Principi di Monte Bianca, your father and mine—old fools! To tell the truth, I am badly in need of money, and, head of Bacchus, your appearance here is life to me, my dear Sonia. Life! I am a rich man. But," with a sudden scowl, "what position in my household does this gentleman occupy?" indicating Hillard and smiling evilly.

"So it is all true, then?" Hillard exclaimed. "You are his wife!"

"Well?" cried the prince impatiently. "I inquire again, what position does he hold?"

"This villa is mine," she answered, her tone giving hint to the volcano burning in her heart. "However the estates may be partitioned, this will be mine. I command you to leave it at once. I loathe you."

The prince laughed. She was simply a sack of gold. But this was his hour of triumph, and he proposed to make the most of it.

"I could have let the carabinieri take you to prison," he said urbanely. "A night in a damp cell would have chastened your spirit."

"Is it possible?" returned Hillard.

Lesson XIII.—Fourth Quarter, For Dec. 26, 1909.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES

Text of the Lesson, Matt. ii, 1-1 Memory Verses, 11, 12—Golden Te Matt. i, 21—Commentary Prepared Rev. D. M. Stearns.

There is one great truth emphasiz in this gospel and in the New Tes ment which is not made much of preachers and teachers, as a rule, a that is that Jesus is the son of Davi the promised heir to David's thron See in Matt. i. 1; Rev. xxii, 16, ho the New Testament begins and en with this and note how Paul uses it Rom. i, 3; II Tim. ii, 8. See Gabriel use of it in his message to Mary Luke i, 32, 33, and Peter's referen to it in his great Pentecostal discour in Acts ii, 30. Then take the questi of the wise men in our lesson, "Whe is He that is born King of the Jews Remember that title in the in guages of Jews and gentiles was place over His cross and that when He sha come again in His glory and Isra shall say, "This is our God; we ha waited for Him, and He will save us it will be to make Jerusalem t throne of the Lord, that all the natio may be gathered unto it, to the na of the Lord, to Jerusalem. Then, Lord being King of Israel in the mi of them, they shall not see evil more, and He will make them a na and a praise among all the people the earth. Then shall all the natio bring their wealth to Israel, even these wise men did, and israel sh blossom and bud and fill the face the earth with fruit (Isa. xxv, 9; Je iii, 17; Zeph. iii, 15, 19, 20; Isa. lx, margin xxvii, 6). I sincerely trust th every teacher may verify what I hav said by these and other texts and th have the best possible kind of Chris mas lesson concerning Him of whom the prophet said, "Out of thee (Bethlehem Ephratah) shall He come unto me to be ruler in Israel, whose goings forth have been from from the days of eternity" (Mic or, as it is in our lesson, "Out o shall come a governor that shall my people Israel" (verse 6). Su king as Herod might well be trou by the mention of a King of the Je for the time will come when the kin of the earth and the great and ri and mighty men shall call on mou tains and rocks to fall on them a hide them from His face and fr wrath (Rev. vi. 15-17). The chi priests and scribes knew prophecy w enough to be able to tell where t Messiah should be born, but the knowledge did them no good, for wh He came publicly and in every wa proved Himself the Messiah about thi ty years later they rejected Him a killed Him. It is not a knowledge Him nor of what the Scriptures sa about Him that saves any one, b only the heart reception of Him, a cording to John i, 12. Some day w shall know more than we can no about these wise men—who they wer how many there were, just where th came from, what they knew about Hi or His star and how they came know what they did. If the star l them all the way to His land we wo der why they turned from it to c upon Herod and inquire of him. V note that when they left Herod t star seemed to be waiting for the for it went before them till it ca and stood over where the young ch was, leading them to the very hou This was therefore no ordinary st but a supernatural light, a heaven messenger, and it makes us more th ever interested in these men who God so honored. When they saw star again after leaving Herod th rejoiced with exceeding great j (verse 10), and we do not wonder, f it must have been like passing fr hell to heaven to come from such presence into the presence of God's own messenger. When the angel brought the shepherds word the glory of the Lord shone round about them, and the message was, "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Peter says of Him, "Whom, having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see Him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory" (I Pet. i. 8).

In the presence of this child and His mother these men fell down and worshiped Him, opened their treasures and presented unto Him gifts, gold and frankincense and myrrh (verse 11). This is no loose change or pocket-book story, but a record of treasures brought to Him. It makes us think of the woman who gave all her living and received from Him such commendation and by contrast of another woman who spent all her living on physicians in a vain search for health and then received it one day in a moment from Him freely. Mary of Bethany brought Him treasure when she anointed Him with very costly ointment (Luke xxi, 8-43; John xii, 3). Are we bringing Him anything that can be compared to treasure, a really sweet savor to Him, a willingness to suffer with Him? When there is no plain guidance given us in His word He will not fail to guide us in some way by His providence or by a dream or a voice if it is necessary. Ps. xxxii, 8; Isa. xxx, 21, are sure words. I have often been helped by the fact that before they were ordered down to Egypt the gold was on hand to go with, and it was with His gold they journeyed. It had been given to Him. Notice the unexpected source it came from. Remember Hag. ii, 8; Ps. lxii, 5.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett unty, Maryland, is situated in a magicent farming country. Agriculture ing the true basis of all continued osperity, this industry alone could pport a city or several thousand peo-, where most crops of the temperate ne are produced and where total fail-es are wholly unknown. In addition the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, e, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, y, etc., this section is a great apple untry, and many varieties of fruits, rries and vegetables grow with little tention.

Yet, these are by no means all the vantages nature has so prodigally be-owed upon this community. Right at r doors are rich deposits of coal, kao-, pure glass sand, fire and potters' ay; an inexhaustible supply of brick d tile shale, abundant supply of na-ral gas for lighting, heating and anufacturing purposes, the purest ater on earth, a great supply of water wer only waiting harness to illumi-te this mountain top, and supply fac-ries and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a ateau twenty by sixty miles in ex-nt, two thousand eight hundred feet ove the sea, where it is never too hot r comfort and never too cold for con-enience; America's ideal summer re-rt; America's greatest health resort; ere we sleep under two or more blan-ts all summer long and you, who re-le in the lowlands or large centers of pulation, are sweltering with the heat d breathing humid, unhealthy and isoned air. Here the drives are grand prospect and glorious in nature's rb; where some new scene greets the ion at every turn of the road. $238,-00 is being spent on State highways iating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young n, and grow up with the country. If u prefer to invest in agricultural nds or fruit lands, you will find prices nging from five to fifty dollars per re, depending upon location and im-ovements These are attractive in-stments without risk of loss. We also vite factories and industries of all nds, and believe that this location of-rs the best advantages on account of e abundance of raw material, cheap el and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, thin six hours of the Nation's capital, a country with almost unbounded re-urces, with a variety of everything: ater Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, ealthy climate, where hay fever and ny ills to which the human race is ir in less favored climes, is entirely known; a land of pure and abundant ter, a land of churches and schools, thout any race or other vexatious oblems, and where the small investor ng with the man of more pretentious pital has opportunities commensurate th his pluck, intelligence and energy, an equal start in life, then you will dily concede the importance and cor-tness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, t no more land." "There is a tide in affairs of men which, if taken at flood, leads on to fortune and ne."

What Became of the Six Little Roosters.

Did you ever hear the story of the six sisters, the six pullets and the Methdist conference? A friend of mine had the nicest little hen house. Then some of the colored brethren in the neighborhood held a Methodist coference. The six little roosters a disappeared. So when the colore Methodist Bishop came by my frind asked him if he knew anything bout her six little roosters. The Bishop winked and said "he guesses they had all gone into the ministry, as he didn't think they would make good laymen."

H. CREUTZBURG, Prop'r.

RETRENCHMENT NOW GOVERNOR'S SLOGAN

Demands Greater Economy in Conducting Business of the State.

Governor Crothers is demanding retrenchment. Greater economy or an increase in the tax rate as an alternative proposition is the situation as the governor sees it. He is opposed to an increase in the tax rate. He believes it is unnecessary if the retrenchments are made. Appropriations of all kinds, the "gratuities" in legislation, if such is the name to be given to the money appropriated biennially to hospitals, schools and asylums of the State, are the things that he is watching.

The governor says he is not opposed to these appropriations; in fact he is heartily in favor of them, but he is opposed to increases; he is opposed to the State assuming new burdens all along the line, and he is an advocate of a system whereby the expenditure of this money can be safeguarded and supervised.

"Expense of government," he said, "is one of the big questions of the day. The National Government is face to face with the proposition where the disbursements are in excess of the receipts. It is casting about for new means of securing a revenue, involving the privileges of the States in order to secure additional money. This encroachment promises to be a source of endless trouble in view of the fact that the States themselves are as hard up as is the National Government.

"Here in Maryland the expenses are growing apace, whereas the receipts are following the normal conditions of increment. It is time to call a halt. As the National Government is being forced to depart from the time-honored principle of raising all its money by indirect taxes, so the State governments must either retrench or increase the burdens of the people.

"Here in Maryland there have been no governmental extravagances. Nevertheless, things were secured as they were needed, whereas the things in use might have been made to do a little longer. Rigid economy must be practiced henceforth. It is the duty of the Legislature to supervise more carefully than ever before every appropriation it makes.

"Right on the heels of this situation the reforms of government necessitate new offices. It may be that new offices mean a decrease in expense by providing for the supervision that conditions demand. In such cases I am very much in favor of them. Prompt government, in my opinion, requires more offices in order that the supervision may be effective; that reforms may be operative."

New offices to which the governor refers are the result of the efforts he has made to systematize things that have been run in a haphazard way. The demand for them is cropping up as the result of the study of a number of commissions appointed by him to take up particular subjects. Some of the recommendations are as follows:

Pure Food Commissioner,
State Purchasing Commissioner,
Printing Commissioner,
Automobile Commissioner,
Natural Conservation Commissioner,
Public Utilities Commission.

In each instance the outlay on the part of the State is justified by the fact that the returns to the State either directly or indirectly are to be many times in excess of the amount paid out by the State.

The Pure Food Commissioner is to establish a standard and see that packers and others supplying the market live up to it. His approval will, it is supposed, widen the market for Maryland products in addition to saving the people from impurities in what they buy and guarantee to them that things are as they are represented.

The Printing Commissioner will, it is assumed, save the State his salary many fold by putting a stop to piecemeal work and introducing a system whereby printers will know what they are expected to do and be paid only for what they do.

The salary of the Automobile Commissioner is provided for directly by proposed legislation providing a license for machines used in Maryland. And so it goes with all the others unless they fail to do what is expected of them.

Governor Crothers is also trying to work out some plan whereby the State shall have a purchasing agent who will make good bargains for it in the purchase of all supplies.

LOCUSTS DUE NEXT YEAR

Early Spring Will See Advance Guard of Seventeen Year Bugs.

Seventeen year locusts are due in West Virginia next year and brood No. 1 will make its appearance in the early spring, while brood No. 2 will arrive in the spring of 1911. Getting rid of these pests is a subject now being dealt with by state entomologist and in their biennial report, much prominence is given this class of vermin. The locusts injure plants by puncturing their twigs and depositing their eggs. It is said by persons who have made a study of this subject that if plants are given a good coating of some material objectionable to the locusts, the injury will be either entirely eliminated or diminished considerably, and thus make the plants distasteful to the locusts. Plants that are injured may be treated, however, and the vermin extinguished.

Special attention is called by the entomologists to the injury wrought during the past two years to orchards and nurseries by various kinds of pests and warnings are being sent out, recommending that owners of plants, trees, ect., take extra precautions early against this injurious insect. The seventeen year locusts have been absent from our midst for many years and its return has been looked forward to with dread as it generally means poor crops due to their harmful influence on all classes of growing fruits, grain, plants, etc. Within a short time the locusts will come from the south and deposit their eggs to be hatched out in early spring and even now, it is stated, that to give all trees and plants a good coating of some material distasteful to the locusts, would prove a benefit.

It is said that many injurious insects and vermin are imparted into the United States with nursery stock, and special care should be inspected and treated, especially for gipsy and browntail moths, two of the most hurtful insects that have ever been imported here from European countries. Many other insects and diseases are brought here in this manner and the time of the visit of the seventeen year locusts, is said always bring with it an abundance of other vermin which proves disastrous to anything growing.—Wheeling Register.

Mumps and Measles.

Probably the most popular public school boy in England is the public school boy who had the mumps, spread it and compelled the disbanding of the school recently. That means three weeks' extra holiday for the whole school. Such splendid chances come but seldom to the school boy. Eton now and again gets a few weeks extra holiday through floods. But its rival, Harrow, being on a hill, looks furiously across the few miles. It cannot get flooded out. It can only hope for mumps or measles.

There is nothing like measles to scatter a school, and if you take measles in the right spirit it is—or they are—real fun. This writer has had his measles and enjoyed every one of them. He lay triumphant in bed with his whole world of servitors ministering to him and the whole school grateful to him. Measles, red currant vinegar and the respect of your fellows make a good combination.—London Chronicle.

Power of the Topaz.

Jewish sacred writ and Egyptian sarcophagi of thousands of years ago proclaim the fact that even at time, when the world was in its radiant south, and life infinitely less complicated than it is today, gems and precious stones were used to ward off dangers and troubles, and to attract some of things deemed to make life best worth living. As the centuries swept on, these "charms" of gems or precious metals took many forms; think of the old scarabs, crescents, crosses of quaint shape and lovely colors; of the modern lucky pigs and beans and boots and hearts and bells and balls, the symbolism of which are generally more attractive than their outward and visible appearance; think of the beautiful present-day charms, consisting of so-called second-grade gems, such as beryl and chrysolite, onyx and jasper, carbuncle and cat's-eye, garnet and sardonyx, and many more. In their own time and season all these charms and amulets were highly thought of both for themselves, as pretty ornaments, and for the guarantee of good fortune which they gave to the owner.

Perhaps some future generation of wearers of such trinkets will have it that the taste for all the unsensationally effective stones at the beginning of the twentieth century was deprived or decadent or preverted; but those who are best fitted to guide the esthetic taste of the present day are agreed that the delicate liquid lights, green and golden and heliotrope and gray, in beryl and topaz and amethyst and opal, or the gorgeous colors of the fire-opal, the carbuncle, and the turquoise, represent that which is of the very best for personal decoration. Among the stones most eagerly desired by the lover of modern charms and trinkets is the topaz, the gem for November. Perhaps because the month itself is, as a rule, so gray and colorless, the mysterious powers in whose hands the making of the laws of such fashion have been from immemorial times, chose this particular gem; for there is hardly a precious stone which varies more widely in tint than the topaz, which now may blaze with a fire as of liquid gold, and now may end in pure white, after running through the whole gamut of color, from rich, warm yellow to soft pink and to clear, tender green seen sometimes in stormy sunset skies, in wide rivers, or far off where the sea and the horizon meet when the day is young.

It has strange powers, this gleaming November gem which takes its fascinating name from an island in the Red sea, called Topazos (to seek) by the old mariners, because round it floated forever veils of fog and mist, obliging the sailors to seek for it again and yet again, however often they had found it. One old sage, having made the study of the topaz a labor of love and experimented as siduously with it, makes the statement that "it calms the anacreontic temperament." Another rather less of a specialist, but an acknowledged authority on charms, declares that "it has great healing powers, curing mental disease and sleep-walking."

And here Epiphanius weaving one of those weird legends round the topaz which add, perhaps more than anything else, to the fascination of gems, used as charms. "If the gem, "he says, "is rubbed down upon a physician's home it does not give out a red juice in accord with its color, but one like milk, and fills as many cups as he that rubs it down may choose, and yet loses nothing at all of its original weight." Again, the pious generation which allotted to each of the apostles his stone gave the topaz to James the younger, because the softness of its coloring seemed best to fit that delicate, gentle follower of Christ.—Westminster Gazette.

CEMENT HOUSE GREAT INVENTION

Edison Says He Will Cast His First Cement House Soon.

"Two years ago I said that I was working on a plan by which I hoped to cast a house out of cement as a foundryman cast a car-wheel out of iron. I now feel safe in saying that I have solved the problem. All my preliminary experiments have proved successful, and in December or January, I expect to cast my first house. If I succeed, as I feel certain I shall, the cement house will be my greatest invention. It will solve the problem of housing. It will take from the city slums everybody who is worth taking. Why, I shall make it possible to build a house with a good cellar, seven large or ten ordinary size rooms and a bath for twelve hundred dollars. Come out and see my molds."

As Thomas A. Edison said this, he clapped a cap on his head and led the way to his machine shop.

What he has accomplished is described in the December number of Munsey's Magazine.

In an open space, surrounded by planers and lathes, were what appeared to be the foundation walls and part of the first story of an iron house. A peep over the top showed that there were two iron houses, one set within the other, with an eight inch space between. Into this space cement is to be poured; then the two iron houses will be taken down and the finished structure of artificial stone will be ready for occupancy.

"I'll dig the cellar of this house with a steam shovel," Mr. Edison continued, "and cast it in six hours. Two locomotive cranes will lift the two hundred and thirty-two cubic yards of cement that the house will contain, and pour it into the openings at the top. Cement will pass through twelve sluice-boxes and as it is being poured, a number of men will churn it with iron bars, at the end of each of which will be a large ball. The churning will be for the purpose of sending waves through the cement, so that it shall fill every particle of the molds."

And it is a wonderful house that the famous wizard of science intends to build. There will not be enough wood to make a hundred-dollar fire, even if all of it were to be consumed. Floors, mantels, picture moldings and decorations—all will be of cement. The bathtub, washstands and sinks will be cast of the same material. Edison says he can make cement bath-tubs that will be as smooth as highly-polished glass. All that is required to do this is to have highly-polished molds. Wherever beauty is desired, an extra finish will be put on the casting molds.

No street of Edison cement houses will be a dull thoroughfare of uniform color and design. One house will be built on one plan; the next on another. One house will be gray, another red or light green, while the third may be yellow. Everybody can choose his own color. Tinting the cement before it is poured is easy.

He goes on to explain how he intends to market his great invention, the saving in fire insurance, the great economics possible—in short, his plans as outlined in this article are world-reaching in their importance.

The Western Maryland.

With the ratification by Judge Morris of the United States Circuit Court, of the recent sale of the belongings of the Western Maryland Railroad, the way is open for the putting into operation of the reorganization plans. Yesterday was also the day set for the payment of the fourth and final installment of the $40 per share assessment which the reorganization committee made upon the original stockholders. According to a statement given out sometime ago, fully 95 per cent. of the holders of the old stock had indicated a purpose to pay the charges and to accept a new issue of shares to be made under the reorganization arrangement in place of the old. It is generally anticipated that the road will be taken out of the hands of the receivers and started upon its new career in the very near future.

There has been many rumors afloat concerning the Western Maryland's future, the majority of the rumors being to the effect that the road is to be linked up with one or another big railroad system. There has been several searching investigations as to the material status of the road recently, and the reports from all these indicate that the system is in first-rate physical condition and that the rolling-stock equipment is modern and in good shape. It is also known that the affairs of the road have been ably managed during the period it has been in the receivers hands. There is fair reason to anticipate that the Western Maryland is about to enter upon a more prosperous career, whether it shall be operated apart or in connection with a more extensive system.

John Brown's "Fort" Bought.

The old engine house at Harper's Ferry in which John Brown barricaded himself at the time of the Harper's Ferry insurrection, and which has since become known as John Brown's Fort, has been bought by Rev. N. C. Brackett, president of Storer College, a colored institution at Harper's Ferry, and will be removed from the Murphy farm, near that place, to the college ground. The old fort was torn down and taken to the Chicago Exposition, but was returned to Harper's Ferry.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett unty, Maryland, is situated in a magicent farming country. Agriculture ing the true basis of all continued osperity, this industry alone could pport a city or several thousand peo-, where most crops of the temperate ne are produced and where total fail-es are wholly unknown. In addition the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, e, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, y, etc., this section is a great apple untry, and many varieties of fruits, rries and vegetables grow with little tention.

Yet, these are by no means all the vantages nature has so prodigally be-owed upon this community. Right at r doors are rich deposits of coal, kao-, pure glass sand, fire and potters' ay, an inexhaustible supply of brick d tile shale, abundant supply of na-ral gas for lighting, heating and anufacturing purposes, the purest ater on earth, a great supply of water ower only waiting harness to illumi-ate this mountain top, and supply fac-ries and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a ateau twenty by sixty miles in ex-nt, two thousand eight hundred feet ove the sea, where it is never too hot r comfort and never too cold for con-enience; America's ideal summer re-rt; America's greatest health resort; here we sleep under two or more blan-ts all summer long and you, who re-le in the lowlands or large centers of pulation, are sweltering with the heat d breathing humid, unhealthy and isoned air. Here the drives are grand prospect and glorious in nature's rb; where some new scene greets the ion at every turn of the road. $238,-00 is being spent on State highways ating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young n, and grow up with the country. If u prefer to invest in agricultural nds or fruit lands, you will find prices nging from five to fifty dollars per re, depending upon location and im-ovements These are attractive in-stments without risk of loss. We also vite factories and industries of all nds, and believe that this location of-rs the best advantages on account of e abundance of raw material, cheap el and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, thin six hours of the Nation's capital, a country with almost unbounded re-urces, with a variety of everything: ater Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, ealthy climate, where hay fever and ny ills to which the human race is ir in less favored climes, is entirely known; a land of pure and abundant ter, a land of churches and schools, thout any race or other vexatious oblems, and where the small investor ng with the man of more pretentious pital has opportunities commensurate th his pluck, intelligence and energy, an equal start in life, then you will dily concede the importance and cor-tness of the advice given herein.

RETRENCHMENT NOW GOVERNOR'S SLOGAN

Demands Greater Economy in Conducting Business of the State.

Governor Crothers is demanding retrenchment. Greater economy or an increase in the tax rate as an alternative proposition is the situation as the governor sees it. He is opposed to an increase in the tax rate. He believes it is unnecessary if the retrenchments are made. Appropriations of all kinds, the "gratuities" in legislation, if such is the name to be given to the money appropriated biennially to hospitals, schools and asylums of the State, are the things that he is watching.

The governor says he is not opposed to these appropriations; in fact he is heartily in favor of them, but he is opposed to increases; he is opposed to the State assuming new burdens all along the line, and he is an advocate of a system whereby the expenditure of this money can be safeguarded and supervised.

"Expense of government," he said, "is one of the big questions of the day. The National Government is face to face with the proposition where the disbursements are in excess of the receipts. It is casting about for new means of securing a revenue, involving the privileges of the States in order to secure additional money. This encroachment promises to be a source of endless trouble in view of the fact that the States themselves are as hard up as is the National Government.

"Here in Maryland the expenses are growing apace, whereas the receipts are following the normal conditions of increment. It is time to call a halt. As the National Government is being forced to depart from the time-honored principle of raising all its money by indirect taxes, so the State governments must either retrench or increase the burdens of the people.

"Here in Maryland there have been no governmental extravagances. Nevertheless, things were secured as they were needed, whereas the things in use might have been made to do a little longer. Rigid economy must be practiced henceforth. It is the duty of the Legislature to supervise more carefully than ever before every appropriation it makes.

"Right on the heels of this situation the reforms of government necessitate new offices. It may be that new offices mean a decrease in expense by providing for the supervision that conditions demand. In such cases I am very much in favor of them. Prompt government, in my opinion, requires more offices in order that the supervision may be effective; that reforms may be operative."

New offices to which the governor refers are the result of the efforts he has made to systematize things that have been run in a haphazard way. The demand for them is cropping up as the result of the study of a number of commissions appointed by him to take up particular subjects. Some of the recommendations are as follows:

Pure Food Commissioner,
State Purchasing Commissioner,
Printing Commissioner,
Automobile Commissioner,
Natural Conservation Commissioner,
Public Utilities Commission.

In each instance the outlay on the part of the State is justified by the fact that the returns to the State either directly or indirectly are to be many times in excess of the amount paid out by the State.

The Pure Food Commissioner is to establish a standard and see that packers and others supplying the market live up to it. His approval will, it is supposed, widen the market for Maryland products in addition to saving the people from impurities in what they buy and guarantee to them that things are as they are represented.

The Printing Commissioner will, it is assumed, save the State his salary many fold by putting a stop to piecemeal work and introducing a system whereby printers will know what they are expected to do and be paid only for what they do.

The salary of the Automobile Commissioner is provided for directly by proposed legislation providing a license for machines used in Maryland. And so it goes with all the others unless they fail to do what is expected of them.

Governor Crothers is also trying to work out some plan whereby the State shall have a purchasing agent who will make good bargains for it in the purchase of all supplies.

BITTINGER.

We have had about two weeks of very pronounced winter weather with excellent sleighing.

Rush Boucher, who is teaching the Duckworth school, spent last Saturday and Sunday with his uncle, C. E. Ellithorp, in this village, returning to his school Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Goldsbirth and sons, of near Cumberland, drove up to this place last Monday afternoon and purchased a sled load of fine Christmas trees from J. H. Stark.

L. H. Diefenbach, of Grantsville, spent a few hours at this place on Wednesday of last week.

Miss Lillian Emory, who had spent the past few months with her brother at this place, returned to Friendsville last week.

Mr. Joseph Bowser, an excellent and esteemed young farmer of this section, and Miss Lula Moon, of Hancock, Md., were quietly married at Oakland on Dec. 13th. The young couple will reside in this community and we extend our congratulations and best wishes for a long, happy and prosperous life.

Noah Stark was slightly injured by the collision of an empty with a loaded car in his father's coal mine on Thursday of last week, but we are glad to report that Noah is able to be about again.

We extend to the editor of THE REPUBLICAN and all its readers our sincere wishes for a bright and happy Christmas.

STOYER.

The sleighing snow we have at this writing is enjoyed by all and many of our young folks are making good use of the snow. Skating is also fine here.

Butchering is the order of the day with most of the people here.

The mines will soon be in operation again, we are glad to say.

Mr. John Riley, of Elkins, was in town one day last week.

Mr. Henry Harvey, of Chicago, was the guest of Miss Emma Stoyer the first of the week.

Stockholders' Meeting.

By advertisement printed in another column of this paper today a meeting of the stockholders of the Garrett County Telephone Company is called for at Hoyes on January 3rd, 1910, for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year and for the transaction of any other business that may be brought before them.

Increase of Pension.

Mr. George E. Bishoff, of near Oakland, received notice Tuesday from the Pension Department that he had been allowed an increase of three dollars monthly on his pension, bringing the amount he now receives up to $17 per month.

New Sheriff in Charge.

Garrett county's recently elected sheriff, Mr. Andrew Shartzer, assumed the duties of his office Monday morning with his son John as his deputy. Mr. Brown, the retiring officer, completed moving his furniture from the sheriff's residence Monday morning and is now domiciled in his private residence on Second street.

Cold Weather Still With Us.

Oakland and the community near abouts has experienced frosty mornings for the past ten days or two weeks, and we are still experiencing them. We have had several of the frostiest mornings of the winter all bright in a bunch, beginning with last Monday a week ago right down to the present minute and from indications, notwithstanding the forecasts sent out by the weather sharps at Washington, there will probably be no let-up in chilly conditions for some days to come. It is winter with a vengeance, but lacking the usual blizzardous accompaniment, all are thankful to know, even if this condition was approached by the wind and snow yesterday.

A Serious Fire Averted.

Monday afternoon a very serious fire was happily averted when a blaze, caused by the flames being communicated to a board beneath a gas stove in the tailor shop of John Bergman, located in the Ravenscroft building on Second street, was discovered and after the door had been forced in by Andrew Gonder and another young man, the flaming material as well as the stove were dumped out into the street. Had the fire gotten under headway the results would probably have been very serious.

Garrett Coal Land Under Option.

A party of Pennsylvanians have optioned the coal under about 8,000 acres on the Maryland side of the river between Bayard and Scheil, W. Va., at $25 an acre. The options are taken for only three months. The land lies in Garrett county.

To Do Business Right

You must be organized right. You can't do a time saving business in a store of the vintage of 1864. Let us repeat what has been said so many times, "Show Goods." If the jobber does not show his goods to the salesman, the salesman will not sell them. If the salesman does not show samples to the retailer, the retailer will not buy them. If the retail merchant does not put them to the front where the consumer can see them the goods will not move. The man from Missouri says, "Show me." So come and see our Christmas line.

DAVIS HARDWARE.

FOR THE CHILDREN

The Disappearing Coin.

Take a quarter of a dollar between the thumb and forefinger of the right hand; then by a rapid twist of the fingers twirl the coin by the same motion you would use to spin a teetotum, at the same time rapidly closing your hand, and the coin will disappear up your coat sleeve. You can now open your hand, and, much to the astonishment of your audience, the coin will not be there.

This capital trick may be varied in a hundred ways. One good way is to take three dimes or quarters and, concealing one in the palm of your left hand, place the other two, one each between the thumb and forefinger of each hand; then give the coin in the right hand the twirl as already described, and, closing both hands quickly, the coin in the right hand will disappear up your sleeve, and the left hand on being unclosed will be found to contain two quarters, while that which was in the right will have disappeared. Thus you will make the surprised spectators believe that you conjured the coin from the right hand into the left.

The Jolly Miller.

The players decide among themselves which one of their number shall act the part of the jolly miller. This being done, each little boy chooses a little girl as partner, the jolly miller having taken his stand in the middle of the room, and they all commence to walk arm in arm around him, singing the following lines:

There was a jolly miller who lived by himself.
As the wheel went round he made his wealth.
One hand in the hopper and the other on the bag.
As the wheel went round he made his grab.

At the word "grab" all must change partners, and while the change is going on the miller has the opportunity given him of securing a partner for himself. Should he succeed in doing so the one left without a partner must take the place of the jolly miller and must occupy the center of the room until fortunate enough to get another partner.

The Goose Is Intelligent.

You must no longer use the expression, "As silly as a goose." The naturalists of half a dozen countries have been studying the goose of late years, and they have come to the conclusion that she is the wisest fowl among them all. She never quarrels without cause, she sees danger before any other fowl, she has more courage than the rooster, she is far braver than the gobbler, and if given a fair show she can beat off the fox.

A flock of geese squatted around the barnyard at night is a much greater protection than the watchdog. They are light sleepers and will give the alarm the instant they see a stranger moving about. We should say "as wise as a goose" and give her all due credit.

A Shoefly Boy

Many of the Scandinavians and Swedes who have settled in the west still wear the same sabots or wooden shoes they did in the old country. In a Scandinavian settlement in Wisconsin a mad dog that had bitten three people and two cows made for a boy who was carrying a pail of milk along the highway. He knew that he could not escape by running, and there was no tree handy for him to climb, and so he kicked off one of his heavy shoes and, waiting until the dog was close at hand, he threw with such good aim as to roll the animal into the ditch. Then others came up and finished him.

A Few Old Conundrums.

What seven letters did the old woman utter when she looked into the barrel of flour? O I C U R M T (Oh, I see you are empty).

When is a gate not a gate? When it's ajar.

What two letters describe an old coat? C D (seedy).

What city is three-sevenths of a chicken, two-thirds of a cat and one-half of a goat? Chi-ca-go.

What state is one-third of a caretaker, one-third of a boy, three-sevenths of Lincoln and one-third of a man? Car-o-lin-a.

We are wondering if we will get any 'coon for Christmas. Now, brother, we carry almost every load under the sun, both in black and nitro powder and can fill your order without delay. The way business is going to chilled shot reminds us of a story that was told on one of our competitors. A customer said they were so cold that all the shot was chilled. THREE MINERS BURNED TO DEATH

Christmas Orgie Near Harrison, W. Va., Has Frightful Termination.

Michael Malone, Michael McGraw and Fred Malone were burned to death early Saturday morning near Harrison, Mineral county, W. Va., about fifty miles southwest of Cumberland on the Western Maryland railroad. The men lived at the boarding house of J. O'Brien at Oakmont, near mine No. 4 of the Davis Coal & Coke Company. They were employed as miners by the Abrams Creek Coal & Coke Company, in the same neighborhood on the Elk Garden branch of the Western Maryland Railroad. Patrick Malone and Frederick Dugan, who boarded at the O'Brien house are missing. Officers are working on a clue that the house was fired after a Christmas orgie by a man who had been ejected and who then threatened to burn the house. The building was completely destroyed and those who escaped were in their night clothes.

ICE CUTTING IN A MODERN MANNER

A Ton a Minute Cut and Loaded at The Park

The ice loading device at Mountain Lake Park which was installed last winter at the lake and then the projectors were disappointed because the ice failed to form, had the first practical demonstration of its capacity to handle ice last week, when it worked successfully and met every expectancy of the interested parties.

As the guest of Superintendent Davis, the editor of THE REPUBLICAN was taken to the lake on last Friday afternoon.

The manner and mode of harvesting ice by modern methods was a revelation, and those who have never had the pleasure of witnessing how ice is cut and stored by machinery should avail themselves of the present opportunity.

A description would convey but inadequately how the work is accomplished, but by the employment of a small steam engine and less than twenty-five men and boys a ton of ice each minutes is cut, loaded into cars or stored in the large house on the shore of the lake. The ice is plowed into 22 inch squares, this is spudded apart at the proper moment and floated into a channel leading to the conveyor or endless chain arrangement which draws the squares up the incline and deposits them on chutes leading to the cars on the siding or the ice house as is required. A constant stream of ice, so to speak, is thus kept moving and is handled systematically and with less labor than it would seem possible.

Gangs of men on the chutes send the ice along to the cars, three of which are placed for loading at one time and these are filled in about an hour's time.

So far more than fifty car loads have been sent out and hundreds of tons are stored in the ice house at the Park for local consumption.

GARRETT GIVEN COLD SHOULDER

Bureau of Immigration Seemingly Unaware of Its Existence.

The following open letter was addressed to the Commissioners of Immigration by Lieut. E. S. West, of Oakland, and explains itself.

Oakland, Md., Dec. 28, 1909.

THE COMMISSIONERS OF IMMIGRATION,
Baltimore, Md.,

GENTLEMEN:—The report of the Bureau of Immigration of the State of Maryland received a few days ago, and I desire to congratulate you on your very creditable report which represents no small amount of labor on your part and contains much valuable information not only to the people of Maryland but to the entire United States and a great many immigrants who annually come to our shores from Europe. Yet I see no reason why Eastern and Southern Maryland should receive so much attention in this report and the Western end of the State be left out entirely.

Western Maryland, in my opinion (and I am pretty well acquainted with the State of Maryland), has many advantages over the lower counties. We have a more healthy climate, richer soil and produce better crops of wheat, oats, rye, barley, buckwheat, potatoes and hay than are raised anywhere in the lowlands of this State; then you cannot find better fruit anywhere in the country than is raised in Western Maryland, as a report of the Horticultural Exhibition of this State, and that of Council Bluffs, Iowa, will testify.

I hope this omission in your report was due to the lack of information, and I assure you that the Boards of Trade as well as a number of thoroughly reliable and representative men in Western Maryland would be only too glad to supply you with all the data necessary regarding our resources and natural advantages at any time, should you desire to call upon them.

Thanking you for your kindness in supplying me with a copy of your report, I am,

Yours very respectfully,
E. S. WEST.

THE DEATH RECORD.

MRS. ELMIRA TURNER.

Mrs. Elmira Turner, aged about 70 years, died at the home of her son, Mr. William Turner, at Shade's Mill, near Grantsville, last Wednesday night about ten o'clock after a prolonged illness. She is survived by the following sons and daughters: Messrs. William Turner and George Turner, and Mrs. Norman Durst, whose husband died just a few days ago, all of near Grantsville, and Mrs. S. W. Frost, of Frostburg. The funeral took place Monday afternoon with interment in Blocher's cemetery.

NELSON LOAR.

Mr. Nelson Loar, aged 69 years, died at the home of Ernest Michaels, at Avilton, Wednesday night. Mr. Loar was a former resident of Avilton, but has lived for eleven years in Michigan. He came from Michigan to Avilton a few days ago to visit friends and was taken ill. The body was taken from Avilton to Lonaconing Thursday and forwarded to Michigan for burial.

GEORGE MCKENZIE.

Mr. George McKenzie died at his residence in Swanton near the noon hour Christmas day. He had been in declining health for a year or more and for the last six months had been seriously ill, and died in the 70th year of his age. Mr. McKenzie was a Union soldier in the war between the States and was one of the pensioners of the government from that war. He was a sober, inoffensive citizen and spent a large part of his life in Swanton and in the community of Wilson's store. The interment was made in Swanton.

RELLIM.

MRS. ELIZABETH BECKMAN.

Mrs. Elizabeth O'Brien-Beckman, wife of Mr. Rudolph Beckman, died at her home near Thayerville Christmas Day, 1909, after a protracted illness. Mrs. Beckman was born June 22, 1834, near Swanton, this county. Early in life she was married and a number of children besides her husband, who is far advanced in years, survive her. The funeral services were conducted Monday of this week in the Theyerville Baptist church by Rev. Manges, pastor of the Oakland Lutheran church, with interment in the cemetery at Thayerville.

The Highest Human Ascent.

It has been stated that a new Italian record of 38,700 feet has been created in Italy; but according to a letter from the aeronauts themselves, Mina and Placenza, it appears that the maximum height was only about 9,200 metres, or 30,180 feet. Since their cotton balloon held only 80,500 cubic feet and contained illuminating gas, this was a remarkable performance, and though there is some doubt as to the barometric observations, it probably exceeds both the French and Italian records. The world's record is, however, still held by Berson and Suring, who ascended from Charlottenburg, near Berlin, on July 31, 1901, in a balloon of nearly 300,000 capacity, partially filled with hydrogen gas, to the height of 34,450 feet.

MR. WARFIELD ON TEACHING

Maryland's Ex-Governor Tells of His Experience as a Teacher.

Telling of his own experience as a school teacher in a small log school, former Governor Warfield addressed the Parents and Teachers' Club of School No. 74 on Thursday night of last week at the school, Twenty-second and Cromwell streets, Baltimore. The former Governor dwelt on the primary public schools and their relation to the business community.

"I am greatly interested," he began, "in the cause of public education because at one time I was a teacher myself. The teacher's position is one of great responsibility. In fact, the teacher is responsible to the child for its successes or failures in life, next to the mother and father of the child. The greatest influence of the teacher on the child is in the primary schools. It is while the child's mind is capable of rapid development that the primary school teacher may do her work. She may at this period give the child a firm foundation for his entire life.

"Parents should cooperate with the teachers in the training of the child. Organizations of parents and teachers such as the one at this school can be great factors for good in this community. In fact, I believe that there should be an organization embracing all of the teachers and parents' clubs in the city and another organization embracing all of such clubs in the State. These clubs, where the parents and teachers cooperate in working for the good of the children, will accomplish great results.

"School teaching is often a tiresome position to the teachers. Seated at a desk a large part of her time and confined in a room facing a number of children for hours is hard work. I was a teacher myself once, and I know exactly what school teaching calls for. My school was a little log one, and I was the only teacher. I was not a school teacher by profession, but in those days school teaching was a makeshift. Now it is different, as many young men and women decide to make school teaching a profession. Sometimes a few of the ladies decide that they would rather manage a domestic institution for a man than teach school.

"In the schools of this city there are about 90,000 pupils. Of these pupils about three-quarters will leave the schools before they finish the grades in the primary department. They will start out in the world and the ones who are ambitious will win success by sheer force and some of these will be the leaders of the future."

A Slight Wreck Near Oakland.

What might have resulted in a very serious and disastrous passenger train wreck occurred last Thursday morning about eleven o'clock at Weber's station, midway between Oakland and Mountain Lake Park, when a wheel under the smoking car of the east bound accommodation burst and derailed the car which bounded over the ties for a distance of a hundred yards before the engineer brought his train to a stop. The passengers in the car were mostly local people and they received a fright which they will remember for some time to come. The passengers in other cars of the train hardly felt the jar. The derailed car was soon replaced on the track and that portion of the train which escaped was transferred to the north track and proceeded after an hour's delay.

Fewer Railroaders Killed.

The annual report of the interstate commerce commission, just issued, shows the following in regard to the number of railroaders killed: In 1903 the number of men employed in coupling and uncoupling cars for each one killed was 349, while in 1908 the number employed for each one killed was 983. The number of men employed in coupling and uncoupling cars for each one injured was 62. Stated in another way, the number of men killed to each 1,000 employed was 3 in 1903 and 1 in 1908, while the number of injured for each 1,000 men employed in this service was 77 in 1903 and 16 in 1908.

OVER THIRTY LIVES LOST IN BLIZZARD

Damage by Storm and Tidal Wave Near Boston Is $5.000.000.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 28—The Christmas blizzard, the most severe storm experienced in the east in twenty years, tied up local traffic yesterday in cities from Pennsylvania to Maine and disarranged train schedules throughout half a dozen states. Conditions, however, are rapidly improving and railroads and municipalities are bending every effort to move intercity and local traffic. There is reason to believe that conditions will be normal again by tonight, when another storm is expected from the west.

The heaviest financial loss was in and around Boston, where a tidal wave did damage estimated at $5,000,000.

A number of persons have met their deaths through exposure or accident, five in Philadelphia and sixteen in New York. The final reports of fatalities in New England have not yet come to hand. Twelve men probably perished in the wreck of a schooner off Massachusetts.

In Philadelphia general business yesterday was practically at a standstill. All through trains were late, only one street car line was running and the city suffered from a shortage of milk. Reports from Pittsburg and Harrisburg indicate that conditions are improving rapidly.

Washington did not suffer severely, but on account of traffic conditions to the north President Taft decided to postpone an engagement to speak in New York.

Communication with Boston was maintained only with difficulty. The storm in New England seems to have been worse in the vicinity of New Bedford, Providence, Fall River, Newport, Pawtucket and Woonsocket.

Train service from Baltimore to Philadelphia and New York is still in bad shape, and through passengers were delayed 10 to 28 hours. One train which left New York over the Pennsylvania railroad early yesterday morning was heard of at Wilmington late in the afternoon. Service on the Baltimore and Ohio was little, if any, better. Local trains on the Northern Central and Western Maryland are running practically on schedule time.

The property loss in Boston and vicinity due to the storm is placed at $5,000,000. Four lives have been reported lost to date.

The five masted schooner, Davis Palmer, was wrecked off Hull, Mass., and her crew of twelve men was lost.

Eighteen persons lost their lives in and near New York in the blizzard or from accidents caused by it. Ten thousand men were employed to remove snow from New York streets. Yesterday afternoon the big cities in the Middle Atlantic and New England States reported that they were fast recovering from the effects of the storm and that business and traffic were nearing normal.

The freight steamer, Thurman, was wrecked off Toms River, N. J., and the schooner, Mary Ann Kirby, went down in Long Island sound. Fears are entertained for the safety of other vessels.

SWANTON.

Swanton has had one of the quiet and orderly Christmas observances noted in many, indeed, very many years and we are proud of our improved behavior.

All three of the Sunday schools had entertainments bringing out attractively before the attention of their pupils prominent facts in the greatest day in the religious year.

The Protestant Episcopal school lead off with a very delightful afternoon for the school. This was followed Friday evening by the Methodist school occupying hours in an entertaining way before a large number of members and visitors. Christmas night the United Brethren church was brightly lighted and invitingly warmed while a winter storm raged with a fury excessive even upon this mountain top, and notwithstanding snow and cold the building was packed far beyond its seating capacity by spectators manifesting a lively interest in the various proceedings. The churches were elaborately dressed in Christmas trimming and all of the services were of a most creditable order.

Miss Elizabeth Miller will leave her home Monday, 27th inst., to join her sister, Miss Mary Miller, in Wakefield, R. I., where she may remain some time.

Census Enumerators Examination Not Hard.

Any person of good judgment who received an ordinary common school education can readily pass the test to be given applicants for census enumerators' places to be held on Saturday, Feb. 5, the date finally set by United States Director Durand. The announcement was made by the census Bureau several days ago. This will be a comforting assurance to the several hundred thousand persons who will apply for the places.

The test will be an eminently practical one, similar to that applied to applicants for the Twelfth Census. It will consist of filling out a sample schedule of population from a description, in narrative form, of typical families; and, in the case of enumerators whose work will be in rural districts, they will be called upon to fill out an additional sample schedule of agriculture from information furnished by the Census Bureau.

All persons, women or men, who may desire to become census enumerators must be citizens of the United States; residents of the supervisor's district for which they wish to be appointed, not less than 18 nor more than 70 years of age; physically able to do the work; trustworthy, honest and of good habits; must have at least an ordinary education and be able to write plainly and with reasonable rapidity.

Those who comply with these requirements are invited to make application, as there will be at least 68,000 enumerators' places to be filled by the middle of March in preparation for the enumeration, which will begin April 15.

Application forms, with full instructions and complete information concerning the test and the method of appointment, can be secured by writing to the Supervisors of Census for the supervisors' district in which the applicant lives. All applications must be filed with the supervisors not later than January 25. Any received after that date will not be considered.

Harley Bush and Carrie Queen, both of Coxs Mills, W. Va.

Homer Underwood, of Wilbur, W. Va., and Clella Smith, of Camp, W. Va.

Howard Hurst, of Wilsonburg, W. Va., and Maude Weaver, of Tunnelton, W. Va.

William Malott and Esther Squires, both of Morgantown, W. Va.

Ernest Gaskin and Carrie Duffy, both of Clarksburg, W. Va.

J. E. Harling and Lucy Miller, both of Grafton, W. Va.

T. E. Jobes, of Uniontown, Pa., and Grace Pike of Philips Works, Pa.

I. B. Brownfield and Margaret Brown, both of near Uniontown, Pa.

Chester Reed, of Kingwood, W. Va., and Dessie Cobun, of Tunnelton, W. Va.

Married.

OTTO—CAMP—A quiet and pretty wedding took place last Wednesday at the Stone House. The bride and groom were Emma Camp, of Cove, and Samuel Otto, of New Germany. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Stoeffer, of St. Paul, Pa. The groom has purchased his father's farm and expects to reside there. Both young people are popular and all wish them success.

AFTER FIFTEEN YEARS.

A New Year's Story.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

IT was New Year's eve, and Marcia Scott sat staring into the fire with unseeing eyes and compressed lips.

"I told him I'd wait fifteen years and no longer," she sighed. "The fifteen years are up tonight at 12 o'clock. If he doesn't appear then with the fortune he promised I shall start the new year by marrying Captain Ladd!"

Marcia's eyes blazed indignantly as she made this declaration. Fifteen years ago Jeremiah Allen had kissed her goodby and gone away to the gold fields to seek a fortune for them both.

HE TRUDGED AWAY INTO THE WEST.

"I'll come back within two years, Marcia," he had boasted at the last. "I'll be rich then, and you'll marry me, won't you? You'll wait for me two years. There ain't any money in farming—you'll wait for me just two years, Marcia, won't you?"

"I'll wait fifteen years, Jere," she had promised. "That is an awful long time, and it proves how much—I care!"

Jeremiah had admitted tenderly that it did prove Marcia's love, and so he had trudged away into the west. The years had dragged by, and Jeremiah had not made a fortune, but Marcia was still waiting.

Every month her lover had written a long letter, and these letters became at last a history of disillusionment and hard, hard work—a history of digging underground, of great "strikes" and disastrous business deals in which Jeremiah Allen always came out a poorer and wiser man than when he entered. It would seem that with so much poverty and wisdom thrust upon him Jeremiah might have done better, but he never did.

His last letter had contained glowing accounts of a new camp in the Klondike. He was there now, she thought.

"If Jeremiah doesn't come tonight I shall marry Captain Ladd in a month," averred Marcia again as she stared steadily at the fire.

The clock ticked above the high mantelshelf, the cat purred noisily in the warm corner, and the logs hissed and spat in the fireplace. Outside it was snowing softly, and now and then a large flake touched the window pane with a muffled rap.

"If he doesn't come tonight," she argued with herself, "he can't expect me to wait for him any longer. I'm thirty-eight now. I shall marry Captain Ladd in a month." She shuddered a little at the sight of Captain Ladd's rubicund visage peering at her around the clock on the shelf.

"I don't s'pose Jere 'd want to see that picture on the shelf," she mused as she hid it in a drawer. "He used to be jealous. I expect he's an old man now. He must be forty-two. I hope he is rich. I can't stand another year of poverty—it's too grinding. If he comes back penniless I shall marry Captain Ladd anyway!"

With this resolution the door opened, and in walked the captain, his hair and beard sprinkled with clinging snowflakes until he looked like a veritable Santa Claus.

"Thought I'd watch in the new year with you, Marcia," he puffed as he unwound himself from several yards of woolen muffler. "I thought to myself that as we was likely to go through the year together as man and wife mebbe it'd be a good idea to watch the new year in together, eh?"

"I WANT COMPANIONSHIP."

Marcia hesitated. "Well," she murmured, with a reluctant glance at the clock, "I kind of expected some one else tonight—some one who promised to be here—but I guess he—they ain't coming."

"Does that mean you want me to stay, Marcia?"

Marcia nodded gravely. "If the right company had come I'd have said no," she explained wistfully. "You understand I'm not marrying for love. I'm lonely, and I want companionship and some one to take care of."

The captain nodded. "I'm willing to be took care of," he said solemnly.

Marcia knitted calmly, the warm red wool of the mittens threading her strong fingers like rippling flames. It was not easy to realize that she was practically engaged to Captain Ladd. The old sailor had pursued her ever since Jeremiah's departure fifteen years before.

"You can have the house repapered if you [illegible] Marcia," said the good captain [illegible] while.

"A[illegible] agreed Marcia in a muffled [illegible]

"I[illegible] to buy a new carriage, too, so's we can drive to town in proper fashion. The old buggy is all in tatters."

"WHY, I AM RICH."

"That will be nice," murmured Marcia.

"We might get married on Valentine's day. That'll give you time to get ready, eh, Marcia?" he said playfully.

"Very well," consented Marcia mechanically.

The hours wore on. She put refreshment of cider and doughnuts before her sailor lover, but she did not touch them herself. When the clock chimed 12 he arose and turned a merry eye toward her. "Here's to your health, Marcia Scott, soon to be Marcia Ladd. Give me a kiss, my dear, to seal the bargain." He leaned toward her suggestively.

"No, no!" cried Marcia vehemently. "I have made a mistake—I can't marry you, Captain Ladd. I am waiting for some one else. Oh, I cannot marry you—not this year!"

The captain glared angrily at her. "This year or none, ma'am! You've been a-putting me off more times than I want to remember! Shall we begin this new year together or not?"

"Not!" said Marcia firmly. "My mind's made up for good and all."

"Good night, and a happy new year to you, ma'am!" snapped Captain Ladd as he strode from the house.

"I didn't mean fifteen years, Jeremiah," whispered Marcia softly to herself as she thrust Captain Ladd's picture in the fire. "I meant I would wait always. I've just found it out."

There was a little contented smile on her face now as she dreamed before the fire, and so she did not hear a low tap at the door. Again it sounded, louder, and she rose to her feet with a little frightened cry.

The door swung open, and this time a tall form entered and stamped the clinging snow from his feet.

"Marcia—little Marcia," he cried eagerly, "I ain't too late? You're waiting for me yet?"

"Yes," sobbed Marcia in Jeremiah's strong arms.

"I ain't rich, Marcia. I'm a dead failure at getting rich. I've come back to buy a farm and settle down. I've got just enough for that. Do you want me now, Marcia? I ain't rich, but I've got my two hands and you. Why, I am rich!" he laughed delightedly.

"And I am rich, too," sighed Marcia happily. "I have got you!"

The new year had already begun.

Not Such a Handicap.

Spratt—Yes, I know I'm a very absentminded fellow, but I'm always glad of it on New Year's.

Snaggs—How so?

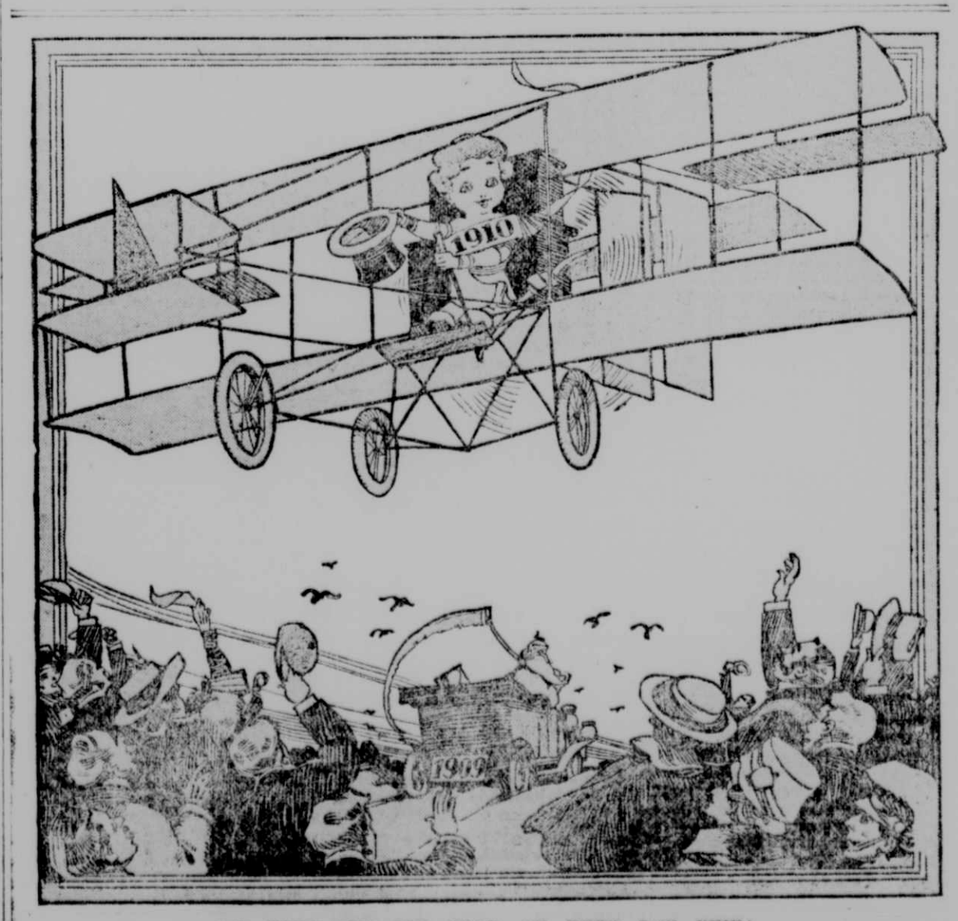
Spratt—Why, I can break all my New Year's resolutions without causing any comment in the family.

The New Year's Shooter.

This is the day when shooters shoot
And then go home and "resolute"
That next year surely, come what may,
They will not shoot on New Year's day.

"HERE'S WISHING YOU A HAPPY NEW YEAR!"

TO NINETEEN-TEN.



Child of eternity, child of the silence,
Fair New Year,
Wise with the wisdom sages have left thee,
Bend thine ear,
Lift up the veil that covers thy features,
Strange New Year,
Rainbow a promise over the darkness,
Lest we fear!

Bury our yesterday, foolish and empty,
Fathoms deep;
Leave the mound unmarked, untended,
Where they sleep.
Then shall the morrows find us valiant,
Scorning fear,
Meeting thy glance with glance undaunted,
Glad New Year!

TWELFTH NIGHT CAKE.

A Twelfth Night cake in England is as much a part of the holiday festivities as is the Christmas tree itself. On Twelfth Night various gayeties and revels are arranged, the cake being finally drawn in by the children on a decorated cart or borne aloft by the servants on a board trimmed with Christmas greens. A recipe for making the cake comes from England: Beat to a smooth cream two pounds of unsalted butter, then add two pounds of powdered sugar, a whole nutmeg grated and an ounce each of powdered cinnamon, ginger, mace and allspice. Beat this mixture ten minutes and add gradually twenty eggs, beating the cake after that for twenty minutes. Stir in, a little at a time, two pounds of flour, four pounds of currants, a half pound of bruised almonds and half a pound each of candied orange and lemon peel and citron, beating the cake lightly after each addition. Last of all add a claret glass of brandy. Line a large cake tin with well buttered paper and fill it three-quarters full of the dough, which will leave room for the cake to rise. Cover the top with the buttered paper, and if the oven bakes fast at the bottom put a tin under the cake to keep it from burning. It should bake for four and a half hours in a slow but well heated oven.

OFF WITH THE OLD YEAR, ON WITH THE NEW!

THE JOLLIEST SHOW IN ALL AMERICA.

By ROBERTUS LOVE.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

THE most remarkable circus in the world is the one that is given every New Year's eve in the New York Produce Exchange. The rich members of the exchange, who during the rest of the year are busy trading on the floor of the big building, knock off business for the afternoon and give up the floor to a circus performance for the delight of the poor children who live in the lower section of the great city.

The Produce Exchange stands close to the lower end of the island, on which the older part of New York city is built. This is not a residential section, being the area in which the wonderful skyscraper sky line of the city appears to the view of people a-sail on the bay or the rivers. Yet many families inhabit the older and shabbier buildings in the vicinity. Most of these families are quite poor and the children numerous. Santa Claus frequently forgets to visit them, but the children have their Christmas tree provided by the Produce Exchange men. A huge tree trimmed with candles, lanterns and all the finery of Santa Claus Land is lighted up for the children, while hundreds of baskets of luxuries and necessities are distributed.

Rows of seats arranged in a circle, tier upon tier, accommodate the delighted little ones. In the center is a real circus, with tanbark on the floor—same as Barnum's. Last New Year's eve a uniformed band of eighty-five pieces from Roman Catholic institutions in the neighborhood furnished all the music the children wanted and more than some of them cared for, inasmuch as the tots were there to yell with delight when the ringmaster, a member of the exchange, stepped into the ring, cracked his long whip and introduced the performers.

There were bareback riders, pony races, trained horses, trapeze performers, magicians, educated dogs, jugglers and—clowns! Of course there were clowns. What would a circus be without them?

NEW YEAR'S EVE.

ONE thing the old year's brought to me, an' that's a real good friend.
Who'd thought that Neighbor Gurley, now, could ever quite unbend?
Three years we've lived here side by side, the calendars aver,
An' not a word had we exchanged except "Good evenin,' sir!"

Well, I met him Chris'mas mornin' as we came along the street.
I was just a-reachin' my door an' he his. We chanced to meet.
So I tried him with a smile. Says I: "Well, neighbor, howdy do?
Merry Chris'mas, an' I'm thinkin' I've got Chris'mas gift on you!"

"HE GIVE MY HAND A SHAKE."

Thought a minute he'd 'a' fallen, the way his features twitched.
Then he give a hearty chuckle an' says he: "Well, I'll be switched!
Why, that takes me forty year back!" An' he give my hand a shake
Till my arm from wrist to shoulder for a good hour felt the ache.

So we chatted for a little, an' at last he says to me:
"I'm a pretty lonesome fellow. Can't you come an' dine with me?"
An' that evenin' I went over. (Susie's children had a "hop."
An' them young folks made a bedlam where I didn't care to stop.)

I'd a mighty pleasant evenin,' an' I found out—well, it's strange
How you can't size up a neighbor when you meet him just on 'change!
I've heard from other parties—he'd have never told himself—

GOV. CROTHERS NARROWLY ESCAPES BULLET IN STREET

Negro Fires at White Man Just As Chief Executive Is Passing.

While an enraged negro was tugging at the trigger of a 38-caliber revolver, the life of Gov. Austin Lane Crothers was in jeopardy for a short time yesterday.

The firing of a shot so close to the Governor gave rise momentarily to startling reports that his life had been attempted, that he had been wounded, and so forth. As a matter of fact the Governor was not shot at, and, according to his own version, he was not nearly shot.

Persons who were in the neighborhood when the firing was done, however, are authority for the statement that His Excellency had a very narrow escape, and consider it extremely fortunate that the poor marksmanship of the negro with the pistol who failed to hit the man he fired at did not result in the wounding of the Governor.

Clarence Demids, 17 years old, is the name of the negro. He was committed for court this morning in default of $2,000 bail by Justice Grannan of the Central district on the charge of assaulting and attempting to kill Edward Brockman of 108 South Ann street,

The Governor was walking along Hopkins place near Lombard street about 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and did not observe Demids and two white men engaged in an altercation on the sidewalk. He passed through the group and, although he remembers hearing raised voices, did not hear any of the argument.

Then the shot rang out. Demids had pulled the revolver from his hip pocket and had fired point-blank at Brockman. The bullet struck the wall of a brick building within a line of five feet from the Governor.

Demids took to his heels and was pursued by John F. Wasken of 1119 Pinknew place, William Scheuerholz of 116 East Cross street and Charles Warner of 126 North Arlington avenue. Patrolman John J. Burns of the traffic squad heard the shot and, leaving his post at Hanover and Baltimore streets, ran down Sharp street, arriving in time to see Warner, Scheuer... and Wasken seize Demids. ...was handed over to ... im to ...

While Governor Crothers resents the idea that he jumped—even cried out in amazement—he says he might have jumped and hollowed, too, if there had been any real excuse for so doing.

"There was nothing to this thing," said he. "I was simply on my way to the station when a pistol was discharged as a result, I am told, of a brawl."

PROFITABLE ADVERTISING

Benefits to Be Derived from Use of Opera House Curtains, Etc.

Merchants before the advent of newspapers were great advertisers, as is attested by the appearance of fences, sides of barns, boards nailed to trees, etc,, which are still to be seen, and some bear the marks. of having been recently put up Whether this form of advertising is profitable we leave our merchants to ponder. but ask that they read the following from Arbor State, published at Wymore, Nebr.:

Having learned that a number of the business firms of this city have taken advertising space on the new opera house stage curtain at prices ranging from $15 to $50 per space the Arbor State is constrained to pen a few lines upon the subject.

We hasten to congratulate these merchants upon being able to exploit their goods and business in so fashionable a manner at so nominal a cost. There certainly can be no more valuable an advertising medium extant than the theater curtain unless it is a race course score card or a railway time table.

We had thought we were making the Arbor State a pretty valuable advertising medium, but we guess we have not. True, we have been laboring long hard. Our whole family including the pup, has been alert to catch all the local news items, arrange them in a methodical order, and print them in an accumulated form for our readers and to make the paper valuable for advertising purposes. So dominant has been the desire among the force to make the paper a crediteble production each week and to appropriate each shining hour with that end in view that the office towel freely condescends to limber up so we can wipe the grime off our hands and features with the least loss of time possible. But it would appear from the liberal display of $50 ads that will ornament the new opera house curtain that our efforts are to a considerable extent amiss.

Then, again, we have our reasoning faculties on one-sided.

Perhaps the merchants have it all down pat when Mr. So-and-so goes to the eastern market for a week to buy a new fall stock of goods that the public will breathlessly rush up the opera house stairs and read about it on the new curtain.

That when he paints the front of his store building or puts in some new shelving people will tramp each others' corns getting up the stairs to read of the extensive improvements on the new opera house curtain.

Whenever any matters of a public nature or benefit to the town or community come up which need the impetus of publicity or editorial indorsement, quite naturally and to be sure, the masses will rush up to the opera house and read about it on the new curtain.

When the mayor of the city is to be "blowed up" for his misdeeds, or presented with a bouquet for difficult tasks faithfully and honestly performed, let us all adjourn and go to the opera house and read about it on the new curtain.

When the household of some estimable family of the community has recently been visited by the proverbial stork, don't make a mistake; go up to the opera house and read of the important event on the new curtain.

When the Early Breakfast" club gives a cooking demonstration out at the palatial home of Mrs. Gotplenty, every mother's son will grab his opera glasses and race to the opera house and learn the details of the occasion sandwiched between those $50 ads.

When Mary Jane, the good old soul whom everybody knows and loves for her piety and deeds of kindness, lays aside the cares of this life at the call of death, we will all procure a clean handkerand meander to the opera house and see portrayed on the beautiful curtain how peaceful and angelic was her departure to that brighter world.

O, what a glorious privilege it is to print a real live newspaper, in a real live town 52 weeks each year, where there are a dozen merchants whose stocks of goods run up into thousands of dollars, cough up $50 to have their names painted on a dingy old opera house curtaid and don't spend that much with the local newspaper in the course of five years.

MAKES A PLEA FOR THE STATE'S INSANE

Medical Journal Calls on the Legislature To Do Its Duty.

"Are the semi-civilized and barbarous methods at present employed in the care of the State's insane to continue, or is intelligent enlightenment about to assert itself by decreeing the banishment of the dark cells and their attendant horrors?" is the question asked by the Maryland Medical Journal in the current issue. The Journal, in an editorial, flays the awful conditions which now surround Maryland's feeble-minded charges. Unqualifiedly the paper announces its desire for State care of the insane and editorially continues by asking flatly for the attitude toward the question of the new Legislature which is about to convene.

The editorial continues by paying a tribute to the Maryland State Lunacy Commission and its indefatigable and tireless secretary, who has done so much toward spreading the gospel of enlightenment in connection with the indigent and weak-minded paupers of Maryland.

The editorial, in part, is as follows:

"The new Legislature is on the eve of convening for organization. What is to be its attitude toward remedying the present glaring defects in the care of the State's insane? Are the semi-civilized and barbarous methods now in vogue to survive, or is intelligent enlightenment about to assert itself by decreeing the banishment of the dark cell, the shakle and chain, the unhygienic quarters, the lack of employment, the solitary confinement? In other words is a mandate to be issued that these unfortunates be handled as other dependent sick—namely, humanely, hygienically and rationally?

"How can one expect a mind-sick man to improve if he be subjected to improper treatment, or worse, to such as would drive a healthy individual insane? Yet this has been the line of treatment of the insane in Maryland, and we have sat complacently by, never raising our voice to the true condition, and if we did, in such a low tone that it was drowned. Physicians have for a long time recognized that our insane have been and are being treated little better than beasts, and in some instances worse. They have complained about the barbarous and care bestowed upon the insane, but, alas! to no avail, because the politicians who could remedy the evil have other axes to grind; their patronage must shift to where the most returns can be accomplished; all money must be expended with this base idea in view; the insane cannot vote, therefore are of no earthly import or concern to Mr. Political Boss. All expenditure upon the mindless is, according to the professional politician, lost. Get the crazy out of the way, where they cannot be seen; let them survive as best they can; the sooner they die the better, losing sight of the fact that many are curable. Out of sight, out of mind, is their motto.

"From time to time the Journal has presented outlines of the magnificent work which the Maryland State Lunacy Commission and its active, indefatigable and energetic secretary, Dr. A. P. Herring, have set out to accomplish on behalf of these degenerates. Through public lectures, addresses before both city and county medical societies, by the employment of the stereopticon, the laity and the medical fraternity have been aroused to the enormity of the cruelty attached to the handling of the insane in our almshouses."

Dictators of Finance.

By the system of "interlocking boards of directors," as the New York World describes the methods of certain high financiers, a few New Yorkers control the three largest banks in the United States, the three largest insurance companies and the greatest of the industrial combinations—the Oil Trust and the Steel Trust. These financiers—J. P. Morgan, James Stillman, George F. Baker, Wm. Rockefeller, Wm. K. Vanderbilt and Henry C. Frick—constitute, in the opinion of our New York contemporary, the most powerful money trust in the world. They can make or break national prosperity and national credit, and affect vitally the policies of the national government.

This group of financiers, it is alleged, could call $200,000,000 of loans overnight and ruin any rival whom it desired to get out of the way. It could reduce credits to such a degree as to cause extreme financial stringency. It could make the money rate of interest what it pleased on call loans. It could cripple the financial operations of the government by refusing to purchase any bond issue. It could dictate the financial operations of great railroads and industrial corporations. It already dictates the terms and exactions of every company promotion that is important enough to be financed in Wall street.

The captains of finance who wield this enormous power have not, it is true, organized a money trust. Yet they accomplish everything that could be effected by incorporation. Concert of action and community of interest is their policy. Thus they dominate financial institutions, industrial corporations and great railroads. With practically unlimited capital, they are the commanding influence in the United States today, exercising dictatorial powers in their special field. The day is not distant when clear-thinking men of sober judgment must seriously consider whether the exercise of such enormous powers can be reconciled with the welfare of the nation and with government of, for and by the people.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1909.

THE WHOLE SHOW.

Maryland Democracy is being treated to an exhibition of the "Boss" business that is remarkable for its brazenness. "Sonny" Mahon, the successor of Rasin in Baltimore, has so much "Boss" business on hand that he has opened political headquarters in a leading office building in that city. The new Legislature is about to assemble at Annapolis and in former years the members of that body were able to choose their own officers and let the Governor attend to his own business. But not to be outdone by the honorable "Sonny" Mahon, "Boss" Crothers has usurped that duty and through his organ the Sun paper, has sent forth a decree that he and "Sonny" have selected Adam Peeples for Speaker and Arthur P. Gormen for President of the Senate. The people of Maryland had not the pleasure of the acquaintance of Mr. Peeples but the Governor says he is all right and the Governor of course ought to know as he is from Cecil. With Peeples in the Speaker's chair, Omar Crothers in the Senate, and Emerson, ditto, private secretary, the Governor is clearly in it as the whole show, as the real Boss at Annapolis. Mr. Joshua Frederick Cockey Talbott, who knows something of ruling the roost, was beaten to a frazzle before he got fairly started in his fight to land Benson for Speaker. But the Great Leader has spoken and the faithful have become as lambs led to the slaughter.

Great days in Old Maryland.

MARYLAND-WEST VIRGINIA BOUNDARY LINE.

THE decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Maryland vs. West Virginia over the old State line between Garrett and Preston counties may be expected in the near future, and at this time it is interesting to note that Preston county has come at last to recognize Maryland's claim.

The Kingwood Journal, the largest nswspaper in Preston county, came out last week with a map showing the state line where Maryland claims it should be and tacitly admitting that Preston county might as well prepare to have that part of her territory between the old so-called line and the new line taken away and given to Maryland.

Our Kingwood contemporary reflects the opinion of the leading politicians of the Preston county capital and they no doubt know that Maryland means business in this fight and will stand by her claims to the end. The territory claimed by Maryland and conceded to us by the Kingwood paper is a strip of large extent, inhabited by many prosperous farmers and having several good small towns. These will be added to Garrett county and will make a nice increase in our population and will swell our tax receipts considerably.

"CALL MOTHER."

The most pathetic story of the Christmas season comes from the hospital in McKeesport. A young man of 25 was stricken with typhoid fever and was sent to the hospital. In a little while his mother and father were stricken with the same disease and were taken to the same hospital, and the mother's sister was attending the young man. He was too ill to be told of his mother's illness and she too ill to be told of his condition. As he grew weaker and as he was entering the shadow he whispered,—"Auntie, call mother!"

Call mother! From the cradle to the grave, when trouble comes, the cry is, "Call mother!" And when they are able they always come and sacrifice themselves to the call. They even hear the call when they are not able to answer and suffer because they cannot answer every cry of their offspring. How like the "Word that was made flesh and dwelt among us" are the real mothers, "full of grace and truth!"

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND THE DUTY OF THE STATE.

The revolt against the "college-dominated" high school seems to be a little more vigorous at present than it has been for a long time. Or, if it is not more vigorous, it is raging in many places at once.

The complaint is the old one—namely, that high and elementary schools are run with a view to preparing for college pupils who not only do not go to college but who, except in the case of a very small percentage, have no idea of going. The number of those who enter college from the public schools is roundly estimated at 10 per cent. The objection is raised that we are running at enormous public expense schools for a small number, and who could be prepared for college at private schools, while overlooking the needs of the 90 per cent. to whose training schools should be particularly devoted. It will be agreed that a system which overlooks the needs of 90 per cent. of those which are handed over to it is wrong; but it is natural that old methods which have appeared to produce good results, and which at least have been in vogue the the world, as it is generally believed, is growing better, physically, mentally and morally, should have their upholders until there is evidence, not only that they are bad but that a better system has been devised.

On the other hand, the modern city has to deal with an ever-increasing class with which the problem of existence is the vital problem—a class which must feed their minds while their bodies lack nourishment, and which are certain to be forced out of school at an early age in order to fight for a livelihood. Anything that can be done to make life easier for this class ought to be done. But the schools have been teaching more and more essentials of proper living, the necessity of cleanliness and sanitation. By bringing physicians into the schools the State has been trying to prevent and to eradicate disease. In a dozen different ways it is seeking to help the individual. But as this work has progressed the desire has spread to put more and more on the State the burden of preparing the child to be a bread-winner, to guard his eyes, his teeth, his hearing and to feed him when he is hungry; to put the State more and more in the place of the parent. This is the attitude which a great many people object to seeing the State adopt until more necessity for doing so has been demonstrated.

Nor does this attitude mean throwing up one's hands in the face of a problem and admitting it is too difficult to solve. On the contrary, the advocates of vocational training are making headway. In the course of time, and of no very great time, they will have the benefit of proof of the pudding, and if it is good nothing is more certain than that there will be demand for more of it. The cities of this country are at enormous expense for their schools. They have millions of dollars invested in buildings, grounds and equipment. Their payrolls are tremendous and are steadily increasing. It is of the utmost necessity to get the best results from this lavish outlay. When divergence from the old system is proved to be wise there will be little difficulty in making proselytes. The objection is to "scrapping" it before the demonstration that there is something better to take its place is satisfactory.—Baltimore News.

MORE ELBOW GREASE NEEDED ON THE FARM.

Prof. Milton Whitney, chief of the United States Bureau of Soils, holds that the soils of this country are not wearing out, but are producing a greater yield per acre than ever before, also a greater yield per capita. He says James J. Hill is right in saying that our soils are not keeping up with the demands of the people for foodstuffs; but he does not deem it due to a falling off of productivity. He declares consumption is increasing and that we eat more per capita than we did fifty years ago. In other words, he conveys the idea that the public is insisting on a higher and more costly standard of living, consequently the drain on our agricultural production is intensified.

But Professor Whitney thinks the agricultural production can be greatly increased. He says agriculture in this country is in its infancy and that when we settle down to the real business of farming and get a thorough knowledge of the soil of each field, as the people of some European countries have, there will be fewer crop failures and the average productivity will be higher.

The soils of Europe, according to Professor Whitney, do not produce larger maximum crops than our own, but more of the people approach the maximum than in this country because of better farming methods and more careful study of the soil. He holds that there have never been greater opportunities offered for American farming than there are today, and especially in the East and South, where cheap productive soils await resettlement and reoccupation. His version of the situation is the strongest kind of a plea for more intelligent agriculture.

Out in Kansas City there is a restaurant called "The Yellow Pup," a place where you can get all you can eat for ten cents. When you are several meals behind schedule ten cents invested in a ham sandwich and a cup of coffee doesn't go very far, but at the "Yellow Pup" it goes a long way. You pay as you enter—ten cents. You take a platter and serve yourself. You have your choice of ten different kinds of meat. You are given a bowl of coffee. Then you sit down at one of the long tables, stacked with bread and supplied with butter, and begin operations under the Great Law of the place, which is emblazoned upon the walls thereof: "The Ceiling Is the Limit for Bread and Butter." Thus for a dime you fortify yourself against the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune. The "Yellow Pup" is not an eleemosynary institution. It's run for profit and gets it, 3½ cents on every meal, $50 a day. But though not a philanthropic concern, it serves to show what might be done in a philanthropic way in any city.

POSTOFFICES TO BE HELD BY GOOD SERVICE

Department Announces That Merit Rule Will Apply In All Cases.

That the Postoffice Department is disposed to more strictly enforce the merit system in the postal service is the information that is coming to the ears of members of Congress. The rule that if a postmaster who has served for a term or more wants a reappointment he will be given it, providing his service has been satisfactory to the department, is being rigidly enforced, according to postoffice officials.

The effect of this is to take the postoffices more and more out of the reach of the politicians and strip Senators and members of the House more and more of their prerogatives in regard to patronage.

An order of this kind has been in force for about five years, but is has not been lived up to in a great many cases. An influential Senator or Representative was able to have a friend put in as postmaster if he set about it. It appears, however, that now the lines are being drawn tighter.

An illustration of this was given recently when Senators Cummins and Dolliver took up with the Postmaster General the matter of appointments to postoffices in the Eighth Iowa district. This is the district which was formerly represented by Col. W. P. Hepburn, but is now represented by a Democrat, Representative Jamieson. The patronage is being disposed of by the Senators.

A lot of postmasterships will soon expire in that district and the Senators went to see Mr. Hitchcock to ascertain whether if they made recommendations they would be given weight. They were informed that the department was going to live up to the rule that men should be reappointed in case they had given effective and satisfactory service. It was added that in case a postmaster was not satisfactory and there was to be a change, then the recommendations of the Senators would be given weight.

The same rule, so the Postoffice Department insists, is to be applied generally through the country. It is given out by Postmaster General Hitchcock that impartial enforcement of this order will be made and that flesh will not be made of one case and fowl of another.

The Iowa Senators asked for a candid statement on this point and were told by the Postmaster General that it was his purpose to apply this rule generally.

Of course, the question might be raised whether the Iowa Senators, being insurgent, were being given colder comfort than some of the regulars, Senators Dolliver and Cummins were informed, however, that all were being treated alike in the matter.

The experience of the Iowa Senators is being told pretty freely about the Capitol and is exciting a great deal of interest among the members who have postoffices in their districts which they have been expecting to dispose of about as they considered it.

It can be said, despite the prevailing notion to the contrary, that plenty of members would be entirely willing to be relieved of the burden of making postoffice appointments. Some of the older and wiser ones among the politicians says they are a liability, not an asset.

GORMAN.

Plenty of snow and more still coming, and roads are drifted very much in places. The snow where it did not blow off is 22 inches deep.

Cross tie hauling has been the order of the day.

W. J. Wilson was on our streets one day last week.

J. M. White is hauling ashes from the tannery. Mr. White knows what is good for the land.

Oscar and Earl Roderick are spending the Christmas holidays with their parents near Medley, W. Va.

The students who attend the West Virginia Wesleyan University at Buckhannon from this vicinity, are at their homes spending the holiday vacation.

J. A. Chisholm, of Friendsville, was visiting his mother near here on Christmas.

Ernest Hilleary made a flying trip to Bayard on Christmas Eve.

Rev. Idleman did not preach at the Oak Grove church last Sunday afternoon, as announced, on account of the snow storm.

C. O. Rogers and family, of Davis, W. Va., were visiting friends in Ryan's Glade last Saturday and Sunday.

T. E. Shillingburg is on the sick list at this writing.

Dan Paugh, of Thomas, was visiting in this vicinity last Sunday.

Christmas has again passed by and its festivities have been greatly enjoyed by all. UNOME.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Christmas exercises were held in the M. E. church Friday evening and in the U. B. church, Loch Lynn, Saturday evening. They were both largely attended and the programs were well rendered.

The snow is about 18 inches deep generally and several feet where drifted. We could only get out of our houses Sunday after Mr. J. L. Eckard had been around with his snow plow. This was repeated Monday morning, making paths from the cottages to the church, stores and postoffice.

Our ice harvest has been interfered with by the heavy fall of snow, which sunk the ice and flooded it with about four inches of water and slush. Supt Davis, however, has a large force of men loading cars for the B. and O. company and filling the large ice house at the lake. There has already been stored more than enough for home consumption and the private ice houses have been filled.

Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Sperry spent Christmas in Baltimore with their children.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee N. Hayden are spending the holiday week in Westernport with relatives and friends.

A series of meetings will be held in the U. B. church, Loch Lynn, commencing next Wednesday night.

A watch night meeting will be held in the M. E. church Friday night, commencing at 10.30, and continuing until after 12 o'clock.

KURTZ CHAPEL.

After the visit of dear old Santa, whom we are all glad to have with us at Christmas time I will give you a few items.

Our Christmas entertainment was well attended and all seemed to enjoy the exercises.

Several of our young folks attended the Christmas entertainment at Short Run Friday evening. They had a pleasand time.

Mr. O. S. Moon has been visiting relatives in Keyser, W. Va.

Mr. Howard Glotfelty, of Alexander, W. Va., was calling at Mr. Henry Solomon's Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Elisha Harvey and Mr. and Mrs. Osborne Harvey were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Moon Saturday last.

Messrs Owen and Elwood Kidwell, of Cacapon, W. Va. are visiting their brother, Rev. J. E. Kidwell.

Mrs. Chas. Tasker and children are visiting relatives in this section.

Messrs. Boyd Moon and George Harvey were calling at J. B. Lipscomb's Sunday.

Mr. Thomas Wilson, of Short Run, was calling at James Lish's.

Mr. W. H. Stoyer and Miss Dessa Harvey were calling at Judge Moon's Christmas.

Mr. George Harvey, of Short Run, was calling at C. L. Moon's Saturday evening.

Misses Jane Hardesty and Arta Lish were pleasant callers at Judge Moon's Sunday.

Mr. Archie Holland, of Buckhannon, W. Va., was visiting Mr. and Mrs. Z. H. Moon last Sunday.

Rev. E. P. Idleman preached one of his most able sermons Sunday.

Mr. George Moon, of Kitzmiller, was the guest of Mr. George White Sunday.

A Happy New Year to all.

BITTINGER.

If the "goose bone" weather prophets, who predicted a mild and snowless winter, could see the huge snow drifts piled up in front of our doors and were forced to wade neck deep into the white piles, they would certainly make a New Year's resolve to get into a business in which they could succeed better.

Master George Reckner, of North Glade, after killing all the rabbits on the east side of Meadow Mountain is in this section this week showing his old chums how to catch the animals on the jump.

John H. Stark is confined to his home at this writing, by a slight illness.

Harry Shaw, who spent Christmas day as the guest of Miss Anna Wiley, was forced, by a storm, to continue his visit over Sunday, and on Monday morning the snow drifts were so deep and numerous that he was obliged to leave his sleigh and return to his home, at Jennings, on horseback.

Master Ray Engle, of Baltimore, is spending the holiday vacation with his grand parents at this place.

Charles Stark, of Chaffe, W. Va., is spending this week with his parents here.

The special Christmas service held in the Lutheran church at this place on Christmas eve was a very enjoyable affair and the yonug people who rendered the several parts of the program are to be commended for their untiring efforts as well as the delightful and appropriate manner of their excellent performance.

We extend our most cordial wishes to the editor and all the readers of THE REPUBLICAN for a full measure of happiness and all other good things throughout the New Year.

Uncle Billy Clark, out at Piney Run, came very near being burned out of house and home last Sunday morning. There are no chimneys in Uncle Billy's house; a stove pipe thrust through the roof has carried off the smoke ever since the little house was built. Last Sunday the pipe became red hot and set fire to the roof, and hadn't Tom Beeman seen the blaze Uncle Billy would have been homeless. Tom is Billy's son-in-law, and he wanted his father and mother-in-law to have a home of their own, and he got busy and fought the fire and saved the house, while Stonewall Green, another son-in-law, sat on his porch a few rods away—not fiddling, but whistling—and never helped a bit. The roof was damaged somewhat, and Uncle Billy, who dislikes new fangled contraptions, may be induced to build a chimney, which Stonewall Green says is the proper thing to do.—Lonaconing Star.

Order of Publication.

Alice Campbell and Robert Campbell, her husband, and Effie Guard, infant who sues by her next friend, Dorsey Guard, vs. William Guard, Catharine Hatfield and George T. Hatfield, her husband, and Annie Humberson and Frank Humberson, her husband.

No. 1637 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree for the sale of certain real estate in Garrett county, Maryland, belonging to the parties to this cause.

The bill states that on the 19th day of January, 1895, Jeremiah Guard and wife executed and delivered to Delilah Guard, Annie Humberson and Frank Humberson, her husband, Alice Campobell and Robert Campbell, her husband, Effie Guard, and William Guard and Catharine Guard, his wife, a deed for one hundred acres of land, situate in Garrett county, which deed recited and set forth the contribution of each of said grantees to the purchase money for said farm, as appears by reference to said deed, a certified copy of which, recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 28, folio 125, etc., is filed with the bill as a part thereof; that Newton Guard, mentioned in said deed, was the father of the said Alice Campbell, Annie Humberson, William Guard and Effie Guard, and had departed this life intestate prior to the execution of said deed, and that the said Delilah Guard was the widow of the said Newton Guard, and the mother of said grantees of Jeremiah Guard, and has since departed this life intestate leaving the said Alice Campbell, Annie Humberson, William Guard and Effie Guard as her only children and heirs at law; that the said Alice Campbell, Robert Campbell, Annie Humberson, Frank Humberson, and Effie Guard, who sues by her next friend, Dorsey Guard, are all residents of Garrett county, Maryland; that after the execution and delivery of the aforesaid deed, William Guard and Catharine Guard, his wife, were divorced, a vinculo matrimonii, in the State of Pennsylvania, where they were then residing, and thereafter, the said Catharine Guard intermarried with the said George T. Hatfield, who now resides in the State of Illinois, the said William Guard being a resident of the State of Pennsylvania; that said real estate is not susceptible of partition without material loss and injury to the parties entitled to interest therein, and that in order to make division of said interests, it will be necessary to sell said real estate and divide the proceeds thereof amongst the parties according to their several interests; the bill then prays for a decree directing a sale of said real estate, and that the proceeds be divided among the parties to this cause, according to their respective rights and interests, and for general relief.

It is thereupon, this 28th day of December, 1909, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett County, in Equity, that the plaintiffs, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 28th day of January, 1910, give notice to the said absent defendants of the object and substance of this bill, warning them to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor on or before the 15th day of February next, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

TRUSTEE'S SALE
OF VALUABLE
Real Estate
In Garrett County, Md.

Under and by virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, sitting in Equity, dated the 5th day of November, 1909, and passed in a cause standing as No. 1639 Equity on the Docket of said Court, wherein Mary Lohr and others are complainants and Peter Lohr and others are the defendants, the undersigned was appointed Trustee to make sale of the real estate in said cause mentioned and hereby gives notice that on

SATURDAY,
the 1st Day of January, 1910,

at the hour of 1 o'clock P. M., of said day in front of the National Hotel in the town of Grantsville, Maryland, he will offer at public sale to the highest bidder, the following described real estate situated in Garrett county, Maryland, about 2½ miles north of Bittinger on the public road leading from Bittinger to Grantsville:

1. All that part of a tract of land called "Palestine" containing 148¾ acres, more or less.

2. All that other parcel of land, adjoining the above tract, containing 1 acre, more or less, the above constituting the home farm of the late Eli Lohr.

About 60 acres of this farm is clear and under cultivation.

The timber upon said land with the exception of the sugar trees and about 2 acres of other timber, belongs to Jenning Brothers and will be excepted from this sale.

The other improvements consist of a new dwelling house, two stories high, containing 7 rooms and a good cellar; the outbuildings upon said farm are only ordinary.

Upon the farm is an excellent sugar camp in which about 500 sugar vesse's can be set, also two valuable orchards.

This property is underlaid with valuable seams of coal.

Terms of Sale, as prescribed by said decree—One half of the purchase money to be paid in cash on day of sale, and the balance in six months from the day of sale; the deferred payment to be secured by the note of the purchaser with security to the satisfaction of the trustee, and to bear interest from the day of sale, or the entire purchase money may be paid in cash at the option of the purchaser or purchasers.

Was Rough on the Duck.

THE problem of heating a home began in the days when the Aborigines rubbed two sticks together to produce fire. Since then, through the ages, man has been working on this problem and has evolved many solutions, incidentally resorting to many expedients to produce the desired results.

For example, in olden times, in Merrie England, where massive fireplaces were used to heat the great banquet halls, the fireplace flues were constructed in crooked fashion to induce draft. Sometimes they were so crooked that the diminutive chimney sweep was unable to make his way through them, and, in order to get rid of the soot and dirt produced by the coal and wood fires, there was resort to a cruel expedient.

A duck was taken from the barnyard, its feet fastened but its wings free, and it was then dropped down the chimney. The fluttering of the poor excited bird's wings dislodged the soot and dirt, and the chimney was cleaned. That was one of the details of househeating in those days.

In this day and age architecture has advanced so that such chimneys no longer are constructed, but even if they were—at least in this country—that cruel method of cleaning them would be unnecessary for the reason that the modern—the ideal fuel—now is natural gas, which is devoid of all soot and dirt producing qualities such as is common to all coal and wood, but, in addition, has the highly-prized characteristic of producing uniform heat.

This quality of uniformity in heat production is commented upon frequently in letters sent to us. One such letter is given by way of example. It is from Mr. Daniel Porter, of Frostburg, Maryland. Mr. Porter says:

"Prior to the installation of natural gas in my home, we paid for electric light $21 a year, and $33.25 for coal for a house of seven rooms, a total of $54.25.

"SINCE INSTALLING NATURAL GAS WE HAVE BETTER LIGHT AND MORE UNIFORM HEAT THROUGH OUR HOUSE. We have three fires and nine lights. My bills for natural gas for the year 1908 totaled $30.25, A NET SAVING OF $24 A YEAR BESIDES THE CONVENIENCE AND SAVING OF LABOR."

The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Copyright, 1908, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

"Your highness has but to say the word and I will undertake the pleasure of relieving you of this man's presence."

"Be still," she said. "Will you go?" to the prince.

"Presently. First I wish to add that your dear friend is both thick skulled and cowardly. I offered to slap his face a few nights ago, but he discreetly declined."

"I am calm," replied Hillard, gently releasing his arm from her grasp. He approached the prince, smiling, but there were murder and despair in his heart. "Had I known you that night one of us would not be here now."

"It is not too late," suggested the prince. "Come, are you in love with my wife?"

"Yes."

The bluntness of this assertion rather staggered the prince. "You admit it, then?" his throat swelling with rage.

"There is no reason to deny it."

"She is your"—

But the word died with a cough. Hillard, a wild joy in his heart, caught the prince by the throat and jammed him back against the rose satin panel. Hillard seized his sword arm and pinned it to the panel above his head. Again and again the prince made desperate attempts to free himself. He was soon falling in a bad way. He gasped, his lips grew blue and the whites of his eyes bloodshot. This man was killing him! And so he was, for Hillard, realizing that he had lost county m[illegible]he world worth living that part o[illegible]was first to recover. old so-called [illegible]d the combatants away and give[illegible]'s hand, the one Our Kingwo[illegible]ice's throat, and the opinion of [illegible]strong enough.

Merrihew—O'Mally! Quick! He [illegible]illing him!" she cried wildly.

The two finally succeeded in separating the men, and none too soon. A moment more and the prince had been a dead man.

La Signorina turned upon Hillard. "And you would have done this thing before my very eyes!"

"I was mad," he panted, shamed. "I love you better than anything else in God's world, and this man means that I shall lose you."

The prince lurched toward Hillard, but fortunately Merrihew heard the slithering sound of the saber as it left its scabbard. Merrihew with a desperate lunge stopped the blow. He flung the saber at O'Mally's feet.

"You speak English," said Merrihew in an ugly temper. "You may send your orderly to the Hotel Italie tomorrow morning, and your saber will be given to him. We can get along without you nicely."

The prince tore at his mustaches. "Sirs! To return to Florence with his saber was dishonor. He cursed them all roundly and turned to La Signorina.

"I am in the way here," he cried. "Listen. You shall remain my wife so long as both of us live. I had intended arranging your freedom once the estate and moneys were divided, but not now. You shall read my wife till the end of the book, for unless I meet you halfway the marriage contract cannot be broken. In the old days it was your conscience. The still small voice seems no longer to trouble you," turning suggestively to Hillard. "You are stopping at the Hotel Italie?"

"I am. You will find me there," returned Hillard, with good understanding.

"Good! Your highness, tomorrow night I shall have the extreme pleasure of running your lover through the throat." He picked up his cap and took his princely presence out of their immediate vicinity.

"It will do my soul good to stand before that scoundrel," said Hillard, stretching out his hands and closing them with crushing force.

La Signorina laid a protesting hand on his arm.

"I love you," he murmured as he bent to kiss her hand. "And it is not dishonorable for you to hear me say so."

"I forbid you to say that!" But the longing of the [illegible]orld was in her eyes as she looked down at his head.

"This is what comes of American girls marrying these blamed foreigners," growled the tender hearted O'Mally. "Why did you do it?"

"I am almost Italian, Mr. O'Mally. I had no choice in the matter. The affair was prearranged by our parents, after the continental fashion."

When Hillard and La Signorina were at length alone he asked, "When shall I see you again?"

"Who knows? Some day, perhaps, when time has softened the sharp edges of this moment. Tomorrow I shall write, or very soon."

"You will send for me?" with eagerness and hope.

"Why not? There is nothing wrong in our friendship, and I prize it. Promise."

"I promise. Goodby! For a little while I have lived in paradise. Wherever I may be, at the world's end, you have but to call me. In a month, in a year, a decade, I shall come. Goodby!" Without looking at her again he rushed away.

She remained standing there as motionless as a statue. He had not asked her if she loved him, and that was well. But there was not at that moment in all the length and breadth of Italy a lonelier woman than her highness the Principessa di Monte Bianca.

Meanwhile the prince, raging, mounted his horse. Eh, well! This time tomorrow night the American should pay dearly for it all.

And the woman—he could never understand her. But for her fool's conscience he would not have been riding the beggar's horse today. She was now too self reliant, too intelligent. She was her father over again, soldier and diplomat.

He was riding past the confines of the villa when a man darted out suddenly from the shadows and seized the bridle.

"At last, my prin[illegible]"

"Giovanni?"

Instinctively the prince reached for his [illegible]er, knowing that he had need [illegible] the scabbard was empty. [illegible] the folly which had made [illegible] Oddly enough, 'tis thought [illegible]back to the little casa in [illegible]hills. Bah! Full of courtesy [illegible]ring that one or the other [illegible]t leave this spot alive, he [illegible]ains horse, with purpose this [illegible] run his man down. But Giovanni did not lose his hold. Hate and the [illegible]arness of revenge made him strong.

"No, no!" he laughed. "She is dead, my prince. And I—I was not going to seek you. I was going to let hell claim you in its own time. But you rode by me tonight. This is the end."

The prince unhooked his scabbard and swung it aloft. But Giovanni was fully prepared. He released the bridle, his arm went back, and his knife spun through the air. Yet in that instant in which Giovanni's arm was poised for the cast the prince lifted his horse on its haunches. The knife gashed the animal deeply in the neck. Still on its haunches, it backed, wild with the unaccustomed pain. The lip of the road, at this spot rotten and unprotected, gave way. The prince tried to urge the horse forward. The [illegible] quarters sank, and the prince tried in vain to stop [illegible]. There came a crash, a cry, and horse and rider went tumbling down the gorge.

This man was killing him!

Giovanni trembled, and the sweat on his body grew cold. For several minutes he waited, dreading that there was no further sound. He sank to, mechanically for his knife, recovered it and then crept down the steep side of the gorge till he found them. They were both dead.

"Holy Father, thou hast waited seven years too long!" Giovanni crossed himself.

He gazed up at the ledge where the tragedy had begun. The cloud passed and revealed the shining muskets of two carabiniers, doubtless attracted by the untoward sounds. Giovanni stole over the stream and disappeared into the blackness beyond.

It was Merrihew who woke the sleeping cabby, pushed Hillard into a seat and gave the final orders which were to take them out of the Villa Ariadne forever. He was genuinely moved over the visible misery of his friend. When they arrived at the white hotel in the Borgognissanti Merrihew was glad.

At 9 in the morning Hillard heard a fist banging on the panels of the door.

"Open, Jack! Hurry!" cried Merrihew outside.

Hillard opened the door. "What's the trouble, Dan?" he asked.

Merrihew whispered, "Dead!"

"Who?" Hillard's heart contracted.

"The prince. They found him and his horse at the bottom of the gorge. The concierge says that there has been foul play—tracks in the dust, a strange cut in the neck of the horse and a scabbard minus its saber. Now, what the devil shall I do with the blamed sword?"

Dead! Hillard sat down on the edge of the bed. Dead! Then she was free, free!

"What shall I do with the sword?" demanded Merrihew a second time.

"Put it in the bottom of the trunk and leave it there till you land in New York. But the prince dead? You are sure?"

"Florence rings with the story."

And then Merrihew noticed. Hillard still wore his evening clothes and the bed was untouched.

"That's very foolish."

"Why, I couldn't have closed my eyes," replied Hillard.

"But won't she need you up there?" Merrihew was obviously troubled.

"If she needs me she'll send for me. I shall remain here and wait. She is free. Thank God!"

"Didn't Giovanni tell us that he had friends in Fiesole, near Florence, and that he was going to visit them?" asked Merrihew.

"Giovanni! I had forgotten. But what had my old valet against the prince?"

"Giovanni had a daughter," said Merrihew. "His knife left a scar on the man. The prince carried a long scar on his cheek."

Hillard began dressing in his day clothes, stopping at times and frowning at the walls.

At night the last of the American Comic Opera company straggled into the hotel. O'Mally, verbose as ever, did all the talking.

"You wouldn't know her," he said, referring to La Signorina, for they would always call her that. "When she heard of that duffer's death I swear that she believed you had a hand in it. But when she heard that the accident had occurred before you left the villa she just collapsed. The police were hunting for the missing saber. Of course we knew nothing about it," with a wink at Merrihew.

When the others were gone Hillard asked Kitty if she had any news.

"She said that she would write you and for you to remain here till you received the letter."

"Was that all?"

"Yes. Have you seen anything of that wretched man Worth, who is the cause of all this trouble?"

"No, nor do I care to."

Kitty and Merrihew went out together.

* * * * * * *

They were gone to America, and Hillard was alone. He missed them all sorely—Merrihew with his cheery laugh, Kitty with her bright eyes and O'Mally with his harmless drolleries. And no letter!

Daily he searched the newspapers for news of Giovanni. But to all appearances Giovanni had vanished, as indeed he had, forever out of Hillard's sight and knowledge.

The letter came one week after the departure of his friends. It was postmarked Venice. And the riddle was solved.

CHAPTER XIX.

THE LETTER.

My father was Colonel Grosvenor of the Confederate army during the civil war. On General Lee's staff was an Italian named the Principi di Monte Bianca. Rich, titled, a real noble, he was at heart an adventurer, a word greatly abused these inglorious days. My father was cut from the same pattern, a wild and reckless spirit in those crowded times. The two became friends such as you and Mr. Merrihew are. Their exploits became famous. My father was also rich and a man of foresight. His real wealth was in foreign securities, mines, oils, steel, steamships. When the war terminated the prince prevailed upon my father to return with him to Italy. Italy itself was in turmoil. Il Re Galantuomo, that Piedmontese hunter, Vittorio Emanuele, wished to liberate Venice from the grasp of Austria, to wrest temporal power from the Vatican and to send the French troops back to France. Well, he accomplished all these things, and both my father and the prince were with him up to the time he entered the Quirinal. After victory, peace. My father invested in villas and palaces and settled down to end his days in the Venetian palace on the Grand canal.

Then my father, still young, remember, fell in love with the daughter of a Venetian noble. It was a happy union. Shortly after the prince also married. He was, with the exception of my father, the most lovable man I ever knew—brave, kindly, impetuous, honorable, witty and wise. It does not seem possible that such a father should have such a son.

There came a great day. A young prince was born, and the rough king stood as his godfather. Later I added my feeble protest, at the cost of my mother's life. As I grew up I became my father's constant companion. We were always out of doors. By and by he sent me to America to school. I returned from America to enter a convent out of Rome and later went to Milan and studied music.

One fatal day the old prince and my father put their heads together and determined that this great friendship of theirs should be perpetuated. The young prince should marry the young signorina. They drew up the strangest of wills. Both men were in full control of their properties. There was no entailed estate such as one finds in England. They could do as they pleased. And this was before Italy had passed the law requiring that no art treasures should be sold or transported. Fortunately for me, my mother's property was considerable.

The impossible clauses in the joint will read that if we two young people declined the bargain the bulk of the estates should revert to the crown. Again, if we married and separated and were not reunited inside of five years the fortunes should become the crown's. If, having separated from my husband, either for just or unjust reasons, I should secretly or publicly occupy any villa or palace mentioned in the will it would be a tacit admission that I accepted my husband. Was there ever such an insane tangle kindly meant? We must marry; we must be happy. That our minds and hearts were totally different did not matter at all.

Time went on. The old prince died suddenly; his wife followed. And then my kind and loving father went the way. I was taken under the wing of a duchessa who was popular at court. At this period the young prince was one of the handsomest men in Europe. He was brave, clever and engaging.

On completing my education I decided to live in Rome. The old duchessa mothered the rich American girl gladly, for, though I was half Italian, they always considered me as the child of my father. I was presented at court. I was asked to dinners and receptions and balls. I was quite the rage because the dowager queen gave me singular attention.

The prince by this time seemed changed in some way. But I was blindly young. Often I noticed the long scar on his cheek. He had received it, he said, in some cavalry exercise.

Now, there was another clause in this will. It was the one thing which made the present life tolerable and possible to me. We were to be married without pomp, quietly, first at the magistrate's and then at the church. At last the day came.

"Because I love you!"

We passed through the streets to the magistrate's. I did not know then that I was not in love, that I was only young and curious. I threw roses to any who asked. The prince sat beside me in full dress uniform, looking very handsome and distinguished. The prince smiled, but he was nervous and not at ease. I thought nothing of this at the time. I believed his nervousness a part of my own.

The magistrate performed his part. Legally we were man and wife. We were leaving for the church when at the very doorway a handsome woman, sad eyed, weary, shabbily dressed, touched me on the arm.

"A rose, signora?"

I gave it to her, smiling pityingly.

"God pray," she said, "that this man will make you happier than he made me!"

"Let us be on!" said the prince eagerly.

"Wait!" I turned to the woman. "Signora, what do you mean by those words?"

"His highness knows." She pointed to the prince, whose face I now saw, strangely enough, for the first time. It was black with rage and ugliness.

"What has he been to you?" I demanded.

She answered. I understood. In that moment I became a woman without illusions. Without looking at the prince I entered the carriage and closed the door in his face. He stormed; he lied. I was of stone. He turned upon the poor woman and struck her in the face. Even had I loved him that would have been the end of the romance. I drove home. There would be no wedding at the church that day. There was a great scandal. Every one took up the prince's cause, with the exception of the king.

The prince was almost bankrupt. He had squandered his all. He had sold to usurers half of the fortune he expected to get after marrying me. He had not the slightest affection for me. He was desperate and wanted the money. How old and wise I became during that ride home from the magistrate's! I vowed he should never have a penny. It should all go to the crown.

When at length he found that I was really serious he became base in his tactics. He was the one who was wronged. He gave life to such rumors among those I knew that soon I found doors closed to me which had always been open. No Italian woman could see the matter from my point of view. I was an American for all that my mother was a Venetian, therefore I was wrong.

There! That is all. There is no more mystery concerning Sonia Hilda Grosvenor.

And so the letter ended. There was not a word regarding any future meeting. There was nothing to read between the lines. A great loneliness surged over Hillard. Was this, then, really the end? No! He would wait here in Florence till the day of doom. He would waste no time in seeking her, for he knew that if he sought he would not find.

Day after day dragged through the hours, and Florence grew thinned and torrid. Sometimes he rode past the Villa Ariadne, but he never stopped.

It was in the middle of June that one afternoon the concierge handed him a telegram. It contained but three words:

"Villa Serbelloni, Bellaggio."

The Villa Serbelloni, now a hotel, stands on a wooded promontory among the Alps and between the lakes, at Bellaggio, and all day long the warm sunshine floods its walls and terraces and glances from the polished leaves of the tropical plants.

The 6 o'clock boat from Como puffed up noisily and smokily to the quay, churning her side paddles. Hillard stepped ashore impatiently. What a long day it had been! How white the Villa Serbelloni seemed up there on the little hilltop. He gave his luggage to the porter from the Grand and followed him on foot to the hotel. He dressed quickly, and in less than an hour he stepped forth from the gardens and took the path up to the villa.

Afar he saw a table spread under the great oak. A woman sat by it. It was still daylight, and he would have known that head of hair among the ten thousand houris of heaven. She did not rise, but she extended her hand, a grave inquiry in her slumbrous eyes. With equal gravity he clasped the hand, but held back the impulse to kiss it. He sat down opposite her and, smiling, whimsically inquired:

"Now, where did we leave off?"

At first she did not understand.

He enlightened her. "I refer to that Arabian Nights entertainment in New York. Where did we leave off that interesting discussion?"

She smiled brightly. "We shall take up the thread of that discourse with the coffee."

"Why not countermand the order for dinner? I am not hungry."

"But I am," she replied. She was wholly herself now. The tact with which he began his address disembarrassed her. For two days since she dispatched the telegram she had lived in a kind of ecstatic terror. She had even regretted the message once it was beyond recall. "I am human enough to be hungry sometimes." She summoned the waiter.

The dinner was excellent, but Hillard scarcely knew what this or that plate was. And when the waiter brought the coffee and lingered for further orders it was Hillard who dismissed him rather curtly.

He said musingly: "We had agreed that it would be best never to meet again, that to keep the memory of that night fresh in our minds, a souvenir for old age, it were wisest to part then. Well, we can keep the memory of it for our old age. It will be a little secret between us, and we shall talk it over on just such nights as this."

He reached for her hand, which lay upon the cover, but without apparent notice of his movement she drew it back. A flash of pain crossed Hillard's face.

"I have waited patiently for weeks."

She faced him with an enigmatical smile, lighted a match, blew it out and drew a line across the center of the table.

He laughed. "What! Again?"

"Observe."

As a rejoinder he smoothed out the telegram she had sent to him. "Why did you send this to me?"

Her lips had no answer ready.

"There can be but one reason," he pursued.

"Friendship."

The beginning of the night was cool, but the fire of the world's desire burned in her cheeks, and she was afraid. She stepped to the railing, faced the purpling mountains and sang "Die Zauberflote." Hillard dared not touch her till the last note was gone.

"I did not come here because of friendship," he said. "Only one thing brought me—love and the hope of love."

She stared at him, her hand at her throat.

Then he took her in his arms suddenly, hungrily, even roughly. "You are mine, mine, and nothing in the world shall take you from my arms again, Sonia."

She pressed her palms against him and stood away. She looked bravely into his eyes now.

"I sent the message because I wanted you, because I am tired of lying to my heart, because I have a right to be happy, because—because I love you! Take me and oh, be good and kind to me, for I have been very lonely and unhappy. Kiss me!" with a touch of the old imperiousness.

She clasped him fondly to herself.

"See Naples and die," she whispered, "but the spirit will come to Bellaggio."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson I.—First Quarter, For Jan. 2, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. iii, 1-12. Memory Verses, 2, 3—Golden Text, Matt. iii, 3—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

We spent last week in a part of Matt. ii, and now we are to have a whole year in Matthew's gospel, with one or more lessons in every chapter but one. The consummation of the Bible story is the kingdom for which we pray when we say, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth, as in heaven." "A new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." Matthew is peculiarly the gospel of the kingdom. In chapters i and ii we have the genealog[illegible] and the birth of the King, the adoration of the men from the east, the sojourn in Egypt and the return to Nazareth and the massacre of the babes at Bethlehem for His sake, the first martyrs for Him. In Matt. i, 1, He is the son of David, the son of Abraham, and therefore in Him all the promises to Abraham and to David shall be fulfilled, all that was promised them concerning the land and the throne at Jerusalem. He will be first King of the Jews and then King of all nations, King of kings and Lord of lords, reigning in righteousness. Isaiah, who foretold so much about the kingdom (see ii, 4, 11, 17; ix, 6, 7; xi, 1-10; xxiv, 23; xxxii, 1, 17; xxxv, 1-10, et al.), foretold also of one who should prepare the way before Him (xl, 1-5). See also Mal. iii, 1. The same Gabriel who appeared to Daniel and told him of the kingdom told Zacharias that his son would go before the Messiah in the spirit and power of Elijah (Luke i, 17). This wonderful child of Zacharias and Elizabeth was in the deserts till the day of his showing unto Israel, and at the appointed time the word of God came unto him, and he went forth preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins (Luke i, 80; iii, 2, 3). He was truly "the Lord's messenger with the Lord's message" (Hag. i, 13), and in Mal. iii, 1, the Lord calls him "My messenger." All that is required of a messenger is the faithful delivery of the message, the one sending the message being responsible for the results. What a comfort to such a messenger are such words as these: "I will be with thy mouth and teach thee what thou shalt say." "Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth" (Ex. iv, 12; Jer. i, 9).

The first word from Elijah is, "The Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand" (I Kings xvii, 1), and the angel said, "I am Gabriel, that stand in the presence of God" (Luke i, 19). John [illegible] with a scholar consciousness [illegible]e was filled with the Holy Spirit from his birth (Luke i, 15). How great is the need that men should repent, for God now commandeth all men everywhere to repent because the day of judgment and the Judge are appointed (Acts xvii, 30, 31). The woes that are coming on the earth and the vials of His wrath are to the end that men may repent (Rev. ix, 20, 21; xvi, 9, 11). The kingdom was preached as being at hand by John and Jesus and the twelve and then seventy, and it was at hand and would have then been set up if Israel had received her King, but they would not have Him and determined to kill Him, and so He told them plainly before He was crucified that the kingdom would be postponed till His return (Luke xix, 11-13). The age of the mystery, or the time between His rejection and His return, is fast closing, the kingdom is again at hand, and it becomes us all who believe in Him to prepare the way of the Lord by preaching the gospel everywhere and calling upon men to repent. The things of this age should be as unattractive to us as they were to John, and food and raiment should be wholly secondary. If we seek first the kingdom these things are made sure to us (Matt. vi, 33), and all believers should be "fellow laborers unto the kingdom" (Col. iv, 11). As John magnified the Lord, told of His coming and kingdom and urged men to prepare for Him multitudes flocked to him and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins, but no man ever spake more plainly to professed followers than John did to these. He told them that if their repentance was real they must prove it by works of righteousness which all could see, for unless there was good fruit there would most surely be the burning. He told them that his baptism with water was to be followed by a baptism with the Holy Ghost and with fire from Him who would follow him and whose way he was preparing. He told them also of a harvest time when the husbandman would gather the wheat into His garner, but burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire. All who hear the gospel and profess to believe it are either wheat or chaff, wheat or tares, and it will be for all either the kingdom or the everlasting fire (Matt. xxv, 34, 41, 46). While those words just referred to have a special application to a special judgment, there is a principle in them which applies to all believers and unbelievers. In Matt. xiii, 40-43, our Lord Himself speaks of the righteous who will shine forth as the sun in the kingdom and the tares which will be burned in the fire. It is awfully solemn to hear Him say that in that day He will have to say to some professors: "I never knew you. Depart from Me, ye that work iniquity" (Matt. vii, 21-23). May we be faithful witnesses, fruit bearing branches of the True Vine.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements. These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

NEW BANK LAWS FOR THE STATE

Recommendations by Commission Suggest State Banking Department.

In a report which was submitted to Governor Crothers in Annapolis, important changes in the state banking laws are recommended by the commission which was appointed by the Governor to consider these laws, and to suggest such changes as were deemed advisable. The commission consists of Senator William B. Slay, of Kent county; Alexander Neill, a Hagerstown banker; Joshua W. Miles, president of a bank at Princess Anne; William Ingle, vice president and cashier of the Merchants' National Bank of Baltimore; William M. Hayden and Wilton Snowden, also of Baltimore, and former Senator Geo. L. Wellington, of Cumberland.

The commission will urge upon the legislature the necessity of the enactment of the bill which it has prepared and which has the support of almost all of the national and state banks and other banking institutions of the state. During the past two sessions of the legislature, efforts have been made to secure favorable action upon bills designed to improve the banking system of the state and throw additional safeguards around banking, but the efforts have not been successful because of a misconception of the objects in view. Former Congressman Joshua W. Miles and Mr. Henry B. Wilcox, of Baltimore, have worked hard for the enactment of the needed laws, and will renew their efforts at the coming session of the legislature.

In the bill as drafted by the commission it is proposed to create the office of bank commissioner, to be appointed by the Governor and to receive an annual salary of $3,000, to be paid out of the receipts of his office. There will be one deputy commissioner on an annual salary of $2,400. There is provision for the appointment of the necessary clerks. The commissioner or deputy commissioner will be required to examine each banking institution of the state other than national banks at least once a year.

PEARY WILL HUNT FOR THE SOUTH POLE

Sends Word to Brussels That He Will Undertake the Task.

WASHINGTON, Dec., 23.—Commander Robert E. Peary will seek the South Pole. This is the assurance made today by the com-

"A year ago last May or June" Commander Peary said, "I sent to the International Polar Society at Brussels a statement that, after I returned from the expedition upon which I was then about to sattt, I would be willing to promote and organize an expedition to find the South Pole.

"I am still of the same mind. I would be only to glad to participate in an Anarctic expedition, in which the equipments and experience of my North Polar dashes would be of service."

Asked whether there was at present any American South Polar party forming, Commander Peary declared that so far as he knew there was not. He intimated however, that immediately after he had completed his magazine work and wound up his affairs here, he would himself organize a hunt for the bottom of the world.

THE BROKEN DEADLOCK.

And a Telephone Call That Was Canceled.

By ANNIE HINRICHSEN.

[Copyrighted, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

The man looked across the table at her. In his eyes were surprise and amusement.

"I don't know you," he smiled. "Haven't the slightest idea who you are. But you are the most charming young woman I have ever met."

The girl laughed softly and delightedly. "It's good not to hear the inanity, 'You haven't changed a bit in the last five years; you're just the same.'"

She held her slender, straight, young figure with military rigidity.

"You're not the same," he insisted. "You're altogether different. The young woman journalist dining with me tonight is a brand new person, bearing, as a means of attracting my attention in a proper manner, the name of a girl I used to take to picnics in a little fresh water town."

HE LAUGHED HAPPILY AND DREW HER HANDS UP TO HIS LIPS.

"Middleford—dear little old town. I haven't been back to it— Bob, look—the fourth table to your right."

"Who are they? Oh, I see—those of them is Dick Huston."

"And the one at his left is Martin Small, and the baldheaded one is John Edwards."

"A distinguished party."

"A most amazing combination—three official enemies dining together a hundred miles from where they are supposed to be. It means something."

"The election of a United States senator."

"Probably."

"Can you pick the winner?"

"If I can talk to Dick an hour I'll know the winner."

"We are not interested in United States senators and legislative deadlocks and political bosses tonight."

She spoke impatiently. "I want to know why those three men are together. The legislature meets again tomorrow after a week's adjournment. Something is being planned by that party which will break the long deadlock. They are not together for social purposes. Dick hasn't seen us. We'll go into the hotel lobby, and you must leave me. Go upstairs to the parlor and wait for me."

"But, Marion"—

"This is business, Bob. Will you do as I say? We'll talk later."

For an hour and a half he waited. Then she came, hurrying.

"I have it. It's done. Come into the alcove, and I'll tell you about it.

"If their plans don't miscarry the next senator will be—guess—Governor Greenwood.

"He told me everything. I've put in a long distance call for our office. It's a big story, and our paper will have it in time for the early edition.

"Dick says the deadlock will be broken tomorrow. For seven weeks Judge Allerton has been within ten votes of an election. Small controls the men who are supporting Allerton. Edwards controls fifteen votes, which he has refused to give to Allerton or any other man whom Small favors. But both want Governor Greenwood out of the state. The internal improvement commission is to be appointed, and there will be a lot of graft in it for whoever the governor appoints. Governor Greenwood hates both Small and Edwards and won't give them or their friends a chance at the money the commission will have to disburse. Small and Edwards have agreed to bury their differences and secure for themselves the control of the commission. They will unite their votes, elect Governor Greenwood to the senate, remove him from state to federal politics and have as governor a man whom they can control. Dick Huston, the lieutenant governor, will succeed Greenwood, and Small and Edwards will have the spending of the commission funds.

"And I've secured the story for my paper. It's the biggest surprise in the political history of the state."

"Dick gave you permission, I suppose, to use this story."

"No. He does not know I am working on a paper. I have not seen him for years. He was enthusiastically glad to see me and a little excited with cocktails and prospective greatness."

"If this story is published tomorrow morning what effect will it have?"

"There will be no election. Small, Edwards and Dick will abandon their scheme and deny the story; public opinion would be too strong against them. Our paper is fighting for Judge Allerton. He is its heaviest stockholder."

"If you telephone your editor, Dick will not be governor, will he? He will lose, as many a man has lost, because he trusted a woman."

"But my paper"—

"What about yourself?"

"This is my work—my profession"

"When you were a little girl you were the prettiest, sweetest little girl in Middleford. Dick Huston was the worst boy in town. Do you remember? There was only one person who ever had a good influence over him, and that was you. Little as you were, you made him quit swearing and beating small boys. He has not forgotten what you were to him then. A man holds in his heart always through the cruelest of life's disillusions the pure, innocent child he first loved. She belongs to the time of dreams, a state of idealism we once lived in, but from which most of us have departed. Dick had a lot of sentiment. He is about to attain the highest place in the state and he is feeling very deeply. He talked to you tonight because you were the dream girl"—

"Dick has no conscience, no political honor. He is a bribe giver and a grafter. I have my fight to make—a hard, unfair one. Why shouldn't I use this opportunity to make good? No mercy and little justice has been shown to me. I'm feeling things, too—more things than Dick is. I'm feeling five years of poverty and loneliness and hurts and disillusionments and slavish hard work. I look successful. I wear the clothes, and I've learned the manner. But it's a bluff. Some day it won't be; some day it will be real. I want success. I intend to have it. I'm only an assistant society reporter, sent down here to write up a state meeting of woman's clubs because the regular reporter is ill. This story will throw me ahead—years beyond assistant society scribbling"—

She stopped abruptly, then went on in a gentler tone:

"Bob, I used to envy you, and now I do more than ever. You always had the best of everything—new shoes and such nice hobbyhorses. Life has gone on so easily for you. You inherited your father's money and prestige, and success came ready made, gilt edged and tied up with a pink ribbon."

"Dick has never married. You can be the wife of the governor of the state."

"The wife of a moral degenerate—a boodler"—

He laughed happily and drew her hands up to his lips. "Oh, sweet souled, contradictory child, cut out and come home with me! I want you"—

"I won't. The hardest part of my struggle is past, or will be when this story reaches our editor. You think I'm doing wrong in taking this opportunity. If I give it up you will assume the responsibility of my future. Is that what you mean? You were always a sentimentalist, Dick, and the truest, best— But I shall stay and fight it out and succeed. I shall use Dick's story and take the benefit. I won't go home with you to be lazy and comfortable and good and happy."

"Happy," he remarked to the hands he still held against his face. "Happy"

The curtains of the alcove parted.

"Lady," announced a bellboy, "central has your party on the line."

"Tell central—tell central," she began, "the call is—the call is canceled."

Shaking a Carpet.

"There's nothing the matter with this carpet, my dear," remarked Niggard to his wife, who was cleaning house and said she couldn't make the place look nice unless there was a new floor covering to the front room. "All it needs is a good beating," he continued.

After beating a merry tattoo on the carpet with a stick out in the back yard for half an hour Niggard, with an exultant expression on his face, called to his wife:

"Come here, my dear. Why, it looks just as good as a new one."

"I don't see how you can say such a thing," replied his wife, with tears in her eyes. "It's just as faded as it ever was, and you've only made more holes in it."

"Do you mean to say I don't know how to shake a carpet?" demanded Niggard, his vanity touched.

"I do," replied his better half in a tone that left no doubt what the result would be. "You are going to shake that old carpet for a new one."

The Bishopstrow Belle.

The famous Beau Nash was at one time extremely fond of a beautiful girl called Juliana Papjoy, sometimes known as the Bishopstrow belle. She used to ride about the streets of Bath on a fine gray horse, carrying a whip with many thongs, a fad which gained for her the title of Lady Betty Besom. Juliana was very kind hearted, and during the last five years of the beau's life she nursed him devotedly. After his death she vowed that she would never again sleep in a bed and took up her abode in a large hollow tree, where she lived for many years, earning a scanty livelihood by selling herb medicines and fetching and carrying. At last Juliana became very ill, and, knowing she could not possibly recover, she felt an intense longing to die in her old cottage home at Bishopstrow. More dead than alive, she set out on this last journey and managed to reach the house where she was born in time to die there.

CHRISTMAS DAINTIES.

How Plum Pudding Had Its Origin. Symbolism of Yule Babies.

There seems little doubt that porridge (and not pudding) was the older and more correct designation of this time honored delicacy. The word pudding was formerly used in the sense of stuffing (or forcemeat). Porridge, on the other hand, was used in the sense of our present day pudding. When Shakespeare speaks of "porridge after meat" he undoubtedly means "pudding after meat." And in Sheppard's "Epigrams" (published 1651) we read, "No matter for plomb porridge or shred pies." Mr. F. H. Ditchfield says: "The plum pudding is not older than the early years of the eighteenth century and appears to be a 'house of Hanover' or 'act of settlement' dish. The prerevolution or Stuart preparation of plums and other ingredients was a porridge or pottage and not a pudding and was made with very strong broth of shin of beef."

Christmas plum puddings have of late years become the toys of fashion. In the good old days, when the yule log crackled in the spacious fire grate of the rich and poor and when snow actually fell at Christmas time, people were well content with plain homely plum puddings topped with dancing spitfire, but custom has changed with the times, and the present generation (or at any rate a part of it) requires its Christmas puddings enriched with jewelry or gold coins. This innovation commenced about 1855, and in the year 1859 it was quite a popular institution, and various London firms made plum puddings containing surprises from a bone button to a diamond ring. Diamond rings, gold thimbles, half sovereigns and sovereigns are now, it is stated, frequently placed in plum puddings which are intended as presents. In 1899 the demand for Christmas puddings from all parts of the world was so great that one firm of makers made 84,000 of an average weight of seven pounds each.

Yule babies, Yule doughs or pop (dollypop) ladies. A custom existed in some parts of giving sweetmeats of a special kind to children at Christmas. These tasty morsels in the shape of a doll—eyes, mouth and all—were made of dough and currants. They were flat cakes about the size of a hand, roughly shaped in the figure of a woman with the hands crossed over the breast, and in the crossed arms was a smaller figure representing a child, the features being rudely suggested by means of currants. There can be no doubt that this sweetmeat, which was made and given to children only at Christmas, represented the Blessed Mary and the Holy Child, and pleasing way of bringing the mind of the children to the fact and figure of Christ.

How to Prevent Eye Scars.

Often in playing a child will run against some object which will cut the eye, and as a bruise on the eye is only more disfiguring but more painful than one anywhere else on the body, it is well to know what to do for it. Immediately after the eye has been struck with enough force to make it black, apply a cloth wrung out of water as hot as can be stood for twenty minutes, and the blood which has collected and clotted will become thin and pass off to its proper channels. A bruise on any other part of the body may be treated likewise.

How to Make Turkey Toast.

If you have any more of the white meat left over than you care to serve sliced cold a very dainty luncheon, tea or breakfast dish may be prepared as follows: Cut up the small dice, measure and add half the quantity of button mushrooms (canned) and cut in half. Moisten with bechamel sauce, season with salt and pepper and heat over hot water a few minutes without stirring. Have ready on a heated platter rounds of triangular slices of nicely toasted bread. Heap the mixture on the toast and serve at once.

How to Develop the Arms.

An exercise which develops all the muscles from the shoulders to the finger tips is the corkscrew movement. Stretch one arm at a time up over the head and, beginning with the hand, twist the muscles, starting at the shoulder. This strengthens and develops all the muscles. It produces a sort of corkscrew or spiral curve that is beautiful. This exercise makes the arms graceful. A certain famous actress who has classically perfect arms keeps them so by this method.

How to Fry Scallops.

Select scallops with a yellowish instead of the white color. The latter were soaked in soda water to bleach them and make them swell. Rinse them quickly in cold water and dry them well. Dip them in a cooked or bottled salad dressing, roll them in bread or cracker meal and fry, preferably in deep fat or oil. Serve these with slices of broiled bacon and a sauce tartare.

How to Pasteurize Milk.

Place a pan of cold water on the stove and put a vessel containing the milk in the pan. As soon as the water begins to boil take it off. Add a small teaspoonful of soda to each quart of hot milk. Put the milk in a bottle and put in a cork. Milk treated in this way will keep sweet in hot weather for twenty-four hours.

How to Treat Burns.

Carron oil, a mixture composed of equal parts of limewater and raw linseed oil, is an excellent remedy and can be used with perfect safety. It should be applied liberally and covered with cotton batting (not absorbent cotton).

THE GRANGE LEADERS

Farmers of the Country Must Come to the Front.

Organization Necessary For Their Material Welfare—They Must Take Their Rightful Places In the Government.

[From the Lewiston (Me.) Journal.]

The grange today is the most powerful organization in the country. Its influence extends into every section, and as a factor in the education of the masses it has never had an equal. In this respect it stands by the side of the public school, only with a broader outlook and wider sweep of horizon. Its membership includes the best blood among the farming classes, and this has a more significant meaning when we consider that the rural telephone, trolley car and free postal delivery have practically wiped out the distinction between country and city life. It means that today the average farmer is fully the peer in intelligence and scope of capacity of the business or professional man. It means that he is a man of education and general culture as well as a tiller of the soil. It means in fact that he is a man in all that name implies and therefore fully capable of being a leader among men.

This great change has all been brought about during the past few years. A generation ago and only the weakest mentality in the farmer's family was selected to follow in the footsteps of the father. The brighter boys were allowed to go into other sections of the country, there to carve out their fortune as opportunity might offer. The weakling remained at home and succeeded in the ownership of the old farm.

All this is now changed. The agricultural college with its experiment station has raised farming to the dignity of a profession. To now succeed as a tiller of the soil the man must not only be well educated, but he must also have fine executive capacity. Extensive farming is the order of the day. No laggard has an [illegible] modern farm, and such are being [illegible] business.

In this great agricultural [illegible] borne a promi[nent] [illegible] their respective [illegible] attributed their full [illegible] setting of society. The [illegible] men of keen intelligence [illegible] and most excellent judgment. Such men are always natural leaders and on all moral questions their influence has been undisputed.

On the other hand, it is equally disputed that in all matters pertaining to governmental, state or municipal leadership their influence has been practically nothing. They have stood back and allowed the village and city lawyers to take control of their affairs and make all the laws. Organized through the grange for action on moral questions, they have remained unorganized in all that pertains to their material welfare. This is the one weak spot in the grange today, and it is here that the order needs the greatest strengthening. There is no good reason why the farmer should be compelled to pay the merchant and the professional man whatever price they choose to place upon their goods and their services, while he is compelled to take whatever they may choose to give for the products of his farm. There is no equity in such a system, but for this condition no one is more to blame than the farmer himself.

PARCELS POST NEEDED.

New York's State Master Says This the Most Important Question.

[Special Correspondence.]

If there is one question more important than another in national legislation to the people of the United States and that the grange should strive for it is the enactment of a parcels post system for the whole country. I know of no other matter that would be of so much benefit to the people and I firmly believe would be of great profit to the postal department.

There seems to be a sentiment among country merchants that it would be a detriment to their business. This I do not believe would prove true, for with a reasonable parcels post rate and the fact that merchandise could be sold at a lower price people living in the country should be disposed to purchase of local merchants instead of sending long distances for their goods. A wholesale merchant told me not long ago that if there was a parcels post system, doing away with the exorbitant express charges, he could sell his goods at from 10 to 15 per cent less than present prices.

NAMES ON THE DEATH ROLL.

Discovery of the North Pole—Items of Miscellaneous Interest—Destruction by Accidents, Shipwreck, Storm and Flood—Sporting Events. A Chronological Review.

The record breaking year 1909, which saw the discovery of the north pole, was comparatively free from great disasters so far as the United States is concerned. Outside of the Cherry mine horror, the sinking of the steamship Republic and the usual fires and floods, nature dealt leniently with this country, but in the world at large added the earthquake in Persia, the flood at Monterey, Mexico, and some minor catastrophes to her book of death.

By far the greatest event of the last twelve months was the discovery of the north pole. On Sept. 1 Dr. Frederick A. Cook came out of the north and announced that he had reached the goal on April 21, 1908. Six days later Commander Robert E. Peary emerged with the news that he had made the discovery on April 6, 1909. Peary's papers were approved by the National Geographic society, but doubt was expressed as to Cook's claims. Several months before the coming of Peary and Cook Lieutenant Shackleton returned to tell of a dash to within 111 miles of the south pole.

Other important events of the year were the inauguration of President ...ft, the departure of Theodore Roose... on a hunting trip in Africa, the ...e of the Payne-Aldrich tariff ... 13,000 mile tour of Mr. Taft ...ry, the most romantic ...s the meeting with ... borders of Mex... ...mpton Roads of ...attleships after ...world and the ...States circu... ...rd Oil tru... ...gn lands the occurr... ...storic interest were the ... Count Zeppelin with his dirigible, ... which he made various long flights and once carried twenty-seven passengers, and the flights of the Wright brothers, including the rounding of the statue of Liberty and Grant's tomb at New York and the high ascension of 1,600 feet in Germany.

As a memorial year 1909 eclipsed all others owing to the galaxy of great men born 100 years before. Centenaries widely observed included Lincoln, Darwin, Tennyson, Poe, Gladstone, Fitzgerald, Holmes, Chopin, Mendelssohn, Samuel Johnson (two hundredth) and John Calvin (four hundredth). The one hundredth anniversary of the death of Thomas Paine was also observed. In addition, several great celebrations were held, including the Hudson-Fulton in New York, the tercentenary of the discovery of Lake Champlain and the Portola festival at San Francisco.

The year's deaths were notable, including in the world of letters such names as Algernon Charles Swinburne, ...ward Everett Hale, George ... F.
